Religion

The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity

ROOM 200, 5 FORSYTH STREET, N.W., ATLANTA 3, GEORGIA • JACKSON 5-7975

November 11, 1963

The Rt. Rev. Randolph R. Claiborne, Jr.
2744 Peachtree Road, N. E.
Atlanta 5, Georgia

Dear Bishop Claiborne:

It would appear that the position you held when we talked at your office on October 24th stands as I have not heard anything to the contrary regarding the possibility of my being licensed under Canon 45, Section 6, to supply and assist in this diocese. Your decision at the time that I could not be licensed certainly seemed final but I had hoped that you might have reconsidered. I am writing now, then, at some length to review what has transpired in this whole Lovett matter as far as our relationship goes, with copies to various ones in the Church so that our position will be better known. I shall faithfully convey to any recipients of this letter any comments you may wish sent to them. By the same token we would appreciate it if the decision not allowing our viewpoint in the Lovett matter to be reported in the diocesan publication, or even as a paid advertisement, would be reversed.

I. The License Matter.

1. The President of the Standing Committee, the Rev. Stuart Matthews, advised me in correspondence dated July 19, 1963, that he felt I had"abused the hospitality of the Diocese" because of my alleged failure to cooperate with diocesan officials, and he said that he would "at the next meeting of the Standing Committee...recommend that the Bishop be advised to procede with such revocation" of my license as had apparently been previously considered.

2. I was not advised when the Standing Committee would next meet nor invited to present my understanding of what had transpired, but upon learning that it would convene on July 23rd I requested permission to appear at that time. On that day I did appear to read my letter of reply to Mr. Matthews in the presence of the Standing Committee and the Bishop. In this letter I noted that I had supplied or assisted in almost twenty different congregations of the diocese, and at no time had dealt with controversial matters unless asked to do so. I make no defense of this approach to the ministry of the Church but mention it only to point out that you have no grounds for concern as to how I exercised my ministry under license from you as far as unduely disturbing the congregations I visited. I went on to say that I could not "...agree to any terms affecting my responsibilities with the Episcopal Society as a basis for the continuation of my license without consultation with the Board of Directors of the Society." I expressed the hope that other terms for my being licensed might be acceptable and indicated that I would like to continue to be available to assist and supply within the diocese. It should be noted, contrary to some reports, that I read my letter quietly and remained afterwards for any questions and discussion which you and the Standing Committee might have wanted. There were a few questions as to what I had meant by certain points in my letter, but no interest was expressed in reviewing the entire Lovett situation which I also had suggested in my letter might be helpful. I left the meeting in hopes that some other basis for my license might be agreed upon. Neither subsequently or since have I received any reply from Mr. Matthews or the Committee itself.

3. Because I had been previously scheduled to have services at a local parish on the following Sunday, I wrote you on July 29th asking if any other terms for my license than Mr. Matthews had offered were possible, indicating that, if not, you might want to obtain someone in my place for the parish that Sunday. You did not reply to that letter but did, in fact, send other clergy to the parish.

4. On September 26th I wrote you again with regard to the possibility of my beinglicensed and also enclosed a copy of the minutes of the meeting of our Executive Committee which met for three days in Atlanta, September 15-17, to review the entire Lovett story. You will recall that these minutes contained the message we sent to you via Bishop Sterling of our Executive Committee in lieu of your attending our sessions to which we had invited you. In that message our Executive Committee both commended and supported you for what you had, by that time, done with regard to seeking the desegregation of Lovett. The Committee also said: "In the instance of Lovett School, the efforts of the Executive Director and the President (of ESCRU) have been with the full knowledge and approval of the Executive Committee of the Board of Directors." Furthermore, the Executive Committee sought to clarify our relationship to official channels of the Church when it said: "We seek to work through official channels when they are effective, but reserve the right to choose other avenues when the situation demands it." According to Bishop Sterling you seemed pleased that we had taken the general perspective set forth in this message to you, which incidentally I fully supported notwithstanding your reference elsewhere to the possibility that our Executive Committee and I had disagreed on what was needed. Subsequently I have learned that you have read the first portion of our message to others, wherein we commended you, without going on to the parts where our official governing group expressed aupport for the actions of our President and myself. (And in our conference on October 24th you used the message in this manner, expressing the thought that the committee and I were in disagreement because it had commended you while I had elsewhere expressed some doubts as to certain other of your actions.)It might also be noted here that at the spring clergy conference this year you read a portion of a letter from our President which ~~xxxxx~~ expressed our desire to support you, without also reading other parts which expressed our concern for the situation. At that time the implication was that the President of ESCRU and I were at odds regarding our policy.

5. Finally, in response to my initiative in my letter of September 26th, and after subsequent correspondence with the Bishop of South Carolina where I remain canonically resident, I came to your office on the afternoon of October 24th. I made notes covering our conversation that afternoon after I left and this is what I understand to have been said. After about thirty minutes of pleasant conversation about church architecture and your former parish in Huntsville, Alabama, you asked what I wanted for it was I who had sought the appointment. I reminded you of my hope that you might renew my license, which had been the primary purpose of the above-mentioned letter of September 26th, in response to which you had asked me to come see you. You said that you didn't know how I could be licensed by you if I had no more confidence in you than you felt I had and you said that licensing me might give the appearance of your approving of ESCRU's activities. At one point, after I had said that I was hopeful that we might understand one another better, I asked what I could do that might make some difference regarding whether you licensed me or not. You said, and I remember this quite clearly, that I could write to the people to whom I had said other things (and I believe you meant our membership or the recipients of our Newsletters) and tell them I had been in error about what I had said. I told you plainly that I could not say this about the past,but that I had hopes for the future regarding my evaluation of what has gone on. I reminded you that my esteem for the Diocesan establishment involved my opinions of others on your staff as well as yourself. We concluded our conversation quietly and I assisted you to your car, with no apparent sign of reconciliation or mutual understanding. My repeated suggestion that we have an opportunity to review the entire Lovett story with an eye toward clarifying what each has done met with no response on your part indicating you felt this would be helpful. (My openness,in letters to both you and the Standing Committee, to the possibility of having an opportunity to frankly review what has transpired has met with only a stated or implied viewpoint that it would serve no purpose.)

So much for the license matter itself. Because your position regarding it is based upon your evaluation of what we have each done, and because you want me to recant and say that I have been in error in my previously stated opinions concerning your role, it seems well for me to review some of the reasons why my confidence in you has been less than what you desire. Because the issue has many stages and levels, I shall recount them in appropriate categories. I do not presume here to give a complete picture of what you may have done on the positive side, but only mean to suggest some of the reasons why it is difficult to implicitly trust the diocesan establishment to do what is right by the Lovett situation. When I refer herein to things that have been said in letters from you or those on your staff, generally sent to others who have provided me with copies, I believe I am fairly reporting the context and content. Naturally I can provide anyone genuinely interested in understanding the whole mess with exact and full copies of such letters if they want. That which I mention that has come to me by word of mouth can easily be traced to sources in most instances, and in others there has been such a plethora of reports as to what diocesan officials have said that I suggest anyone interested come to Atlanta and talk around with a few of the clergy and laity, many of whom will verify the substance of what I mention here.

II. Before the Rejection of Martin Luther King,III.

1. It has been suggested that I should have sought "to cooperate and communicate" with you more than some think I have. When I saw you early in the year, following the rejection of the King child, you said yourself at the time that I should have let you know that I "wanted to get a Negro into Lovett". You will want to recall that I wrote you almost ten months before the Kings applied, on April 7, 1962, and expressed concern about Lovett as to whether there was any discriminatory policy. I had written the school in 1959, shortly after our children were enrolled, and expressed the same concern, but it was never clear what the policy was. You said to me in reply on April 10, 1962: "I am sure there is no official racial policy at Lovett School, but I do not know anything about the applications or the processing of them."

2. I have subsequently learned that several years ago Dr. Charles Shorter, a prominent Negro Churchman of Atlanta, inquired of the Dean of the Cathedral what the prospects of his children enrolling then might be. He was told, and I doubt that you were unaware of his inquiry, that it would be against state laws at that time.

3. On January 24th, 1963, a resolution was introduced at Diocesan Council and reported out of committee favorably, which, if passed, would have had the effect of causing the policies at Lovett and elsewhere in the diocese to be clarified. It might be noted, that, contrary to speculation by some, I neither knew of the existence of this resolution nor of anyone's intention to introduce it, until after it had been reported upon favorably by the Christian Social Relations committee. You ruled this resolution out of order and were quoted in the Atlanta press as saying that it was unnecessary for, among other reasons, "In the diocese of Atlanta there are no institutions that are segregated, as far as I know."

4. On January 30th, 1963, I wrote the Headmaster of Lovett, who at that time was a priest of the Diocese of Atlanta, and advised him that Mrs. Martin Luther King, Jr., had inquired about the possibility of their applying for the first grade at Lovett for Martin, III, whom they wanted to have the opportunity of beginning his schooling on a desegregated basis. I indicated that she had asked me the previous August to let her know if anything developed that seemed to clarify the situation there for I had told her then that I knew of no discriminatory policy but that I didn't think there had been Negro applicants before. A copy of this letter was sent to you. Subsequently you dismissed this effort on my part to communicate with you by saying that it was only a carbon copy. For a while in the early stages of our differences you or others in the diocesan establishment claimed that I had in no wise informed you that the Kings might apply. You did not reply in any way to receipt of this letter to the Headmaster. I assumed and trusted that, were anything necessary, you would use your good offices in advance of the Kings making application to insure that they would have no difficulty. After I saw you, following their rejection, it was apparent that you had done nothing, and apparently the Headmaster, although canonically resident which I was not, had not sought your assistance.

III. Your Response to the Rejection of Martin Luther King, III.

1. On the day that Mrs. King called me to say that they had been rejected by Lovett, because the application for her son "was the first formal Negro application in the history of the Lovett School" (One wonders how many informal inquiries there were beforehand. The Rev. Warren Scott of Atlanta University inquired in behalf of another child concurrently with the King's application it was learned later.) I telephoned a local priest in whom I had confidence and advised him of this. That same day he phoned your office with the same information. It was later claimed by you or in your behalf by other diocesan officials that you did not know about their rejection until called by the press. The implication was that I had not sought to communicate and enlist your concern. The truth of the matter is that I communicated with those in whom I had some confidence to do what they could, confident that you would be advised of the development as you in fact were, contrary to other claims. I got in touch with local members, the Presiding Bishop, and other Bishops who are members of ESCRU. My hope was that these responsible persons in the Church would so encourage and support you in their concern for the situation that you would stand strong and faithful in the face of a situation obviously demanding your attention.

2. When Mrs. King told me of their treatment by Lovett she also said that her husband, Dr. King, was quite upset over this turn of events and planned to say something about it publicly. While they did not seek to enroll their child as a test case (as much as this is needed in many situations!), it was clear and imperative that what happened had to be protested. However, I suggested to Mrs. King that because what had happened was of particular concern to Episcopalians, would she see if Dr. King would be willing to let the story break through the Church press. He was and I advised one of our periodicals of what had happened. Because of this turning to the Church press first, instead of the secular media, with your knowing of what had happened all the while, you actually had more time in which to do something than if I had not tried to direct the story to the Church family first. Not only did you not do anything following my letting you know that the Kings might apply, as far as I can tell, it also appeared that you did nothing until after the story broke, and then what you did at first probably undercut the value of anything constructive you did later.

3. On March 16, 1963, you are quoted in the Atlanta papers as saying: "I am interested to know that a Baptist minister has a desire for an education for his son in a school where Episcopal services customarily take place. If Dr. King wants an Episcopal education for his child, he can easily apply to one of our parochial schools which the Church does control. Segregation is not a policy in the Episcopal Church. I don't know any of the details of this application. The Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Atlanta, has no official connection with the Lovett School, and the Bishop of the Diocese of Atlanta has no official connection with the Lovett School. It is an independent, autonomous institution subject to no ecclesiastical control..."

4. In THE LIVING CHURCH of March 24th you are quoted as saying: "The Diocese of Atlanta has no official connection with Lovett School. I have no official connection with Lovett School. I am sure the racial policy at Lovett School must be satisfactory since the children of the Rev. John Morris have been enrolled there for some time. If the family of the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., do not find the admissions policy of Lovett School acceptable and if they want their children to have an Episcopal educational background, they should apply to one of our parochial schools where the Church is responsible - such as Holy Innocents Parish in Atlanta, where the Rev. John Morris and his family are affiliated."

It should be noted that Holy Innocents at this time was the only so-called parochial school (apart from Lovett which essentially was and is a Church-related school associated with the Cathedral parish) which went into the secondary grades, I believe, but it only went through the third grade and is located considerably further out from where the Kings live than Lovett. Also it is of interest to note that the Rector of this parish is the one who introduced the resolution which would have clarified things at Lovett had you not ruled it out of order.

IV. Aftermath: Spring and Early Summer, 1963.

1. Astonished at the position you took in the matter, as many in Atlanta were, I made no public response to what you had said but began the preparation of a document detailing the many physical, historical and spiritual ties between Lovett and the Church which your statement tended to implicitly deny. You were later furnished a copy of this document which we never circulated in its original form. Rather, we sought to make it easier for you to take the right position in the matter by revising it to reduce or eliminate the many instances it recorded where you personally have been identified with and positively acknowledged the existence of the "Lovett Episcopal Day School." But before the document was even finished I received a call from the Canon to the Ordinary, the Rev. Milton Wood, as follows.

2. On March 20th, just following my receipt of information on what you had said in the issue of THE LIVING CHURCH mentioned above, Canon Wood called me to say that you wanted to see me the next day. I told Canon Wood frankly that I wasn't sure I wanted to come at that time. In view of your statement I felt it would have been better to arrange to have someone accompany me and I wasn't sure I could do this on short notice. In the course of our conversation, Canon Wood said the following things that bear notation here: "I don't think you want it said you wouldn't come to see the bishop about this matter...."; "....There's an awful lot that's not public that will be public next week unless you come out tomorrow...."; "...You are under license in the diocese... ..there is something in the Church known as discipline..."; "...Well John I just hope you'll remember yourself and your family when you make your decision....because your kids are involved.... (My kids are involved?) Yes. (Whose going to do something to my kids...) They're at Lovett....(What do you mean my kids are involved?) They're involved in the whole Lovett business...."; and "...What decision you make about Lovett, and therefore about seeing the bishop, affect your children....This puts you on the spot with Lovett...."

3. I saw you the next day, as per Canon Wood's request, and brought a friend along who is a layman. Some reports have it that I raised my voice, etc., and was otherwise disrespectful. It will be recalled by those present, I believe, that none of our voices were raised in any way. We certainly did not have any meeting of minds and I advised you that I was preparing the document referred to above which Canon Wood asked that I submit for your review before further distribution. This was subsequently done, although apparently no errors were found in what I had recorded for no request for changes was made. At this point I began to fully advise our President, the Rev. Joseph A. Pelham, in Michigan of what was happening, with copies marked to him of any correspondence we had.

4. By the end of March it was decided that Mr. Pelham should come to Atlanta and confer with you and others regarding the developing situation. You had contacted the Bishop of Michigan and sought his assistance presumably in restraining me from circulation of the document or otherwise involving myself in the Lovett question. From our standpoint both Mr. Pelham and I realized that it was only appropriate for him to come and share some of the burden and responsibility with me in what was already becoming a very thorny situation. (Altogether now he has made three visits to Atlanta with regard to the Lovett situation, the last being this past week when he came down to join the picket line before the school.)

5. Following Mr. Pelham's conference with you on April 3rd and further consultation between him and myself we determined to wait a while in hopes that you might successfully effect some change in the Lovett situation. In the meantime, however, so many distortions and misrepresentations of fact, chiefly emanating from your office, began to come back to us that we decided that some comment from us was in order at least on a non-public basis within the Church. We did not want to enter the situation publicly and make your efforts with the Trustees any more difficult, believing at that time that, as Mr. Pelham put it in a letter of April 16th, that you were "engaged in a sincere and concerted attempt to effect change in the admissions policy of the School." We revised the document detailing the Church connections of Lovett in such a way as to minimize embarrassment to you personally. It was circulated to key Society leaders and a number of Bishops around the Church with the covering letter of April 16th, as noted above, from Mr. Pelham. I have already noted how you read only the supportive parts of Mr. Pelham's letter to the spring clergy conference, overlooking the substance of the document and the latter portions of the letter where Mr. Pelham said something that still is applicable: "The situation has, in my opinion, been clouded by a tendency to focus attention on the motives for and/or methods of John Morris' involvement in the situation rather than on the basic issue. The basic issue (and the issue to which all attention should be turned) is the action (past and future) of the Lovett Trustees. Criticism of ESCRU and/or its Executive Director, in fact, diverts attention from the basic problem which ESCRU neither created nor desired and which would have existed even if ESCRU did not exist....." And he said in closing: "Should there be indication that further direct involvement on the part of ESCRU is appropriate or should there be indication that an attempt to discredit ESCRU is underway, I will take steps to apprise the Board and/or Executive Committee of the situation and obtain its response." It should be remembered that this letter and the document it conveyed went only to persons in the Church interested in seeing the Church's teaching implemented at Lovett. Copies were not sent Lovett Trustees. It was sent to you, however, Bishop Claiborne. And I should say that both the original document and the revised one that was so circulated may be obtained on request by persons interested similiarly in seeing the Church's teaching followed. Essentially the document sets forth the manifold reasons why the Church cannot ignore the Lovett situation. Many persons around the Church were confused by your first public statement and, in fact, believed that it was not a Church-related institution.

6. Throughout the year we have gotten feedback on things you and others of your staff were saying around Atlanta and the Church. Sometimes it has been something you said to another Bishop which he repeated to his clergy and one or more of them would ask us if it were so. Generally it was not. Sometimes the half-truth was employed. Thankfully, there are those in the Church who seek to have both sides of such a controversy as we've been in before they make up their minds. The most irrefutable evidence of things said by officials of the Diocese of Atlanta has come by way of letters written from your office to an aroused and concerned Church which has written you from all over. It would appear that most of the letters to you have been answered in your behalf by Canon Wood, but you obviously must bear some degree of responsibility for what he has said. Indeed, I would assume that you would hold the same degree of confidence in him for his letter writing in your behalf as you did when you expressed support at the Bishop's Dinner this fall for Canon Wood and his action in censoring Ralph McGill in the October issue of DIOCESE. With this as introduction, let me quote in full a letter Canon Wood wrote on April 3, 1963, to a Churchman in New York City. In parentheses I shall comment on what Canon Wood says as I quote his own words:

"Bishop Claiborne has received the copy of your letter addressed to the Rev. James McDowell, Headmaster at the Lovett School. Your "shock" at the action of the Lovett School Trustees was equalled by that of a great many in this area.

"Unfortunately perhaps, the name of the school is not as you quoted "Lovett Episcopal Day School" (It has never legally been this, but is so listed in the Episcopal Church Annual and in the Directory of Schools published by the Episcopal Schools Association. The letterhead of the school, even in the early days at the new site, used to say "An Episcopal Day School". You have in your diary as Bishop spoken of showing friends the construction for the "Lovett Episcopal School" and you so spoke of it in your reference to participating in the dedication of the new facilities.), but is an independent and autonomous school by whose charter certain members of the Board of Trustees happen to be Episcopalians. (The Charter stipulates that two-thirds, or fourteen, Trustees are to be Episcopalians and seven of these must be approved by the Chapter of the Cathedral and be communicants of the Cathedral. The Dean of the Cathedral must be on the Board and presently serves as the Chairman of the Board.) This has prevented the Church from taking any authoritative action in the matter, but only very tenuous moral persuassion. (We have never been confused over the extent to which the Bishop had actual authority to order changes. We know that you have had considerable moral influence for good or bad.)

"The Headmaster long ago made the position of the Church quite clear in regard to racial policies, and now finds himself in a very precarious position. (The Headmaster made this clear at a clergy conference as far as what others know.) We all hope that it is not yet too late to take some redeeming steps in the situation through whatever moral persuasion the Bishop may have along with the Headmaster and some of the Trustees who are good Episcopalians. (The Trustees voted unanimously when they finally made their decision.)

"Perhaps the greatest failure in this situation was that the Rev. John Morris made no effort in the entire situation to secure the Bishop's support and position of whatever moral influence he might have, in order that the goal for Lovett School might be accomplished. (See Sections II and III of my letter.) Before the news was released to the press he had over two weeks in which he might have sought the Bishop's aid in accomplishing something in this matter. (See previous sections also. You are the Bishop, Sir, and knew of the Kings rejection when I did. There was nothing I could do then.)

"Of course, now the "opposition" has been pushed into more of a position of solidification which makes the Bishop's influence even more difficult. (Following upon the previous paragraph there is the implication that we had done something to push the Trustees. Our first public comment on the situation was on June 7th. If the Trustees then knew of our interest in the situation, was it from diocesan sources that they were informed?) He could readily "disown" the entire school, which would undoubtedly force the resignation of the headmaster and sever whatever ties we might have through which some redeeming influence might be brought to bear. This would be a very simple course for the Bishop, which he may ultimately have to do especially if more public pressure is brought to bear in the press (Who was in the press? We weren't.) before the full weight of his influence has an opportunity to bear some fruit.

"The whole affair was handled without much regard to responsible methods in procedures, all without any knowledge on the part of the Bishop (This can most generously be called somewhat untrue, for the Bishop's office was advised the same day I learned of the King's rejection!) until a reporter from the press called. However, I can assure you that as long as he has an opportunity to work with the trustees he happens to know (A number of them are prominent in diocesan circles.), he will continue all efforts at redemption in this situation. This, of course, depends upon whether his position is kept free from newspaper publicity. (Thanks be for the committed persons in the public media field who are not afraid of the truth and from whom we should learn some lessons!)

"Thanking you for your interest and with all best wishes, I remain.....Faithfully yours, (signed), The Rev. Milton L. Wood, Canon to the Ordinary."

7. The above letter from Canon Wood, Bishop Claiborne, represents one reason why my confidence in the diocesan establishment is less than you desire. There were other things heard and overheard. Also, there came a new development which none of us expected. Two Negro Episcopal families decided to make application to the Lovett School and, because they did not know their color, they were assigned testing dates by the school. Mrs. J. B. Mabry and Mr. Robert Cleveland, both of Atlanta, can better speak for themselves as to what went on. I shall only briefly reflect my understanding of what I heard from them after they contacted me well after they had run afoul of efforts to steer them away from Lovett. As I understand it, when your office learned that they had inadvertently been given dates to take their children to the school for testing, a considerable effort was employed in encouraging them not to go at the assigned time, including something of a red-carpet treatment for Mr. Cleveland in the office of Mr. William Bowdoin, a Lovett Trustee and prominent Churchmen. When all other efforts failed to dissuade them from going for the testing dates they were summoned to your office. You gave them assurances that you would see that things were worked out satisfactorily. But, as I understand it, delay followed delay, so that by the end of May it seemed all to no avail.

8. The combination of what seemed like a run-around treatment for the Clevelands and Mabrys, together with the continual feedback we were getting as to things coming out of your office regarding ESCRU's interest in Lovett, prompted our President, the Rev. Mr. Pelham, to direct a letter to clergy of the Diocese of Atlanta on May 23rd, enclosing the letter and document he has issued on April 16th, and advising them that he would "visit Atlanta again in early June" and "make a statement outlining the position of the Society relative to the situation which pertain(ed) at that time." On May 31st we indicated that the date for this first public statement from ESCRU would be June 7th.

9. On June 4th you made your first public statement since the first one which expressed surprise that a Baptist was interested in Lovett and essentially skirted responsibility for Lovett. Apart from the laborious effort at making the past sound better than it was, you finally took the stand which the Church had thought you would take in the beginning. You said that Lovett would have to abide by the Church's position on race or be severed from the Church. Accordingly, in ESCRU's first public comment, made by Mr. Pelham, on June 7 th, we commended you for your statement and expressed our hope that the matter would be settled. We went on to observe that there were other similiar situations needed the concern of Churchmen and we announced our plans to conduct a survey of admissions practices at Church-related schools.

V. An Apparent Showdown.

1. In a letter to the parents of students of the Lovett School dated June 14, 1963, the Chairman of the Executive Committee of the School's Board of Trustees reported that the Board had unanimously decided to deny any Negro applicants admission to the school and that the Headmaster was instructed not to accept any applications of Negro students. Responding to this on July 1st you said that their actions "removed the school from the orbit of the discipline of the Episcopal Church" and that they had "forfeited the right of implied or official support for the Lovett School by the Episcopal Church." My initial reaction was positive and supportive of you in the stand you took and, indeed, I encouraged some who talked with me to express their support directly to you.

2. On July 3rd I wrote a letter to The Very Rev. Alfred Hardman, Dean of the Cathedral of St. Philip and Chairman of Lovett's Board of Trustees (who, incidentally, has said to several local persons that he fully supported the Board in its unanimous decision), and said that I had "consulted the President of this Society and it (had) been decided that steps (would) be taken in the fall to protest the Trustees' decision". In this same letter I indicated some appreciation for your efforts when I said "...with all of the efforts of the Bishop and others to obtain a different decision, the Lovett Trustees have made their decision conscious of how it stands in opposition to the Church..." We said in this letter that picketing would probably be the means of protest. Copies of this letter were sent to Lovett parents. It was Mr. Pelham's and my feeling that the action of fourteen Churchmen serving on the Board of Trustees, and thereby acting in part as the Church, should be protested although ostensibly it seemed that the school was in fact severed from the Church. Because we assumed this severence to be so we only contemplated a symbolic protest and did not envision a sustained and indefinite protest which we are now engaged in because of the fact that we now know that Lovett remains a Church-related school.

3. Apparently in reaction to our announced plan to protest and notwithstanding the fact that you had already spoken regarding Lovett stating that the Church had no more connections with it, you issued a Pastoral Letter to be read in churches on July 14th, 1963. Some have said that you issued this chiefly to be able to clarify the unofficial status of ESCRU. What you said was accurate, although one would not have known that we had much support from other bishops or the Church generally from what you said. But I accepted this as your apparently felt necessity to thoroughly distinguish between yourself and our organization and this was all right. You said in part: "It (ESCRU) has neither official approval nor financial support of the Episcopal Church. Neither the Bishop nor any official Church body has any control over this voluntary association." And you said further of me that I was canonically "a resident of the Diocese of South Carolina, and not of the Diocese of Atlanta." You did not state that at the time I was licensed by you under Canon 45, Section 6, to officiate in this diocese. The absence of this would seem to be a corollary of your present fear that to license me might be construed as indicating approval of ESCRU. It is ironic that for three years neither of us assumed that your licensing of me constituted approval of everything that ESCRU did or said.

4. On July 16th I circulated a memorandum on our protest plans to local ESCRU members, with copies to you and a few others. In this memorandum I referred to you as having "acted forthrightly" in your stated action to sever the Church from the school. I said that I felt the Trustees had, in effect, insulted both you and the whole Church by their stand. The perspective of this document throughout was one of respect for what you done, while at the same time I discussed plans for how the Trustees' action should be demonstrably protested.

5. On July 19th the President of the Standing Committee wrote me as previously noted on page one of this letter and initiated the process whereby I am no longer licensed. I assume that he acted after consultation with you and the rest of the Standing Committee. It would appear, then, that, although you had ostensibly divorced yourself from Lovett and in your pastoral letter distinguished yourself from ESCRU, the effect of our announced plans to protest gave cause to you and the diocesan establishment to move in with all the force you could muster to protect Lovett and deter us from taking the announced steps.

6. At the same time, feedback was building up to indicate that in effect Lovett would carry along just as before as far as the Church-related factors went, notwithstanding the departure of the Headmaster to what I am sure is a far happier situation for him. Lovett had said in a letter on July 2nd that "...religious teaching will continue without change" as well as "Episcopal services in chapel and at other religious exercises." It was not clear at first whether this merely represented the determination of Lovett to carry on notwithstanding your edict. It began to emerge rather clearly that it was with some tacit, if not more actual, approval from you that their Church-related factors would continue. The following things came to my attention for the most part in early August, or their meaning became clear then.

7. I learned that in late July a number of Atlanta clergy, anxious that your edict of severence betwixt Lovett and the Church be honored, convened most of the Atlanta clergy for a meeting to discuss what they should do about this. A number of them hoped that the entire group would go on record indicating that they would not hold services at Lovett. Upon learning of their plans to meet, I understand that you communicated with them and indicated that they could best help by staying out of the Lovett situation. Therefore, as a consequence of your wishes, they simply agreed to petition the Standing Committee for advice. Ironically, it was at the same meeting of the Standing Committee on July 23rd where I appeared in behalf of the license matter that the following statement on services at Lovett was adopted: "In answer to the resolution presented to the Standing Committee by a Committee appointed at the meeting of the Clergy of the Metropolitan area of Atlanta, which was held at St. Luke's Church on July 21, 1963, it is the opinion of the Standing Committee that the participation of the Clergy in official worship and exercises at Lovett School would not be detrimental to the interest of the Church. However, the Standing Committee feels that the question should be left to the conscience of the individual clergyman as to whether he should accept or decline an invitation to participate." In the face of an effort, then, to give meaning to your ostensible act of removing the school "from the orbit of the discipline of the Episcopal Church" which you had said had "forfeited the right of implied or official support", the Diocese of Atlanta acts to enable the continuation of services as before.

8. On August 8th the Acting Headmaster of Lovett, Mr. J. A. Rabbe, who is also a Trustee of the Cathedral of St. Philip, said to parents: "....the rumour is rife that there will be no more daily chapel, no Wednesday morning communion services, no teaching of religion and an abandonment of all religious emphasis. Nothing could be farther from the truth and all of these will be continued just as in the past and have the approval of the Bishop." Our Executive Committee statment from mid-September quoted this from Mr. Rabbe and otherwise I imagine you have been under pressure to answer the implications of it. To my knowledge nothing has appeared generally regarding it. You did circulate a statement dated October 7, 1963, to the clergy of the diocese indicating that such a statement from Lovett had been "issued without the knowledge or approval of the Bishop." One wonders what in effect was discussed between you and the trustees throughout this whole thing, although we can readily appreciate that Mr. Rabbe may not have had clearance from you for his claims. If you did not give permission in the terms that Mr. Rabbe suggests for things to continue just as in the past, then he is wrong or you all misunderstood each other and others at Lovett have misunderstood you for the faculty were told at a meeting in the summer that chapel would be continued with your permission. The action of the Standing Committee, which generally does not act apart from your own wishes, would tend to confirm a kind of apriori agreement between you and Lovett even as you acted ostensibly to declare the school outside our orbit. By August 6th I either knew some of these facts or had heard sufficient reports about them to speak somewhat critically of yourrole in the emerging picture in a Newsletter of which you were sent a copy.

VI. Your Toronto Effort.

At the sessions of the Anglican Congress during August in Toronto, Canada, you apparently were busy with your representation of the Lovett story. You gathered at least one group of bishops to hear your side in the matter. I have heard various things regarding claims you made in Toronto, most of which appear to have been directed toward me. One was to the effect that I didn't want to be licensed, which of course has been manifestly untrue. (Here in Atlanta I am told that a priest member of the Standing Committee not otherwise previously mentioned in this letter states that I somehow threw my license down at the meeting on July 23rd and showed no signs of wanting to remain under license.) I also understand that in Toronto you said something about having three Negro children all lined up to go to Lovett until I got into the picture. And finally I am told you said that I was showing signs of mental illness in my actions with regard to Lovett.

VII. Our Executive Committee Meeting.

It was because of the level to which things had sunk at Toronto that Mr. Pelham and I decided that our direct action protest of the Lovett situation should come only after we had spread the responsibility for the decisions as broadly within our base of leadership as possible. Ordinarily in ESCRU we are empowered by our Board to take action when it seems needed and thus far the Board has always been fully supportive of the things which I and/or the President have decided needed forthright attention. But in this unduely thorny situation it was well that we confer with as many of our leadership people as possible. Thirteen persons came from out of town for sessions here in Atlanta , September 15-17, and at least that many Atlantans attended various sessions. In the section under the License Matter I have recounted our position in this meeting which sought to recognize your efforts vis-a-vis Lovett, at the same time that we acted to support the position taken by Mr. Pelham and myself. At this meeting it was unanimously decided that the protest action should be begun. Contrary to suggestions from you to the contrary, I was fully in accord with the Board's final decisionsand assisted in reaching them. Because of the fact that it was then obvious that Lovett remained a Church-related school, for instance, we determined on a sustained protest instead of a symbolic period as originally suggested. Also, while at one time I had suggested that we might even consider the picketing of diocesan offices, I had concluded even before our meeting that a more appropriate witness would be some action which would demonstrate our corporate sin and failure in the whole Lovett mess. I note these things because of your suggestion elsewhere that we have been at odds within our leadership. In a letter in late September you said the following, to which I shall add several comments:

"Chan Sterling was good enough to come to Atlanta and meet with the Executive Committee of ESCRU for three days. (He is On our Executive Committee!) I am sure he did a great deal to give a clearer understanding to the Executive Committee members about the position of the Diocese.....The next day, after bowing to Chan's suggestion and turning down some of the more objectionable "active" procedures the Executive Committee outlined a plan of picketing for the school. (You unfairly represent Bishop Sterling who functioned as a responsible member of our Executive Committee and who in no wise sought to steer us away from our general consensus concerning the action that was needed. For myself, I then and subsequently expressed approval for the decisions we reached. That Bishop Sterling let us know something of the burdens and pressures on bishops was only natural and welcomed.)I suppose John Morris must be mollified in this way, but one clergyman interested in the integration of Lovett School expresses the thought of many in a letter which states, "They just seem determined to keep the school segregated and out of the Church."....."

VIII. The Censorship of a Great Churchman. While I had nothing to do with anything connected with it, the decision of Canon Wood to destroy 13,000 copies of DIOCESE, the monthly diocesan publication, and re-run it after deleting the portion of an interview with Mr. Ralph McGill dealing with Lovett certainly has been of little help in increasing my confidence in the Diocese of Atlanta. That you support Canon Wood in this, as you stated at the Bishop's Dinner, only increases the degree of responsibility you must share for the action anyway. Having virtually insulted Atlanta's most distinguished citizen, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., earlier in the year, the Episcopal Church is now seen as saying to one of her most gifted writers that he cannot speak the truth within the Church's publication which he so ably does in the daily press. None of the arguments or excuses stand up when subjected to the scrutiny of fact as to what went on in the preliminary stages of the preparation of the censored issue. It was certainly embarrassing to the Very Rev. Paul Moore, Jr. (now Bishop-elect Moore) of our Executive Committee that an article on him substituted for the deleted McGill portions, especially since the article on him was based on an interview with him done while he was here for the Executive Committee meeting. He has expressed this concern in a "Letter to the Editor" of DIOCESE, which did not appear in the most recent issue, and indicated that he also fully supports the ESCRU position concerning Lovett.

IX. Canon Wood's Most Recent Stock Letter.

You will recall, Bishop Claiborne, that when I assisted you to your car following our conference on October 24th, Canon Wood came up and he and I were engaged in conversation as you left. In asking him about some of the letters of his which have been sent to me he made some passing reference to having form letters which have to be used in answering all of the mail you get concerning Lovett. I imagine that these vary with the changing circumstances and that the letter of Canon Wood's dated April 3, 1963, was extensively used in the spring. I wonder how much the following letter from Canon Wood has been used of late? It was sent on September 23rd to a member of ESCRU who wondered about the accuracy of what was asserted and sent it to me. I have underlined the most significant phrase. Dr. King did, in fact commend you for one of your Lovett statements, which we repeatedly did also, at the time that he wrote to you to decline an invitation to speak to the clergy. The letter is as follows:

"This will acknowledge your letter to Bishop Claiborne on September 14th (1963). However, I am at quite a loss to know to what you may be referring when you speak of "subsequent actions of Diocesan officials in condoning the flimsy explanations for the applicant's refusal."

"Without going into all of the details and the various actions of the Bishop and Standing Committee, I will simply quote to you a letter received some few weeks ago from the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., whom the Bishop knows quite well and sees from time to time in a small informal discussion group here in Atlanta. "I am gratified over the forthright stand that you have taken on the question of racial justice, particularly with reference to the Lovett School. This has certainly been a significant moral witness on your part, and I know that it gives new relevancy and life to the Church. I must say that I have been greatly encouraged by the new concern and witness on the part of the churches generally during these last few months. With this strong support I am confident that we will be able to transform this sweltering summer of discontent into an invigorating autumn of justice and freedom for all of God's children."

"Perhaps these words from Dr. King, who is a bit closer to the situation here, might suggest that you have been misinformed about a great many things around the Lovett School situation. Thanking you for your interest and hoping that this letter will be of help to you, I remain.....Faithfully yours, (signed), The Rev. Milton L. Wood, Canon to the Ordinary."

I have asked Dr. King if he would let me know how well he knew Bishop Claiborne and how many times he recalled meeting him. This is is reply:

> "I recall meeting Bishop Claiborne on only one occasion. This was at one of the informal dinner discussions that was attended by a small group of Atlanta clergymen. Because of my constant travels and the numerous demands on my schedule, I do not have an opportunity to attend the meetings of this group very often. I imagine that Bishop Claiborne attended some of the other sessions, but I was not present at the time. So, for reasons of schedule problems and other circumstances I have only had the privilege of being in Bishop Claiborne's presence once, and since this one meeting was a group situation I did not have the opportunity of talking privately with him."

X. In Conclusion.

There is very little I can say in conclusiom or in summary. I believe you will appreciate now something of why I cannot express sufficient confidence in the Diocese of Atlanta to warrant, in your terms, your licensing me to assist and supply. Perhaps it is also evident why I cannot in good conscience tell others that I have previously been in error regarding critical things I have said. So it would appear that things between us will stand where they were when we finished talking on October 24th.

At times, when I am reminded of these few clergy of our Church who are avowed segregationists and publicly identified as such, and yet who stand before the altars of their parishes each week and celebrate the Holy Communion which I am not able to do in this diocese, I shall possibly wonder about the meaning of the Church's call to us to take action and become involved in the struggle for freedom for all and for integrity in the Church itself. I shall regret that so seldom does the Church seem to really mean that it wants us to do these things, because usually there is little support to those who do take action and sometimes even resentment that we've done so. Even now, while it is popular for the Church (at least amongst liberals and moderates) to march to Washington and the like, there is a tendency to turn away from the Lovetts in our own midst.

But I hope I shall not dwell overly much on the above, nor is this kind of thing new to me or a surprise. Rather, as I go about my travels through the Church and do have the opportunity to celebrate the Holy Communion away from home, I shall try to offer my reflections to God for his refashioning and for the renewal of my spirit. Also, I shall pray that Christ may act to bridge the gulf now between you and me which neither of us seems able to overcome.

As for the Lovett School situation, we have now completed four weeks of picketing which has involved 14 laity and 9 clergy. Ten of these were visitors and 13 were Atlantans. As long as Lovett remains a Church-related school that segregates we shall continue this action on a periodic basis, believing that it is so abominable a thing that faithful Churchmen cannot stand idly by in Atlanta at this time in history and fail to protest the immorality of the situation. We have not asked you to approve the picketing. Indeed, throughout this unhappy affair we have implicitly recognized the pressures and burdens you are under and we have not asked for too much in the way of leadership, I do not believe. We have sought repeatedly to extend opportunities whereby we might reestablish some relationship, each recognizing the different kinds of ministries needed within the Church. I hope that this may yet be possible.

Yours faithfully,

John B. Morris

The Rev. John B. Morris
Executive Director

P. S. Since finishing the above letter it has come to my attention that the Dean of the Cathedral had apparently entertained the thought of resigning from the Lovett Board of Trustees which he presently serves as Chairman. He sought your advice in the matter, but as I understand it you refused to take any position on the question. In at least considering this possibility Dean Hardman showed more perception than when he wrote an unsuspecting person earlier this Fall, and told them that Lovett was neither an Episcopal nor a Church school.

Montez, Fiji

Rel - Gen
1963

STATEMENTS FROM THE THIRD ANNUAL MEETING
OF
THE EPISCOPAL SOCIETY FOR CULTURAL AND RACIAL UNITY
WASHINGTON, D. C. - NOVEMBER 14-16, 1963

RESOLUTION: # 1

WHEREAS, the Executive Committee of The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity, after prayerful and thorough consideration of events concerning The Lovett School in Atlanta, Georgia, acted to protest in picketing, worship and personal prayer; and,

WHEREAS, The Lovett School, through its Board of Directors, has acted to deny admission solely on grounds of race; and,

WHEREAS, The Lovett School continues in fact to be a Church-related school;

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, that The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity at its Annual Meeting in Washington, D. C., in November 1963, commends the action of the Executive Committee and urges that protest action continue so long as The Lovett School remains a segregated Church-related school.

RESOLUTION # 2

WHEREAS, following the Presiding Bishop's 1963 Whitsuntide message, the Episcopal Church's involvement in notable witness to racial unity has been greatly increased; and,

WHEREAS, the coming days may involve even more publicity and need for the allocation of resources;

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, that the delegates to this Annual Meeting urge that the National Board of The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity direct its attention to such organization as is necessary to insure that the hands of the Presiding Bishop and the resources of the Department of Christian Social Relations be strengthened at the 1964 General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America.

RESOLUTION # 3

WHEREAS, The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity has assembled for its third Annual Meeting at the International Inn, in Washington, D. C., in November, 1963; and,

WHEREAS, it has been the practice of the Society to make known to interested persons cases in which inequality, on basis of race, class, or national origin exist; and,

WHEREAS, it has become known that policies of segregation and discrimination are being fostered, knowingly or unknowingly, by the American Automobile Association, in that recognition and approval are extended to hotels, motels, and other accommodations which practice the exclusion of Negroes;

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, that this body express to the AAA its regret over these practices and urge that the same be discontinued; and,

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that ESCRU memorialize its members and other interested persons to convey their sentiments to the AAA and its local affiliates, and to withdraw their support from that organization until such practices are discontinued.

RESOLUTION #4

WHEREAS, the House of Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church, meeting in Toronto, in August, 1963, urged passage of effective civil rights legislation; and,

WHEREAS, the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives has approved a bill to this effect; and,

WHEREAS, the national interest requires prompt debate and consideration of this important legislation;

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, that The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity, at its Annual Meeting in Washington, D. C., in November, 1963, strongly urges upon the Honorable Howard Smith and Rules Committee of the House of Representatives prompt action to permit consideration of civil rights legislation by the body of the House.

RESOLUTION #5

WHEREAS, the Christian religion teaches that every man should be accepted as a child of God without discrimination because of the color of his skin; and,

WHEREAS, there has been some desegregation of tax-supported schools in every state in the Union; and,

WHEREAS, lamentably there are still some Church schools or Church-related schools that segregate on the basis of race;

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, that The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity at its Annual Meeting in Washington, D. C., in November 1963, encourages the Board of Directors of said Society to declare at its next meeting that the Society will call for and aid and support in direct action protest before any Church school or Church-related school that is known to have a discriminatory policy of practice, or is known to have rejected some applicant on the basis of race alone.

RESOLUTION #6

WHEREAS, the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States of America has on numerous occasions expressed the teaching and belief of the Church that racial segregation or discrimination is contrary to the Christian religion; and,

WHEREAS, the House of Bishops has directed the attention of the Church to their teaching through its Pastoral Letters; and,

WHEREAS, the Presiding Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States of America, in his Whitsuntide message, called upon the Church laity, as well as clergy to become personally involved in the struggle to banish the sin of racial discrimination from our society; and,

WHEREAS, many dioceses have attempted, through resolutions in Conventions and through persuasion and mediation and direct action protest, to occasion changes within these Church-related institutions;

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, that The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity, at its Annual Meeting in Washington, D. C., in November 1963, hereby calls upon all dioceses of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States of America to disassociate themselves from any and all Church-related institutions that practice racial discrimination either explicitly or covertly.

RESOLUTION #7

WHEREAS, the Church ought to look to the condition of her own house at the same time she calls upon society to look at its house in the area of equal employment opportunities; and,

WHEREAS, the Church on her parochial, diocesan and national levels, particularly through her institutions, is an employer of large numbers of persons, and in her purchasing power of goods and services, and in particular her building programs, has an opportunity to witness to her conviction of equal employment opportunities;

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, that The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity, at its Annual Meeting in Washington, D. C., in November 1963, calls upon the Church at its several levels to terminate any contractual relations with firms offering goods or services to the Church which have failed to demonstrate that they practice equal employment opportunities within their organization; and,

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that the Church generally be requested to enter into no new business arrangements for purchasing goods or services from organizations which practice racial discrimination in relation to employment policies and practices.

RESOLUTION #8

WHEREAS, the Presiding Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States of America has called all churchmen to support by financial assistance and direct action those who are seeking elimination of racial discrimination and prejudice in so many areas of life in these United States; and,

WHEREAS, the House of Bishops has spoken with Emphasis and clarity directing the effort and attention of the whole Church to the same circumstances and situations; and,

WHEREAS, there are many direct action citizens' groups committed to the attainment of the same human dignity as is The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity from its Christian perspective; and,

WHEREAS, we recognize and affirm that the Church is set in the midst of a world in which God is working for the renewal of human relations; and,

WHEREAS, since The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity Chapters have already engaged in action sponsored by citizens' civil rights organizations;

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, that The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity, at its Annual Meeting in Washington, D. C., in November 1963, hereby adopt as its national policy an intention and willingness to cooperate with citizens' agencies and groups which are working to improve inter-racial and inter-cultural relations; and,

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity local Chapters adopt, as policy, participation in citizens' civil rights group activity locally and nationally; and,

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity Chapters maintain close liaison with such citizens' groups for the purpose of joint planning, mutual support and action; and,

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity Chapters provide programs in which the membership may be informed as to how, where and when they may usefully participate in efforts initiated and carried out by citizens' civil rights organizations.

RESOLUTION #9

WHEREAS, industrial corporations and larger business firms generally seem to withhold from members of the Jewish community within their organizations appointment to significant executive positions; and,

WHEREAS, such differences as do exist between Jews and other religious and cultural groups imply no lack of ability or competence in a particular field of endeavor; and,

WHEREAS, such discrimination when practiced deprives deserving and able persons of rightful preference and advancement on non-justifiable grounds;

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, that The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity at its Annual Meeting in Washington, D. C., in November 1963, urge industrial corporations and larger business firms to consider seriously the adoption and implementation of policies which will eradicate this injustice through discrimination; and,

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that copies of this resolution be forwarded to the various national associations of industry and business organizations and the Department of Commerce of the United States of America.

RESOLUTION #10

WHEREAS, the Honorable John F. Kennedy, President of these United States, has seen fit to direct by Executive Order that mortgages for private housing, made through the Veterans Administration and the Federal Housing Administration, be granted apart from any consideration of the particular racial background of the applicants; and,

WHEREAS, many financial institutions lending money for the creation of mortgages for private housing are related to the Federal government through a system of insurance of depositors' funds by an instrumentality of the Federal Government; and,

WHEREAS, it is evident that many of these lending institutions withhold funds for the creation of mortgages on the sole basis of an applicant's race;

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, that The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity at its Annual Meeting in Washington, D. C., in November 1963, urge the President of the United States to consider the issuance of an Executive Order forbidding any bank or lending institution, related to the Federal government through the insurance of customers' deposits, from practicing discrimination on the basis of race in making loans to create mortgages for the purchase by citizens of private homes; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to President Kennedy.

RESOLUTION #11

WHEREAS, the Church pension fund of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States of America derives income from stocks and bonds invested in large American corporations; and,

WHEREAS, the several Dioceses, Churches and institutions derive income from investments in large American corporations; and,

WHEREAS, many American corporations are said to segregate on grounds of race and religion in their hiring policies;

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, that the above institutions and organizations of the Protestant Episcopal Church request these corporations to present a statement regarding their policies as related to employment of racial minorities in all types of jobs, including white collar executive positions.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that boards of trustees and directors of the various Episcopal Churches and institutions continue to manifest interest in the racial policies and practices of all companies in which they have investments.

RESOLUTION #12

BE IT RESOLVED, that the Third Annual Meeting of The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity, meeting in Washington, D. C., November 14-16, 1963, express its sincere appreciation to its Washington members for their thorough work in the planning and preparation of the arrangements for this meeting and express its special gratitude to the Reverend W. A. Wendt, Acting Chairman, to his assistants, the Reverend Tilden Edwards and the Reverend H. B. Evans, to Mrs. M. Maxine Boyd, Hospitality Chairman, to Miss H. S. Campbell, General Secretary, to Mr. and Mrs. Jack Orndorff, in charge of Banquet Tickets, and to Mr. W. L. Weifenbach, in charge of General Arrangements.

RESOLUTION #13

BE IT RESOLVED, that The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity, meeting in Washington, D. C., November 14-16, 1963, express its thanks and profound gratitude to the Reverend Erville S. Maynard, Jr., for the development of and arrangement for an outstanding program.

RESOLUTION #14

BE IT RESOLVED, that the Third Annual Meeting of The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity meeting in Washington, D. C., November 14-16, 1963, send its greetings to the National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice, meeting concurrently and express its gratitude for this opportunity for fraternity in Christ our common Lord.

* * * * * * * * * * * * * *

The following RESOLUTION was adopted on Friday evening, November 15, 1963, at a Joint Session of The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity and The National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice, which met concurrently, at The International Inn.

RESOLUTION #15

WHEREAS, the National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice and The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity are duly convened in Washington, D. C. to consider the requirements of faithfulness to the Gospel in the cause of justice and unity among men; and

WHEREAS, our attention has been focused upon the witness for interracial justice and unity in Chester, Pennsylvania and Williamston, North Carolina, to wit:

In Chester, our brothers have publicly demonstrated their concern for reasonable improvement of overcrowded, unsanitary, unsafe school conditions in depressed areas of that city. Four hundred and forty-one men, women and children have been arrested; their bail is presently set at $200 apiece and their fines may range as high as $300 apiece. Christian clergy and lay leaders in Chester have neither shared in nor supported this witness and this suffering.

The demonstrations and mass arrest have led the authorities of the city of Chester to agree to relieve overcrowding, eliminate unsafe and unsanitary conditions and to close and rebuild the most inadequate of its facilities, the Franklin Elementary School; and

In Williamston fifteen white Christians, clergy and four seminary students, affirming their belief that all men are members of the same human family, were arrested yesterday with fifty-four Negroes while marching into the downtown area in a demonstration for interracial justice and unity in that community. These were the first white persons to join the Negro demonstrators there since they began their actions over four months ago. During this time more than 230 demonstrators have been arrested. The marchers are being held under $500 bond;

THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED that

We, The National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice and the Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity urge Roman Catholic and Episcopal clergy and laity in Chester and Williamston to stand with and support their brethren who have so clearly demonstrated their faithful convictions;

We offer our prayers, our alms and whatever other resources are available to us within our respective disciplines for the relief of those who have suffered or have been imprisoned for their witness;

We commend our Christian brothers who have been active in this just cause and send our greetings and our love to all those in whose witness we so rejoice.

* * * * * * * * * * * * * *

The offering received at two celebrations of The Holy Communion was designated for Chester and Williamston as a tangible sign of the concern of The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity.

The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity

Religion

ANNUAL MEETING

"THE CHURCH AND THE REVOLUTION OF '63"

NOVEMBER 14-16, 1963 — INTERNATIONAL INN, Thomas Circle, 14th and M Streets, N. W. — WASHINGTON, D. C.

SPEAKERS

MR. BURKE MARSHALL - Assistant Attorney General, Civil Rights Division, Department of Justice

THE REV. JAMES BREEDEN - Consultant on Racial Matters to the Bishop of Massachusetts

MR. WILLIAM STRINGFELLOW - Attorney and Author of "A Private and Public Faith"

THE REV. WYATT TEE WALKER - Executive Director, Southern Christian Leadership Conference

THE REV. THOMAS R. THRASHER - Rector, Chapel of the Cross, Chapel Hill, North Carolina

MR. LOUIS LOMAX - Author of "The Negro Revolt"

THE REV. ARTHUR E. WALMSLEY - Executive Secretary, Division of Christian Citizenship

THE PRESIDENT OF ESCRU

THE EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF ESCRU

* *

THE REVOLUTION OF '63...THE NEGRO REVOLT...THE SUMMER OF DISCONTENT...WHERE DO WE GO FROM HERE?

The Church in America exists in a period of revolution. This revolution is the Negro American's quest for human freedom and justice. It is America coming of age. We must listen to those deeply involved in this revolution: in government, in the Church, in the Negro community, to understand the nature and implications of the age in which we live, so that we may witness effectively and responsibly. Come to Washington and discuss what part the Church is called to take in the midst of the Revolution of 1963!

* *

This third Annual Conference of ESCRU will be held concurrently with the convention of the National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice which will also be housed at the International Inn. There will be joint evening receptions and a combined program on Friday night. Rooms at the Inn are $6.00 per night with two in a room and $7.00 a night with three in a room, per person. The ESCRU Banquet at which the Rev. Wyatt Walker will speak is $6.00. The registration fee is $5.00 and must be sent in advance. Space is limited, so ACT NOW AND RETURN THE REGISTRATION FORM BELOW.....

- -

TO: The Rev. William A. Wendt
Church of St. Stephen and the Incarnation
16th and Newton Streets, N. W.
Washington, D. C.

DATE: _____

AMOUNT ENCLOSED: $ _____

I SHALL ATTEND THE ESCRU ANNUAL CONFERENCE AND ENCLOSE THE REGISTRATION FEE OF $5.00. PER PERSON. (Make checks payable to: ESCRU Annual Conference) PLEASE RESERVE ACCOMODATIONS FOR ME FOR NOVEMBER 14th AND NOVEMBER 15th AS FOLLOWS (Do Not Send Payment for Room Now):

_____ Assign me to a room with two persons at $7.00 each per day.
_____ Assign me to a room with three persons at $6.00 each per day.
_____ I would prefer a single room at the International Inn's usual rate.
_____ I will arrange for my own housing elsewhere in Washington.
_____ I shall attend the ESCRU Banquet on Friday evening, November 15th. Cost: $6.00.

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

_____

WHAT IS THE ESCRU ANNUAL CONFERENCE? An annual gathering of Episcopalians concerned with the renewal of the Church in matters of race, and with cultural and racial unity in society....for the deepening of commitment and a strengthening of practical resources and program....for certain business of the Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity....and to attest to the teaching of the Church in these matters.

WHO MAY ATTEND? Any concerned Churchman may register and attend. Members of the Society vote in the business sessions.....If this announcement is your first introduction to the Society and you would like more information, write: ESCRU, Room 200, 5 Forsyth St., N.W., Atlanta 3, Georgia

WHEN? Registration opens at 3:00 P.M., Thursday, November 14th, 1963, at the International Inn, with an opening service of Evening Prayer at 5:30 P.M. Sessions continue until 1:00 P.M., Saturday, November 16th. The meeting will thereby adjourn in time for clergy to return for Sunday services....lay persons will miss little more than a day from home responsibilities in attending, and may want to remain in Washington the balance of the weekend for sightseeing. Arrangements can be made with the International Inn for extending the time on rooms.

HOW MUCH? A Registration Fee of $5.00 per participant is to be sent now. A room for two nights, with two in it, will cost $14.00 and the Friday night Banquet is $6.00, making a possible overall cost of $25.00, apart from travel and other meals.

WHAT ELSE? In addition to the speakers listed on the reverse side, there will be Chapter Reports and workshops on local ESCRU program, Resolutions and Memorials, and the Election of four members of the national ESCRU Board of Directors. Meeting concurrently with the NCCIJ will provide a unique opportunity for ecumenical dialogue as common concerns and problems are faced together.

AND WHAT ABOUT THE CIVIL RIGHTS SITUATION IN CONGRESS? The Rev. Arthur E. Walmsley of National Council encourages ESCRU members and others attending the Annual Conference to come early and see their Congressmen and others on "the Hill". Write him at 815 Second Avenue, New York 17, N.Y. for suggestions of how you can assist in the Church's effort in Congress at this time.

RESOLUTIONS COMMITTEE - Members may submit their proposed resolutions for the consideration of the Annual Conference to a committee in the Baltimore area chaired by the Rev. Jack Malpas, 4711 Edmondson Avenue, Baltimore 29, Maryland.

* * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * *

E.S.C.R.U. OFFICERS

PRESIDENT - The Rev. Joseph A. Pelham

VICE-PRESIDENT - Dr. Thomas F. Pettigrew

SECRETARY - The Rev. John W. B. Thompson

TREASURER - Mr. Malcolm E. Peabody, Jr.

THIRD ANNUAL MEETING

PROGRAM - The Rev. Erville B. Maynard

ARRANGEMENTS - The Rev. William Wendt

Members and Others in the Washington assisting with arrangements.

The Episcopal Society
5 FORSYTH STREET, N.W.
ATLANTA 3, GEORGIA

Research Department
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, Room 201
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Religion

Challenge to Justice
and Love

NATIONAL CONFERENCE ON RELIGION AND RACE

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, THE REV. GALEN R. WEAVER
150 Fifth Avenue
New York 11, New York
(212) ALgonquin 5-7575-6

FIELD SECRETARY, MR. MATHEW AHMANN
21 West Superior Street
Chicago 10, Illinois
(312) MOhawk 4-8222

J. Irwin Miller
Chairman, Continuation Committee

Dr. Benjamin E. Mays
First Vice-Chairman

Rabbi Irving M. Blank
Chairman, Steering Committee

Rev. Arthur E. Walmsley
Chairman, Local Communities Follow-up Committee

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE November 19, 1963

Interreligious and interracial conferences have been formed in 46 cities across the country, and significant programs of action are underway in 19 of these cities, it was announced by the Rev. Galen Weaver, executive secretary, National Conference on Religion and Race (NCRR).

The announcement was based on a comprehensive field report recently completed by NCRR.

The National Conference was formed immediately after the historic gathering last January in Chicago of clerical and lay leaders of the major faith groups in the United States. The purpose was to see how organized religion could bring its full moral force to bear on eliminating racial segregation and discrimination. The NCRR became the vehicle for implementing the recommendations which evolved from the meeting.

"These activities clearly indicate that religious groups are trying to assume a full role of leadership in the struggle for racial justice in Twentieth Century America," Rev. Weaver said.

The 19 cities or states implementing follow-up efforts are: Boston, Chicago, Columbia (Mo.), Des Moines, Detroit, Gary, Kansas City (Mo.), Lexington (Ky.), Little Rock, Milwaukee, Omaha, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, San Francisco, Seattle, Syracuse, Toledo, Washington (D.C.), and Delaware State.

- more -

CONVENERS: Department of Racial and Cultural Relations, National Council of Churches; Social Action Commission, Synagogue Council of America; Social Action Department, National Catholic Welfare Conference

The follow up efforts are in the areas of employment, education, housing, legislation, public accommodations, use of purchasing power and home visitation programs.

The other 27 cities or states in which meetings have been or will be held include: Ann Arbor (Mich.), Birmingham, Cleveland, Davenport, Dubuque, Hartford, Houston, Indianapolis, Miami, Marion (Ind.), Marion, (O.), Minneapolis for Minnesota, Newark, New Jersey, New Orleans, New York, North Carolina, Oakland, Oklahoma, Peoria (Ill.), Rhode Island, Rochester, (N.Y.), South Bend, Springfield (Mass.), Springfield (N.J.), Warren (Ohio), and Waterloo (Iowa).

Furthermore, the NCRR Secretariat has received inquiries on organizing religion and race groups from Cincinnati, Dayton, Denver, Los Angeles, Joliet (Ill.), Mansfield (Ohio), Phoenix, Richmond (Ind.), San Diego, San Rafel (Calif.), Stamford, Norwalk (Conn.), and Santa Barbara.

Leading the way in programming is Chicago. The Chicago Conference is credited with helping to avert a major riot by placing religious leaders in the streets in a community in which a Negro family had moved. The Chicago Conference also has a program to mobilize the purchasing power of the churches and synagogues to use against discriminatory lending and hiring practices, has outlined a series of coordinated TV programs with the four Chicago stations, and is carrying out a campaign to enlist clergy support throughout Illinois for the Civil Rights Bill now pending in the Congress. Other cities in advanced stages of programming are: Washington, D. C.; Detroit; St. Louis, Pittsburgh; and San Francisco.

Religious leaders in Washington, D.C. by-passed a large public meeting and formed in May and June a series of seven action or project committees under the auspices of the "Interreligious Committee on Race Relations," an ongoing CRR program. The group has been active in a variety of ways through the Summer, including testimony before the District Commissioners in support of fair housing legislation. The committee now plans to hire professional staff full time to build a massive home visit program to promote better understanding between the white and Negro communities.

An interreligious civic effort for open occupancy in Detroit has been reorganized into the Metropolitan Detroit Conference on Religion and Race. A broader civic effort, also involving top religious leaders has been formed by Walter Reuther under the title of "Citizens' Committee for Equal Opportunity." At present, the CRR is concentrating its energies on housing problems.

A CRR was held in St. Louis in May and a steering committee has been outlining a program of action. The CRR, which plans to hire staff, has received at least one grant and has another possible commitment for funds.

The Allegheny County Council on Civil Rights in Pittsburgh has been the vehicle for the formation of the Pittsburgh Area Religion and Race Council. It has circulated religion and race literature to all the clergymen in the area, and is devising programs on the use of the purchasing power of the churches and synagogues.

Funds from various sources have been pledged to the steering committee in San Francisco, and plans laid for the hiring of full time staff.

11-20-63

and cooperation between the Socialists and Communists. "For 12 years [Guy] Mollet calls the Communists agents of the East, but in the election he calls for and accepts their support. And he gets elected by Communist votes while [Michel] Debre gets defeated by them. Do you wonder that the general has no respect for that kind of political behavior?"

A more detached Gaullist observer comments: "The only one who ever counted the Communist votes out was Pierre Mendes-France. None of the others ever did. In fact, Mendes is the only one who even tried to push through some of the reforms the general finally succeeded in accomplishing, but the Parliament cut him down, and he couldn't muster popular support as de Gaulle did. Maybe that's why the old man still likes and respects Mendes."

In listing de Gaulle's accomplishments his followers make a number of impressive points. They cite the end of the Algerian war and the fact that independence has been peacefully granted to most of the rest of the French colonial empire. They note that the general's victory has weakened both extremes, the right-wing O.A.S. and the Communists. In fact, de Gaulle wisely refused to concede to the Communists their view of the political spectrum by refusing them the accolade of "the left"; he tried and almost succeeded in rearranging the Chamber of Deputies' seating accordingly. Even in this case he was finally able only to achieve a compromise victory, with the members of his U.N.R. strung out from right to left in the front rows and the Communists still seated on the left in the rear.

The Gaullists point also to the positive achievements of the Franco-German entente, to the continuing economic and fiscal strength of France, to her annual growth rate of more than 5 per cent, and —perhaps most important of all—to the stability and continuity of government. This last, they say, is the result of General de Gaulle's having achieved a more equitable balance between the presidency and the legislature, a balance which has given force and direction to government policy. An official of the ministry of information summed it up for me succinctly: "The Parliament's there. The president's there. We are using them both. It may not look just right on paper, but it is working out in fact." Whether it will continue to work out in fact and in the future is the open and crucial question.

Are Southern Churches Silent?

For the most part, Yes—when it comes to race relations. So says a close observer of the scene, and he tells why.

Religion General

SAMUEL SOUTHARD

The Christian Century Nov. 20, 1963

✦ IN SOME southern churches there has been counsel for silence, even in the face of news centering on a local church and attracting worldwide attention. Consider, for instance, what happened between May 15 and June 15 in 1961. Newspaper stories each day told of riots in Alabama, with extensive coverage of the actions of a mob that formed outside a Negro church in Montgomery on the night of May 22. The violence was denounced in vigorous editorials and given front-page coverage in, among other Alabama newspapers, the Birmingham News, the Auburn Plainsman and the Lee County Bulletin. In contrast, the state's Protestant and Jewish periodicals either remained silent or offered insipid comments. In an editorial in the June issue of the Alabama Churchman Episcopal Bishop Charles C. J. Carpenter did denounce violence, but he made no reference to segregation and he assured his readers that most citizens were kind and peaceable. The editor of the Alabama Baptist echoed that assurance in his issue of July 6; most of "our people," he insisted, were "peaceable."

There was silence in Mississippi as events built toward violent climax in the fall of 1962, silence that was broken only after the white mobs had been quieted. In September, with tension mounting, the editor of the (Mississippi) Baptist Record acknowledged that "serious problems" were rising in the state; he urged that prayer be offered on behalf of the authorities responsible for solving the problems and warned private citizens against taking the law into their own hands. He did not, however, mention race relations in so many words until October 4, when word of the exploding situation had been spread on the front pages of newspapers the world over. In the issue of that date he condemned rioting and violence. Several weeks later he was among those who felt that a resolution concerning human relations and modern tensions should be passed by the Baptist state convention when it was offered to that body. But when pastors objected, the measure was tabled.

Some Mississippi pastors, however, did speak out that fall of 1962. In Oxford, on October 7, Baptist, Episcopal, Methodist and Presbyterian pastors called on their people to repent for having assented passively to conditions that had spawned lawlessness. Their sermons came within a week after the mayor of Oxford, an active churchman, had accused Mississippi patrolmen of "inactivity" and University of Mississippi professors had condemned the riots. During the preceding summer one Baptist pastor had tried to interest a campus religious group in taking positive steps that might help prevent violence.

Mr. Southard is a member of the faculty of Southern Baptist Theological Seminary in Louisville, Kentucky.

Few ministerial associations or local churches have taken specific action looking toward desegregation of their facilities; few have urged peaceful acceptance of federal decisions on access to public accommodations. For the most part ministerial groups that have taken such actions are to be found in large cities or in border states; e.g., Front Royal, Virginia, September 1958; Atlanta, November 1958; Chattanooga, February 1961; Birmingham, May 1961 and May 1963; Baton Rouge, June 1961; Montgomery, November 1962.

Denominational officials have often been even more reluctant to speak out than have local pastors. When a group of Mississippi Methodist ministers came out openly against segregation in January 1963, Bishop Marvin Franklin was quoted by the Louisville Courier-Journal as saying that he did not want to be quoted on the subject.

I

A primary reason for silence on the part of both pastors and denominational officials is their desire to conserve the numerical and financial gains accruing to religion as the result of its "popularity" since World War II. They fear specific discussion of racial issues in the light of Christian principles. Why? Because, as one able denominational official has explained, "it would split the convention." This official has used his considerable talents to keep direct mention of desegregation out of the periodicals and programs for which he is responsible.

The official stand for silence was dramatized when, in 1958, the Southern Baptist Convention's Home Mission Board withdrew from circulation The Long Bridge, a study guide for church groups which contained a discussion of racial problems. In defending the withdrawal of that book the editor of the Western Recorder wrote in his April 3, 1958, issue:

> . . . Baptist leaders as a group have expressed no stand on integration. . . . Many persons are reluctant to express themselves because they fear more harm than good results from such controversy. . . . The fear was that such resentment could result from even circulating and discussing the matter as to hinder our present world mission efforts. The Southern Baptist Convention could be split by this matter if either side became very adamant.

The prevalence of silence in religious periodicals and at denominational assemblies means that ministers have no forum for discussion of race relations. As John Jeffers, pastor of First Baptist Church, Auburn, Alabama, has observed of the southern scene:

> There is a sizable segment of our citizenry, who are not vocal, who would favor a moderate approach to racial problems.
>
> The majority of Baptist ministers that I know in Alabama would like to offer leadership to this segment, but have been unable to determine how to do this effectively. The problem is how to lead without being appropriated by one or the other extremes which immediately destroys the effectiveness of your leadership. When thus appropriated, you are effective only with the one faction. Neither the opposite one nor the moderate group will listen to you any longer.
>
> Our primary need is a means of communication among [ministers] so that we might pool our wisdom and act as a fellowship rather than in isolated instances. The nature of our polity seems to render our regular denominational channels rather helpless at this point.
>
> There needs to be a "cooling off" or "calming down" period in these most troubled areas before we can hope to re-establish lines of communication with our Negro community.

In March 1961 Mr. Jeffers preached a sermon on "The War Nobody Wins," describing the losses entailed in the hardening of positions—for intransigent segregation or for militant legislation such as called for by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. He declared that whoever makes the first move toward reconciliation will be accounted great in the eyes of God.

Institutional silence was broken when, a month later, Martin Luther King, Jr., spoke in the chapel of Southern Baptist Theological Seminary in Louisville; it was, so far as I know, the first time he had been heard in a southern institution of higher learning with a predominantly white constituency. He was warmly received by faculty and students, who welcomed his persuasive address on the Christian motives for brotherhood. Such open discussion of a current moral problem was, however, viewed with alarm by the editor of the Alabama Baptist, who in a May 4 editorial declared that speeches on controversial issues should be avoided, for "all things are not expedient." As an alumnus and friend of the seminary, he wrote, he felt that its graduates would be damaged by news of Dr. King's chapel talk. Certainly the controversy reflected in the editorial did not arise over the content of Dr. King's message, for no copy of his address was ever printed; the issue was rather whether a leader of Christian nonviolence should be heard at all.

Another reason for silence is the preference of some southern ministers for working with strategically placed individuals in efforts looking toward peaceful desegregation. Some of these clergymen believe that premature publicity would wither those efforts as does scorching sunlight a tender plant. They prefer to see Christian attitudes take root and flourish quietly, through specific attitudes and activities of laymen, rather than to have attention called to some dramatic pronouncement by a clergyman.

As an example of such quiet growth, consider what happened during the pastorate of Swan Haworth at First Baptist Church in Vicksburg, Mississippi, between 1939 and 1951. Dr. Haworth consistently referred to Negroes who visited his study as "Mr." or "Mrs." so and so. On one occasion he introduced some Negro visitors in that manner to certain members of his church who chanced to be arriving for a meeting. The members became indignant; later the deacons sought to remove the possibility of future disturbances by ruling that Negroes could not visit the church without their permission.

The result was quite unexpected. Members of the woman's missionary society declared that they would invite whomever they pleased to speak at their meetings. Younger members of the congregation sought to provoke the deacons; only the pastor's calm advice prevented precipitous action by the young people. Dr. Haworth continued quietly to offer elementary courtesy to Negro citizens, and eventually the deacons voted unanimously to strike from their minutes the section forbidding Negroes to come to the church.

II

Still another reason for silence is the presence in the southern churches of many persons who are unable to discern or accept any relationship between love for God and love for neighbor. The blessing of having a large, affluent church can prove a curse when situations arise in which social mores run counter to Christian conscience. When on boards of deacons and stewards one sees prominent citizens—a governor, perhaps, and leading lawyers, businessmen and physicians—it is easy to understand how Christian ethics and southern culture are often assumed to be synonymous. (Incidentally, Governor Ross Barnett of Mississippi has for many years been a deacon and Bible class teacher in the First Baptist Church of Jackson.) Prominent citizens who are church members have made determined efforts to muffle the few statements southern religious groups have made on race relations. In 1959 the First Baptist Church of Front Royal, Virginia, repudiated its pastor's stand for desegregation of schools. After Martin Luther King, Jr., spoke at Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, three strong churches in Alabama voted to withhold funds from the seminary.

Another reason for silence is the awareness that militant segregationists are likely to launch counterattacks against ministers who speak publicly for moderation and for Christian love in times of racial tension. Take the experience of Bruce Evans, pastor of University Baptist Church in Baton Rouge, Louisiana. Dr. Evans had become known for his insistence in the pulpit and in private conversation on the truth that love for God and for neighbor must prevail in race relations. In August 1961 he joined 50 other ministers in signing a statement calling for "justice, decency and humility" in race relations. Shortly thereafter the school board denied to his wife employment as a high school mathematics teacher, explaining: "A few people who advocate integration have infiltrated our school system." Dr. Evans received strong support from his congregation, however, until April of this year when, after prolonged discussion, he finally resigned.

When in the summer of 1961 another minister in Baton Rouge wrote to me that he and his colleagues were being followed about by indignant laymen, that ministers' telephones were being tapped, and that a segregationist organization had been formed with the aim of muzzling the ministry, I was skeptical. But on December 31 of that year a federal grand jury indicted a state senator and two other men for tapping the telephones of religious leaders who had signed the statement on justice in race relations.

From such incidents one might conclude that ministers are eager to be prophetic but are held back by laymen in their churches. Such, however, is not always the case. Sometimes laymen also are silenced by social isolation or economic boycott. In 1953 a railway conductor who taught a Sunday school class in Lebanon Junction, Kentucky, began to apply to discussion of race relations the biblical reminder "God is no respecter of persons." As a result, he suffered isolation and abuse. Finally he abandoned his position; as he wrote in the Review and Expositor for April 1956, a main reason for his decision to do so was that he had received support from none of the ministers and laymen in the community.

Regrettably, southern ministers usually find that they cannot count on regional denominational support in efforts to stand firm against attacks based on their championing of justice and decency in race relations. Some who have written articles for denominational periodicals in the south have been surprised to find that when their articles appear all references to Negroes and racial integration have been deleted.*

III

Though it is indeed true that many southern pastors, denominational officials and laymen have been silent in these days of racial crisis, there are those who have spoken out. Invited to address the Baptist state convention of Georgia after being defeated by a militant segregationist in his bid to retain his seat in Congress, Brooks Hays accepted—and did not hesitate to discuss the racial situation. That same year the president of the Florida Baptist convention declared that Christians who flout the Supreme Court rulings on integration are "immature." And Virginia Baptists refused to endorse Governor

*See "Segregation and Southern Churches," in the Journal of Religion and Health for April 1962.

J. Lindsay Almond's policy calling for massive resistance to public school desegregation.

At their 1961 convention Georgia Baptists turned down a report which termed integration of public schools a violation of religious conviction. Kentucky Baptists voted to desegregate their hospitals, though a similar proposal in neighboring Tennessee lost out. In December 1961 the South Carolina Baptist Student Union voted 117-25 to urge the state Baptist convention to "give careful study to their responsibility and opportunity to open doors of knowledge and service to qualified students regardless of race or creed."

Missionaries on furlough have often spoken against segregation to southern white audiences that have never before heard a white man condemn it. They have been listened to because they present racial prejudice as a stumbling block to evangelization of the heathen and a scandal to whites who call themselves Christian. It is hard to silence missionaries from one's home state. After a Mississippi Baptist journal in the fall of 1962 had printed a letter from a missionary pleading for development of Christian attitudes at home so souls can be won abroad, protests flooded in on the editor, who cried: "But she is a native of our state and a missionary! It is our conviction that she has a right to be heard."

In 1962 a representative of one denomination's Alabama office came before a meeting of home and foreign missionaries to request them to delete references to racial unrest from any speeches they might make in the state that fall. This prohibition was subsequently questioned in a speech by William Gilliland, a missionary to Nigeria. How could anyone, he asked, expect him to keep silent on a question that had been raised by at least one person in every Alabama audience he had addressed: What is the effect of our racial strife on your missionary work? And when Mrs. Gilliland, a physician, spoke to the woman's missionary union of Montgomery on the difficulties racial strife poses for missionary work, the women crowded around her—some of them in tears—to thank her for her message; they had never before heard that particular application of the gospel to their racial practices.

Missionary motivation often plays a part in changing individual attitudes—the quietest and most enduring accomplishment southern churchmen have achieved in race relations. The process typically begins with the pastor and one or two laymen discussing race relations with leaders in the church, emphasizing the relation of God's love to love for men, and the effect of local attitudes on the missionary witness of the church.

That was the procedure followed when a Nigerian couple studying at the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary started attending Crescent Hill Baptist Church in Louisville. Earlier, John Claypool, the pastor, had pointed out that acceptance of the couple into membership would demonstrate concern for missions in Africa. Now he discussed with the board of deacons the relative merit of loss of Christian witness and loss of a few members from the rolls. After a period of prayer several of the deacons confessed that they had entertained some hard feelings and prejudices in regard to the proposal to accept the Nigerian couple, but that they now realized that such an attitude was unchristian and were ready to give strong support to that proposal. And in the woman's missionary union several of the older women agreed that to reject the couple would be to repudiate the heart of their work.

IV

Although southern ministers prefer to work quietly in the area of race relations, their remarks can be very specific. In Albany, Georgia, Brooks Ramsey, pastor of First Baptist Church, began in November 1961 an attempt to bring city officials and Negro leaders together to seek resolution of racial tensions. Known as a moderate on the racial question, he had on several occasions declared that the church was open to all who honored Jesus Christ. As racial tension mounted in Albany through the summer of 1962, militant segregationists in the congregation solicited his signature on a petition calling for writing segregation into First Baptist's constitution. Mr. Ramsey not only refused but announced that he would vigorously oppose circulation of the petition among members of the congregation. Later, when an usher turned away three Negroes who attempted to enter the church for a Sunday morning worship service, Mr. Ramsey publicly expressed his regret that the visitors had not been seated. In the face of attacks by the segregationists for his stand, he sought and received a vote of confidence from the church.

In the fall of 1962, after three Negro churches in the Albany area had been burned in reprisal for attempts to foster Negro voter registration, the Christian Index, Baptist state paper in Georgia, carried an editorial which said in part:

> How many Christians have been bold in their demands for racial peace? How many have demanded enforcement of the law that removed the mask from the Ku Klux Klan and other preachers of hatred? How many realize that the devil's disciples who bombed a Jewish temple in Atlanta a few years ago and who now burn Negro churches in South Georgia may someday bomb and burn other churches? . . . Beware in this day if all men speak well of you. It is because silence is your indictment that you are more a coward than a Christian of conviction.

Diplomat

✦ HE SOUGHT to spare their feelings; and with lies
Hid truth . . . and built a bubble paradise;
But dealt them bruises, when the bubble burst,
Harsher than if they'd seen the truth at first.

STANTON A. COBLENTZ.

prodding; wickedness in high places effectively defies legal process of law. Nor has America been particularly adept at winning friends abroad in recent years. Do the authors really exercise moral and political realism in urging that we "take momentary satisfaction in the fact that we have digested this new experience of responsibility and concomitant guilt with comparative success" (i.e., how nice it is we can still live with ourselves after having decided to use our nuclear arsenal if circumstances so dictate)?

Is it no longer true that—as Niebuhr used to insist so convincingly—collective man in a secular society is even less moral than individual man and that most of our seeming virtue is simply national self-interest? How can we say, except in arrogance, that America has tasted "all the bitter and sweet fruits of mature vitality which is the portion of mankind as a whole"? The rise of democratic governments round the world is due as much to the influence of British parliamentarianism as to our own influence. If, as the authors suggest, those who do not accept democracy may not be ready for it, what are the signs of the kairos? Are there not many levels of democratic involvement? Is it really a sign of maturity when the criticism of friend and foe no longer greatly disturbs us?

To ask these questions is perhaps akin to carrying coals to Newcastle. On the other hand one may well wonder if the authors' optimism is warranted by the realities of our present-day situation.

CORNELIUS J. DYCK.

Sprightly Spoofery

PEN-ULTIMATES. By Martin E. Marty and Dean Peerman. Holt, Rinehart and Winston, $2.95.

✦ CHRISTIAN SATIRE is rare and American Christian satire is practically nonexistent. The American church of whatever breed takes itself much too seriously to laugh at itself except in slight pen and ink cartoons showing balding rectors engaged in risibilities with their flocks. It is hence refreshing to find two Christians with enough courage to hold up the follies (and/or vices) of contemporary folk religions in America. Pen-ultimates is a collection of weekly pieces appearing in The Christian Century from 1960 to 1963. Many build on some religious idiocy appearing in the press; some reflect a particular gripe of the writers. There is hardly a category of pompousness, sentimentality, positive thinking, imitativeness, vanity, pseudo-religiousness, quackery, superstition, dullness or venality which is not exposed to ridicule.

The quality is remarkably even for a collection which depends on weekly beach-combings, but there are pieces funnier than others and some are more sharply ironic. (I am aware that the writers disclaim any effort to be funny. But to try to be funny and to be funny are two different things. Perhaps the charm of the Marty-Peerman humor is that it is not contrived.) In the funny category is an absolute gem: Bunny Foster's letter to her protégé. Bunny is an employee of the Chicago Playboy Club who has adopted a Korean orphan and writes her a Christmas letter. In it Bunny describes in deadly earnest the high ideals which warm the bosoms of the Playboy bunnies. "I get to thinking that what I am doing is sort of a religious thing . . ." The Marty-Peerman spoofing is never better.

Less mild is the attack on more serious lunacies: the "beauties" of the Johnson Island nuclear explosion; the deconsecration of churches left vacant by superhighway construction and the arrival of nonwhites. Quite wonderful is a collection of chestnuts from avant-garde preaching; called "To Quote Tillich . . . ," it bristles with the clichés of people who would not be caught dead with one.

In the early decades of the 18th century Joseph Addison brought the mildly satirical essay to a high level of artistry. Essential to that achievement was Addison's own moral and philosophic consistency. He could laugh at Englishmen because he was himself a wise and good man. Contemporary men, even Christian men, do not have such a wide and solid footing. But the Marty-Peerman satire does speak from a base which, though less ample than Addison's, gives what they say pen-ultimate moral seriousness. I can think of no more appropriate way to define this base than in the words of John, "Little children, keep yourselves from idols."

KARL A. OLSSON.

Religion

The Christian Century 11/27/63

Special Report

Divided Flocks in Jackson

✦ ON THE FRONT of St. Peter's Roman Catholic Church across the street from the governor's mansion in Jackson, Miss., there is a mosaic showing Christ with people of all races gathered about him. The inscription reads: "There shall be one shepherd and one flock."

For several weeks a small band of students from nearby Tougaloo Southern Christian College have been forming integrated groups to visit the white churches of Jackson. The Roman Catholic, the Episcopal, one United Presbyterian and one Missouri Synod Lutheran Church have admitted them.

On Worldwide Communion Sunday (Oct. 6), with churches displaying posters showing red, white, yellow and black hands taking cups from one communion tray, Julie Zaugg, a white student, and Bette Poole and Ida Kate Hannah, both Negroes, were turned away from Capitol Street Methodist Church in Jackson. As they left they were arrested and taken to the city jail where they were charged with trespassing and disturbing public worship. The next day, after having had five minutes to confer with a lawyer by telephone, they pleaded nolo contendere (I will not contend). Each was sentenced to six months' imprisonment and fined $500 on each of the two charges. Subsequently they were released on $1,000 appeal bonds provided by two national Methodist agencies, the Board of Christian Social Concerns and the Woman's Division of Christian Service. After hearing Attorney William Kunstler, who had been retained by the National Council of Churches to defend the girls, argue that bail should not be punitive, Judge William Cox refused to lower the amount, adding, "It seems to me that they came down here looking for trouble and they found it."

After the Chicago Daily News had reported the incident, Methodist Bishop Charles Brashares of the Chicago area called the arrests and convictions "a tragedy which belittles American democracy and Christian witness around the world . . . totally contrary to Methodist discipline and the law established by our governing body." The next Sunday a Chicago Methodist minister, Stanley Hallet, accompanied the three students to the Capitol Street church steps, where they were joined by two white students from Millsaps College in Jackson. There the group prayed and read from the Bible.

I

The third act of the drama was played out the following week, when five ministers and a layman from Chicago went to Jackson to join the visitation. They called on the pastors of Capitol Street and St. Luke's Methodist churches, but were unable to see either Bishop Marvin Franklin of the Jackson area or W. J. Cunningham, pastor of Galloway Memorial Church. Three members of the team did visit District Superintendent J. W. Leggett, who is to head the Mississippi delegation to next year's Methodist General Conference in Pittsburgh.

At 8:30 A.M. on Sunday three girls, one white and two Negro, were arrested as they attempted to attend Trinity Lutheran Church (Lutheran Church in America). At 9:20 A.M. John Garner, a white physics instructor at Tougaloo and a member of the Galloway Memorial church, arrived to attend his Sunday school class accompanied by Joseph Buckles and Elmer Dickson, two of the visiting white ministers, and Joyce Ladner, a Negro student. Before Sunday school began the four were arrested (inside the church) on charges of trespassing and disturbing public worship. At 11 the three girls who had been arrested on Oct. 6 were escorted to the Capitol Street church by two white ministers, Donald Walden and myself. We were arrested on church property as we were being turned away. At St. Luke's Methodist a fifth minister, James Reed, and a student were turned away but were not arrested.

The next Sunday, Oct. 27, two Methodist and two Evangelical United Brethren ministers from Chicago and two Negro students from Tougaloo, in separate teams of three members each, visited Galloway and Capitol Street churches. This time a new tactic was employed: after they were turned away the ministers escorted the students back to their cars, then returned to the church steps to pray. Preston Cole, Methodist, and Sheldon Trapp, E.U.B., were arrested while praying in front of the Capitol Street church.

II

The legal procedures employed in these cases are significant as guideposts in the racial struggle. Attorney Kunstler, who had defended the freedom riders arrested in Jackson last year and who is chief counsel for the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, sought a federal injunction restraining the city of Jackson and the state of Mississippi from interfering with his clients' constitutional rights under the First amendment. He quickly added as party plaintiffs the others arrested during the third week—a legal maneuver that took their cases out of the city and state courts. To get the cases transferred Kunstler cited a little-used section of the U.S. Civil Rights act of 1866. When Judge Cox refused to sign a writ of habeas corpus, Kunstler went to Atlanta to have a higher court issue a writ of mandamus instructing Cox to issue the writ and set bail for the 12.

Earlier, on Oct. 25, Mayor Allen Thompson of Jackson, who is a member of the Galloway church, had admitted in court that he used the city's police powers to enforce segregation. He said that if a church wanted to be mixed, that was all right with him; but if they wanted to be segregated, he would use police power to keep them segregated—whether it took one or 500 policemen.

The situation in Mississippi is undoubtedly fraught with extreme danger. In an informal conversation Marquis Childs, nationally syndicated columnist, said that the situation is frighteningly reminiscent of what he saw in Germany in the 1930s. In an opinion handed down in October the U.S. Fifth circuit court said that the state of Mississippi has a "steel hard, inflexible, undeviating policy of racial segregation." If he is to live comfortably in Mississippi, a white man must accept this policy or be subject to harassment, loss of credit, numerous traffic arrests, even threat of death.

While other southern states seem to be making some progress in freeing the moderate to speak his opinion, Mississippi remains regimented on the issue. The Democratic candidates for the governorship did not run against each other but against Pres. Kennedy; Paul Johnson won the primary election because he "stood tall last fall"—a reference to the fact that he stood in the door of the University of Mississippi to bar Negro student James Meredith. The state has little industry and seems to be getting poorer, though Gov. Ross Barnett denies emphatically that such is the case. Negroes, who comprise 46 per cent of the population, seldom are able to vote, and they enjoy few job opportunities. Aaron Henry, Clarksdale druggist who is president of the state branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, says that the proposed law to give the franchise to all persons who have achieved a sixth-grade education would still leave more than half the Negroes disfranchised.

III

In the face of today's racial tension the Methodist Church finds itself in a difficult situation. Nearly one third of its members live in the deep south. Its administrative structure locates all executive power in the regional jurisdictions. Its nongeographical, segregated Central jurisdiction is totally out of touch with the geographical, white Southeastern jurisdiction which it overlaps. It was not until 1939 that the 1844 rift which split the church on the slavery question was healed. Now there are real fears that another rift will take place if the civil rights issue is pushed too hard. Just now there is a chance that the national Methodist Woman's Division of Christian Service may lose as much as $100,000 in contributions to its missions program because it put up half the bail money for the three girls.

It is obvious that the Methodist Church in Mississippi is hopelessly beholden to the culture. After the University of Mississippi riots 28 Mississippi Methodist ministers issued a statement saying that the pulpit must be free if the Word of God is to be preached, that they do not believe in discrimination on the basis of color or race, that the schools should not be closed to avoid integration, and that they are all anticommunists. Today only 12 of those ministers remain in Mississippi; the former pastors of the Galloway and Capitol Street churches, who supported but did not sign the statement, are no longer serving churches in the Mississippi conference.

The man who has directed the attack on racial segregation in the churches is the Rev. Edwin King, 27, a native white Mississippian who is dean of students and chaplain at Tougaloo. At the latest Mississippi annual conference he was ordained, yet by a vote of 89-85 he was refused admission to the conference, which means that he cannot be appointed to serve any of its churches or have access to its benefits. Dr. Leggett describes King as an "irresponsible troublemaker with mental problems"; another person, however, describes him as "Mississippi's Pastor Niemöller."

The arrest of Sheldon Trapp may have ramifications for the Methodist-Evangelical United Brethren merger, for there has been much E.U.B. dissatisfaction with Methodist foot-dragging on the racial issue. Many northern Methodists have sought to persuade their E.U.B. colleagues to hold out for dissolution of the Central jurisdiction and for modifications in the jurisdictional and episcopal systems before union is consummated. Thirty Illinois E.U.B. pastors, including seven professors at their church's seminary in Naperville, recently issued a statement that said: "This issue is sufficiently serious that a full discussion of it is essential even if it delays or imperils the basis of union."

The problem posed by the jurisdictional system looms large. That system originally was designed as a means of facilitating unity. There are many churchmen who now feel that it has failed its purpose, that it is a hindrance to the unity it sought to further and therefore should be changed. In testifying against the arrested ministers and students one Mississippi pastor intimated that it is the function of the Central jurisdiction to keep the Negroes from joining white churches.

Seth Granberry, pastor of the Capitol Street church, has acknowledged that he has no control over the situation. He says that if he were to permit a Negro to enter his church the pews would be empty the next Sunday; further, that if a white and a Negro bishop were to present themselves together at the doors of his church they would be arrested.

There is little likelihood of such a presentation occurring.

The theological issue was clearly stated by one policeman as he interrogated a visiting pastor: "I'm a Methodist and I paid for that church, and we'll run it the way we want to run it. It's our church." The question in Jackson today is, Who is Lord of the Church? On the front of St. Peter's Church there is an answer—the biblical one.

GERALD FORSHEY.

MA, file

dolences to Mrs. Kennedy and to members of the late President's immediate family in their hour of bereavement.

Russian Wheat Deal a Typical Communist Bargain

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BRUCE ALGER

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 4, 1963

Mr. ALGER. Mr. Speaker, it just seems some of our officials can never learn that the Communists are not to be trusted. They have one objective, world domination by the Soviet Union and every phase of their national life is geared to that end. Trade with the Soviets is to them a political weapon. Agreements, treaties, promises are just so much paper to the Communists. Breaking treaties, welching on agreements, lying, is a part of Communist strategy. In fact, it is written into their constitution.

For some reason our officials just will not accept this. We continue to believe that we can deal with the Communists as an honorable government with the result that in every deal they win and we lose.

The latest farce is the deal to sell wheat to Russia. In spite of all the assurances that U.S. interests would be protected, we have now arrived at the point where none of the original agreements will be included.

This should prove to us, Mr. Speaker, that you cannot do business with the Communists and that you can trust the Communists only to do what they have said all along they will do, win the cold war and destroy us.

As a part of these remarks I include an editorial from today's Wall Street Journal, "How One Thing Leads to Another." It is a step by step account of how Communist Russia has conned us into giving them all they wanted in the first place on the wheat deal. The editorial follows:

HOW ONE THING LEADS TO ANOTHER

When the Russian wheat deal was first proposed last October, the late President Kennedy, in clear and specific language, laid down some excellent terms. He carefully explained what the deal would be—and would not be.

This would be a private, commercial transaction, the Government's role being limited to granting the necessary permission, he said. The sale would be for gold or American dollars, either cash on delivery or "normal commercial terms." Basically, in his words, "the Soviet Union would be treated like any other cash customer * * * who is willing and able to strike a bargain with private American merchants."

In presenting this arrangement, Mr. Kennedy emphasized that one feature of it was that the wheat sold to the Soviet Union would be carried in American ships.

Thus, while even then the wheat sale was not without its critics, it was generally accepted by the public on the basis of this straightforward arrangement. On such terms the Russians could buy wheat on the world market anyway, and it seemed as though we would get a fair "quid" for the Russian "quo."

Now, it seems, things aren't quite what they seemed.

One of the first things that happened, once the Soviet buyers got the U.S. Government's approval to the principle of a sale, was that they balked at having the wheat shipped to them in American ships. Mr. Khrushchev, figuratively at least, banged the bargaining table, and the U.S. Government relaxed this part of the arrangement.

After that it developed that the Soviet Union didn't want to pay cash after all, either in gold or U.S. dollars. Nor were the Communists willing to deal on normal commercial terms, meaning such short-term credit as they might get from either the private sellers or private banks. A few efforts at obtaining such credit on their terms, here and in Europe, were unproductive. Whereupon the Soviets said to us: No credit, no deal.

So next the proposition was that the U.S. Government, through the Export-Import Bank, itself finance the Russian wheat purchase by guaranteeing a loan for 75 percent of the purchase price.

The first reactions to this, not unreasonably, were objections in Congress. A bill was introduced to prohibit this U.S. financing of Russian trade. And although Treasury Secretary Dillon argued that we must underwrite the sale or there would be no sale, the Senate Banking Committee appeared unpersuaded that the deal was worth that price. Appeared unpersuaded, that is, until the assassination of President Kennedy.

Then, in the aftermath of that tragic event, the Senate committee quietly decided to put aside its objections to financing the Russian wheat sale. The explanation given was that this was intended as a tribute to the man who had so carefully spelled out the original terms, and somehow as a gesture of confidence to the new President.

This action had hardly been taken, yielding one more point to the Soviet bargainers, when there developed an argument over the shipping rates for transporting the wheat to Russia. The Russians decided they were too high, implying that if something can't be done to get cheaper shipping rates—a special U.S. subsidy, perhaps?—maybe they would have to get their wheat somewhere else.

What interests us here is not so much the wrangle over the Soviet Union's credit standing, although Senator MUNDT had a point about the unpaid Soviet debts due us from World War II. Nor so much even the fact that a Soviet wheat loan would be a major change in the Export-Import Bank policy, which has so far never extended credit or credit insurance to a Communist bloc country.

Rather, the intriguing thing here is the progressive change in the wheat deal and the attitude of U.S. officials to the changing Soviet demands. We have witnessed a typical Communist maneuver. First a proposition that has the sound of reasonableness. Then, a bargain seemingly struck, demands for a little change. Finally, this being agreed to, a new set of demands. The same sort of thing has happened a thousand times over in different kinds of bargaining with the Communists.

Unfortunately, the American reaction is also all too typical. Congratulations at a well-struck bargain; next a little yielding in the hopes of saving the bargain. Finally, "getting a deal" seems to become to us as important as the terms of the bargain. And before you know it, the Russians have what they were after in the first place.

Whatever else may be said about the present proposals, they are a far cry from the thoughtful terms laid down by President Kennedy last October. It is really astounding, when you think of it, how one little thing leads to another.

Religion

National Council of the Churches of Christ Urges Signatures on Civil Rights Discharge Petition

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN BRADEMAS

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 3, 1963

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, December 9, Members of the House of Representatives will have an opportunity to take an important forward step toward the passage of one of the most significant pieces of legislation that Congress has considered in many years, the Civil Rights Act of 1963.

This opportunity will be presented to Members of the House in the form of a petition to discharge the Rules Committee of further consideration of the civil rights bill and I hope that the required 218 Members of the House, both Democrats and Republicans, will sign their names to this petition.

As evidence of the support of many of the major religious denominations in our country for the passage of the civil rights bill and specifically for the use of the unusual discharge petition procedure, I draw the attention of Members of the House to the adoption on December 5, 1963 of a resolution on civil rights legislation adopted by the General Assembly of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the United States.

The text of this resolution follows:

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF THE CHURCHES OF CHRIST IN THE U.S.A. RESOLUTION ON CIVIL RIGHTS LEGISLATION

(Adopted by the general assembly Dec. 5, 1963)

The eyes of the world are upon the American Congress, watching to see whether our national legislative body, in a bipartisan way, can meet the challenge of one of the greatest moral issues of our time. Six months have already passed since comprehensive civil rights legislation was introduced. Further delay by the Congress could undermine the faith of the American people in the capacity of its political institutions to function and the confidence of all men who love liberty in the ability of the United States to advance the global struggle for freedom.

The General Assembly of the National Council of Churches, therefore, calls upon the Congress of the United States to take every step necessary to insure the earliest possible passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1963, including the immediate use of a discharge petition which will enable the House of Representatives to take action on the bill.

The General Assembly of the National Council of Churches also calls upon Christians across the Nation to urge their Representatives in Congress to sign such a petition when it is presented.

17-5-63

MA
PWV
SB

Rel-
Gen
1963

'Three great men by the name of John . . .'

A Cardinal's Tribute To Father LaFarge

At the Requiem Mass in St. Ignatius Loyola Church last week for Father John LaFarge, S.J., a Cardinal spoke memorable words. And a Jesuit editor took notes. This is the text prepared from those notes of the sermon by His Eminence Richard Cardinal Cushing of Boston:

I am presuming on the permission of my good friend, His Eminence Cardinal Spellman, to say a few words on this ocasion. And I am presuming on the permission of Very Rev. Father Provincial of the Jesuit Fathers to violate one of their sacred rules that pertains to "no eulogy" at the Mass for members of the Society of Jesus. However, I have no intention of preaching a eulogy, I only desire to present to you, in brief form my personal appreciation of a Father, a friend of yours and mine, the late Father John LaFarge.

I was thinking of the late Father John LaFarge this morning on the plane that brought me from Boston to New York. So many events are happening in these times that it must have some meaning in the mind of God. Three great men by the name of John have been called recently to eternity. Pope John XXIII, the only Church high authority who ever understood me in Vatican circles—and for that I think there must be something supernatural about him, because I do not understand myself. And then there was our friend, President John F. Kennedy, and then today God has called to his reward another here by the name of John.

Blinding

It is difficult, even impossible, for human eyes to visualize God, because no eyes of any human being could gaze upon God and all His attributes without being blinded by infinite perfection. But there are various things about God that epitomize in words His place in religion, of God. If I were to epitomize the personal appeal of the life and work of the beloved Father John LaFarge, I would say: "Like God Himself, he was always active, yet always calm."

'He was always active, but always a priest, an instrument of God, the true tool of Christ. Activity dominated his life until it was closed. Yet in the midst of activity he was always calm . . . Let us cherish his memory by perpetuating his work . . .'

This great man of God never played to the galleries. In the heat of discussion, he never appeared attempting to win with catch phrases, or to make any impression but by way of presenting the truth as he saw it.

The accomplishments of John LaFarge are so numerous that it would be impossible to name them all. They are all indications of his activity. He wrote an autobiography, "The Manner is Ordinary," referring to his way of life. In my opinion, the book should be entitled "The Manner is Extraordinary."

I first met Father LaFarge 40 years ago in Boston, when the Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament, founded by Mother Katherine Drexel, were building an information and recreation center for the Negro people. I invited Father LaFarge to come to that Mission, for the work on my part was voluntary. I especially needed and wanted his advice.

Aid for Poor

he founded the first Catholic Interracial Council in the United States. Since that time these councils have multiplied from one end of the country to the other. He also founded the Catholic Laymen's Union as a supporting arm, as it were. When a Negro demonstration rolled into Washington it surprised everybody by its magnificent order and organization. They paid Father LaFarge a great tribute—a position of honor, so that all the country could behold the man who spearheaded, as it were, the Catholic movement for Negro welfare.

Inspiring

The Church was dragging its heels. Not that we missed our duty in the past. But then we seemed contented to let things develop in their own way, confident that in God's good time things would work out. In this work of inspiring Catholic Interracial councils Father LaFarge lives forever in the hearts of our Negro brethren and will be forever admired by all of us.

But he did far more than that. He caused the National Catholic Welfare Conference to men by the name of John have been called recently to eternity. Pope John XXIII, the only Church high authority who ever understood me in Vatican circles—and for that I think there must be something supernatural about him, because I do not understand myself. And then there was our friend, President John F. Kennedy, and then today God has called to his reward another here by the name of John.

Blinding

It is difficult, even impossible, for human eyes to visualize God, because no eyes of any human being could gaze upon God and all His attributes without being blinded by infinite perfection. But there are various things about God that epitomize in words His place in religion, from the world He has created. Foremost among them are two attributes: God is always active and God is always calm. Semper agens. Semper quietus.

Look about and you will see manifestations of God's activity: all the universe in perfect order, day and night succeed, the seasons follow one another, millions of heavenly bodies beyond reach. They all indicate with countless other things in the order of nature the limitless activity of the infinite being whom we call God. Even though we never hear a whisper from a tabernacle door, nor a prayer answered, try to add up the millions of people who come to God and want to offer their homage, thanks or petitions to the Eucharist.

God is always active, and yet we see no manifestations of His anger or His vengeance against all the evils in the world and the beings made in His image. As a general of the armed forces once said, at the root of every difficulty or problem on the earth is theology. Therefore theology has the answer for all wrongs.

No Catching Phrases

Yes, semper agens, semper quietus. These are two very beautiful and practical attributes. The accomplishments of John LaFarge are so numerous that it would be impossible to name them all. They are all indications of his activity. He wrote an autobiography, "The Manner is Ordinary," referring to his way of life. In my opinion, the book should be entitled "The Manner is Extraordinary."

I first met Father LaFarge 40 years ago in Boston, when the Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament, founded by Mother Katherine Drexel, were building an information and recreation center for the Negro people. I invited Father LaFarge to come to that Mission, for the work on my part was voluntary. I especially needed and wanted his advice.

Aid for Poor

He came and he recommended that I establish a program of aid to boys and girls of poor families. I followed his advice, and from it was born an organization of which I am the sponsor, Catholic Scholarships for Negroes, Inc. The guiding spirit of the organization was Mrs. Roger Putnam, of Springfield, Mass., I believe. I am a sort of voluntary episcopal protector and guide. Since that organization was founded, hundreds of capable but poor Negro students have had an opportunity to go to a Catholic college. Every year the number increases.

Ever since that contact with Father LaFarge, I gradually became interested in his works. They are innumerable. Way back 30 years ago he founded the Catholic Interracial Council. It wasn't fashionable in those days to be identified with any interracial work. To be sure, it was fashionable to help a Negro. But to demand civil rights and to encourage them to aspire to the highest posts and careers and opulence enjoyed by others, was far from fashionable 25 years ago, to be frank. But fashionable or not, Father LaFarge, as a result of his eperiencesx in missionary work, especially in rural areas, dedicated himself to helping the Negro and other minority groups.

Animated by his love of God and neighbor, he was dragging his heels in the movement for Negro welfare.

Inspiring

The Church was dragging its heels. Not that we missed our duty in the past. But then we seemed contented to let things develop in their own way, confident that in God's good time things would work out. In this work of inspiring Catholic Interracial councils Father LaFarge lives forever in the hearts of our Negro brethren and will be forever admired by all of us.

But he did far more than that. He caused the National Catholic Welfare Conference to organize a rural life department. Before we ever heard the words "ecumenical" or "ecumenical spirit" in our life, as a result of the Pope's opening the doors and letting the fresh air of the twentieth century in, Father LaFarge was representing this ecumenical spirit in the highest places. Throughout his life he made contacts with thousands of people of all religious groups and he numbered a great many of them among his friends.

A few years ago, when Harvard University gave me an honorary degree, Father LaFarge was there for his 15th anniversary of graduation. He was one of the few men I knew on the campus. Everyone knew him and respected him. He is still known and esteemed for his scholarship and linguistic abilities by men and women in all parts of the country.

Ecumenical

He was far ahead of us all in spreading the spirit of the ecumenical council. Before the week is out, the Council will reach its decision on the liturgy. But years ago Father LaFarge was a power in the liturgical movement, far ahead of his time. In the field of international peace, he held an exalted place. Scholar, prolific writer, add all he wrote and you have a small library. Editor for a time of the greatest Catholic weekly in the country, popularly known as America, he attained an enviable reputation as its gifted editor.

He was always active, but always a priest, an instrument of God, the true tool of Christ. Activity dominated his life until it was closed. Yet in the midst of activity he was always calm, never disturbed, never upset, always reaching the root and core of every discussion and calmly, intelligently coming forth with a common denominator acceptable to all.

God is always active and He is always calm. If I apply these terms, I do not know any priest of God to whom I could better apply them than to Father LaFarge.

Crusader for Truth

Now all is calm, all is peaceful. Please God, he is now in the mansions of Heaven. Let us cherish the memory of this great crusader for the truth. And we can do it best not only by our prayers but by perpetuating more and more the wonderful spirit of Catholic interracial work.

There was a man sent by God whose name was John—John LaFarge.

October 17, 1961

Dear Mr. Ridder:

The Seventy-Fifth Anniversary of the publication of The Catholic News is a milestone in the history of the Archdiocese of New York. On this happy occasion I congratulate you, your dedicated Editor and the zealous members of your staff who have faithfully fulfilled this important apostolate, and I join the religious, the clergy and the faithful of the Archdiocese in prayerfully wishing all those associated with The Catholic News God's continued blessings.

With kind regards, I am
Very sincerely yours in Christ,
✠ F. Cardinal Spellman
Archbishop of New York

The Catholic News

ESTABLISHED 1886

PUBLISHED IN THE INTEREST OF THE ARCHDIOCESE OF NEW YORK

Owned and published by
THE CATHOLIC NEWS PUBLISHING CO., INC.
251 Park Ave. South, New York, N. Y.—GR 5-3711
10010

One Year Weekly by Mail $5.0
Canada, $5.50; Central and South America, $6.50; and Foreign $6.5

CHARLES H. RIDDER, K.M., President-Publisher
VICTOR L. RIDDER, Executive Vice-President
WILLIAM H. FANNING, JR., Editor
HENRY RIDDER, Secretary-Treasurer

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1963 31

CATHOLIC INTERRACIAL COUNCIL OF NEW YORK

233 Broadway New York, N.Y. 10007

Religion Research ~~Civil Rights Leg.~~

united church women

national council of the churches of christ in the u.s.a.

475 RIVERSIDE DRIVE, NEW YORK 27, N. Y. RIVERSIDE 9-2200

J. IRWIN MILLER, PRESIDENT REV. ROY G. ROSS, GENERAL SECRETARY

MRS. THEODORE F. WALLACE
CHAIRMAN

MRS. W. MURDOCH MACLEOD
GENERAL DIRECTOR

December 6, 1963

To: National Christian Social Relations Committee and State Presidents.

Re: Civil Rights Act

Dear Friends:

I am writing this letter from Philadelphia following the session of the General Assembly of the National Council of Churches in which the enclosed resolution was adopted (with only a handful of dissenting votes). How good it is to have several C S R state chairmen and state presidents here.

The urgent need at this moment is for each of us who shares the concern that the Civil Rights Act be passed to write our representatives in the House to sign the discharge petition which will bring the proposed Bill to the floor for debate and action. Even though your congressman knows your convictions on civil rights it is important that you urge him to sign the discharge petition.

The petition is to be introduced Monday, December 9. Members will have only that week to sign it, 218 signatures are needed.

Bus loads of Assembly delegates will interrupt their attendance tomorrow to have appointments with their representatives in Washington. You can help further by seeing that your local TV and Radio stations are given a copy of the Assembly's resolution urging action by all concerned people. Share the information and need also with key people in your church and community, urging them to write, wire or phone their congressman.

Those closest to the Washington scene say that the action of church people now can literally be decisive.

With special greetings to you, and in haste,

Eleanor French

Eleanor French, Director
Christian Social Relations

RESOLUTION ADOPTED BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE NATIONAL COUNCIL OF THE CHURCHES OF CHRIST IN THE U.S.A.
on CIVIL RIGHTS LEGISLATION

The eyes of the world are upon the American Congress, watching to see whether our national legislative body, in a bi-partisan way, can meet the challenge of one of the greatest moral issues of our time. Six months have already passed since comprehensive civil rights legislation was introduced. Further delay by the Congress could undermine the faith of the American people in the capacity of its political institutions to function and the confidence of all men who love liberty in the ability of the United States to advance the global struggle for freedom.

The General Assembly of the National Council of Churches, therefore, calls upon the Congress of the United States to take every step necessary to insure the earliest possible passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1963, including the immediate use of a discharge petition which will enable the House of Representatives to take action on the Bill.

The General Assembly of the National Council of Churches also calls upon Christians across the nation to urge their Representatives in Congress to sign such a petition when it is presented.

MARKED COPY

Saturday, December 7, 1963

INFORMATION SERVICE

Published Bi-Weekly, Except During July and August, and monthly in November by the BUREAU OF RESEARCH AND SURVEY

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF THE CHURCHES OF CHRIST IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA
475 RIVERSIDE DRIVE, NEW YORK, N. Y. 10027

Price $3.50 Per Year—Single copies of this issue 20 cents. Volume XLII, No. 19

The National Council of the Churches of Christ in the United States of America is the cooperative agency through which thirty-one communions render united service. Articles appearing in this publication furnish information on current issues and are not to be construed as declarations of official attitudes or policies of the National Council of Churches.

Entered as second-class matter January 4, 1924 at the Post Office at New York, under the Act of March 3, 1879.

"The Businessman and the Negro"

Religious conviction and governmental action are important in the struggle for Negro equality. However, many of the major dimensions of the problems are economic and capable of resolution only as American business and labor face up to the realities.

It is, therefore, of major importance that the September issue of Fortune, a highly influential spokesman to and for the business world, devotes its lead article to the title given above. The author, Charles E. Silberman, is a member of the board of editors of Fortune. His extended article deserves to be read in full. It in turn is based on a chapter in his book, Crisis in Black and White, soon to be published by Random House.

The following extracts, reprinted with the permission of Fortune, present some of the economic realities and point up needed responses by employees.

"The events of this past spring and summer, beginning with the demonstrations in Birmingham in April and May, represent a major watershed in the history of U.S. race relations. Birmingham, and its aftermath in a hundred cities around the country, demonstrated, so that no one could doubt it any longer, the depth of Negro discontent, the extent of Negro anger and hate, and the ease with which it can flare into violence. Politics, churches, schools, and all aspects of American life will be affected by this anger. Businessmen in particular will be involved more deeply and painfully in the racial struggle. . . .

"The great mass of Negroes . . . are more concerned with where they work than with where they eat: winning the right to eat at a desegregated lunch counter is small consolation to men who can't afford the cost of the meal.

Page 1 "The Businessman and the Negro"
Page 1 Explanation Enough
Page 3 The Wrong Time
Page 3 White Attitudes on the Negro
Page 4 "The Relative Progress of the American Negro Since 1950"
Page 5 "How Not to Integrate the Schools"
Page 6 "Prejudice and Your Child"
Page 7 The Need for Sanctions
Page 7 Creative Extremism
Page 8 How's That Again?
Page 8 "A Flower for the Graves"

Explanation Enough

"I am against bigotry and discrimination because I think they are wrong. I am for human understanding, for equal justice, for equality of opportunity because I think they are right.

"May this country always be the kind where a man needs —and the people demand—no greater explanation than this."

—Lyndon Baines Johnson, April 3, 1962.

The great majority of Negro Americans are still mired in poverty. . . .

"The Verge of Crisis"

"Two out of three Negro households earn less than $4,000 a year, and one Negro male in nine is out of work. This poverty and insecurity are particularly galling to the Negro, who sees the white society that surrounds him grow increasingly affluent while he remains tied to his slum. Contrary to popular impression, Negroes' economic position has actually deteriorated over the last ten years, relative to that of whites. Negroes did make enormous advances during World War II and the boom years that followed, for the shortage of labor drew them into factory and white-collar jobs that had always been barred to them. As a result, Negro income increased 80 per cent faster than white income, and the median income of Negro families jumped from only 37 per cent of white income in 1939 to 57 per cent in 1952. But this escalation came to a halt with the slowdown of the economy after the end of the Korean war. As a result, the median income of Negro families dropped from its high of 57 per cent of white income in 1952 to 53 per cent in 1962.

"The future is even bleaker than the present; it is no exaggeration to say that Negroes are on the verge of a major economic crisis, for the gap is widening between Negro education and training, on the one hand, and the requirements of the labor market, on the other. Automation, new management techniques, and changes in consumer spending patterns are all reducing the demand for unskilled and semiskilled labor and increasing employment in professional, managerial, clerical, and sales jobs, many of which require considerable education and training.

"These white-color occupations account for no less than 97 per cent of the total increase in employment that has occurred since 1947. The professionalization of the labor force accelerated during the mid-fifties, and will pick up more momentum in the decade ahead. But Negroes are badly prepared for this change. Three Negro men in five now work in unskilled or semiskilled blue-collar jobs, compared to three out of ten white men, and more than half the Negro men over the age of twenty-five (versus 21 per cent of white men) have had less than a grammar-school education. . . .

"But Negroes' lack of education and training, and their concentration in unskilled occupations—conditions produced by past discrimination—do not entirely account for Negro poverty. On the contrary, the Negro unemployment rate is higher than the white rate in every major occupational group. Among craftsmen and foremen, for example, Negro unemployment runs to 9.7 per cent, compared to 4.8 per cent for whites; among clerical workers, 7.1 per cent versus 3.8 per cent. While a great many Negroes can't find jobs because they lack the necessary skills, all too many Negroes who do have the education and training are unable to put their skills to work.

Employment—Limited

"Many firms employ Negroes only in a few job classifications. In the South, employment of Negroes is limited by the tradition that Negroes not be permitted to work on an equal status with whites, and that they never be placed in a supervisory position over whites. In the North, exclusion of Negroes from the better jobs stems less from conscious corporate decisions to discriminate than from the conscious or unconscious biases of the personnel officers, the foremen, the executives, i.e., all those involved in hiring and promoting. At the heart of this kind of unconscious discrimination, management consultant John Perry has suggested, is the concept of 'place'—i.e., the notion that certain jobs and certain situations are appropriate, others inappropriate, for Negroes. In almost every company, that is to say, whether through accident or choice, tradition has reserved some jobs almost exclusively for Negroes and some almost exclusively for whites ('Negroes wouldn't be happy there'; 'Negroes wouldn't fit in there'; 'I'm not prejudiced, but my customers might object').

"Because discrimination is so endemic, Negro youngsters all too often see no point to finishing high school or going on to advanced training; they drop out at the first opportunity, and they shirk their studies while they are in school. 'Education is a difficult enough process under any condition,' Dr. Carl Hansen, Superintendent of Schools of Washington, D.C., has explained, 'because educational effort is primarily an expression of hope on the part of the student. . . . The Negro pupil is obliged to be more hopeful than the white student. He is asked to have faith and confidence which at the moment he is in school seems unreasonable and unjustifiable.'

"The Politics of Repair"

"Jobs are the fulcrum, therefore, on which Negro progress rests, and to which Negro protests will be directed. Businessmen will be in the thick of the fray. Corporations of every sort will be served with demands to hire more Negroes in non-menial positions and to train them for promotion. The pressure to open up job opportunities will encompass every level, from apprentice to foreman to executive, though the emphasis will be on the broad middle range. The pressure will be at least as strong in the North as in the South; more than half the Negroes of the U.S. now live in the cities of the North and West, where they constitute a large and rapidly growing proportion of the population. The methods used will run the entire gamut from polite moral suasion to legal action to boycotts, mass picketing, and sit-ins.

"Thus, the problem of race relations may become a major—at times the major—preoccupation of top management for a number of years to come. As J. W. Putsch, President of the National Restaurant Association, told his members in June, 'American businessmen are now involved in something greater than a business problem.' They are, in fact, engaged in one of the most far-reaching and important changes in the nation's history: an attempt to liquidate, in one generation, the consequences of 250 years of slavery and 100 years of discrimination and neglect. To do so, needless to say, will require difficult and heroic decisions on the part of civic and political as well as business leaders; it will require changes in the behavior of Americans in every walk of life. . . .

"If businessmen are to do more than just float with the tide, if they are to play a constructive role, they will have to look beyond the usual rules and canons of business management. Pressed by demands from angry Negro activists on the one side and resistant white workers, trade unionists, and executives on the other, managers will find themselves involved in an unending process of accommodation, mediation, adjustment, and persuasion. Executives, in short, will need to learn the art of politics in the highest sense of that term, for they will be engaged in what has been called 'the politics of repair.' Businessmen like to think of themselves as conservatives; they now have a rare opportunity to conserve American society by repairing what has to be repaired and changing what has to be changed. . . .

"Are Tests Necessary?"

"To end this vicious circle that keeps Negroes untrained and unemployed will require patience and imagination, and, in many cases, a break with corporate tradition. How can it be done? IBM now includes mathematics and science professors from Negro as well as white colleges in the summer programs it runs at several computer centers; the program explains to the professors the career opportunities that are available for their students and the requirements for those careers. Texas Instruments, the Dallas electronics manufacturer, has gone farther. It helped establish guidance councils at two nearby Negro colleges where scientists, engineers, and executives from firms in the Dallas area have been helping the colleges overhaul their obsolete curricula and beef up their inadequate placement services.

"A few companies have tried modifying their employment and promotion procedures. When the Negro boycotts were under way in Philadelphia last year, for example, the president of one major corporation decided to take a look at his company's position in advance of any attack. He discovered that his Negro employees—200 out of 2,000—were all at the bottom rung, although the company had no overt biases. Upon further examination, it developed that Negroes stayed at the botom because they never took the written exams which the company used to measure qualifications for promotion; they simply assumed that the tests were designed to give the company an excuse for not promoting them. Since the tests bore little relation to the job functions involved, the president ordered them replaced with job-performance tests and on-the-job training. As a result, seventy Negroes were upgraded. 'I'm convinced that we'll have to do some innovating in order to hire more Negroes,' says IBM's Bricker; reexamination of corporate testing procedures, in his view, is a good place to start. He feels that there are a great many positions where on-the-job training can be given Negroes who fail the usual qualifying tests.

"If Negro employment is to be increased, moreover, firms will have to find substitutes or shortcuts for the experience they now demand as a prerequisite in certain jobs. A large merchandising chain, for example, recently asked the National Urban League for help in hiring Negroes for a number of jobs, including store managers. But there was an unintentional catch; the firm required ten years of merchandising experience with the chain as a condition for promotion to manager. Since it had never employed Negroes in merchandising jobs before, the requirement obviously made it impossible for them to qualify for at least another ten years. The Urban League suggested that the firm develop methods for testing managerial ability in a shorter time.

"The Doctrine of the Debt"

"Negroes are not content with equal opportunity any more; they are demanding preference, or 'positive discrimination' in their favor. Negroes liken their position to that of a runner who is kept at the starting line until his opponents in the race are halfway to the finish line; merely 'freeing him' to run will not enable him to catch up. More and more Negroes, therefore, are espousing 'the doctrine of the debt,' which holds that the U.S. owes the Negro something for 250 years of slavery and 100 years of discrimination. 'If those who make the decisions in this country are really sincere about closing the gaps,' Whitney Young, the brilliant young director of the National Urban League, argues, 'they must go farther than fine impartiality. We must have, in fact, special consideration if we are to compensate for the scars left by three hundred years of deprivation, which actually represented special consideration of another sort.' Hence Young is demanding special priority in employment, suggesting as a precedent the ten-point preference given veterans on civil service exams after World War II.

"The Urban League is proposing that when a Negro and a white have equal qualifications for a job, the former should be given the preference. Militant Negro organizations are demanding considerably more; they are insisting, in effect, that business firms hire Negroes not because they are qualified but because they are Negroes. And they are developing a good deal of muscle to back up their demands for preferential hiring. The most widely used technique is the boycott, or 'selective patronage campaign,' as Negroes prefer to call it. 'Don't buy where you can't work' campaigns were frequent during the 1930's, but they were sporadic and only occasionally effective.

"The contemporary use of the weapon began three years ago in Philadelphia. The campaign was organized and directed by a group of Negro ministers (some four hundred ministers cooperated) with no formal organization. The ministers' technique is to approach one company at a time, usually a manufacturer or distributor of consumer products for which a number of competing brands are available—e.g., bakeries, dairies, oil companies, supermarket chains. If the company refuses to negotiate with the ministers, it is given an ultimatum to hire a specified number of Negroes in specified job classifications before a given date; if the demands are ignored, a boycott ensues. With four hundred ministers using their pulpits to announce the boycott, a substantial portion of the Negro population takes part. A number of firms—e.g., Pepsi-Cola, Esso—have come to terms without a boycott. Others held out—but generally not for long; Gulf Oil capitulated in twelve days, Sun Oil in three months. All told, the ministers have won concessions from twenty-four firms so far. The technique has spread to Boston, New York, Atlanta, Detroit, and other cities, and is bound to be widely imitated. . . .

In Conclusion—

"When all is said and done, however, business must take the initiative not because it is expedient, nor even because it is necessary, but because it is right. 'I tremble for my country,' Thomas Jefferson wrote, 'when I reflect that God is just.' Nor can there be any question about the moral issue involved, unless we are to discard the Judaeo-Christian tradition altogether. 'Unlike any other social problem religion has ever had to come to grips with,' the Reverend Will D. Campbell of the National Council of Churches has written, 'here is one on which there is no room for argument. . . . It was settled for the Jews in the wilderness when they were admonished to accept the Ger, the sojourner, the stranger within their gates . . . and it was settled for Christendom at Pentecost when members of every race and nation and tongue were "altogether in one place hearing the mighty works of God."' "The question, therefore, is no longer what to do, but whether there is still time in which to do it."

The Wrong Time

"My friends, I must say to you that we have not made a single gain in civil rights without determined legal and nonviolent pressure. History is the long and tragic story of the fact that privileged groups seldom give up their privileges voluntarily. Individuals may see the moral light and voluntarily give up their unjust posture; but as Reinhold Niebuhr has reminded us, groups are more immoral than individuals.

"We know through painful experience that freedom is never voluntarily given by the oppressor; it must be demanded by the oppressed. Frankly I have never yet engaged in a direct action movement that was "well timed," according to the timetable of those who have not suffered unduly from the disease of segregation. For years now I have heard the word 'Wait!' It rings in the ear of every Negro with a piercing familiarity. This 'wait' has almost always meant 'never.' It has been a tranquilizing thalidomide, relieving the emotional stress for a moment, only to give birth to an ill-formed infant of frustration. We must come to see with the distinguished jurist of yesterday that 'justice too long delayed is justice denied.' We have waited for more than three hundred and forty years for our constitutional and God-given rights. The nations of Asia and Africa are moving with jet-like speed toward the goal of political independence, and we still creep at horse and buggy pace toward the gaining of a cup of coffee at a lunch counter."

—Martin Luther King's Letter From Birmingham City Jail to certain Alabama churchmen, April 16, 1963.

White Attitudes on the Negro

The Newsweek survey of Negro opinion was summarized in the September 28 issue of INFORMATION SERVICE.

The October 21 issue of Newsweek publishes the results of a parallel national Harris polling of "white America" in late August of this year.

Both surveys represent substantial empirical contributions on the basis of creditable research. Both deserve reading and study in their unabridged Newsweek form. Here some highlights of findings and conclusions are abstracted.

Perhaps most enlightening are the findings on major areas of Negro-White agreement and disagreement. The agreements carry some surprises. On immediate job integration 87 per cent of Negroes ask this; 82 per cent of whites find the demand acceptable. Equal access to public accommodations seems to be far less a controversy in the "white mind" than in Congress. A nearly unanimous Negro demand; it is favored by 82 per cent of the nation's white respondents. Integrated education is favored by 89 per cent of Negroes; accepted by 76 per cent of whites. Curiously the proportions prophesying greater Negro job opportunity "five years from now" is an exactly equal 77 per cent in both groups.

Disagreements

Three areas of wide disagreement emerged. Only 3 per cent of Negroes felt they were "moving too fast" toward equality; 74 per cent of whites expresed this view. Just 34 per cent of whites believed that "the movement" was supported by rank and file Negroes. Negroes, from an obviously closer vantage, testified by 91 per cent that it was so supported. Finally, at the vital point of integrated housing a 78 per cent Negro support contrasts with a 42 per cent white opposition. The latter figure is both ominously large and rather surprisingly small.

Another important insight is provided by isolating and comparing the views of whites who have had social, vocational or educational contact with Negroes as peers (rather than as subordinates) with those who have not had such relationships. Sharp declines in the proportion of stereotypical prejudice and rises in favorable attitude to Negro demands were the almost invariable consequence of this kind of social contact.

Conclusions

Some conclusions drawn by the Newsweek writers are quoted below:

"White America admits it stands guilty of discrimination. Across the nation, 76 per cent of whites recognize that the Negro is a victim of prejudice; even in the South, 60 per cent concede this. By wide margins, whites specifically recognize that they have given the Negro second-rate schools, the most menial jobs, the poorest housing, and have even robbed him of the democratic weapon of protest—the right to vote.

"Whites are ready to make amends—up to a point. In North and South alike, they say they are quite ready to pass laws that would guarantee the Negro equality on the job. The North, Midwest, and West would also support Federal laws granting the Negro equality in school, at the lunch counter, and in restaurants, hotels, and motels. Specifically, a clear national majority of 63 per cent favors President Kennedy's civil-rights bill, including its controversial public-accommodations provision, and would even favor a Federal fair employment practices law. Only the South draws the line against joining this consensus.

"Whites, North and South, do not want the Negro living next door. A majority would support Federal measures to provide 'good' Negro housing. But most are opposed to any Federal law that could enforce integrated housing.

Prejudice

"The white image of the Negro is cruelly blurred by prejudice. It is an implausible and contradictory caricature, half Stepin Fetchit—lazy, unwashed, shiftless, unambitious, slow-moving—and half Sportin' Life—cunning, lewd, flashy, strong, fearless, immoral, and vicious.

"By a margin of 2-1, white Americans say the Negroes are moving 'too fast.' Though they accept the idea of demonstrations in general, the whites strongly object to picketing, boycotts, sit-ins, and lie-downs.

"Despite an ingrained personal bias against the Negro, white America is beginning to move ahead, reluctantly and grudgingly, toward giving him equality. One hopeful sign: 43 per cent of white Southerners now say they would not mind if their children went to school with Negroes."

Eternally Torn

The general summary statement carries echoes and reinforces Gunnar Myrdal's posing of the "American dilemma":

"They [the pollers] traveled a nation divided—by race, by custom, by sectional differences. But, most of all, the white American is divided within himself. He is biased against black skin—yet a sense of justice tells him he is incontestably wrong. He is pulled one way by his intellect, the other way by his emotions. Conscience whispers, 'Equal rights, freedom for all'; convention says, 'But a Negro is "different."' The white man is eternally torn between the right that he knows and the wrong that he does. And for most Americans, it is as hard to give up prejudices as it would be to deny openly the democratic ideal of equality."

"The Relative Progress of the American Negro Since 1950"

"The year 1963 marks the one hundreth anniversary of the Emancipation Proclamation and ushers in this second century of freedom. It provides, therefore, an excellent opportunity for assessing the progress of the American Negro and for gaining a new perspective." Thus reads part of the editorial note by Walter G. Daniel, editor-in-chief, to the Fall, 1963 number of The Journal of Negro Education on the theme title above. The Journal of Negro Education is published quarterly by the Howard University Press, Washington, D.C., under the auspices of the Bureau of Educational Research of Howard University (single issue $1.50; yearly $4.00. Price of this special Yearbook Number is $2.50).

This is a special follow-up of the 1953 Yearbook number of the Journal designed to utilize comparative 1950 and 1960 Federal census statistics and to appraise critically the past decade of developments. "More specifically, the aims of the Yearbook are (a) to define the present status of the Negro in the American social order, (b) to ascertain trends in the relative progress of the Negro population especially since 1950, (c) to explain how he has reached the present status, and (d) to suggest how his status might be improved in the foreseeable future."

Briefly described, there are 17 chapters written by educators and social scientists under 6 section headings:

"Section 1. The Progress of the Negro after a Century of Emancipation.

"Section 2. General Characteristics of the Negro Population—1960.

"Section 3. Economic Status and Advancement.

"Section 4. Progress in the Attainment of Equal Civil Rights, Especially in Housing and Political Life.

"Section 5. Social and Educational Development.

"Section 6. The Relative Progress and the Future of the Negro in the United States."

This is the thirty-second Yearbook issue of The Journal of Negro Education which is published "in accord with the definite policy of presenting, at least once a year, a rather comprehensive study of some specific problem dealing with the life and education of the Negro or some other minority group."

This number of the Journal contains a wealth of important material on the relative progress of the Negro since 1950.

In Chapter XVII, "Critical Summary and Evaluation," James M. Nabrit, Jr., President of Howard University, makes the following general summary statement:

"Progress in any instance is comparative in nature and requires measurement from some base. Negroes in America have made substantial progress in terms of past levels of achievement. In the most important areas of life, however, in the past decade, they have not made significant gains as measured against the gap existing between themselves and the white population. This is true in employment, in housing, and in education. The greatest advancement has come in the area of civil rights and in the increasing political effectiveness of Negroes. The progress made in these respects provides the necessary and fundamental basis upon which higher achievements can be reached with respect to employment, housing, and education. It is entirely likely, therefore, that the decades of the Sixties and Seventies will see a far more rapid improvement in the relative progress of Negroes than was evident in the period of the 1950s."

"How Not to Integrate the Schools"

"I am one of those creatures equally repulsive to Governor Ross Barnett of Mississippi, the Black Muslim's Malcolm X, and to many other Americans—the white wife of a black man and the mother of two Negro children. Even worse, I am out of step with the civil-rights leaders at whose side I have fought for many years."

Thus reads the opening paragraph of "a personal testament" by Inge Lederer Gibel entitled "How Not to Integrate the Schools" appearing in Harper's magazine (November, 1963. 60 cents).

The article is in part a criticism of certain leaders for integration whose ". . . increasingly orthodox slogans are blinding some civil-rights leaders to the real needs of most Negro—and white-children."

Class and Race

Mrs. Gibel believes that "in the North at least, what we think of as the race struggle has become much more a problem of class and economics than of color. Unless we recognize this, the 'Negro Revolution' will fizzle out into a mere statistical adjustment." The result would be the black man represented at the top of the social and power structure according to his numerical proportion, but the majority of the black people along with the poor whites remaining at the bottom.

The Racial Balance

With regard to reasonable "racial balance" in the Manhattan school which her daughter attends, she questions its effectiveness in view of the "track" system which separates children sometimes as early as kindergarten into more or less intellectually homogenous classes. "In the process the concept of integration bogs down, for the middle-class white five-year old and a child of the same age from a lower-class non-white home will seldom be assigned to the same group. The middle-class Negro or Puerto Rican child will fare better than the lower-class white child. But since most of the city's poor happen to be non-whites, the burden falls on their children, even though no race prejudice is involved."

What Negro Parents Want

An informal survey conducted by a friend of the author, called "Jean Brighton," in the latter's apartment building, which is nearly all Negro, indicated that the question of segregation is not uppermost in their thoughts. The interview began with asking "Have you heard about the school integration campaign? Do you know that they're thinking of bussing Negro children out of Harlem and bringing white children in so that all schools in New York will have white and colored kids together?" "Invariably," Mrs. Gibel reports, the reply was "What, before they improve the schools?" When the interviewer said "yes" and explained that the civil-rights organizations were putting complete school integration at the top of their list of demands, backed up by a boycott of the schools, "everyone she talked to was certain that such a boycott would not be supported by the mass of Harlem parents, even though they all believed in integration. But without hesitation they felt that forced integration of the kind proposed would only continue to drive middle-class white children out of the schools. What these Negro parents wanted from the schools—and what, unfortunately, they were not getting—was a longer day; more and better textbooks that would be more representative of the minority and urban groups in our culture; dedicated teachers (of any color); smaller classes; and special programs which really serve the low-income child and are not aimed just at the middle-class child the schools are trying desperately to retain. . . .

"Ironically, in New York at least, many white middle-class 'liberal' families agonize about whether to send their children to overcrowded, often understaffed schools with a high percentage of children from 'deprived backgrounds,' or to a nice, safe private school. Most middle-class Negro families, on the other hand, do not spend much time agonizing . . . but make the latter choice."

What Volunteers Can Do

Mrs. Gibel does not believe that simply mixing Negro children from the slums with middle-class white children will work and makes some suggestions as to how to speed integration by other means.

"The crucial factor . . . is the teacher. Good salaries are important, of course, but salary and prestige can't buy dedication. A dedicated teacher can turn a rathole into a palace, she can turn slum children into empire builders."

Other suggestions the author makes involves doing away with the idea that middle-class values are bad and shouldn't be emphasized by progressively-minded teachers. "What's wrong with being clean, honest, and hardworking?" she asks. There seems to be a need also for providing breakfasts at school as well as late-afternoon snacks. The necessary labor for this service to children to be supplied by volunteers.

Mrs. Gibel believes that the "track" system should be abolished and the children grouped in different ways throughout the day. In this way, each child would have an opportunity to be in the "best" group and the "worst" group and it will be possible to let each advance at his own pace.

Faculty and volunteers should be racially mixed and textbooks should be used "with which our urban low-income non-white youngsters can identify." A suggestion is made "that new schools, whenever possible, should be built in fringe areas rather than in the heart of racial ghettoes."

"And let us by all means intensify our attack on the housing barriers which create the Harlems of this nation and the slum schools in their midst. Bussing children around the city is no more than a feeble—and foredoomed—palliative for this underlying evil."

What Mrs. Gibel is advocating is "a massive crash program for all schools in low-income areas. It will be expensive, but not nearly as expensive as the present costs of maintaining the much-studied 'hard-core multi-problem family,' of sending a boy through reform school and on to graduate study in the penitentiary, of more and more policemen, an ever-growing rate of illegitimate births and of addict-induced crime."

"Prejudice and Your Child"

A clear and useful analysis of factors contributing to prejudice along with helpful suggestions as to what can be done to reduce and prevent feelings of prejudice in children has been reissued in a second and enlarged edition as a paperback, title above (Boston, Beacon Press, 1963. $1.75). The author is Kenneth B. Clark, associate professor of psychology at the College of the City of New York and research director of the Northside Center for Childe Development.

The Effects of the 1954 Supreme Court Decision

In the Introduction, Dr. Clark reminds the reader that the Supreme Court decision in May, 1954 declared that laws requiring or permitting racial segregation in public education are a violation of the United States Constitution. This decision is regarded as historic from the legal, educational, and human points of view. It was made after taking into account "a growing body of knowledge in psychology and the social sciences, the result of extensive research into the development of racial attitudes and the effect of prejudice on the development of American children."

"The Supreme Court, in effect, challenged boards of education, public officials, parents, educators, and all citizens who believe in democracy to re-examine American social practices in order to determine whether they damage or enhance the human potentialities of children." A problem remains primarily concerned with the responsibility of individual citizens in their local communities. "Parents, social workers, educators, clergymen, and others must now mobilize their energies for effective implementation of this decision."

Dr. Clark writes: "It is probably not enough to believe that racial prejudice, discrimination, and segregation are morally wrong. In order to become actively involved in the struggle to eradicate these symptoms of social maladjustment and save our children from their harmful effects, it is necessary to know why they are wrong. Responsible citizens must understand clearly what negative racial attitudes are, how they affect our society, and the ways in which they are communicated to our children. When the effects of these forms of prejudice on the personalities of children are clearly understood, then the efforts to immunize our children from their virulence will be more effective."

Church and Prejudice

The first part of Prejudice and Your Child discusses the "problem of prejudice" and the second suggests "a program for action." In this second part there is a chapter entitled "What Can the Churches Do?"

Dr. Clark notes that in spite of the pronouncements and resolutions of church bodies "the Christian Protestant Churches represent one of the most entrenched areas of racial segregation still existing in American society. . . . The stark fact is that less than one-half of 1 per cent of Negro Protestant Christians in the United States worship regularly in non-segregated churches."

"Probably American churches, like American schools and colleges, have generally failed to offer moral guidance in terms of concrete action programs for the improvement of race relations because the church, like secular organizations, feels compelled to conform to the existing patterns of social attitudes, values, and norms found in the larger society. If the church permits itself to become a captive of the more practical and materialistic pressures of the larger society, then it will be unable to provide for our children the example of positive race relations which they need."

"The church cannot expect to be taken seriously in this area of moral guidance as long as it continues to talk against segregation while maintaining rigid patterns of racial segregation within its own walls. . . . Isolated examples of interracial parishes, or an occasional visit to a Negro church, or the extension of an invitation to a 'nice' Negro family—these cannot be considered meaningful racial experiences for children."

The church, the author suggests, "has the responsibility of developing moral sensitivity in the children and families associated with it. . . . With the progress in race relations in other areas of life, Negro and white Christians must modify existing racial patterns within the church itself." Efforts must be placed on building congregations "composed of individuals with similar religious interests without regard to skin color."

Parents of both Negro and white children should wish to give them the opportunity to attend racially mixed churches wherever this is possible. This might seem strange at first to the children and to other members of the congregation; but with fundamental good will and a basic application of the meaning of religion on the part of all concerned, there should be no reason for this strangeness to continue for long."

Dr. Clark urges churches to make public announcement of the new racially inclusive policy. "Such a forthright announcement by a given church would encourage other churches to take a similar stand. In this way, individuals concerned with problems of racial injustice in America will feel that they have the support and backing for their personal behavior from a respected social institution.

The third part of Prejudice and Your Child consists of five appendices giving (1) the legal background of the school segregation cases; (2) the text of the Supreme Court opinions, May 17, 1954; (3) the effects of segregation and the consequences of desegregation; (4) the desegregation cases; and, (5) the role of the social sciences in desegregation.

A nine-page bibliography and an index complete the volume.

The Need for Sanctions

Why have many denominations and, in particular, the United Church of Christ, turned from pronouncement and persuasion to rules and sanctions in the effort to desegregate the Church?

Dr. Herman Long of the Race Relations Department of the United Church has contributed an illuminating background article on this question to Social Action, September, 1963, under the title "Beyond Tokenism." Excerpts make up the following summary.

Dr. Long, president-elect of Talladega College, analyzes the "revolution of hope" within the Negro community and then poses the present problem:

". . . The rapid spread of actual desegregation changes is not, in and of itself, sufficient ground for satisfaction, for the changes involved are partial and they appear to be of great magnitude only when measured against the fixed racial status which was obtained sixty or more years ago. Measured against the standard of the absolute human expectation for freedom and self-realization, they are quite small indeed. The practical problem, therefore, is that hopes and demands have outsped the actual changes to the point of serious lag in our ability to provide adequate implementation, even in situations of the best intention.

"This largely describes the issue we are facing in the secular domain of racial change. In the area of the church, the situation is ostensibly more complicated and difficult, primarily because desegregation changes in the schools, libraries, parks, and other public accommodation facilities, however small, have far out-distanced those which characterize the institutional church. Accordingly, there is less momentum and less experience to build upon. Among the state-supported institutions of higher education in the South, for example, it is reliably reported that as of the current year some 70 per cent of the schools have become racially integrated. This compares with only 31 per cent of the church-related institutions of higher education in the South, as reported in a special survey made for the Division of Home Missions' Institutions of the National Council of Churches in 1960. . . .

A United Church Study

"A brief look at the educational, hospital, and social welfare institutions of the United Church of Christ, in regard to their patterns of racial practice, will serve as further illustration. The information, in this case, comes from a study reported for the current year to the Executive Committee of the General Synod on better than 90 per cent of the schools, hospitals, adult and children's welfare institutions acknowledging a relationship to the United Church of Christ.

"Almost all of the Negro students attending United Church of Christ educational institutions were found in the predominantly Negro schools of the South—the AMA colleges. Outside of these institutions, Negro enrollment amounted to less than a tenth of one per cent of the total enrollment. At the level of faculty representation, only 3 Negro faculty members were reported among all of the institutions covered, North and South, excluding of course the AMA schools.

"Among the institutions for the aged related to the United Church of Christ, only two Negroes were reported in the total number of clients served by these agencies. The number found in the children's institutions was only slightly larger, but in both instances representation of Negro clientele was clearly of token variety. Even in the city mission institutional program, one project in the city of St. Louis accounted for almost all of the Negro clients reported as being served by projects of this general type.

"Exclusive of Flint-Goodridge Hospital in New Orleans, a predominantly Negro facility, only four Negro physicians were reported as used on the staffs of UCC hospital institutions; these were at just two hospitals, one in Detroit and the other in Louisville, and all involved the category of visiting rather than regular medical staff. At the level of client services, the majority of Negroes reported were accounted for in the out-patient category—exactly the opposite pattern for other clientele; and this suggested a racially restrictive factor in the accessibility of resident accommodations and services. The placing of Negro patients only in sections of wards or semi-private rooms where other Negro patients have already been located—a policy reported by some of the hospitals—was partial though significant evidence of a racially selective factor in hospital admissions.

Church Patterns

"Findings of a similar study of practices involving the 'aided' local UCC churches have not yet been completed, but the study of metropolitan Congregational Christian Churches, made in 1958, indicated that a similar pattern of racial restriction obtained within this area of denomi-

Creative Extremism

"But as I continued to think about the matter I gradually gained a bit of satisfaction from being considered an extremist. Was not Jesus an extremist in love? 'Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, pray for them that despitefully use you.' Was not Amos an extremist for justice—'Let justice roll down like waters and righteousness like a mighty stream.' Was not Paul an extremist for the gospel of Jesus Christ—'I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus.' Was not Martin Luther an extremist—'Here I stand; I can do none other so help me God.' Was not John Bunyan an extremist—'I will stay in jail to the end of my days before I make a butchery of my conscience.' Was not Abraham Lincoln an extremist—'This nation cannot survive half slave and half free.' Was not Thomas Jefferson an extremist—'We hold these truths to be self evident that all men are created equal.' So the question is not whether we will be extremist but what kind of extremist will we be. Will we be extremists for hate or will we be extremists for love? Will we be extremists for the preservation of injustice—or will we be extremists for the cause of justice? In that dramatic scene on Calvary's hill three men were crucified. We must never forget that all three were crucified for the same crime—the crime of extremism. Two were extremists for immorality, and thus fell below their environment. The other, Jesus Christ, was an extremist for love, truth, and goodness, and thereby rose above His environment. So, after all, maybe the South, the nation, and the world are in dire need of creative extremists."
—Martin Luther King's Letter From Birmingham City Jail to certain Alabama churchmen. April 16, 1963.

national influence. Only nine of the predominantly white churches located in the South had taken the full step of admitting Negroes into membership, and among the 1,043 churches surveyed nationally only about a fourth had taken such action. A little better than 30 per cent of the churches had adopted policies permitting racially inclusive membership, but in the majority of cases the churches had ignored the matter of racial policy altogether.

"Thus, wherever we turn within the institutional picture of the church we encounter a general pattern of exclusion, at the worst, and tokenism, at the best, which is not unlike the deeply entrenched racial pattern obtaining for the society at large. Indeed, in the purely quantitative aspects of desegregation change, the institutional church comes out second-best as compared with the secular community; and in addition the momentum toward changing the institutional pattern of the church is at considerably lower ebb. . . ."

The Difference

"The crucial difference between the church and the secular community in relation to processes in the racial area appears to be the absence of a formulated and applied discipline or sanction. Voluntary acceptance of and commitment to the faith were presumed to be sufficient to override the individual and social contamination of the racism which became, historically and culturally, endemic to the American as well as the entire western community. And yet, wherever the institutional church has spawned its different agencies and forms, the voluntary principle has almost always led to institutionalized racial exclusiveness. If the absence of what Dr. Franklin Littel has called the authority and sanction of the historical church has failed to prevent this from happening, and indeed is in some degree responsible for its presence, then we may be almost certain that a continuation of voluntarism will not lead to its correction. There would seem to be no other meaningful alternative for the churches, at this late and telling moment, than to turn their energies in the direction of adopting broad-scale implementing sanctions and procedures in the way that secular bodies already have done."

How's That Again?

A story out of Macon, Georgia, tells of the forced resignation of the pastor of the First Baptist Church there after an eleven year tenure. The issue asserted by the pastor, denied by the Deacons, was "justice to minority groups."

The incident was one of many similar ones in these times. What makes it memorable is the statement of the pastor who accepted the call to succession. The Rev. Albert Cardwell, former pastor of Sherwood Baptist Church of Albany, Georgia, commented on the racial crisis that whether the church "has a role in such a situation is a problem the Southern Baptist Convention has been struggling with for years."

"I personally feel," he explained, "that it's useless to alienate my congregation by taking a strong stand. It's more desirable to keep the lines of communication open, so that if I have anything to say, I will have their attention."

"A Flower for the Graves"

"A Negro mother wept in the street Sunday morning in front of a Baptist Church in Birmingham. In her hand she held a shoe, one shoe from the foot of her dead child. We hold that shoe with her.

"Every one of us in the white South holds that small shoe in his hand.

"It is too late to blame the sick criminals who handled the dynamite. The FBI and the police can deal with that kind. The charge against them is simple. They killed four children.

"Only we can trace the truth, Southerner—you and I. We broke those children's bodies.

"We watched the stage set without staying it. We listened to the prologue unbestirred. We saw the curtain opening with disinterest. We have heard the play.

"We—who go on electing politicians who heat the kettles of hate.

"We—who raise no hand to silence the mean and little men who have their nigger jokes.

"We—who stand aside in imagined rectitude and let the mad dogs that run in every society slide their leashes from our hand, and spring.

"We—the heirs of a proud South, who protest its worth and demand its recognition—We are the ones who have ducked the difficult, skirted the uncomfortable, caviled at the challenge, resented the necessary, rationalized the unacceptable, and created the day surely when these children would die.

"This is no time to load our anguish onto the murderous scapegoat who set the cap in dynamite of our own manufacture.

"He didn't know any better.

"Somewhere in the dim and fevered recess of an evil mind he feels right now that he has been a hero. He is only guilty of murder. He thinks he has pleased us.

"We of the white South who know better are the ones who must take a harsher judgment.

"We, who know better, created a climate for child-killing by those who don't.

"We hold that shoe in our hand, Southerner. Let us see it straight, and look at the blood on it. Let us compare it with the unworthy speeches of Southern public men who have traduced the Negro; match it with the spectacle of shrilling children whose parents and teachers turned them free to spit epithets at small huddles of Negro school children for a week before this Sunday in Birmingham; hold up the shoe and look beyond it to the state house in Montgomery where the official attitudes of Alabama have been spoken in heat and anger.

"Let us not lay the blame on some brutal fool who didn't know any better.

"We know better. We created the day. We bear the judgment. May God have mercy on the poor South that has been so led. May what has happened hasten the day when the good South, which does live and have great being, will rise to this challenge of racial understanding and common humanity, in the full power of its unasserted courage, assert itself.

"The Sunday school play at Birmingham is ended. With a weeping Negro mother, we stand in the bitter smoke and hold a shoe. If our South is ever to be what we wish it to be, we will plant a flower of nobler resolve for the South now upon these four small graves that we dug."—Eugene Patterson in the Atlanta Constitution of September 16, 1963, as quoted in New South, published by the Southern Regional Council, Atlanta, Ga., issue of September, 1963.

[illegible]33 Printed in U.S.A.

Rel - Gen
1963

THE EPISCOPAL SOCIETY FOR CULTURAL AND RACIAL UNITY

Advent II NEWSLETTER December 8, 1963

"It is for us, the living, rather, to be dedicated, here, to the unfinished work that they have thus far so nobly carried on..... that the nation shall, under God, have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth." - Abraham Lincoln

"A rising tide of discontent...threatens the public safety...The events in Birmingham and elsewhere have so increased the cries for equality that no city or state or legislative body can prudently ignore them."; "(The) result of continued Federal legislative inaction will continue, if not increase, racial strife--causing the leadership of both sides to pass from the hands of reasonable and responsible men to the purveyors of hate and violence."; "We face...a moral crisis as a country and a people... It is time to act in the Congress, in your state and local legislative body, and above all, in all our daily lives."

- John F. Kennedy

"...and, above all, the dream of equal rights for all Americans whatever their race or color. These and other American dreams have been vitalized by his drive and by his dedication. And now the ideas and the ideals which he so nobly represented must and will be translated into effective action."; "...no memorial oration or eulogy could more eloquently honor President Kennedy's memory than the earliest possible passage of the civil rights bill for which he fought so long. We have talked long enough in this country about equal rights. We have talked for a hundred years or more. It is time now to write the next chapter, and to write it in the books of law."; "John Kennedy's death commands what his life conveyed--that America must move forward. The time has come for Americans of all races and creeds and political beliefs to understand and to respect one another. So, let us put an end to the teaching and the preaching of hate and evil and violence. Let us turn away from the fanatics, from the far left and the far right, from the apostles of bitterness and bigotry, from those defiant of law, and those who pour venom into our nation's bloodstream. I profoundly hope that the tragedy and the torment of these terrible days will bind us together in new fellowship, making us one people in our hour of sorrow."

- Lyndon B. Johnson

OUR HEARTS HAD ALL MET IN ONE MAN

"Weep, brothers, weep! You have cause. It is right, it is manly. The murder was cruel. It searched for and found the spot where it might meet and wound a nation's heart....Weep, brothers; confess to the success of the enterprise. The shot was well aimed. It brought us all down, down into the dust. Our hearts had all met in one man; and there they all received the fatal blow. It was cruel to hurt us so...." - The Rev. E. N. Kirk, 1865.

When we mourn the death of someone important to us we recall the times we met or the times we watched him, as well as our own whereabouts when it all happened. As John Kennedy flew South to sorrow I enplaned for upper New York State where I spoke that evening. The next day I was lunching with a group of clergy in Schenectady when the waiter brought news that the President had been shot in Texas. We prayed for him and for the country. Surely he'll recover if this is really so. We hurried out and in the lobby the finality of it all crashed in: He's dead!

My next engagement was Sunday evening. Seldom in my travels is there free time that I do not employ actively in visiting ESCRU folks or looking up others, but it had been a busy fall and I had decided to stop at the Holy Cross Monastery and rest a few days. It was a good place to go to cry. The radio in my U-Drive-It took me to Dallas, and Washington, and throughout the land and abroad where my horror and incredulity merged with everyone else's. The long-distance telephone eased my feeling that I should fly home. Repeated readings by Robert Frost over one network articulated something for many: "I have been one acquanited with the night. I have walked out in rain--and back in rain. I have outwalked the furthest city light." Whitman's "O Captain! my captain!" erradicated a hundred years as the reader said: "Here Captain! dear father! This arm beneath your head; It is some dream that on the deck, You've fallen cold and dead."

It was not a dream. The shots were well aimed and we were a stricken people. The grief has not passed nor will it quickly. Our hearts had all met in one man and he is dead. We would mourn for any President's death, but there is more here than the office he held or even the cruel circumstances. There was a beauty and vitality about the man and his mind which compelled admiration, even, I believe, from some who differed with him on policies. As was said in a sermon in Atlanta: "He was courageous, resolute, brilliant, aggressive..." He was this and more; idealist and pragmatist, he inspired confidence as someone who would venture much and get the job done, even if we might have felt he should have risked more. He understood and welcomed pressure in behalf of common goals. It was reassuring to know that he was at the helm. It is not easy to transfer this confidence to a new captain, although I think that he, too, will merit it. It is ironic that he in whom our hearts had met will, in death, be our strongest ally for the accomplishment of national purposes toward which he had directed us.

John Kennedy's journey had ended as I concluded the longest trip I've ever taken. I stopped first in Washington and stood outside Arlington Cemetery as the cortege came by and during the graveside services which were audible over the wall to the thousands of us who could do nothing more to help. We saw the temporal power of the world go by and prayed that the harmony would endure beyond, if not because of, mourning. Taps sounded and the Cardinal's final prayer and it was time to head back to the airport, but there were no taxis as in the morning. I thought of a brave woman who had walked that day and determined that I had both the time and the will to walk also. Perhaps others similiarly will walk new paths or go down them further because of the courage of the man we buried and the woman who walked. I thought of her again when I got home and was told how my five-year-old namesake had asked, as he watched television: "Am I a 'John-John'?" - JOHN B. MORRIS

HEADWATERS OF HATE

"How many Sunday school children have to be dynamited to death? How many Negro leaders have to be shot in the chest? How many presidents have to be assassinated?", asked Churchman LeRoy Collins in an address at Columbia, S. C. The former governor of Florida went on to say that the murder of President Kennedy was fostered by "Dixie battle cries which incite sick souls to violence." It is so. I have seen these past ten years of Southern resistance to desegregation insidiously at work to produce a climate where murder seems like a simple solution. To be sure, crackpots may come forth anytime, but the tempo of the times facilitates their capacity to act. Consider the school children in some Southern schools (did it happen elsewhere?) who applauded when the President's death was announced. This would not have happened ten years ago. We are paying the price now of "massive resistance". It has become an easy thing to talk about "the encroaching Federal octopus", our regional "way of life" as over and against an evil national government, with cries for impeachment on all sides and even more. Some of the same Southern politicians who called to "pay their respects" upon the President's death contributed to the cirsumstances which made it more possible. That the accused assassin displayed left-wing leanings, although he was probably more crackpot than anything, does not absolve the right-wing fanatics whose headwaters of hate are chiefly racial. It is not difficult to discern racial prejudice under the cries of "states rights", "Buy American", "Communist", etc. The real Communists are much too disciplined to do business with someone like Oswald. Their most effective work is done through those who oppose them the most, creating the climate where anarchy and utter disregard for the state shows itself in the fatal blow at Dallas. While racism has never been an exclusive Southern product, and neither is right-wing extremism for sure, there is too much about what has happened with particular roots in Southern history to leave us comfortable. The lynch law of the South operated in classic terms in the terrible shooting of Oswald. But who is not of the South? It is only that here the sickness is closer to the surface. Because it is, notwithstanding the meaning of what happened in Dallas, the South will probably move further ultimately. - JBM

TO MORE ELOQUENTLY HONOR

President Johnson, himself a Southerner, has set the pace for what we must do now. Can we do less than support him, both because it is right and because nothing "could more eloquently honor President Kennedy's memory than the earliest possible passage of the civil rights bill."

Write and wire President Johnson, your Senators and congressmen, and let them know you'll back them up. ESCRU chapters and members around the country sent wires in advance of President Johnson's address to Congress. This was mine: "Even as we mourn the most fitting tribute to the late President will be resolute action in civil rights. Many white citizens of the South such as myself, along with a host of other Americans, will be holding up your arms as you speak to these matters tomorrow."

Watch for the key times to send a letter or wire again....and do it! Don't wait for someone else to suggest it. The power of vox populi should not be underestimated.

Look to official Church support for civil rights legislation in the form of public stands by vestries and parish meetings, and at diocesan conventions. Our bishops have taken such a stand nationally. This must have grass-roots expression now.

Support and encourage the efforts of our national Department of Christian Social Relations in behalf of legislation. In the face of opposition from some quarters it would be well for diocesan conventions to go on record specifically backing up the National Church's program.

Finally, intensify your efforts amongst friends and fellow parishioners to give them the opportunity of deciding where they really stand on race. Legislation is needed, but the conversion of a whole people is involved. Your own witness is supremely important.

Consider the possibilities of what you might do in enlisting the concern of others through a membership recruitment effort for ESCRU....through personal contact and confrontation. The decision to join ESCRU has, for many, been the beginning of a more meaningful life in the Church.

THE ANNUAL MEETING - 1963

HOW WAS IT? With upwards of 300 persons the attendance at the Third Annual Meeting doubled that of previous years, and with an equal number of Roman Catholics attending the concurrent sessions of the National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice the International Inn in Washington was a behive of activity.

THE SPEAKERS. Wyatt Tee Walker, Burke Marshall, Louis Lomax, Bill Stringfellow, and Arthur Walmsley; with Tom Thrasher and Jim Breeden preaching at the eucharists. A set of tape recordings will be available to chapters later.

THE PARTICIPANTS. From all over, with far-away places like California, Texas, Minnesota, Georgia, etc., represented. The one flaw was that there was too little time for participants to talk with each other and learn how each approaches problems and opportunities in their situations back home. We'll spend more time on this at the Annual Meeting next year which convenes in St. Louis just before the General Convention.

WHAT WE SAID. Resolutions adopted at the Third Annual Meeting are enclosed with this newsletter. They include a joint one adopted by ESCRU and the National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice (NCCIJ) regarding protest actions in Chester, Penna., and Williamston, N. C.

PROPOSED PROGRAM. Two proposals described elsewhere in this newsletter were commended to the national ESCRU Board for final action: One would seek financial support for the National Church when funds were otherwise withdrawn because of the Church's stand on race, and the other proposes that segregated Church-related institutions be identified in some symbolic action at the next General Convention.

WE ELECTED: To the national ESCRU Board from floor nominations in Washington - The Rev. Theodore Gibson, The Very Rev. & Bishop-Elect Paul Moore, Jr., Mr. Lloyd A. Johnson, and Mrs. Francis X. Walter. See the enclosed Statement of Purpose for their whereabouts. They joined 12 incumbent Directors and the 8 elected via the provincial mail ballot who were: The Rev. Joseph A. Pelham, Mr. Malcolm E. Peabody, Dr. Kenneth Clark, Mr. Maury Maverick, Mr. John Murphy, III, The Rt. Rev. James A. Pike, The Rev. Hugh Saussy, Jr., and the Rt. Rev. Chandler W. Sterling.

PHOTOS ON NEXT PAGE: (1.) ESCRU Banquet Headtable Guests Singing "We Shall Overcome." L-R, Mr. Raymond Hilliard, Chairman, NCCIJ; The Rev. Joseph Nicholson, Saint Louis; Mr. Lawrence Oxley, Washington; Mr. Matthew Ahmann, Executive Director, NCCIJ; The Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker, Banquet Speaker & Executive Director of SCLC; The Rev. John Morris, Atlanta; The Rev. John Stevens, Houston; The Rev. Joseph A. Pelham, Farmington, Mich.; Mr. Sterling Tucker, Washington Urban League; & Mrs. John Morris. (2.) Bishop Sterling of Montana; The Rev. John LaFarge, Chaplain, NCCIJ (Fr. LaFarge died the following week.); Canon duBois of the American Church Union; The Rev. Wm. Wendt, Chairman of Washington Arrangements Committee for the Annual Meeting; and the Rev. James Breeden, Boston. (3.) Mr. Louis Lomax (4.) Mr. William Stringfellow (5.) Canon Bayard Clark, Washington Cathedral; Mr. Burke Marshall; and Mr. Charles C. Johnson, Jr., of the Department of Health, Education & Welfare; (6.) The ESCRU Banquet diners, with visiting Roman Catholics (7.) An ESCRU session, with The Rev. Rowland Cox visible on the front row, along with The Rev. Layton Zimmer, The Rev. Reginald Kent, Mr. Edward Cambridge, the Rev. John Snow, and Miss Ann Orlov. (8.) Registering: Mr. William Lowry, Mr. William Weifenbach, and Mr. Jack Orndorf.

The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity

THIRD ANNUAL MEETING WASHINGTON, D.C. NOVEMBER 14-16, 1963

BEHOLD HOW GOOD AND JOYFUL A THING

IT IS FOR BRETHREN TO DWELL TOGETHER IN UNITY!

Lovett To Keep Chapel

Negroes Rejected By Lovett School

STUDENT BODY ASSEMBLES FOR CHAPEL EACH MORNING

THE LOVETT SCHOOL
FOUNDED 1926
OMNIA AD DEI GLORIAM

Fellowship of Christian Athletes

Claiborne Lists Facts On Lovett

Integration Bias At Lovett Denied

6 Picket Lovett School, Vow Periodic Protests

Lovett Boasts Choirs At All Ages

No Race Bar, Bishop Says In King Bid

THE LOVETT SCHOOL
AN EPISCOPAL DAY SCHOOL
4075 PACES FERRY ROAD, N. W.
ATLANTA 5, GEORGIA

Alston Memorial Chapel Vestry

Group Still Picketing At Lovett

Emblem from Class of '63 Graces Lovett School

RACE RELATIONS
Church School Turns Down Negro Child

TRUSTEES SET GOALS FOR LOVETT.

THE LOVETT SCHOOL SITUATION

Picketing continued for six weeks until the day before the President's death. It will be resumed this week and continue indefinitely and periodically so long as Lovett remains segregated. See the October 13, 1963, Newsletter for the full statement by the ESCRU Executive Committee which determined after a three day meeting in Atlanta that the protest should be made.

Pickets were before Lovett on 17 out of the 30 school days during the first six weeks of picketing. To date all have been Episcopalians. Because the segregated status of Lovett is also a community concern it is expected that others will join the protest sometime early in 1964. Thus far 15 lay persons have picketed one or more times, as compared to 12 clergy. 14 visitors have participated, as compared to 13 Atlantans. Other Atlantans were to have joined the action the 7th week which was cancelled.

Demonstrating the concern of the entire Church for this "Little Rock of the Episcopal Church" visiting "picketees" (as John Burnett Morris, Jr., terms them) have come from California, Michigan, Texas, Iowa, Pennsylvania, Illinois, and Massachusetts. A priest from Ohio will picket next week and it is expected that other areas will send representatives. In addition to picketers sent by ESCRU Chapters, there have been representatives of the Michigan Girls Friendly Society and the Episcopal Churchwomen of the Dioceseof Michigan. The roster includes such well-known Churchmen as the Rev. C. Kilmer Myers and the Rev. Malcolm Boyd.

There is still need for assistance. Groups able to send a representative should advise the ESCRU office and suggest alternative dates when they could have someone in Atlanta for at least two full days. In the face of elusive restraints, pressures, and fears, visiting Churchmen encourage and strengthen Atlanta Churchmen. It also indicates the widespread nature of the concern for Lovett, and, finally, it sends informed persons back to interpret the situation in their respective dioceses.

The November 15, 1963, issue of TIME magazine carried a lengthy and accurate account of the Lovett situation and, for the first time in print, identified at least one of the wealthy powers-behind-the-scenes who have had decisive roles in keeping Lovett segregated. They named the Senior Warden of one of the largest parishes in Atlanta. Other interpretative pieces on Lovett have appeared elsewhere, including a story in the NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE of November 17th.

Because so much confusion and misinformation concerning ESCRU's role in the Lovett situation is abroad, largely emanating from the diocesan office here, a copy of a fourteen page letter to the Bishop of Atlanta is enclosed for the information of ESCRU members. It should be remembered that ESCRU said nothing publicly until June and then and since has sought to acknowledge appreciatively such steps as diocesan officials finally took. The bitter background of it all is in this letter.

The jumble of captions or headlines amidst the pictures on the previous page tell the story as the general public sees it. The captions nearest the center picture of the school are from school yearbooks and indicate something of the religious nature of the school. The school seal is shown and under the center picture is a reproduction of a letterhead form used by Lovett since the expansion and move into new buildings. It says what some deny: "AN EPISCOPAL DAY SCHOOL". A headline tells of the addition only this fall of the cross affixed to the school building and visible in the upper left-hand corner of the center photograph. The Capetown Placard carried by the clergy and laity picketing tells its own story. The Acting Headmaster, Mr. J. A. Rabbe, shown pacing in the street on the first day of picketing in the lower center photo, reveals something of the dilemma and challenge facing the Trustees, most of whom are prominent in the Church in Atlanta. As those who "set goals for Lovett" they have thus far chosen segregation as a primary one.

"A MATTER IN DISPUTE?"

Seabury Press used to do address labels for all the clergy for ESCRU. They now use the mailing services of National Council and advised us to apply there when we wanted to send a mailing a few months ago. Although several years ago we'd been told National Council couldn't do labels for ESCRU, at several stages along the way in our request for help we were assured that there would be no difficulty. We had to submit a formal request stating the contents of the proposed mailing. We did. It would contain a covering letter and enclosures: an ESCRU Statement of Purpose and membership form, the flyer on the Annual Meeting, and a piece interpreting ESCRU's interest in Lovett chiefly on the basis of the Executive Committee's statement. Our request was refused. Several reasons were offered in reply which might or might not have bearing on the question of the organization making the request. The final reason, however, and the one which seems primary as I read their reply, was put this way: "Furthermore, the mailing that you proposed was to have included a position paper on a matter in dispute within the Church. This likewise represented a request for deviation from policy." The so-called "position paper" was to have been our official position on Lovett - namely, why we felt it necessary to protest segregation at a Church-related school. Nothing of the background dispute with diocesan officials was involved. Is it a deviation from policy to oppose segregation at Church-related institutions? Are we really supposed to take action and become involved? Or is it only satisfactory when our action and involvement is out in the world somewhere so that it doesn't upset the tranquility of the Church itself? A matter in dispute, indeed! If National Council thinks the Lovett issue is clouded will it call a hearing and let the whole question be explored? Or, must the Body of Christ be so deftly and politically contrived as to avoid discomfort to any and all bishops? It should be noted that the issue of address labels is only one instance where the timidity of National Council on intra-Church questions is revealed. Even CHURCH & RACE will not so much as report the fact that picketing is going on. How tragically the Church is continually calling us to commitment, witness and action, only to look askance when the call is taken seriously. - JBM

THE PENITENTIAL SHARE

One of two program proposals approved by the Annual Meeting and commended to the ESCRU Board for action is a plan termed "The Penitential Share". Recognizing that funds are being and will be withheld from the support of the National Church's program because of the Church's stand on race, it is proposed that ESCRU raise such funds as it can to compensate as much as possible for whatever a diocese may withhold, for instance. If a diocese, however, sacrificially makes up some parish's deficit withheld because of race and maintains its full support of the National Church, ESCRU would direct funds to that diocese. This effort would both serve to secure needed funds and would help to involve the whole Church in the effort. It might also encourage some to turn away from the use of economic pressure on the National Church, lest their share have to be borne by others.

A PERSPECTIVE

A quotation from the Executive Director's Report at the Annual Meeting, while discussing National Council: "Any shortcomings are our shortcomings - the Church's - and I propose that we rally to their support."

ACTION AT GENERAL CONVENTION

The Annual Meeting also commended to the Board a proposal whereby ESCRU would call for the picketing of Church-related facilities that are clearly known to be segregated (and only after a full effort has been made in negotiations to bring about change) during the week before General Convention in St. Louis next fall. One or more pickets would then bring their signs identifying the institution and join with others in an action designed to portray the failures of the Church, our penitence and intention to do something about it. It is proposed that we ask permission for the assembled pickets to walk in the procession at the opening service or, failing this, stand or walk silently outside the convention hall during the service. This proposal and the proposed "Penitential Share" will be presented in more complete form for the consideration of the ESCRU Board at a meeting early in 1964. Members or chapters wishing to record their feelings, pro or con, may write the national office. How we respond to this challenge will be critical for the future of ESCRU.

"WHAT CAN I DO TO HELP?"

Almost 4000 persons have joined ESCRU in its almost 4 years of life. Most of them were reached by another concerned person who witnessed to their commitment and to Christ and His will. Little by little confrontation is taking place. The issue of race in American life and in the Church will not leave the uncommitted alone You may be the catalyst for numerous friends you never thought cared taking a stand with you. The ESCRU Statement of Purpose and Membership Form can help you. Use the enclosed order form to obtain a supply & see how God can use you in quietly helping others to stand up and be counted.

THE INTEGRATION REVOLUTION

A 26-page booklet by this name contains representative columns by the Rev. Malcolm Boyd as published in THE PITTSBURGH COURIER. It may be ordered from ESCRU for $1.00. Postage additional if not prepaid.

S.O.S.

O O REMEMBER US, PLEASE, as the year draws to a close if you're in the bracket where this is possible. To survive, let alone move out, ESCRU must have an ever increasing number of members & friends who can give several hundred to a thousand dollars a year. Two gave the larger figure last year. If you're not in this category, don't feel guilty! Most ESCRU members who are able give more than their annual dues. By action of the Board, taken and announced last fall, minimal annual dues go to $4.00 in 1964, with $6.00 for a couple. And, while we're on the subject, please indicate always what a check is for. We're swamped and can't always remember that you just ordered some materials, etc. Lastly, by all means, please let us know if you are moving. Otherwise it costs in time and money when mailings are returned to us.

IF WE ONLY HAD THE MEANS....

We get letters at times marked "Attention: Research Dept." or "Publications Dept.", or even some right-active ESCRU members will address some inquiry "Dear Sirs" as if they didn't know that, except for membership renewals & literature orders, etc., all the mail comes to my desk. We could use the services of full-time staff in "Research" and "Publications", just to speak of a partial aspect of our work, but we haven't got them. Mrs. Crowley stays swamped with her bookkeeping duties, I with mine, and at the moment we're looking for an office secretary who should be two or three persons. Without even straining I could use a professional assistant. There are projects pending which may never get done. There is more we could and should be doing. We desperately need someone full-time in touch with the mushrooming chapters. In short, this is both a bid for your patient consideration if we seem not to turn out as you wish we could but, more importantly, it's a call for help if anyone within hearing distance has sufficient means or access to foundation assistance, or, even, planning ahead, would like to remember us in their will! Dollar for dollar I'll bet we produce more in the way of cause and effect for change and challenge as regards religion and race than most any other church-oriented group or agency. - J.B.M.

CAPETOWN PLACARD AVAILABLE

Large versions of the Capetown Placard, as used in the Lovett Protest (page 6) and measuring 22 X 28, may be ordered from the ESCRU office for display or demonstration purposes. The 6-ply poster is 75¢ each. A 50 pt. heavier board is $1.00. A carton that will take between 1 & 4 costs us 25¢. Because of its size it must go via Air Parcel Post. In short, two of the 6-ply shipped to New York City would run about $3.65 all told. Order & we'll bill you.

THE CHAPTERS

Most ESCRU Chapters are booming with program. It would, and probably should, take an entire Newsletter to fairly report on what we hear in Atlanta is happening. We will shortly issue a directory of key personnel so that the chapters may benefit from each other's newsletters, etc. The newest of our 16 officially chartered groups is in the Diocese of Central New York and is chaired by the Rev. George Nagle.

THE EPISCOPAL SOCIETY FOR CULTURAL AND RACIAL UNITY 5 Forsyth St., N.W. Atlanta 3, Ga.
The Rev. John B. Morris, Executive Director

"And so, my fellow Americans: ask not what your country can do for you -- ask what you can do for your country.

"My fellow citizens of the world: ask not what America will do for you, but what together we can do for the freedom of man.

"Finally, whether you are citizens of America or citizens of the world, ask of us here the same high standards of strength and sacrifice which we ask of you. With a good conscience our only sure reward, with history the final judge of our deeds, let us go forth to lead the land we love, asking His blessing and His help, but knowing that here on earth God's work must truly be our own."

- JOHN F. KENNEDY
1917 - 1963

"Depart, O Christian soul, out of this world, In the Name of God the Father Almighty who created thee. In the Name of Jesus Christ who redeemed thee. In the Name of the Holy Ghost who sanctifieth thee. May thy rest be this day in peace, and thy dwelling place in the Paradise of God."

- BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

news

AMERICAN JEWISH CONGRESS

STEPHEN WISE CONGRESS HOUSE, 15 EAST 84th STREET • NEW YORK 28, N. Y. • TRAFALGAR 9-4500

Religion

Richard Cohen, Director
Department of Public Relations

For Release
Monday, Dec. 16

JOINT EFFORTS TO ADVANCE RACIAL EQUALITY BROUGHT CHRISTIANS, JEWS CLOSER IN 1963, AMERICAN JEWISH CONGRESS PRESIDENT FINDS

NEW YORK, Dec. 15 -- The president of the American Jewish Congress declared today that during 1963 the country's three major religious faiths had moved "closer than ever before to mutual understanding, mutual respect and mutual cooperation."

Dr. Joachim Prinz of Newark, N.J., said the new spirit of inter-religious good will was a by-product of the civil rights struggle in which Protestants, Catholics and Jews had joined hands in "common action to advance the common good.

"Not by drinking a toast to brotherhood once a year but by working together every day to advance the cause of equality for all our citizens have Protestants, Catholics and Jews been able to develop a genuine sense of community," Dr. Prinz told the American Jewish Congress national Governing Council at Stephen Wise Congress House, 15 East 84th St.

In his address to the year-end meeting of the Congress' policy-making group, Dr. Prinz asserted:

"At a moment of moral crisis in America, the three great faiths have come into their own by embarking on a great campaign in which racial equality and social justice for all citizens have become the new religious battle cry."

He continued:

"The leaders of American Protestantism, Catholicism and Judaism recognized that if the churches and synagogues were to play a significant role in our time, they had no choice but to join the great moral struggle for racial equality.

"In doing so, they have replaced the shallow and perfunctory expressions of inter-religious 'tolerance' with the genuine regard that can come only from a shared commitment and a shared experience.

MORE

"Out of the same crucible in which full equality in a free society for all Americans is being forged," Dr. Prinz declared, "an authentic and enduring relationship of appreciation and esteem is emerging among Christians and Jews that bodes well for the American future."

In asserting that 1963 had seen more progress toward inter-religious understanding than any previous year, Dr. Prinz listed five major developments that took place during the last twelve months:

1) The March on Washington last August, in which thousands of ministers, priests and rabbis, representing almost every religious sect and denomination, demonstrated "a remarkable unity in support of the goal of jobs and freedom."

2) The Conference on Religion and Race held in Chicago last January at which Protestant, Catholic and Jewish leaders "for the first time sat down together to map out a joint strategy in support of their joint commitment to the civil rights struggle."

3) The Vatican Council in Rome, "from which has emanated a new ecumenical spirit embracing not only Christians but men of all faiths." Dr. Prinz noted that American Bishops participating in the Council had been among the most vigorous supporters of the proposed schema on Catholic attitudes toward the Jews which, "when finally adopted, promises to establish a new relationship between the people of the Old and New Testaments."

4) Announcement by Pope Paul VI of plans to visit the Holy Land which Dr. Prinz described as "tangible recognition of the shared roots of the Jewish and Christian traditions."

5) The growing number of inter-religious "dialogues" in communities across the country in which differences between religious groups on issues of public concern are discussed "in free and open debate in an atmosphere of mutual trust and respect."

Dr. Prinz concluded: "Having taken their stand in behalf of equal rights for all, regardless of creed or color, America's major religious groups must now impress upon the ordinary churchgoer and synagogue member that the moral mainspring of the civil rights struggle lies in the ethical and prophetic concepts which form the basis of Christian and Jewish belief.

"In this great task lies the supreme challenge to organized religion in America in 1964 and the years to follow."

The meeting was attended by more than 100 American Jewish Congress leaders from all parts of the country. Shad Polier, chairman of the national Governing Council, presided.

-30-

RCrk-12/13/63
DM:RN:NP:Off:Reg:Aff.
AJ:FAM.

Religion
The Christian Century
12/18/63

Churches Meet Racial Crisis

Philadelphia, December 7.

✦ THE ACTION most revealing of the temper and concern of the 1963 General Assembly of the National Council of Churches took place on the day before the weeklong meeting closed. Early on that morning about 75 churchmen piled into two buses and set off for Capitol Hill in Washington. There, with the approval of their fellow delegates, they proposed to lobby on behalf of civil rights. Before returning that evening to the City of Brotherly Love, they had met individually with more than 100 congressmen and urged them to enact the civil rights bill before Congress adjourns. They contributed to the belief expressed by experienced Washington observers that for the third time in a generation the churches are making their influence felt strongly on an important government decision, that today they are counting as heavily on behalf of equality of civil rights as they counted in the 1940s against establishment of a U.S. embassy at the Vatican and for U.S. entry into the U.N.

The 5,115 persons who registered for this sixth General Assembly – coming from 31 denominations and the entire nation – were deeply affected by the assassination of President Kennedy. The President had agreed to address the assembly; the evening set aside for his address was given over to a memorial service of deeply moving Christian worship, of solemn reflection and earnst prayer. The late President was memorialized and his widow was praised for her "dignity and poise under the most shattering circumstances." Later the assembly thanked those Christians who had administered to the widows of the accused assassin and of the Dallas policeman who was killed in apprehending him. Nearly every speaker referred at some point to the tragic event which had changed history as well as the plans of the assembly. Many considered it the fruit of politically inspired hatred.

Not everybody was sure that the nation had yet repented. President J. Irwin Miller of the National Council pointed out that reaction to the murder of Lincoln contributed to the bitterness and moral collapse that developed in the days following the Civil War. Eugene Carson Blake recalled that the first President Johnson suffered rejection and defeat when he tried to pull the nation together. Dr. Blake declared that we must summon our people to put aside hatred and make a supreme moral effort in this crisis. Persons who were present at the founding convention of the N.C.C. in 1950 remembered that it coincided with a staggering defeat of U.S. forces in Korea by Chinese armies; the mood at Philadelphia was reminiscent of that which had prevailed at Cleveland.

While the sixth General Assembly dealt with many issues and spent considerable time reorganizing the N.C.C. structure, there can be no doubt that it will be remembered mainly as the one in which the churches made a supreme effort to deal with the racial issue in its many forms. Oddly, in view of the preoccupation of many churchmen and agencies with the issue, the most important statement made at Philadelphia was not written until after the assembly began. Entitled "A call to the churches for action to meet the crisis in race relations," it was addressed to the churches on the assumption that they should deal first with their own households. As presented, it was painfully specific, and each amendment from the floor sharpened its specificity.

Because of its importance, the rest of the space reserved for this report will be devoted to it. Our report of the assembly will be continued next week.

HAROLD E. FEY.

THIS GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the National Council of Churches is thankful for the increasing evidences that a new pattern of race relations is being established in our nation and that its constituent communions, their pastors, congregations and members all over the land, have been stirred as never before to act for justice, freedom and equality for Negroes and all other racial minorities.

We would be the first to admit that both the actions and their results have been insufficient either fully to reflect the imperatives of the Gospel or to meet the racial crisis as it develops in the nation. Recognizing that the National Council of Churches has not yet achieved in its own life and organization full implementation of its often reiterated pronouncements for racial justice and equality, this Assembly nevertheless dares once more to address an appeal to all Churches and Christians. For we believe that the Church of Jesus Christ is commanded by its Lord to rid itself of all those forms of racial injustice which have been perpetuated through the years by us all in our Churches, church organizations, agencies and institutions. With full realization that the speed of accomplishment will vary from place to place, and with thanksgiving to God for all that has already been done, we call upon national church bodies and local congregations throughout the United States to initiate specific actions now, where such actions have not already been initiated, to achieve the following objectives:

1. All Christian Churches should in fact be open to all regardless of race and should publicly so declare. Similarly it should be affirmed that all qualified ministers should have access to pulpits or other church positions regardless of race or color.

2. Churches should develop patterns and programs whereby Negroes and whites in Christian churches may meet each other regularly in worship, fellowship and Christian service. Such patterns and programs should include (a) interchange of membership among congregations composed exclusively or predominantly of only one of the constituent racial groups in their communities, and (b) establishment of interracial groupings such as vacation church schools, camps, conferences, choirs, committees, and clubs. Churches limited in possibility of integration by housing patterns should organize small group meetings between their members and other churches predominantly of other races or colors in order to bring home to their members the extent and character of discrimination under which other Christians suffer.

3. Churches should adopt and implement a policy of recruiting, employing and promoting personnel without regard to race or color. Such policy should govern specifically the recruitment, employment, and promotion of pastors, secretarial staffs, directors of music and religious education, denominational executives, missionaries, and custodial staffs. Churches and their members as workers or employers should vigorously promote literacy and training programs, public and private, and the increase in use of such facilities in order to attack one of the largest single causes for unemployment in minority groups.

4. Curriculum materials and other publications should be examined to determine that they present an objective and helpful picture of racial difference, and emphasize the Christian's responsibility in the struggle for racial justice. Such materials and publications should contain pictures and descriptive materials which reflect the multiracial character of Christian communities and which emphasize the fact that racial pluralism enriches the experience of Christian community.

5. Churches should integrate the governing boards, staffs, and clientele of health, educational and welfare institutions owned or operated by, or affiliated with congregations, denominations, interdenominational agencies.

6. Churches should require fair employment practice clauses in construction contracts between churches and building contractors, and between general contractors and sub-contractors, irrespective of the fact that fulfillment of such non-discriminatory clauses may result in delays or increased costs.

7. Churches and their agencies should examine their investment portfolios to determine if funds are invested in enterprises which practice racial discrimination, and should remove such investments from enterprises which cannot be persuaded to cease and desist from practicing racial discrimination.

8. Churches should unite in supporting the prompt enactment of Federal, State and local civil rights legislation which will include adequate provisions guaranteeing to all without racial discrimination: (a) Civil rights including the right to vote and to equal protection of the law; (b) Equal access to education; (c) Equal opportunity for employment, union membership, apprenticeship job training, and merit promotion; (d) The right to rent or buy and to occupy housing everywhere; (e) Access to all public accommodations.

9. The churches should give moral and financial support to major civil rights organizations and to denominational and interdenominational commissions which have been established to work for racial justice. They should also support interreligious efforts, working with other Christian communions and other religious faiths in community action.

10. Churches and all Christians should remember always to act in love and without hate or bitterness, seeking always reconciliation in church, community and nation as our new pattern of justice is being established.

The General Assembly of the National Council of Churches believes that it is crucial for the Church thus to witness to the love of God by giving its wholehearted support to all those seeking racial justice. We call upon the Church to give this priority and to be willing to pay whatever price of unpopularity or sacrifice these acts may entail. This we must do to be true to the Christ who died for all men.

12-19-63 SB Religion

Joint Memorandum

THE AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE
INSTITUTE OF HUMAN RELATIONS
165 EAST 56 STREET • NEW YORK 22, N. Y.

THE ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE OF B'NAI B'RITH
315 LEXINGTON AVENUE • NEW YORK, N. Y. 10016

SUBJECT: In the Matter of Contempt Proceedings Against Mrs. Owen Jenison

FROM: Paul Hartman and Theodore Leskes

DIGEST: U. S. Supreme Court vacates judgment of Minnesota Supreme Court which affirmed the contempt of court conviction of a person who for religious reasons refused to serve on a jury. The case is remanded to Minnesota court for further consideration consistent with the constitutional guarantee of the free exercise of religion.

Facts

Mrs. Jenison was called for jury duty in a Minnesota court and was selected to sit on the jury in a civil case. When the clerk was about to administer the oath to the jurors, Mrs. Jenison refused to take it. She stated: "I will pronounce no judgment. I can't. It's against my Bible teachings. My Bible tells me 'Judge not for you will not be judged.'"

Mrs. Jenison was convicted of contempt of court and sentenced to jail for 30 days. After she had served seven days of this sentence she was released pending a review of her conviction by the Minnesota Supreme Court. One of the grounds on which she sought review was that the conviction was in violation of those provisions of the Minnesota State Constitution and the U. S. Constitution which guaranteed her free exercise of religion.

The Minnesota Supreme Court's Decision (120 N. W. 2d 515)

On March 8, 1963 the Supreme Court of Minnesota, in a unanimous decision, affirmed the conviction of Mrs. Jenison. According to Justice Otis, who delivered the opinion of the Court, the constitutional guarantee of freedom of religion was not "an absolute, unfettered privilege." He referred to the cases of the Mormons in the 19th century who sought to avoid prosecution for the crime of polygamy by claiming that polygamy was commanded by their religion. In rejecting that claim, the U. S. Supreme Court had held that while Congress could not legislate over mere opinion it was left free to reach actions which are in violation of social duties or subversive of good order.

Justice Otis then stressed the importance of the jury system in our society. He concluded:

> It is not our function or prerogative to weigh and assess the merits of a particular religious doctrine. Nevertheless, we submit that the likelihood of this relator's conscience being unduly burdened by service on a jury is slight compared with the sense of guilt which might well afflict a conscientious objector who may be required to kill another human being in time of war without any constitutional right of exemption. We believe that if a citizen is to be relieved of jury duty for reasons of religion or conscience, his exemption should be extended by the legislature as in the case of the conscientious objector.

(More)

The U. S. Supreme Court's Decision (84 S. Ct. 63)

On October 14, 1963 the United States Supreme Court vacated the decision of the Minnesota Supreme Court and remanded the case to that court "for further consideration in the light of Sherbert v. Verner." This is the decision in which the Supreme Court, earlier this year, held that denial by a state of unemployment insurance benefits to a person who lost employment because she refused to work on Saturday, her Sabbath, for religious reasons was a violation of that person's constitutional rights to free exercise of religion. (See Joint Memo No. 388, dated July 8, 1963) The reference to the Sherbert case indicates that the United States Supreme Court was of the opinion that the Minnesota Supreme Court had erred when it held that the contempt conviction of Mrs. Jenison did not constitute a violation of freedom of religion guaranteed by the First Amendment to the United States Constitution.

PH:TL:ak
No. 401
12/19/63

Rel-Gen
1963
MA-fyi
JT-Religion materials

Challenge to Justice
and Love

NATIONAL CONFERENCE ON RELIGION AND RACE

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, THE REV. GALEN R. WEAVER
150 Fifth Avenue
New York 11, New York
(212) ALgonquin 5-7575-6

FIELD SECRETARY, MR. MATHEW AHMANN
21 West Superior Street
Chicago 10, Illinois
(312) MOhawk 4-8222

J. Irwin Miller
Chairman, Continuation Committee

Dr. Benjamin E. Mays
First Vice-Chairman

Rabbi Irving M. Blank
Chairman, Steering Committee

Rev. Arthur E. Walmsley
Chairman, Local Communities Follow-up Committee

Vol. I, No. 6
November-December 1963

NEWSLETTER

The shattering reality of President Kennedy's martyrdom, at the hands of an assassin, stunned men and women of all racial ancestries. With a fresh poignancy we all realized we had lost, with the crash of that bullet, a great and good friend of many noble causes, including that of civil and human rights for all men everywhere. We cherish the memory of his gallantry and his commitment to the struggle for justice for rich and poor, learned and ignorant, black and white, migratory workers and the unemployed, children and youth, and the insecure aged.

The following telegram was sent to Mrs. Kennedy and the children on that awful Friday afternoon, November 22, 1963:

> Deeply shocked at tragic shooting of your husband and father and our President. We mourn with you and re-dedicate ourselves to the great causes of human dignity and rights to which he gave his last full measure of devotion. We pray for divine strength to surround you and bear you up.

(Signed) Dr. Benjamin E. Mays
Dr. Galen R. Weaver
for the National Conference on Religion and Race.

CONVENERS: Department of Racial and Cultural Relations, National Council of Churches; Social Action Commission, Synagogue Council of America; Social Action Department, National Catholic Welfare Conference

339

JOHN F. KENNEDY - A PLEA AND A RESPONSE.....

"We in this country, in this generation, are — by destiny, rather than choice — the watchmen on the walls of world freedom. We ask, therefore, that we may be worthy of our power and responsibility — that we may exercise our strength with wisdom and restraint — and that we may achieve in our time and for all time the ancient vision of peace on earth, goodwill toward men. That must always be our goal—and the righteousness of our cause must always underlie our strength. For as was written long ago: "Except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain."

—from the President's undelivered speech in Dallas, Texas,
November 22, 1963.

* * * * * *

A SAINTLY MAN

Father John LaFarge, S. J., was fluent in Russian, Slovenian, Bulgarian, Polish, Czechoslovakian, Slovak, French, German, Italian, Latin, besides his native tongue, English. But he also knew the language of the heart. No one could come under the spell of his kindly countenance and not be better for the privilege. He was an aristocrat by birth and instinct but he loved all men and was deeply concerned for the humble and the oppressed. One of the founders of the Catholic Interracial Council movement, he was known, trusted and loved by men and women of all faiths among whom he moved in the spirit of an authentic saint.

At age 83 he went to his last sleep on November 24. Full of years and wisdom, he has left our sight but he remains as a benediction to all who would seek to bring healing and reconciliation among individuals, between religious groups, among the nations and the races. May he rest in peace! (Galen R. Weaver was among the throng that came to the church on November 27 to pay their respects to this great souled man).

* * * * * *

POVERTY, RACE AND RELIGION: CHALLENGE TO A CATHOLIC COMMUNITY

Some 250 men and women, clergy, Sisters and lay-men and women conferred together under the auspices of the National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice in Washington, D.C., November 14-17. Considered were the responsibilities of the Church to the 40 to 50 million excluded Americans of all colors who live more or less habitually below the level of nutrition, housing, health, education and recreation which should be available to them in this most affluent nation. These are the persons whose income for all purposes is less than $1,000 each. A disproportionately large share of them are non-whites. The trend towards automated processes in manufacturing, agriculture and commerce cancels out the likelihood that these people will ever be employed again at decent wages. The economic aspects of racial bitterness and tensions were given serious attention.

Student Leadership Conference on Religion and Race

College-age youth with their religious advisers to the number of 315 from 86 campuses of the nation convened in Washington, D. C. on November 17 and remained to work hard together through noon of November 20. Missing three days of classes, these carefully selected students represented Jewish, Roman Catholic and Protestant organized groups. The Sponsoring Organizations were: B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundations, National Newman Club Federation, National Federation of Catholic College Students and the National Student Christian Federation.

The idea for such a conference came from youth and adults who were in attendance at the January National Conference on Religion and Race in Chicago last January. Four Seminars. Eight Workshops and several plenary sessions kept the students and their leaders occupied many hours each day and evening.

Seminars: Non-violence; Public Facilities and Housing; Politics and Power Structure; Education.

Workshops: Religious Institutions on the Campus and in the Community
The University as an Institution
The University and the Surrounding Community
The Internal Life of the University
Students and Political Action
Student Action and Academic Feeedom
Tutorial and Interracial Social Service Programs
Students and Community Organization

Actually, considerable time and attention were given to the Civil Rights bill in the Congress and what students might do to enlist support for the passage of strong legislation. Wednesday morning was devoted to an eloquently forceful speech by Senator Hubert Humphrey in behalf of meaningful civil rights legislation and to visiting their own Congressmen.

The question of a continuing organization and follow-up communication among the delegates is to be considered by the officers of the conference.

I was very happy to be there and to have a modest part in the deliberations..GRW.

Stress was also laid upon the necessity for supporting strong civil rights legislation in the Congress.

One workshop group of about 25 persons discussed program and organization for inter-religious action for racial justice.

The delegates to the annual conference of the Episcopal Society For Racial and Cultural Unity, which was also meeting in the International Inn, and the NCCIJ held several joint sessions and shared resource personnel.

Dennis Clark, now on the staff of the Philadelphia Council on Community Advancement, gave an unusually challenging paper on "Poverty and Race: The Institutional Response of the Catholic Community". This and several other papers may be published. Inquire of Mathew Ahmann.

Father John LaFarge celebrated a community mass and preached the sermon on Friday afternoon.

* * * * * *

Michael Harrington:

"The Other America: Poverty in the United States"
(Penguin Special - S 223, 95¢)

An important book which tells about an America that is invisible to most of us. Poverty, the author says, is becoming an institution, a self-perpetuating culture. A total attack alone will stand any chance of meeting this massive problem.

* * * * * *

The National Council of Catholic Men's Executive Committee on September 21, 1963 adopted a statement which was sent to Congressmen, members of the House Judiciary and Rules Committees, urging them "to vote favorably for meaningful Civil Rights legislation at this session. Diocesan Presidents and Moderators were asked by the NCCM President Frank Heller to "do everything possible to initiate a legislative action program on Civil Rights within your Council".

A very excellent Kit - "RELEASE FROM RACISM" has been prepared and advertised among the Catholic lay organizations. It sells for $5.00.

* * * * * *

Coordinated Emphasis - July 1, 1963 - June 30, 1964 - Protestant denominational social action secretaries, working cooperatively with and through the Division of Christian Life and Work of the National Conference of Churches, decided upon an annual study and action emphasis a number of years in advance. The emphasis currently is "Christians in a Rapidly Changing Economy". Suggestions for study and action may be had from the Department of the Church and Economic Life, 475 Riverside Drive, New York 27, N. Y. A recent brochure prepared to promote the Church and Economic Life Week (January 19-25, 1964) calls "Employment, the Master Key to the Race Problem, the Youth Problem, the Poverty Problem."

The Department offers a wealth of excellent program material. Write for the free leaflet entitled "Jobs for All", which lists these printed resources.

* * * * * *

National Council of Churches' Sixth Assembly - this biennial meeting of the representative body of the member churches or denominations will take place in Philadelphia December 1-7. There will be 120 Sections in which small groups will devote twelve hours to Bible study and discussion. The four areas to which the study groups will be assigned are Race, Peace, Technology and Livelihood. The portion of the Source-book devoted to race was prepared with the help of a number of persons including Dr. Herman H. Long, president-elect of Talladega College, Alabama - one of the delegates to the Chicago Conference and well-known in intergroup relations circles.

Outlook for Civil Rights Legislation - The strong position taken by President Johnson in his first message to Congress on November 27 and his demonstrated skill in parliamentary procedures may hasten the passage of an adequate civil rights bill. The votes for the so-called compromise measure as reported to the Rules Committee would appear to have a good chance for passage, provided it can be discharged from the Rules Committee over the head of its chairman.

> NOW IS THE TIME TO WRITE TO YOUR CONGRESSMAN TO VOTE IN FAVOR OF SUCH A DISCHARGE PETITION AND AN OPPORTUNITY FOR FLOOR DEBATE. ALSO TO WRITE TO THE MEMBERS OF THE RULES COMMITTEE (see list below). The bill is H. R. 7152.
>
> Some will want to ask for strengthening amendments, especially for broader coverage of Title II - Public Accommodations. (At present, the services of covered establishments must be those offered to interstate travellers or a substantial portion of any goods offered for sale must have moved in interstate commerce).
>
> Also for authorization to the U. S. Attorney General to initiate court suits in any civil rights matter. (This would be reinstate Part III of the 1957 Bill). It is felt by many that police brutality cannot be reached unless there is such a provision in law. The Attorney General says he does not now have power in such cases - and, to the dismay of those who have been brutally treated, has said he does not want it.

In the Senate, the strategy is to wait for the House to pass a bill and then to try to get that through without any changes. This is the most that can be hoped for, says Senator Humphrey. Even so, he predicts a filibuster lasting from two to three months - "a disgraceful exhibition!" This will be beaten in one of two ways - by invoking cloture which requires the support of two-thirds of the Senators present. Or by "attrition", which means wearing the opposition down by continuous day and night sessions until the less hardy collapse from exhaustion. For cloture, Senator Humphrey says, some 12 more votes are needed than are presently in sight.

AS SOON AS IT IS ANNOUNCED THAT THE HOUSE BILL HAS GONE OVER TO THE SENATE, LETTERS AND TELEGRAMS MUST GO IN LIKE A FLOOD, ESPECIALLY TO THOSE DOUBTFUL MEMBERS WHOSE VOTES ARE REQUIRED FOR CLOTURE FOLLOWING A REASONABLE PERIOD FOR DEBATE.

The Rev. Clyde Everton, Trinity Episcopal Church, Santa Barbara, California, suggested in a seminar on November 24 that the passage of strong civil rights legislation would be "a most appropriate living memorial to John F. Kennedy". Many others, including President Johnson, have voiced similar sentiments.

* * * * * *

The next two pages give a very brief summary comparison between three bills, only one of which is now in the Rules Committee - the so-called Compromise Bill, H. R. 7152. Dr. Lewis I. Maddocks prepared this analysis and we are grateful to him for it.

COMPARISON OF THE CIVIL RIGHTS BILLS

	THE PRESIDENT'S BILL	THE SUBCOMMITTEE BILL	THE COMPROMISE BILL
PUBLIC ACCOMMODATIONS	Would outlaw discrimination by operators of hotels, motels, restaurants, theaters, stores & other establishments selling goods or services to the public which substantially engage in or affect interstate commerce either because many of their customers are interstate travelers or many of their goods crossed state lines.	Added 14th Amendment provision extending coverage to every business licensed or otherwise permitted to operate by state or local governments. Presumably, would have covered private schools, banks, doctor's clinics. Only specific exemption: owner-occupied rooming houses renting not more than 5 rooms.	Was cut back by deleting the 14th Amendment licensing provision and limiting coverage to places to eat & sleep, gasoline stations, theaters, sports arenas & other amusement places. Small rooming homes were exempted, as were retail stores (unless they have lunch counters) & service places (barber shops).
VOTING RIGHTS	Would outlaw in Fed. elections literacy tests, forbid disqualifying voters for minor mistakes on application, require lit. tests be given in writing, make 6th-grade education legal presumption of literacy. Temporary Fed. referees would be appointed to register qualified Negroes when courts are slow to act.	Approved these provisions with two additions. Literacy tests would apply to states as well as federal elections. Referee-approved votes would be impounded pending decision of court suits, if there were enough to change the outcome of an election.	Provision for setting up three-judge Federal courts to expedite voting suits was substituted for temporary referees. Literacy test provisions apply only to Federal elections.
SCHOOLS	Would empower the Atty. Gen. to initiate court suits to speed school desegregation. Provide aid to school districts trying to desegregate.	Extended Atty. General's power to initiate desegregation suits, without waiting for an individual to sue, to all public facilities (parks, play grounds, libraries, etc.)	The Subcommittee's provisions were accepted.
PART THREE	Made no mention of this provision, first drafted as third section of 1957 civil rights bill but later dropped, to let Atty. Gen. initiate court suits in any civil rights matter.	Included a broad provision empowering the Atty. Gen. to initiate suits to protect all constitutional and other legal rights to all persons.	Attorney General may intervene as a party after an individual has filed suit alleging denial of equal protection of the law because of race, color, religion or national origin.

	THE PRESIDENT'S BILL	THE SUBCOMMITTEE BILL	THE COMPROMISE BILL
EMPLOY-MENT	Asked only that permanent status be given the President's committee which seeks by persuasion to end discrimination by Gov't. contractors. President endorsed passage of FEPC legislation separately.	Included section identical to a bill approved by the House Labor Comm. banning discrimination by private employers or labor unions with more than 25 workers or members. Orders would be issued by an administrative board, subject to appeal to court.	FEPC Section was approved with the change that final orders would be issued by Federal district courts rather than the board. In effect, this would shift the burden of proof in court from the employer to the government.
FEDERAL AID	Authorized the Administration to cut off any type of Federal aid from states or localities that discriminated in its use.	Limited the cut-off feature to specific projects or programs involved, and added court review of a Federal cut-off order.	Approved the subcommittee version, limiting it further to grants and loans, thus exempting guarantee or insurance programs (as Fed. insur. on bank dep.)
COMMUNITY RELATIONS	Proposed a mediation service to help settle racial disputes, specifically complaints about public accommodations.	It accepted the idea, but limited the staff.	Was omitted apparently because of latent opposition to a new bureaucracy and a feeling that special appointees of the President would be more effective.
CIVIL RIGHTS COM-MISSION	Would extend the fact-finding Commission for 4 years and give it added function of serving as a nat'l clearing house on civil rights information.	It made the Commission a permanent Agency.	It would make the Commission permanent with additional power to investigate alleged vote frauds.
VOTING CENSUS	This was not included	It provided for a census of voters by race which could be used under the 14th Amendment to cut House representation of states that discriminate.	Such a census would be made only in states where the Civil Rights Commission says a problem exists.
COURT REMOVAL	This was not included.	It provides for an appeal when a Fed. court has refused to accept transfer to it from a state court of a civil rights case.	The sub-committee language was included.

MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE RULES COMMITTEE ARE LISTED ON FOLLOWING PAGE

Members of the House Rules Committee are:

Democrats

Rep. Howard W. Smith (Va.)
Chairman, (District 8)

Rep. William M. Colmer (Miss.)
(District 5)

Rep. Ray J. Madden (Ind.)
(District 1)

Rep. James J. Delaney (N. Y.)
(Dist. 9)

Rep. James W. Trimble (Ark.)
(Dist. 3)

Rep. Homer Thornberry (Texas)
(Dist. 10)

Rep. Richard Bolling (Missouri)
(Dist. 5)

Rep. Thomas P. O'Neill (Mass.)

Rep. Carl Elliott (Alabama)
(At Large)

Rep. B. F. Sisk (Calif.)
(Dist. 16)

Republicans

Rep. Clarence J. Brown (Ohio)
(Dist. 7)

Rep. Katharine St. George (N.Y.)
(Dist. 5)

Rep. H. Allen Smith (Calif.)
(Dist. 20)

Rep. Elmer J. Hoffman (Illinois)
(Dist. 14)

Rep. William H. Avery (Kansas)
(Dist. 2)

(Write to them c/o the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C. 20515)

LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE FOR CIVIL RIGHTS OFFERS HELP - Located at 704 Seventeenth Street, N. W., Washington, D.C. 20006, this consolidated office of information created by approximately 70 civil rights, labor and religious organizations, publishes reliable periodic memoranda. These may be had free on request. The Leadership Conference will send free on request a quantity of a brief pamphlet entitled "A Call to Action" - (sample attached).

Second Methodist Conference on Human Relations - The Message from this Conference heldAugust 26-30 may be had at 5¢ per copy from The Service Department of the Conference Office, 100 Maryland Ave., N. E., Washington, D. C. 20002.

On the final morning those present were given an opportunity to sign a "Commitment Card". Ten areas for the exercise of their commitment "to work for inclusive Methodist churches and inclusive Methodist related institutions in an inclusive society" were listed as follows -

Help establish interracial conversations - 394 signers
Participate in an interracial prayer fellowship - 293
Seek to enlist others in support of basic human rights - 410
Work for equal voting opportunities for all - 325
Work for fair employment practices - 352
Work for desegregated schools - 322
Work for open housing - 350
Support meaningful civil rights legislation - 395
Write letters - 331
Participate in direct action projects, when prompted by conscience - 321

* * * * * *

On Jackson, Mississippi - At a consultation called by National Conference on Religion and Race in New York on October 31, eleven persons participated. Several hopeful items were reported indicating at least some little progress in race relations. Thus, six Negro policemen have been employed and are doing an excellent job. Nine Negro women are on duty as crossing guards at school intersections. Two Negroes have been employed as sanitation workers. The city parks have been desegregated. (However, recently the police bagan arresting Negroes who used the parks, after the latter had left them.) Several local firms that depend heavily upon Negro trade have hired Negro cashiers. The libraries are open to both races.

Major emphasis is now being placed by the Movement upon selective buying and voter registration rather than street demonstrations. At the recent election for Governor, Dr. Aaron Henry's name was written in. He estimated that 10,000 to 15,000 registered Negroes wrote in his name and that of the Rev. Edwin King (who is white) for Lieutenant Governor. It is reported that a total of some 83,000 Negroes voted, but this is unverified as yet. Eighteen Yale students and some fifty other college students helped in the campaign in spite of police harassment.

The churches have been tested week after week by bi-racial groups or pairs of worshippers. The Roman Catholic, Episcopal Churches, and United Presbyterian and a Missouri Synod Church are reported to have received and seated the worshippers. However, none of the Methodist churches was willing to do so. The Trinity Lutheran Church likewise turned Negroes away after a faction in the church called a corporate meeting and voted to exclude colored people. Methodist and E. U. B. ministers from Chicago and elsewhere are continuing to travel to Jackson in order to challenge this behavior. A good many have been arrested. White Citizens Council members are apparently determined to go to any length to infiltrate these congregations and organize white exclusiveness.

On November 13, the second meeting of four members of the Intercitizens Committee (see brief report of ICC in the previous Newsletter) with three members of the City Council Committee on Public Safety and Welfare was held. Also present were Police Chief Jamie Moore and Inspector Haley. One striking fact was registered in that encounter, namely, that a complainant against mistreatment by the police must come himself or herself alone, without the benefit of legal counsel, while the Police Chief is entitled to have counsel present. At the very least these two meetings have brought the attention of three white citizens of Jackson to the 50 documented cases of rights violations within the past few years. The last one also provided the opportunity for Mr. Seibes (the chairman?) to make a strong statement to the effect that the Council will not tolerate mistreatment of anyone, black or white.

* * * * * *

National Conference on Religion and Race Items - Consideration is being given by the Local Communities' Follow-up Committee to a National Seminar for delegates from the forty or fifty state and local conferences (or committees) on religion and race so that they can share experience with one another. The implementation of this proposal will depend upon two things (1) the interest shown by these local groups as they respond to an inquiry from the Executive Director and (2) upon whether an extra-budget grant can be obtained to carry the overhead expenses. So far the responses from the local groups have been affirmative and even enthusiastic.

The Continuation Committee is scheduled to meet in New York in January 1964. At that time it is assumed that a recommendation will be made as to whether to continue or to terminate the NCRR, at least so far as the National Secretariat is concerned. The ultimate decision will depend upon official action by the three Conveners - the National Council of Churches, the Synagogue Council of America, and the National Catholic Welfare Conference. The opinions of readers of the Newsletters and others on the usefulness of a continuing national structure and Secretariat could be useful if written in, giving reasons pro and con.

The intent of NCRR's Executive Committee to find and employ a successor to Mathew Ahmann as field secretary could not be carried out because of inadequate funds in hand or pledged. The Executive Director by correspondence, the issuance of this Newsletter and other memoranda, as well as by a limited amount of travel, will endeavor to assist local conferences or committees on religion and race. If the time should come that finances are available this important portfolio will be filled, provided a person with the qualifications can be found. (At one point recently we had such a person willing to serve but had to countermand our invitation. GRW).

* * * * * *

In response to the bombing of the Sixteenth Street Baptist Church in Birmingham, Alabama and the death of four Negro Sunday School children, National Conference on Religion and Race sent out an appeal for contributions to rebuilding the church and to the relief of the families. At this date the total of gifts received and forwarded is as follows:

To the church for rebuilding $2,191.31
To the Reverend John H. Cross, the pastor, for the families - $980.48

Mr. Cross has written letters of appreciation on behalf of the church and the parents and we pass this word of gratefulness on to you who contributed.

* * * * * *

Friendship House (4233 So. Indiana Ave., Chicago, 60653) notes that numerous cities throughout the nation have sponsored home-visiting programs, frequently on an inter-religious as well as an inter-racial basis. Between October 27 and November 3 at least ten major cities held city-wide home visit days. Next Spring there is to be a National Home Visit Day which Friendship House is inviting as many as will to observe. Informational materials may be had from Friendship House at small cost. These are based on many experiences since 1955 when the plan was inaugurated in Chicago. Usually from 2 to 7 visitors call in the home of the host - guests and host being of the opposite race. The host is encouraged to bring in several neighbors for free conversation. These contacts across the race line have often resulted in remarkable improvements in attitudes. Any group anywhere can attempt this on a small scale at least. In some cities a continuous program is carried on week after week. Washington, D. C. is following this continuous plan with great success.

Notables in the News

The Rev. Dr. Elder G. Hawkins, pastor of St. Augustine United Presbyterian Church of New York City has been nominated to be Moderator of that denomination's General Assembly. This is the highest elective office in the gift of the 3,276,000-member body.

Jackie Robinson, business executive, was recently named President of United Church Men, a nation-wide organization of Protestant and Orthodox Christian laymen. In July, Mr. Robinson was honored by the United Church of Christ's Council for Christian Social Action by being given its annual Churchmanship Award. He also was a featured speaker before the Assembly. He is a member of a local United Church of Christ in North Stamford, Connecticut.

Local Conferences Act

The St. Louis Conference on Religion and Race sponsored a public Procession and Assembly on cival rights on Sunday, November 24, at 2 p.m. 30,000 persons came to the public square to listen to addresses by three prominent visiting speakers-a Negro, a Rabbi and a Catholic priest. Originally planned as a public testimony that the churches and synagogues are concerned about the problems facing the Negro today, because of the assassination of President Kennedy the gathering was largely turned into a memorial to our late leader in the struggle for human rights for all. CBS-TV carried the program live for one hour. Paul Hanlon, who was the principal organizer, reports that the demonstration made a deep impression on the city as a whole.

Interesting historical footnote: the assembly gathered before the courthouse where the Dred Scott decision was promulgated over one hundred years ago.

In a joint public statement from Cardinal Ritter, Rabbi Grollman and W. Sherman Skinner (the latter being President of the Metropolitan Church Federation), it was declared that the Board of the Conference on Religion and Race has committed itself through its congregations to secure jobs and job training for members of the Negro community in the weeks immediately ahead.

* * * * * *

The Lexington (Ky.) Committee on Human Rights, among other achievements, drafted a proposal for an ordinance establishing an official city Commission on Human Rights and presented it to the City Manager and the City Commissioners. Subsequently a resolution was adopted establishing such a Commission very largely along the lines proposed.

The Employment Sub-Committee has contacted retail merchants and been instrumental in persuading a number of them to employ Negroes on the basis of their personal capacity. A study is being made of the employment practices of 68 firms with a view to encouraging greater use of available Negroes as employees.

The Public Accommodations Sub-Committee has been "testing" restaurants as to their willingness to serve Negroes. It is intended to publish lists every two months as a means to encourage patronage of those that are open to all. Only 15 remain on the doubtful list. Recreational facilities are being emphasized during December. A public accommodations ordinance proposal is being considered. A Sub-Committee on Housing and another on Education are also at work. The former recently reported two new subdivisions are soon to be opened on a non-discriminatory basis. The Education Sub-Committee is trying to find a qualified Negro to run for the School Board.

* * * * * *

The Pittsburgh Area Religion and Race Council reports that, since being organized last Spring, it has: (1) called on all churches and synagogues in the area to insert non-discriminatory clauses in their building contracts and to purchase supplies only from them with fair employment practices' (2) recognized the effectiveness of the United Negro Protest Committee's demonstrations and assigned two members as liaison members to the Protest Committee; (3) through letters and a booklet entitled, "Religion's Role in Racial Crisis" (published by NCRR), has sought to inform every clergymen in the area as to its position and concern over erasing racial tensions; (4) endorsed the historic March on Washington (in which several of its members participated).

* * * * * *

The Black Hawk County Conference on Religion and Race (Cedar Falls, Iowa) took up the proposal "Write for Rights" letter day. It contacted all clergy and civic organizations asking them to cooperate. Also efforts were directed at enlisting the news media of the area to support the program. Space was purchased in the newspaper to print a sample letter to Congressmen with the names and addresses of local Congressmen furnished.

* * * * * *

Des Moines, Iowa: The Iowa Conference on Religion and Race was held in mid-September. Congregations were asked to pledge (among other things) that they will require a clause of non-discriminatory employment in any contract to build or improve..physical facilities, will boycott supply or equipment companies who are known to have discriminatory hiring policies, and will not patronize or sponsor any activity at a place of public accommodation which discriminates against anyone because of race or religion or nationality. Individual church members were urged to adopt an open occupancy, non-discriminatory policy in real estate transactions, to boycott places of business open to the public which discriminate against Negro or other minority groups, either as patrons or employees; also private clubs which refuse membership or service on racial grounds; and to invest in financial institutions which make funds available on a non-discriminatory basis. (reported in the Christian Century, October 30)

* * * * * *

In the September - October Newsletter we mentioned that (at least) four Roman Catholic bishops are pursuing policies of non-discrimination in their building contracts. These are the bishops: Most Reverend William G. Connare, Bishop of Greensburg, Pa., Most Reverend Patrick A. O'Boyle, Archbishop of Washington, D.C., Most Reverend Robert E. Lucey, Archbishop of San Antonio, Texas, Most Reverend Victor J. Reed, Bishop of Oklahoma City and Tulsa.

* * * * * *

The Nebraska Conference on Religion and Race is planning a state-wide conference on March 2 and 3, 1964. "Everything is being planned so there will be an organized program," which is understood to mean not merely consultation and education but also action.

* * * * * *

On September 30, 1963 a Quad-City area Interreligious Conference on Race was held in Davenport, Iowa under the sponsorship of the Interreligious Committee on Race. Those present signed a commitment with the following specifics:

....we will adopt or renew a non-discriminatory policy in all relations with our employees.... include a non-discriminatory clause in all contracts to build or improve our physical facilities.

....will oppose any restrictive covenant or "gentlemen's agreement" in the purchase, sale, rental or use of property.... will support all sincere efforts to establish a legal basis for open occupancy in housing ... we will seek out financial institutions which have non-discriminatory lending and/or borrowing and/or employment practices in connection with investments and loans.

....will purchase equipment and supplies only from purveyors who are known to have non-discriminatory hiring and marketing practices.

....will refrain from holding membership in, or using the facilities of, organizations known to discriminate against anyone because of race, creed or ethnic origin. ... will invite all persons for fellowship and will welcome as members in our own congregations and organizations those who share our faith regardless of racial derivation.

....these being our resolves, we pledge ourselves to cooperate fully with all other men of good-will to remove racism from the Quad-City community.

....we pledge ourselves strongly to urge the members of our congregations so to commit themselves and so to act.

* * * * * *

The Metropolitan Detroit Conference on Religion and Race sent out to the 1200 participants in last January's notable Open Occupancy Conference, a letter urging that letters be sent in support of the Patrick-Ravitz Open Occupancy Ordinance. A public statement favoring passage was released shortly after Labor Day. "A Home Owner's Petition" was being circulated for the purpose of forestalling governmental interference with the right of the owner to sell or rent to whomever he might wish. The Conference issued a public statement making it clear that, in plain language, what was being asked for was the right to discriminate against Negroes or others and warning citizens not to sign it. The four religious leaders, in a joint statement, called such discrimination "immoral".

* * * * * *

Evidence continues to come to the Secretariat that local interreligious groups are taking seriously the National Conference's request to bring their influence to bear upon members of Congress, urging them to vote for a strong civil rights law in this session. We cannot too often repeat that this is a specific, high priority obligation upon all of us.

* * * * * *

Quite a number of local conferences on religion and race have adapted the Appeal to the Conscience issue from the Chicago Conference of last January and issued their own version. Such restatements gain in pertinency to the state or city circumstances.

* * * * * *

Chicago Conference on Religion and Race has succinctly outlined

"Highlights of First Eight Months"

1. LOCAL CONFERENCES -- The Chicago Conference on Religion and Race (CCRR) sponsored several local level conferences on religion and race in Chicago suburbs and city neighborhoods. Each were pioneering ventures in interreligious cooperation in their areas.

2. HOME VISIT PROGRAM -- CCRR recruited 100 suburban families who were hosts to visiting Negro families in the citywide Home Visit Day, March 24th.

3. 57TH AND MORGAN INCIDENT -- CCRR played a major role in solving Chicago's most serious racial disturbance this summer. This incident occurred in the week of July 28 -- August 5 in the Englewood -- Garfield Boulevard area, and gained national notoreity. An interreligious and interracial clergy committee was organized in the area and as many as fifty clergymen patrolled the streets to witness for human rights and to work for reconciliation.

4. COMMUNICATION IN INTERRACIAL TENSION AREAS -- A 4-man clergy team has been organized under the leadership of Rabbi Robert Marx to convene interreligious and interracial clergy meetings in areas of high tension. Members of the team are: Rev. Samuel Gandy; Rabbi Hayim Goren Perelmuter; Father Francis Phelan; and Rev. Kris Ronnow.

5. NEWSPAPER APPEAL -- CCRR printed a strong appeal on June 28th entitled "Stand Up for Racial Justice." The statement urged substantial reforms in housing, education and employment as the only meaningful response to the racial crisis in our city and nation.

6. CLERGY-LEGISLATORS BREAKFAST FOR FAIR HOUSING -- CCRR organized 26 Chicago area interfaith clergy teams to breakfast with their state representatives and senators on May 8th in behalf of a state fair housing law.

7. CHICAGO FAIR HOUSING ORDINANCE -- CCRR vigorously supported the Chicago Housing Ordinance as a first step toward justice in Chicago's housing.

8. FEDERAL CIVIL RIGHTS BILL -- CCRR is working to build support for this legislation in Chicago and throughout Illinois.

9. DELEGATION TO DIRKSEN -- An interreligious delegation from CCRR called on Senator Dirksen on August 28th to urge his support for the federal civil rights bill, particularly the public accommodations section.

10. MARCH ON WASHINGTON -- CCRR endorsed the March and aided members to participate in the 3000 man Chicago delegation.

11. CONFERENCES WITH TV LEADERS -- CCRR has met with all of Chicago's top TV industry leaders to urge special programs on race relations and integration in TV personnel and programming.

12. ACTION WITHIN RELIGIOUS INSTITUTIONS -- CCRR has organized a top flight committee of religious leaders to develop strong programs to guarantee that religious institutions, themselves, operate in accordance with stated denominational policies on integration and non-discrimination. Under the leadership of Dr. Donald Zimmerman , Right Reverend Robert Hagarty and Rabbi Jacob Weinstein, the committee is working on plans to promote non-discriminatory clauses in church and synagogue building contracts, intra-denominational plans to assure open admissions and fair employment practices.

* * * * * *

Atlanta, Georgia: In the Spring of 1963 an Atlanta Council on Religion and Race was formed. The Executive Committee was composed of Archbishop Paul J. Hallinan, Rabbi Jacob M. Rothchild, Dr. Benjamin E. Mays and Dr. Herman L. Turner (director of the Atlanta Council of Churches). Attempts have since been made to enlist a representative of the very important Southern Baptist Churches of the city but without success at the last report. The first step taken was a survey of the 580 churches in the metropolitan area. It was found that far more claimed to be "open" than had been anticipated. However, the more conservative or fundamentalist congregations were for the most part closed to Negroes. At a luncheon meeting where 33 pastors came (50 "leading" ones were invited), the idea of a continuing inter-religious program was approved. At a subsequent pastors' meeting only a minimum program seemed possible. The decision was to work through the denominational ministers' groups. These efforts have been somewhat successful with the Presbyterians, the Disciples and the Methodists. Two local congregations - one Episcopal, one Disciples, undertook to carry on a pilot self-study project, six weeks in length. The following were to be covered:

1. General discussion of the denomination's pronouncements on racial justice;

2. Discussion centered on Will Campbell's pamphlet "We are a Third Race".

3. Discussion of the segregationists' point of view, using material from the Citizens' Councils by way of contrast.

4. Discussion of Dr. King's "Letter from Birmingham City Jail".

5. Discussion of "An Appeal to the Conscience of the American People" issued by the Chicago Conference.

6. Formulation of specific recommendations for personal and congregational action.

The intention has been to assess the work of these two study groups and to prepare kits of materials for the use of other local churches willing to undertake a similar process.

* * * * * *

On October 19, some 600 delegates of the three major religious groups joined in an all-day conference with outstanding speakers and forty-workshop groups. Dover, Delaware, was chosen by the state-wide planning group as being located near the center of the more difficult racial problems in the commonwealth. The timing was excellent in one particular respect, vis., the public accommodations bill was bottled up in the Delaware House of Representatives. Several speakers called for its prompt passage, including a former state Supreme Court Justice and Episcopal Bishop Mosley.

The Chairman of the Conference was a Christian Science layman, Mr. W. Spencer Thompson, Vice President and Director of Industrial Relations of Atlas Chemical Industries of Wilmington.

* * * * * *

The Toledo Interfaith Conference on Religion and Race was instrumental in having Mayor John W. Potter proclaim a RACIAL JUSTICE NOW WEEK. Churches, civic groups and business firms were invited to cooperate in an extensive program. While there were some significant observances, neither the mass media nor the merchants paid it much attention. Two thousand posters were put out to various places of business but only a few were displayed. The conference leaders are evaluating their experience and trying to locate the elements of non-cooperation.

* * * * * *

Since our last listing an Interreligious Commission on Religion and Race of Greater Utica has been organized. Rev. H. Robert Gomer is President (11 Devereaux St.) and Rev. Francis J. Willenburg is Secretary.

* * * * * *

"I Wonder Why..."

Shirley Burden, a photographic essayist of uncommon sensitiveness, has authored an appealing little book of remarkably evocative pictures and captions. Each page portrays some lovely thing that a child likes. The final caption facing a portrait of a wistful teen-age Negro girl, is "WONDER WHY SOME PEOPLE DON'T LIKE ME." Doubleday & Company published this delightful yet thought-stirring 32 page volume. (price $1.95)

* * * * * *

Other Recommended Reading

Have you seen and read STRENGTH TO LOVE a volume of sermons or addresses by Martin Luther King, Jr. These chapters, perhaps more than any of his books, give the readers insight into how this modern apostle of justice and love "got that way" and how he maintains the glow of his deep commitment to non-violent action and attitude. See in particular the chapter on "Pilgrimage to Non-Violence". (Published by Harper and Row at $3.50).

Recommended also: The South and the Southerners by Ralph McGill and The Desegregated Heart by Sarah Patton Boyle, (William Morrow, Atlantic, Little and Brown)

Report of the United States Commission on Human Rights '63: - the culmination of two years of fact-finding and investigation by the Commission. "While the Commission has found hope in the civil rights progress that has been made, there remain serious matters of concern that can be corrected only by executive and legislative action. " (letter of transmittal) $1.00 from Supt. of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402, or probably can be had free on request from your Congressman or Senator.

H.R. 7152 - The "Compromise Bill" now before the Rules Committee of the House. This is quite long but should be in the hands of all leaders at least. Ask your Congressman for copies.

Race Relations and Religious Education - a symposium by more than 30 authors is the January-February 1964 issue of the magazine RELIGIOUS EDUCATION, 120 double column pages. Single copy $2.00. Discounts of 10 or more to one address. Among the Protestant, Catholic and Jewish authors: Arthur Gilbert, Gordon Allport, Ethel Alpenfels, Solomon Bernards, Thomas Pettigrew, Galen Weaver, Balfour Brickner... (order from the Religious Education Association, 545 W. 111th Street, New York 25, New York.)

* * * * * *

Regarding Director of Local Religion and Race Groups:
Up to November 29 the Secretariat has had 20 replies to the questionnaire mailed out a month or so before. Hopefully others will be received so that a more complete directory can be prepared by or soon after January 1, 1963. In mimeographed form it will be made available at 50¢ per copy. Names and addresses of the contact person and other pertinent information will be included in each case where the information has been furnished to us.

* * * * * *

SPECIAL PRICE OFFER

CATALOGUE OF RESOURCES -CONFERENCE RECOMMENDATIONS -JAMES RESTON'S COLUMN

Instead of $1.00 for a single copy postpaid, the 50 page compilation of readings in Religion and Race (books, periodicals, pamphlets on various aspects of race relations) plus a listing of resource agencies and audio-visual aids entitled CATALOGUE OF RESOURCES will be offered at 65¢ for a single copy (5-49 copies at 50¢ each, 50 or more at 45¢ each) - postpaid.

The folder that lists all of the recommendations of the Chicago Conference and also carries the Appeal to the Conscience of the American People may be ordered at the following reduced prices-single copy 15¢, 20-99 copies at 8¢ each, 100 or more 6¢ each.

Also James Reston's challenging column from the August 30, 1963 New York Times placing the responsibility for civil rights legislation on the churches and synagogues, may be ordered at half price - 100 or more at ½¢ each.

(tear here)----------order blank----------(tear here)

Please mail me postpaid for the check or money order enclosed

		Total
_____	copies of the Catalogue of Resources	_____
_____	copies of the Conference Recommendations	_____
_____	copies of James Reston's article	_____
	Grand Total $	_____

Your name_____
Your postal address_____
Date of this order _____ mail order to National Conference on Religion and Race
150 5th Avenue, N.Y. 10011

Rel - Gen
1963

A periodic news bulletin issued by the Department of Christian Social Relations, Division of Christian Citizenship, Episcopal Church Center, 815 Second Avenue, New York, N. Y. 10017.

CHURCH AND RACE

Vol. 1, No. 6 Advent, 1963

THE RT. REV. ARTHUR LICHTENBERGER, PRESIDING BISHOP OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH, ISSUED THE FOLLOWING STATEMENT AFTER THE DEATH OF PRESIDENT KENNEDY:

"Within a very short time after the news of the assassination of President Kennedy, I released a statement on this shocking and incredible event. I said what everyone was saying--that I was shocked and saddened, that we expressed our sympathy to the family of President Kennedy and assured them of our prayers, and that we thanked God for the life of this courageous man.

"Now, a day later, I believe I can express what was yesterday only a vague and fleeting thought. It is this:

"Whoever fired the shot that killed John Kennedy, we as citizens of this country are involved in this terrible act. Insofar as we have shrugged off the frequent expressions of bitterness and hate made by people on the extreme left or the extreme right as of no threat to our country; when we have said of acts of violence perpetrated as protests against the decisions and acts of our federal or state governments--they do not express the real feelings of the people of our land--we by our indifference and our apathy have weakened the power of love and justice.

"So as we pray for John Kennedy, his family and for the man who has now taken up the heavy burden of the chief executive of our country, let us pray for ourselves and all the people of this land. That we may be makers of peace, standing firm against all who would sow discord and violence and that we may by God's grace be enabled to make it evident in our time that love which is of God can overcome hatred and evil."

DIVISION OF CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP

Executive Secretary	The Rev. Arthur E. Walmsley
Associate Secretaries	The Rev. Herschel Halbert Carroll Greene, Jr. The Rev. Cornelius Tarplee
Consultants for Publications	Douglas A. Bushy The Rev. Robert A. MacGill

CHURCH AND RACE is published by the National Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church, 815 Second Avenue, New York 17, New York. Published monthly, September to June. Application to mail at second-class rates is pending at Lebanon, Pa.

CLERGYMEN ESCORT PRESIDENT'S BODY

Washington, D. C. -- Clergymen-friends of the late President Kennedy fall into step behind the color guard as the body, borne upon a caisson, is taken in procession from the White House to the Rotunda of the U.S. Capitol. Left to right, they are: Dean Francis B. Sayre of the Washington Cathedral (Episcopal); Msgr. John S. Spence, pastor of the Shrine of the Sacred Heart, Washington; and Father Theodore Danusiar, pastor of the Capital's Holy Family Ukrainian Catholic Church. They represented the nation's clergy in the procession.

Religious News Service Photo

PRESIDING BISHOP INVITED BY ROBERT F. KENNEDY TO PARTICIPATE IN FUNERAL SERVICES FOR THE LATE JOHN F. KENNEDY:

The invitation was sent by telegram and received by the Presiding Bishop on Saturday, November 23, at his home in Greenwich, Conn. The full text of the telegram follows:

"You are invited to participate in the funeral services for President John F. Kennedy on November 25 at St. Matthew's Cathedral. When you reach Washington, call the Chief of Protocol, State Department." The telegram was signed Robert F. Kennedy.

Bishop Lichtenberger asked the Bishop of Washington the Rt. Rev. William F. Creighton to represent him at the President's funeral. Bishop Creighton marched with a Roman Catholic priest in front of the caisson bearing the President's body in the funeral procession from the Capitol to St. Matthew's (Roman Catholic) Cathedral.

BELLS THAT TOLL, RATHER THAN RING

FROM THE DEAN'S DESK

The bells of Christ Church Cathedral are being rung differently because our life in this community is different these days. Differences among persons in a large community like St. Louis are always great, but lately a new and more serious division has come among us. The Negro and white communities are tragically divided and all of us share to some degree the responsibility for this unhappy division.

One of the tasks of the Church in a community is to speak realistically of the life about us and to point hopefully to the possibility of a better community. The Cathedral bells will be used in this way. They have been rung at the hours of worship on Sundays and at noon each weekday—calling men to worship on Sundays; proclaiming God's reign in the daily lives of His people on weekdays. They will continue to be used for these same reasons, but they will now toll rather than ring. This has been our custom at the time of a death.

Recall the words of John Donne (1573-1631), a priest of the Church in England: "No man is an Iland, intire of it selfe; every man is a peece of the Continent, part of the maine: if a Clod bee washed away by the sea, Europe is the lesse, as well as if a Promontorie were, as well as if a Mannor of thy friends or of thine owne were; any mans death diminishes me, because I am involved in Mankinde; And therefore never send to know for whom the bells tolls; It tolls for thee."

At the times the Cathedral bells are used, they will toll eleven times: The number of the first broken fellowship of the Christian Community at the beginning of the Apostolic Age. When our community is again redeemed from its brokenness, we shall end the tolling of these bells and begin ringing them again. I pray God those days may come soon.

From THE NEWS, CHRIST CHURCH CATHEDRAL,
November 1963, St. Louis, Missouri

ADVENT 1963

Later this month, the bells will ring out twice for joy: once for the coming of Christ into the world of men, and again for the coming of a new year in the world he came to save.

But before the bells can peal, they must toll. All during Advent, 1963, they must toll.

-- for the failure of men to open their hearts and wills to Christ and to each other, "now in the time of this mortal life."

-- for the needless deaths of righteous men like John F. Kennedy, Medgar Evers, and five little girls in Birmingham whose names almost nobody remembers.

-- for the uncounted acts of prejudice, hatred and oppression which all men have committed or consented to out of apathy, indifference or malice.

-- for the grief of a world and a nation that stands convicted of black, mortal sin.

Advent traditionally is a time for sober reflection and repentance as we Christians await the two "comings" of Christ -- in the great humility of his Incarnation, and again in glorious majesty as ultimate Judge. Well may the bells toll during Advent, any year! But this year is a time of especially harsh and terrible self-revelation as well. Never before have our "works of darkness" been more plainly disclosed. The stunning, successive double-murder of John Kennedy and Lee Oswald has bared in our souls nerves of conscience long disused, and brought them to screaming life. What the agony of black men, lynched and abused for centuries, has failed to arouse, the death of two whites -- the president and his assassin -- has brought to the surface at last. We have seen a man's life wrenched out of his body by sheer, craven whim -- right in our own living rooms. And we know that in this usurping of life, this rebellion against the Life-giver, we all have a share. We know our own guilt, and we know none is spared. In Advent, 1963, we hear the Apostle afresh and aright when he says that NOW it is high time to awake ... that "the night is far spent, the day is at hand."

This year, the comfortable, somewhat precious observances of Advent simply will not suffice. It is not enough to make and light an Advent wreath -- hoping piously that three purple and one rose candles will dispel the murk of intolerance, suspicion and hate that clouds our lives. No number of violet hangings and vestments can assuage or even stand for the depth and breadth of the sorrow we bear. Shortly we shall deck our churches with boughs and wreaths to welcome Christ; but how can he come in when -- in so many places -- his own flesh and blood is barred at the door?

"There is nothing covered that shall not be revealed; neither hid that shall not be known."

This is the Advent message that must din on our ears. There is urgency to it and, frankly, ground for holy fear. Christ is coming. He is coming as Savior; and he is also coming as Judge. "Now is our salvation nearer than when we (first) believed." And it is fatuous, in our time, to believe that salvation -- coming now -- can possibly happen apart from judgment. Advent is that time when we must face up to this fact. He who cometh dispenses both as inevitably as the blaze of noon follows the blush of dawn. The Light of the world is coming, and "whatsoever ye have spoken in darkness shall be heard in the light."

Therefore, Saint Paul says, "owe no man anything, but to love one another."

Let the sober reflections of this Advent be turned to the ways we do and do not love one another. Can a Negro, or the member of another minority group, hear and receive God's Word in your parish? Can he buy a home in your neighborhood? Can he get a job in your community on equal footing with whites? Can he attend the same calibre schools? Can he be greeted and treated without embarrassment (not to mention hostility) in public gatherings, or in your home?

The President of the United States lies dead in Arlington Cemetery. His assassin lies in an unmarked grave. Public human rights activity is virtually suspended while the nation mourns its sin. But the works of darkness are, indeed, upon us. And so the bells toll.

Let every stroke of the tolling bells remind each Christian of what is at stake, that the Lord is at hand. Let us pray daily:

"Almighty God, give us grace that we may cast away the works of darkness, and put upon us the armour of light, now in the time of this mortal life, in which thy Son Jesus Christ came to visit us in great humility; that in the last day, when he shall come again in his glorious majesty to judge both the quick and the dead, we may rise to the life immortal, through him who liveth and reigneth with thee and the Holy Ghost, now and ever. Amen."

PRESIDENT LYNDON B. JOHNSON ASKS AMERICANS TO END 'HATE, EVIL, VIOLENCE'

Addressing the nation on November 27, President Lyndon B. Johnson in a 1,500 word address prepared for a joint session of the Senate and House, appealed for "an end to the teaching and preaching of hate and evil and violence." The new President calling for early Congressional action to set up new civil rights safeguards said, "No memorial oration or eulogy could more eloquently honor President Kennedy's memory than the earliest passage of the civil rights bill for which he fought."

President Johnson, the first Southern President since Andrew Johnson succeeded the slained Abraham Lincoln, left no doubt about his commitment to the cause of equal rights for all Americans. "We have talked long enough in this country about equal rights. We have talked 100 years or more. Yes, it is time now to write the next chapter - and to write in books of law." The President called upon the Congress to enact a civil rights bill that will help "eliminate from this nation every trace of discrimination and oppression based upon race or color."

On December 4th, President Johnson "urged Administration leaders in Congress to give maximum support to efforts to pry the civil rights bill out of the House Rules Committee."

The President needs your support if adequate civil rights legislation to protect the rights of all American citizens is to be passed. Have you written your Congressman? Your letters are needed now more than ever.

ESCRU ANNUAL MEETING HELD ~IN CAPITAL~

The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity and the National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice held joint meetings at the International Inn in Washington, D. C., November 14th to 16th.

Among the speakers heard at the annual conference were Burke Marshall, assistant United States Attorney General; William Stringfellow, a New York City attorney; Louis Lomax, the Negro author; the Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker, executive director of the Southern Leadership Conference, and the Rev. Arthur E. Walmsley, executive secretary, Division of Christian Citizenship, National Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Father Walmsley and attorney Stringfellow warned churchmen that further delay in granting Negro citizens their full rights may lead to dire consequences. Attorney Stringfellow predicted that the civil rights movement will turn from "revolution to insurrection" and from "peaceful protest to holocaust" unless Negro Americans see "immediate, tangible, and substantive" results from nonviolent tactics. Mr. Stringfellow pointed out that peaceful demonstrations by Negroes have been going on for nearly five years.

Father Walmsley chastising churchmen for their inaction said, "Through silence, we have collaborated with racist elements in society who would perpetuate second-class citizenship for Negro citizens."

ESCRU members decided to recommend to their general board that plans be made for a demonstration at the 1964 General Convention in St. Louis. ESCRU demonstrators are to carry signs naming church-related institutions which still maintain policies of racial segregation. Plans are for the demonstrators to march in procession at the Convention, but if permission for this action is denied, the demonstrators are to march outside the convention hall.

Continuation of picketing at the Lovett School in Atlanta was recommended by the members, "so long as the Lovett School remains a segregated school." In other resolutions, the ESCRU members:

Commended the Presiding Bishop for his stand against segregation as set forth in his Whitsunday pastoral letter, and recommended that the society take such action as will "strengthen the hand" of the Presiding Bishop and the Department of Christian Social Relations in this area.

Complained to the American Automobile Association that some of the facilities recommended by the AAA practice segregation.

Recognized the House of Bishops' action on the pending civil rights bill (L. C., August 25th), and recommended passage of the bill.

Encouraged direct action in protest against discrimination practiced at any Church school.

Called upon dioceses to disassociate themselves from Church-related institutions that segregate.

Called for termination of contracts and agreements with firms doing business with the Church which fail to demonstrate that they practice no discrimination in their employment practices.

Condemned anti-semitism in American business.

Asked the President of the U.S. to issue an executive order forbidding the practice of discrimination by "certain banks and institutions relative to the approval of mortgages for private housing."

Asked the Church Pension Fund, as well as dioceses and Church institutions that derive income from investments in large corporations, to inquire as to the employment policies of the corporations in which they invest.

From: DIOCESE OF CHICAGO CSR NEWSLETTER, November, 1963
The Rev. Paul S. Kyger, Jr., Editor

THE EXECUTIVE SECRETARY WRITES:

The current racial crises continue to occupy a large amount of my time. I am still continuing to attend the meetings of the Coordinating Council of Community Organizations as a delegate from ESCRU. This keeps me close to the progress of the current civil rights struggle in the Chicago area.

I should like to be able to hold out to you some hope for a more peaceful racial scene. However, I regret that this is not the way things look at this time. Chances are now excellent for a series of prolonged demonstrations to take place as events are now developing. More and more, you will be hearing from your parishioners that while they are in favor of the principles that the Negroes are fighting for, they are opposed to the means.

Other persons sincerely feel that the Negro's urgent stand, today, is forcing some people to take an anti-Negro position. I think the truth of this statement depends, in large measure, upon the confrontation that people receive with the facts that are involved in these areas. Although we are dealing with emotions, we are also dealing with areas where some facts are obvious.

Recently, I had the privilege of speaking to over 150 persons in a number of area churches around Ottawa, Illinois. I took part in a panel discussion on the racial issue titled, "The Church and Race." The key to how the non-Negro is going to feel today, rests largely in the hands of the parish clergy and the lay leadership of our congregations. If efforts aren't made to develop a dialogue between the two races, to lay the cards on the table, and above all, to challenge segregationist views, then this task cannot successfully be accomplished.

I have every confidence that our clerical and lay leadership in this diocese will rise to the occasion, and will see that all of our people have an opportunity to know the facts, and to take part in a continuing dialogue.

CLERGY AND LAYMEN DEMONSTRATORS IN WILLIAMSTON AND CHESTER GIVEN SUPPORT OF EPISCOPAL AND ROMAN CATHOLIC GROUPS MEETING IN WASHINGTON

November 15 - Mathew Ahmann, executive director of the National Catholic Conference on Interracial Justice, speaking at a joint banquet sponsored by ESCRU and the National Catholic Conference on Interracial Justice, meeting in Washington said that: "In Williamston, North Carolina, 15 white Christians, clergy and seminarians, affirming their belief that all men are members of the same human family, were arrested on November 14th with fifty-four Negroes while marching into the downtown area in a demonstration for interracial justice and unity in that community. These were the first white persons to join the Negro demonstrators there since they began their protests over four months ago. During this time more than 230 demonstrators have been arrested. The marchers are being held under $500 bail in Williamston, N. C."

Commenting on the situation in Chester, Pennsylvania, Mr. Ahmann said, "In Chester our brothers have been publicly demonstrating their concern for reasonable improvement of overcrowded, unsanitary, and unsafe school conditions in depressed areas of that city. Two hundred and forty-one men, women, and children have been arrested. Their bail has been set at $200 a piece and fines may range as high as $300. Mr. Ahmann went on to say that clergy and lay leaders in Chester had to that date neither shared in nor supported this witness for justice, nor had they contributed to an alleviation of the suffering.

The members of ESCRU and the NCCIJ adopted the following resolution:

> Therefore, be it resolved that we, the NCCIJ and ESCRU urge the Roman Catholic and Episcopal clergy and laity to stand and support their brethren. We offer our prayers and alms and other resources for the relief of those who have suffered or have been imprisoned.

It is reported that "the demonstrations and mass arrests in Chester, Pa., have led local authorities to agree to relieve the overcrowding, eliminate unsanitary and unsafe conditions in the schools."

As we go to press, all of the demonstrators in Williamston have been released on bond and the trials have been postponed. Following their release from the jail, the group remained in Williamston in an attempt to get the white community to negotiate with the responsible leaders of the Negro community. These persons have since returned to their homes in several states.

> The Rev. John LaFarge, S. J., who inspired the Catholic Interracial Council, and was widely known for his many contributions to the struggle for social justice, died on November 24th. Father LaFarge was one of the first voices to speak out against segregation, calling on the Church to take an active part. When the current revolution in civil rights occurred, Father LaFarge, said, "It is not a question for Negro citizens alone (to demonstrate). It's a question of justice for American citizens, and I think as American citizens, whether they are white or Negro it makes little difference... Where wrong is committed, the white man suffers morally just as much as the Negro, and the interest is equality for all."

....AND THE STRUGGLE FOR RACIAL JUSTICE IN OUR LAND CONTINUES

IN MEMORIAM: A DEMONSTRATION FOR CIVIL RIGHTS

ST. LOUIS -- Protestant, Roman Catholic and Jewish agencies joined in St. Louis in a demonstration for civil rights which was dedicated as a memorial to the late President Kennedy. Quiet, prayerful, the demonstration saw 35,000 people take part in a walk through the city's main streets.

Religious News Service Photo

DIOCESE OF MICHIGAN EXECUTIVE COUNCIL EXPRESSES GRATITUDE TO BISHOP LICHTENBERGER FOR LEADERSHIP IN RACE RELATIONS

I. WHEREAS, the Right Reverend Arthur Lichtenberger, Presiding Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, has manifested forthright and decisive leadership in the current civil rights struggle as Chairman of the Commission on Religion and Race of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U. S. A., and,

WHEREAS, he in his 1963 Whitsuntide Message clearly delineated the active role that Christians must assume in resolving the current civil rights struggle in a manner befitting those who profess a belief in the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man,

BE IT RESOLVED, that we, the Executive Council of the Diocese of Michigan, make known our gratitude to Bishop Lichtenberger, and pledge our continued support to his call to action.

II. WHEREAS, the Right Reverend Richard S. Emrich, Bishop of the Diocese of Michigan has demonstrated courageous and long-standing leadership in the civil rights struggle in our own community.

BE IT RESOLVED, that we, the Executive Council of the Diocese of Michigan, hereby acknowledge our gratitude to Bishop Emrich, and pledge our support to him in his witness to the all-inclusive nature of the fellowship of Christians in this diocese, and,

WE RECOMMEND, that such support be made known by (1) involving ourselves actively in our own communities in such matters as housing, public accommodations, and schools; (2) assisting financially the Race Relations program of the National Council of the Episcopal Church; and (3) taking action to end discrimination in our own parishes and within the body of the Church itself.

THIS LETTER WAS SENT TO ALL CLERGY AND EPISCOPAL CHURCHWOMEN OF THE DIOCESE OF MICHIGAN THE WEEK FOLLOWING THE DEATH OF PRESIDENT KENNEDY. HAVE YOU WRITTEN YOUR SENATORS AND REPRESENTATIVES ?

THE DIOCESE OF MICHIGAN
4800 WOODWARD AVENUE
DETROIT 1, MICHIGAN

THE REV. WILLIAM S. LOGAN
EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF PROGRAM

TELEPHONE
TEMPLE 2-4400

"We will truly honor John F. Kennedy and know the meaning of our sorrow, if we see and accept our social responsibilities in the struggle for justice and peace. As a memorial, let us work for a Civil Rights Bill that is just and good."

-Richard S. Emrich

TO ALL CLERGY AND ECW CHAIRMEN:

The above quotation comes from Bishop Emrich's sermon at St. Paul's Cathedral yesterday, November 24. This is Bishop Emrich's way of saying that the most fitting memorial to any great man is to redouble our efforts in the service of the causes to which he advanced.

The death of our President should not make us feel the cause of Civil Rights Legislation is dead. And yet it might be if the Christian citizens of Michigan do not write their legislators in the Nation's Capitol. Many of us have been depending upon President Kennedy personally to drag the cause of Civil Rights through the legislative process. Now, in a new way, it is up to us.

The Church must act in the spirit of Bishop Lichtenberger's Whitsunday message, Bishop Emrich's statement at the Anglican Congress, and the recent resolution of our Executive Council commending the cause of racial justice to all Episcopalians.

This is an assignment to act. This is a day of testing for our churches. The Rev. Dr. David W. Barr, in an address to the convention of the Diocese of New York said this: "The real test of our ability to survive and function effectively.. lie not in our capacity to analyze and predict, but in our capacity to act."

The action we suggest is quite simple. "WRITE FOR RIGHTS." There is no greater single influence upon Congress than letters from their constituents. Enclosed is a fact sheet, basic ingredients of a successful letter to a Congressman or a Senator. Also enclosed is a list of the Senators and Representatives from the Diocese of Michigan and some members of the House Committees involved.

Will you make use of this material in such a way that not only is your personal response registered with your Congressman, but that also your parishioners and neighbors have an opportunity to participate. An extra copy of the fact sheet is enclosed so that you may share this project with someone else.

Sincerely,

William S. Logan — Frederick B. Jansen — Becky Dolan

William S. Logan
Exec. Dir. of Program

Frederick B. Jansen
Assoc. Dir. for CSR

Mrs. W. Dolan
CSR Chairman, ECW

CREDO ON THE ISSUE OF SEGREGATION IN EVANSTON

(Adopted at a meeting of the Vestry of St. Matthew's Episcopal Church, Evanston, Illinois, on October 6, 1963.)

We, the clergy and lay representatives of St. Matthew's Episcopal Church, Lincoln and Hartrey Streets, Evanston, freely and gladly make this statement of belief and pledge ourselves — wholeheartedly and without reservation — to reaffirm and adopt this credo in our daily lives and to urge its adoption throughout our parish and the community. As Christians, we cannot remain silent about, nor view from the sidelines, the crisis of this day and hour — the struggle of the Negro to escape the bondage of segregation throughout our nation. Because we live and worship here, our primary concern is for Evanston and neighboring communities.

We hold sacred the teachings of Jesus Christ that all men are equal in the sight of God and that we should honor and respect one another. We affirm the precepts from which the Constitution of our country was drawn including the rights of every citizen to full equality under the law. We further affirm that with such rights there must be a recognition of the responsibilities of the privileges of citizenship and of good conduct.

We desire for Evanston an enlightened and responsible citizenry to whom prejudice and bigotry are repugnant.

Marshall E. Seifert, Rector
M. Raymond Harrison, Curate
J. William Didriksen, Senior Warden
David H. Hilton, Junior Warden
Richard C. Valentine, Clerk

Ralph G. Orcutt
Richard Procter
Robert L. Smith
Millen S. Whittington
John Wyandt

Donald A. Anderson
William H. Gilmore
Redmond P. Hogan
Robert Loomis
Bruce C. Ogilvie

As Episcopalians, we invite all persons, regardless of race, color or creed, to worship with us at St. Matthew's Church at any of our services, to participate with us in all Parish sponsored activities, and to work with us for the greater glory of God and the salvation of mankind.

While acknowledging the legal rights of every citizen to individual freedom in the conduct of his business, social and religious affairs, so long as he shall not infringe on the rights of others, we call to account and condemn as un-Christian those who would rely on what is law and ignore compassion and charity in their human relationships.

And, finally, we recognize how indispensable to the achievement of these goals is the education of our children and adults and shall undertake to provide under the sponsorship of St. Matthew's Parish a place and forum for free and open discussion of the issues and conditions underlying this present crisis so that those who will may learn.

To these ends, we ask the blessing and divine guidance of Almighty God.

From THE EVANSTON REVIEW, October 17, 1963

MARYLAND BISHOP SUPPORTS HUMAN RIGHTS

Statement delivered by the Rt. Rev. Henry Lee Doll, Bishop of the Diocese of Maryland, as he appeared before the Baltimore City Council's Judiciary Committee on November 6th in support of the Mayor's civil rights program in that city.

Mr. Schaefer, and members of the Committee: My name is Harry Lee Doll, I am Bishop of the Diocese of Maryland.

My purpose in coming before you this evening can be stated very simply: I am a man under orders. I have been given two clear commands by God: that I shall love God and that I shall love my neighbors.

Presented this simply, however, our obedient purpose as a Church sounds like vague idealism to which any man could give general assent. We have been accused too often, and with some justice, of high-sounding principles unrelated to specific practices. So I am here to bear witness of our specific concern for the immorality of certain practices in group relationships in our city. For be it clearly understood that when we speak of love we apeak also of matters of justice under law.

The fact is that a large part of the population of our city has been forced for a very long time to live in conditions whihc, at best, make it almost impossible for them to develop their full potentials as human beings and children of God. These conditions are the result of many different causes. The complex interrelationship of these causes is such that these limiting conditions cannot be changed by any one approach alone. The effort to remove these limitations which tend to distort and destroy human potentials must be as broad as the many factors that have created the situation. For this reason the legislation you have before you covers a number of different approaches to the problem.

A MAN'S SELF IMAGE. Nothing so limits a man as his own image of himself. Put him in an environment that unconsciously creates in him the feeling that he is of little worth, and he will act out that self-image. Exclusion from places of public business does that to a man. Limitation of employment opportunity does it. Discrimination in public services and housing does it. Trapped in his black skin and unable to escape, the helpless victim of prejudice will live the part of an outsider, and the rest of a society which forces him into that role will have to pay the cost of his inability to think of himself as a responsible citizen in a land of opportunity where the rewards of effort are justly distributed to all men.

SYMPATHY NOT ENOUGH. It is not enough to sympathize with the plight of the Negro and then counsel him to wait until racial prejudice disappears from the minds and hearts of the citizens of Maryland. The laws of our City, State and Nation are devised specifically to make it possible for sinful men to live together in equality and peace. If we were all saints we could get along with a minimum of law. But we are not. We have laws about crime because we know there are, and will be criminals. We did not delay the passage of criminal laws until there were no more criminals. Neither can we delay laws about prejudice until there are no more prejudiced men. It is your solemn obligation as legislators to make the law an effective instrument for justice.

Your task is not an easy one. In addition to the prejudiced people you will hear much from those who claim to want justice so long as their special interest is not involved.

PROPERTY RIGHTS VS HUMAN RIGHTS. In talk about the rights of property it will be easy to lose sight of the more sacred rights of human personality. Where conflict of interests is involved nothing can be done without someone feeling that he is being hurt. I ask you to remember, however, that the minority group in our city has suffered for a great many years. If justice in this issue involves pain for some of us it is time that the white man felt a little of it.

A MORAL ISSUE REQUIRING AFFIRMATIVE ACTION. I do not wish to comment on particular sections of the bill. It is the general intent of the bill which concerns me. As you undertake the heavy burden of judging this legislation you will have my prayers that you will not lose sight of that purpose of social justice which makes such legislation necessary. The final product of your efforts will definte your stature, not only as legislators, but also as men who date to face a moral issue and do the right thing in the firm determination that this land shall become what our forefathers intended it to be-one nation under God, indivisable with liberty and justice for all.

From: LETTER TO NORTH CAROLINA EPISCOPAL CHURCHWOMEN
IN RE CIVIL RIGHTS LEGISLATION

However you may feel about supporting the civil rights legislation, or taking some positive action to promote desegregation in your community, I believe that we as Christian women have a particular calling to find means of creating a climate of opinion in our communities which will make it possible for this social revolution to take place in an atmosphere of creative change rather than destructive violence. (This is, in fact, now a social revolution, so far non-violent, but a revolution nevertheless in somewhat the same intensity of the French, Russian, English, etc., and it is not, as some choose to think, going to go away if we just "close our eyes and don't peep".) It seems to me that women in their "peculiar" role in society must dedicate themselves especially to holding on to the natural warmth and personal affection which has existed between many persons, across racial lines, that we may become instruments for the healing of society when relationships between people - even people of goodwill - are so tired by misunderstandings and our natural reluctance to change old patterns.

A climate of opinion in any community is often the result of the casual comments over the bridge table, the tea cup, or the back fence. In this let us engage prayerfully and from a reservoir of careful thought and informed minds. I wish to commend to you, also, the formation of goodwill groups which make a concerted and special effort to bring about justice and peace.

Signed: Betsey F. Price, Secretary
Christian Social Relations
Episcopal Churchwomen
Diocese of North Carolina

THE RT. REV. GIRAULT M. JONES, D.D., BISHOP OF THE DIOCESE OF LOUISIANA ADDRESSES CHURCHMEN

Bishop Jones in replying to some of the letters he has received that have been critical of the National Council of Churches goes on to discuss the Episcopal National Council, race relations and the Church's teaching on this subject.

The following are excerpts from a letter by Bishop Jones which appeared in the October issue of CHURCHWORK, the diocesan newspaper.

Our National Council

More recently, some of this discontent has been transferred from the NCCCA to the National Council of the Episcopal Church. (I find an amazing number of people who think they are one and the same). Again, the criticisms stem from pronouncements made on vital issues of the day. Some people object on the ground that the Church is mixing in politics. Others feel that the Church must not "take sides" on any subject on which her members may be divided.

While these grievances are admittedly complicated, it is quite apparent that the race issue lies at the heart of most of them. My desk is filled with letters protesting the resolutions of Lambeth, of General Convention, of the House of Bishops, and of our National Council. They blast our Presiding Bishop, the March on Washington, and Churchmen who participate in demonstrations. It is quite evident that in most of these the root issue is race. The reaction is: "By what authority do these people speak for me?" So the tides of discontent begin to swell.

Let me repeat what I have said elsewhere: I myself do not always agree with all such pronouncements, and I have said so to the proper parties. Nor do I believe the pressure tactics of mass demonstrations is Christ's way of winning men. I have said this, too, to those groups responsible.

But however much I may disagree with some methods, I must hold fast to what I believe my Lord Christ wills for all His children. As an Episcopalian, I must declare that my Church has spoken what it understands the will of Christ to be. As a follower of Christ and a member of His Church, I must profess my loyal allegiance to my Church's stand.

What has my Church said on this matter? It has said from the very beginning that God is "no respecter of persons." Nowhere in the Prayer Book or in Canon Law is any distinction drawn between races. There is not now, nor has there ever been, any grounds for barring people from our altars because of race. If an American Indian or a native of Tokyo or a brown man from Pakistan were to come to our parish, he would be welcomed as a fellow Christian. There is nothing in our rules which says that a Negro may not receive the same welcome.

In times past, most of our older Churches had Negro members. It is true that they usually sat in a special place; but this was chiefly because they were servants, not because they were Negroes. There was once a "servant class" in England which was white but where certain social distinctions were expected. Even in the days of slavery, "free men of color" escaped this stigma. But in the bitterness of the Reconstruction years, all Negroes were classed together in the South and the "servant image" was established. The South's great problem today stems from this identifying Negroes with "the servant class." It is not easy to eradicate a pride and superiority nurtured for centuries. But as a Christian, I hear St. Paul saying to Philemon, "Receive Onesimus (his runaway slave) not now as a servant, but more than a servant, a brother beloved in the Lord"—and I tremble to think how we have failed to do just this in the household of the Church!

The point I am making is very simple: God has spoken through Christ; Christ has spoken through His Church, both in Scripture and in history. You and I may be reluctant to listen. But let us get one thing straight: If we are Christian Churchmen, we are already committed! Our Church, through our own chosen representatives, has spoken for us.

What, Then, Can We Do?

First, you and I can make it our business to understand the nature of this Divine Body to which we belong. It is not an association of people sharing common opinions. It is God-made. It is the Body of Christ, of which He is the Head, all baptised persons are the members, and the Holy Spirit is the life. By our baptism we were born into this Body; all other baptised persons share this membership with us. It is only through my membership in this Mystical Body that I am (or can be) a Christian, for it is here only that His grace is available to me.

This Divine Body is set in history and its members are on both sides of the grave. In the Church Militant here on earth, this Visible Church must have form and structure in order to live. Our Branch of this Holy Catholic Church makes use of all three forms of Church government suggested or implied by the New Testament:

(a) We are episcopal in that we recognize the Bishop as the head of the household, see in him the symbol of our unity, and lean on him as a shepherd of apostolic rank.

(b) We are presbyterial in that clergy sit in our Church Councils by virtue of their ordination, and their voice and vote is required in every official action of the Church.

(c) We are congregational in that the local parish is the cornerstone of our representative form of government. Congregations elect delegates to Diocesan Convention. Diocesan Conventions elect deputies (both clerical and lay) to the General Convention. Bishops are not appointed but elected by the people of their Dioceses and have to be approved by the rest of the Church. By this democratic process, General Convention is made up of representatives of the people and it does have the delegated authority to speak for this Church. It is an authority which rests ultimately on the local congregations. It is on behalf of all members that General Convention speaks.

Secondly, if we understand this structure, we ought to ask the question, "Organized for what? What is this well-constructed Body supposed to do?" I have a strong feeling that many people have never answered this question. They belong to the Church without really knowing why,—or for reasons which fall short of a total answer. I would say that the Church must concern itself in these three ways, and what is most important, in this order of priority:

(a) To maintain the integrity of that Body instituted of Christ. The Church which Our Lord founded is still the same Church, and the maintenance of this unbroken continuity is supremely important. It was to this Holy Fellowship that Christ's promises were made; it is in this same company that His promises will be fulfilled. I cannot conceive of being a Christian except as a participating member of this Body. It is therefore supremely important to me that the WHOLENESS of this Body be not broken. To reject the Church may well be a rejection of the Holy Spirit, and this I am not prepared to risk. If the gifts of the Spirit are available to me through this Body, then I count nothing more important than the ONENESS of all baptized persons in Christ.

(b) If this Church is WHOLE and is Spirit-filled, then its second concern must be the unbroken continuity of its Mission. I cannot conceive of the Holy Spirit as idle or inactive. The Old Testament word for Spirit means wind, a hurricane, if you please. Our Lord speaks of the Holy Ghost as "The Strengthener." Where He is, there is power, power in action. And if His Spirit fills the Church, the Church must of necessity be actively at work. The moment the Church's mission stops, at that moment the Spirit leaves the Body, and the Church is no longer His Body.

There have always been persons who have ceased supporting the Church's Mission for one reason or another. But the Church's mission went on. It will be the same if congregations withhold their support. Budgets will have to be cut and certain people will suffer the consequences; but the Mission will go on because the Church is mission. In such situations, the real harm will come, not to the Church or to Her work, but to those people who use stewardship as a weapon. It is as though they were saying, "Let's show the Holy Spirit who is boss." This comes awfully close to blasphemy!

(c) Since the Church is made up of sinners, it is obviously far from perfect. And the third major concern must therefore be to correct its errors, to reform its life, to grow in holiness. By the grace of God, the Church has the power to do this; and this has been the record over the centuries. How often has the Church sinned grievously and fallen short of the mark! But every generation has looked on Christ, has repented certain errors, and has amended its life. These internal reforms shift from one weakness to another as the years pass. Human nature being what it is, we do well to take one thing at a time! But the point to remember is that these reforms take place in the Church as the Church moves along. It is only when we retain our ONENESS and maintain our MISSION that any reform is possible. Let me use an illustration:

Think of the Church as a ship sailing unchartered seas, driven by the wind and tossed. Something goes wrong. The officers give commands which displease the crew. The helmsman sets a course in a contrary direction. Some mechanical trouble develops. What to do? There are these alternatives: (1) Abandon ship, or (2) Correct the trouble while the ship continues its journey.

There are a lot of people today who cry, "Abandon ship! Let's get off and let it sink." But to me it is not so simple as that. I think it is a good ship and its troubles can be corrected. I see nothing to be gained by going overboard. Personally, I want to stay aboard because I trust the Pilot. In the words of St. Peter, "To whom else can we go?"

This is a long letter, but I had to share these thoughts with you. May I ask you to remember these three things:

(1) It is God's Church, not ours. Let us have enough faith to believe that because the Holy Spirit indwells it, the Church can prevail.

(2) We cannot "keep the Church for ourselves" and shut off Her mission. If we deny the Church her reason for being, nothing remains.

(3) There is no healing a dead body. If we want the Church to correct her mistakes and to grow in holiness, then this growth can only come in a Body which is alive and active.

Only as baptised Christians stand together can the Church redeem the world. Remember the Prayer Book says that we must "continue in that Holy Fellowship" before we can "do all such good works as God has prepared for us to walk in." First unity, then mission, and then reform, in that order!

With all my heart I ask you to man the pumps and set sail, not to abandon ship!

Faithfully,

Lionel Jones

PRESIDING BISHOP'S
CHRISTMAS MESSAGE
~~~~1963~~~~

It is a warm and somewhat humid day in the middle of September. My telephone rings. It is the man who must see that I have a Christmas message written and ready so that it will be distributed in time. He apologizes for such an early asking; I tell him I understand. So I begin.

But my first thoughts about the Good News of Christmas are all mixed up with the day's news: the bombing of a church and the murder of several Negro children; the opening of the General Assembly of the United Nations; the mustering of the necessary majority of affirmative votes in the Senate to ratify the Nuclear Test Ban Treaty. What will the headlines be in December, and what does this sort of news have to do with the News we sing about at Christmas?

First this. The joy of Christmas and the assurance and strength it brings does not arise out of the circumstances of our lives or the events of our time. It is rooted in this mighty fact: "And the Word became flesh and lived among us." The joy of Christmas is found in God's love poured out for us in Jesus Christ.

But we who celebrate this coming with great joy are in the present world, here, now. We cannot keep the fact of Christmas and the events of our lives in separate compartments; they are all of one piece. For God came into the life of the world in Jesus Christ, that He might take us into His own life. When we worship Christ, the new-born King, we are not taking refuge from the troubles and sorrows of the world, rather we bring ourselves and the world as we know it to God in Christ.

To celebrate Christmas then, is to greet Jesus Christ in our worship and in our work as the Lord of life.

Second-class postage paid at Lebanon, Pa.

RESEARCH DEPT
% M G ALBRIGHT
SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCL
5 FORSYTH ST N W
ATLANTA GA
~~~~

Rel - 1963
Sow

III. THE CHURCH'S VOICE AND VIEWS TODAY

What the church is saying in 1962-1963 about racism indicates a great change in attitude, a coming to grips with the racial problem. The growing spirit of brotherhood in all religious bodies, though uneven and even fragile, leads to a hope that the full weight of religious cooperation and influence may yet prove to be a decisive factor in changing the hearts and minds of people and accomplishing goals of interracial cooperation.

Alabama: Law-and-Order, and Brotherhood.

Although the 1962-1963 statements by Alabama ministerial groups seem to echo the 1958 refrain of "law and order," they do include slightly stronger pronouncements on freedom of speech, the responsibility of elected public officials, and the fatherhood of God. In Alabama the official state attitude is defiance of federal desegregation decrees. There has been little evidence of widespread public opposition to state policy. There is more and stronger organized opposition to change in Alabama than in any other state except Mississippi

On October 9, 1962, the Huntsville Ministers' Association adopted a statement stating that "every human being is created in the image of God and is entitled to respect as a fellow human being with all basic rights, privileges and responsibilities; warning that "defiance is neither the answer nor the solution, nor are inflammatory and rebellious statements of the type...that will save us from violence, discord, and confusion; and urging all citizens to "abide in the meantime with a peaceful acceptance of the decisions of the same courts with regard to desegregation cases which we know inevitably will be made in Alabama." A similar statement was adopted on November 1, 1962, by 30 members of the Montgomery Baptist Pastors' Conference. They called on state officials to "maintain order" and urged Alabama leaders to "refrain from inflammatory statements and activities...designed to incite riots and mob action..."

Two month later, on January 17, 1963, eleven Alabama religious leaders jointly offered for public and, obviously, gubernatorial consideration, an opinion on the race situation. It clearly proclaimed opposition to earlier denunciatory statements in Alabama about courts, federal orders, and the defiant inaugural address by Governor George Wallace pledging that he would maintain segregation.

The conservative Birmingham News commented favorably on the statement in an editorial on January 20, 1963:

> Whether the individual citizen agrees with the clerics' state ment or not, it is the News' opinion that they say rightly that freedom of speech must be "preserved and exercised."
>
> There is a vast near-silence as to opinion not that reflected in the inaugural address.
>
> Is there no such opinion--other than that of a handfull?
>
> The ministers have added to the above the phrase, "...without fear of recrimination or harassment." Clergymen place a condition which should not be expected.
>
> There is ample freedom to speak. But he who speaks must anticipate, if he is saying the unpopular, recrimination, even harassment, That is the root cause of near-silence--few dare risk expressing a contrary point of view.
>
> Men of the cloth have spoken. Will anyone else? Silence indicates even to our own people that so vast is support for projected official policy that opposition is not to be expected.
>
> Some may plan to speak out--later. But as to this there is only uncertainty as deep as silence itself.

During the week-end of May 18-19, 1963, the Woman's Society of Christian Service and the Wesleyan Service Guild of the North Alabama Conference of the Methodist Church, representing some 24,000 churchwomen in North Alabama, issued a plea to keep Alabama schools open in the face of possible desegregation. They called for observance of law and order and urged the churchwomen to strive to create a climate of understanding and good will in the communities in which they live.

Bishop Nolan B. Harmon, the presiding bishop of the North Alabama Methodist Conference, on June 12, 1963, called attempts by Governor George Wallace to block entry of two Negro students at the University of Alabama "a moral mistake and in the long run a political blunder." Ministerial and lay delegates to the annual conference gave Bishop Harmon a standing ovation after he read a statement he said he felt "compelled to make." The biship added that it is not the business of the church to direct the state, "but it is the business of the church to speak when state forces are so directed as to injure the God-given rights of any man." Governor Wallace is a Methodist layman.

Some statements were issued by the clergy which reflect the segregationist point of view. ~~An analysis of these, and of segregationist action in the church, will be found in Section VI, THE BLACK MUSLIMS AND THE RELIGIOUS RIGHT WING.~~ Some examples of such statements follow:

May 13, 1963. The Birmingham Baptist Association's Executive Committee and the Birmingham Baptist Pastor's Conference called for "self-examination and prayer" by Birmingham area residents toward resolving the crisis facing the city. They "deplored illegal demonstrations and the use of children in them"; abhorred "acts of violence, bombings, and acts coolly calculated to provoke violence"; requested non-residents of Birmingham to leave to local men of good will the working out of differences"; and commended "the law enforcement officers of city, county and state, for their forebearance and self-control in carrying out their official duties."

June 2, 1963. Episcopal Bishop (George Miseley) Murray, Coajutor of Alabama, stated to The Living Church that the cause of the Birmingham demonstrations was a power struggle for leadership among the city's Negro community. He added that the "police and sheriff's forces have been exemplary in their conduct during these demonstrations and have been gentle but firm in the enforcement of the law. Only in the very last few days, under extreme provocation, in the face of wild demonstrations by thousands of marchers who refuse to turn back when lawfully ordered to do so, have the police needed to use fire hoses... and police dogs--on leashes--for their own protection."

June 6, 1963, Montgomery. Although it adopted a resolution asserting there is "no Scriptural warrant" for segregation, the Alabama-West Florida Methodist Conference elected three lay segregationists to represent them at the 1964 quadrennial Methodist General Conference. Among the delegates was Governor George Wallace of Alabama, an ardent segregationist.

Mississippi: Freedom of the Pulpit. In Mississippi the attitudes and policies of public officials and the expressed opinions of the general public regarding desegregation have been even more adamant and defiant than in Alabama, and the frequency and degree of violence have been greater.

Considering the situation there, Mississippi clergymen have been commendably courageous in issuing forthright statements, singly and in groups, ever since the Oxford riots last fall. For nearly 2,000 years the wisdom of the Scripture has expounded this fundamental insight; that faith is the intangible by which man can surmount the adversity of this world by the power of his spirit. Perhaps it was because of the turbulent political and social atmosphere that the Mississippi clergy realized, as did Sir Winston Churchill, "It is only in adversity that discover we are nothing but spirits."

Each of the statements issued stresses "freedom of the pulpit," the acknowledged Protestant ethic that the minister when speaking from the pulpit is charged by God to speak the truth as he sees it, and as one through whom God may speak to his people. There is a danger that "freedom of the pulpit"--like "law and order" in 1958--may be for some ministers a substitute issue for the deeper issue of race. But for those who issued the above-mentioned statements it seems to be a parallel concern and a defense of their right to speak as they believe.

One of the few moderate newspapers in Mississippi, the Delta Democrat-Times in Greenville, stated in an editorial on January 6,1963:

> Throughout the dark days which have plagued Mississippi for so long, a group of men to whom many have turned for guidance have been --as a group -- sadly silent. The reasons for this silence by ministers of God have been legion, but the effect has been devastatingly specific. The field has been left to the professional haters and the mis-guided who would distort the brotherhood of man into the brotherhood of some men.
>
> The bloodshed and rioting which erupted at Oxford made many ministers painfully aware of their failure. Here and there individual clergymen, ever mindful of what has happened to other ministers who raised their lone voices of protest in the past, acknowledged their failures and the failure of the church to take the lead in solving our overwhelming race relations problem and called for new directions and new vigor from the pulpit.
>
> Perhaps it was because of their example, but they are no longer so lonely. Last week a group of 28 young Methodist ministers, Mississippi-born all, collectively called for an end to race hatred and closer attention to the gospel of Christ. They also took a firm stand against closing of the public schools for any reason.
>
> At the end of the week they had been joined by others in their church. Dr. J. P. Stafford, lay leader of the Methodist Mississippi Conference, called their statement "very worthwhile." In a meeting in Okalano, 23 more Methodist ministers "enthusiastically" supported the stand. Their position was all the more significant since they represented the North Mississippi Methodist Conference....
>
> The church did not survive because its early members feared being labelled non-conformists or suffering mental and physical harm. It is time for the church--and its members--to cast back to the strength which was the early Christians. There is a task to be done in Mississippi, and the young Methodist clergymen have shown the way.

A ~~The~~ "Born of Conviction" statement, issued the first week in January, 1963, by a group of 28 young Methodist ministers, made the following points:

1. The church is the instrument of God's purpose. This is His church, and ours only as stewards under His Lordship. Effective practice of the stewardship for the ministry clearly requires freedom of the pulpit....

2. We affirm our faith in the official position of the Methodist Church on race: "Our Lord Jesus Christ teaches that all men are brothers. He permits no discrimination because of race, color, or creed. ...We believe that God is Father of all peoples and races, that Jesus Christ is His Son, that all men are brothers, and that man is of infinite worth as a child of God."

3. We affirm our belief that our public school system is the most effective means of providing common education for all our children...essential to the preservation and development of our true democracy. ...

The following Sunday, January 6, Dr. W. B. Selah, pastor of the largest Methodist church in Jackson, endorsed the statement and added one of his own:

> ...For 17 years I have preached the law of Christian love from the pulpit of Galloway Methodist Church. This law means that we must seek for all men, black and white, the same justice, the same rights, and the same opportunities that we seek for ourselves. Nothing less than this is Christian love. To discriminate against a man because of his color or his creed is contrary to the will of God. Forced segregation is wrong. We should voluntarily desegregate all public facilities. We should treat all men not on the basis of color but on the basis of conduct.
>
> In the light of Christian principle there can be no color bar in a Christian church. ...As Christians we cannot say to anyone, "you cannot come into the House of God." No conference, no preacher, no official board can put up a color bar in the church. That matter is determined by the nature of Christianity which is an inclusive fellowship of those who seek the Lord. ...When a person seeks membership in the church he is not asked about the color of his skin. He is asked about his faith in God as revealed in Christ. Salvation is not by color but by faith. There can be no color bar in a Christian institution.

August 18, 1963, Oxford, Miss. The Rev. Duncan Gray, Jr. rector of St. Peter's Episcopal Church, said today that the burden of guilt for racial injustice is "particularly heavy" upon his state. He continued, in his sermon at the Washington Cathedral:

> Racial injustice is not an easy thing for the average white Southerner to face. But he can never face it unless he hears both God's words from the Cross and His words of judgment. On the Cross, God would take His place beside the Southerner, share his predicament, take his sins and consequently, give him strength to endure judgment. ...Let me alone! is often our most fervent prayer. We wish that love, duty, righteousness and justice were simply our own to do with as we pleased without responsibility to man or to God. ...But the words of God stand over us and our society...they point out what we are and what we were intended to be.

January 4, 1963. Twenty-three of 29 ministers representing the North Mississippi Methodist Conference "enthusiastically voted" to back the "born of conviction" statement; the resolution was presented by District Superintendent W. L. Robinson. Dr. J. P. Stafford, lay leader of the Methodist Mississippi Conference, said, "Let's face it, brotherhood is as much a part of the teachings of Jesus Christ as salvation and faith."

June 15, 1963. The Most Reverend Richard O. Gerrow, Roman Catholic bishop of Mississippi, broke a 39-year silence on current issues to call the assination of Medgar Evers "a shocking and saddening ("than the death of one man" and called for positive steps toward recognizing occurrence more meaningful/the legitimate grievances of the Negro population."

Georgia: Segregation Is Sinful, But....

The Presbyterian Church's Synod of Georgia on May 15-17, 1963, urged all its institutions to abandon racial segregation in a resolution amended (after heated discussion) so as to make it non-compulsory. Institutions include Agnes Scott College and Columbia Theological Seminary in Decatur, Ga.; Presbyterian College and Thornwell Orphanage in Clinton, S. C.; the Rabun Gap-Cacoochee Vocational School, Ga.; and two Presbyterian homes for the aged. Columbia Theological Seminary has been integrated for some years. A recommendation was approved to urge all presbyteries to send senior high fellowship councils to the Georgia-Florida leadership school in St. Petersburg; a Negro presbytery has not previously attended. The Synod asked that the Rock Eagle 4-H Camp at Eatonton be requested to make its facilities available for men's conferences on a non-discriminatory basis.

June 5, 1963. Who? Passed almost unanimously a report on Christian social concern which urged Methodist to endorse the United Nations and requested approval of an earlier statement of principals on racial matters, condemning violence and discord, which it said "emphasized the need for both Negro and white to plan together for the future of our state," and noting that "desegregation [of public facilities] is not the dire calamity that some ... citizens have thought" nor a guarantee of friendship and neighborliness. Dr. Harry V. Richardson, president of Interdenominational Theological Center and a vice president of the Georgia Council of Churches, was the first Negro to address the South Georgia Methodist Conference in recent times.

April 29, 1963. The Evangelical Ministerial Association of Augusta, Georgia, comprising clergymen from about 60 of 100 Augusta. Protestant churches, adopted a resolution supporting voluntary desegregation of the county schools, after five Negroes had petitioned, on March 14, the Richmond County Board of Education for voluntary desegregation. The resolution stated: "We believe that voluntary desegregation done in a Christian spirit is the most effective solution to this particular problem ...we commend both these groups, the Negroes and the board, for the manner in which they are approaching this matter and we urge that they continue in this spirit of understanding and cooperation in future negotiations.

June 15, 1963. A number of Atlanta (Ga.) religious leaders were asked to comment on the current racial crisis. According to Miss Jo Ann Crasford, Religious Editor of the Atlanta Constitution, the majority of churchmen and ministers interviewed felt the action of churches in any "moral crisis" lies not in the resolutions adopted by its hierarchy, but in the actions performed by its members.

June 20, 1963. The Rev. Louis F. Huckaby, chaplain at Crawford Long Hospital and chairman of the conference's Board of Christian Social Concerns, spoke after the what? report had been read to the conference:

> "I challenge you to be Christian. Our past stands haven't changed many minds, many lives, or many churches... Desegregation deserved the backing of the church in its pronouncements and leadership...The church should have led the way...We were more interested in maintaining the status quo than magnifying the universality of the gospel of Jesus Christ. We've placed a guard of stewards at the church door lest colored visitors come in." He defined integration as "something spiritual" that begins only when people learn to trust and love each other. The report and Dr. Huckaby's speech were adopted; he received a standing ovation.

July 1, 1963. In a joint statement issued by the Baptist Convention's Public Affairs Committee, the Christian Life Commission, and the administration committee of the Executive Committee, Georgia Baptist pastors and their congregations were urged "to continue to exercise their moral and spiritual influence for understanding and good will between the races." The committees issued the statement after hearing a report from Dr. Searcy S. Garrison, Convention executive secretary-treasurer, on a recent White House Conference, called by President Kennedy to discuss some aspects of the current race problem.

July 11, 1963, Columbus. Three Negro church organizations -- Mt. Calvary District Sunday School and Baptist Training Congress, a 10,000-member group; the Columbus Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance; and the Adult Liaison Committee--expressed opposition to further demonstrations.

July 28, 1963. The Rev. Don McEvoy, director of the Atlanta chapter of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, preaching at the First Christian Church in Decatur, declared:

> The time has come for churches in Atlanta to declare themselves "unequivocably" open to all. ...[the church] must rid itself of its involvement in this sinful separation of brethren. The time has come for every congregation in the Atlanta area to declare unequivocably that the church belongs to God and not to men, and thus must be open to all of God's children without restriction. ...Ministers have been silent on this issue, for the most part, because social customs have been more binding on us than the commands of Christ. We have been more concerned with avoiding controversy than we have with being Christian. The result has been that we have usually given our pastors a choice between an emasculation of their ministry or martyrdom. ...The white churches have been overly concerned with the possible loss of members and financial support if they gook a forthright stand. Better we should be concerned over the loss of the church's soul. Make no mistake about it. The whole future of the church is at stake in our response to this present crisis. Segregation is sin. To block human fellowship is to block fellowship with the Divine.... Either we face up to the Christian implications of human brotherhood or our whole church parroting of other New Testament doctrines is idle and meaningless chit-chat.

July 3, 1963. The bi-racial Greater Atlanta Methodist Ministers Alliance adopted a resolution praising city officials, the Chamber of Commerce, newspapers, and restaurant owners for "their stand in encouraging the desegregation of parks, swimming pools...and public facilities. The association is composed of about 300 pastors.

Arkansas.--April 18, 1963, Catholic, Protestant and Jewish representatives united in a Greater Little Rock (Ark.) Conference on Religion and Human Relations. More than 100 representatives of 40 churches and church organizations heard leaders of their denominations call for an end to discrimination in education, economic opportunity, churches and housing. The leaders jointly referred to segregation as a "moral problem" and as "sin." In conclusion, the Rev. David A. Boileau, professor at St. John's (Catholic) Home Missions Seminary, suggested three areas for conference work:

> We must clean up our own house. We all run segregated facilities. We must ask ourselves if segregation or token integration is right and we must destroy segregation in our churches, schools, and societies. Each must examine his own conscience. And we must establish in our community the role of religion as a force in society. If we bring the force of religion to bear on segregation this will wipe it out.

Florida.--June 12, 1963, the Florida Synod of the United Presbyterian Church departed from its announced program to name a committee on race relations. The synod also considered a working pact with the Presbyterian Synod of Jamaica, island nation south of Cuba. Jamaica, with a preponderance of Negro population, sent several members of the Jamaica Synod to the conference for consultation.

Kentucky.--June 16-20, 1963, The Fourth Interracial Consultation on the Southern Church and Race Relations was held at the College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky. The group issued a "statement of concern" which concluded: "We...dedicate ourselves to work with all others to continue progress in eliminating racial discrimination in voting, public accommodations, education, employment, and housing."

May 17, 1963. The Rt. Rev. C. Gresham Marmion, Episcopal bishop of Kentucky, admonished the diocesan convention, "We dare not be a religious club, which is the way some of our churches operate. ...In our churches we should not just tolerate, but we should welcome people of all races..."

June 13, 1963. The Kentucky Methodist Conference called on its churches to "explore avenues leading to the invitation of all races to worship together." The following day it adopted a statement that said:

> We deplore the practice of racial segregation as unfair, illegal, and un-Christian. Regarding present social upheaval between the two races, we applaud all non-violent attempts to breakdown segregation barriers which now exist.

August 11, 1963. The Record, official weekly newspaper for the Roman Catholic archdiocese of Louisville, commented in an editorial that the "overall Knights of Columbus record in the racial area is unbelievably bad." It said that knights and other Catholic organizations in the archdiocese should eliminate any segregation that exists in theory or practice, and should recruit Negro members. It quoted local Knights of Columbus officials as saying there were no Negro members in the Louisville archdiocese; no Negroes had asked for membership.

Louisiana.--February 1, 1963, at an Institute of Religion sponsored by the American Friends Service Committee and held in Baton Rouge, La., Rabbi Charles Maminband, then of Hattiesburg, Miss., (now located in Longview, Texas), said that patience and determination were necessary virtues needed to overcome racial bigotry. "People are more inclined to lose their identity in a group on matters of controversy," he continued, "We are inclined to slough off both the privileges and responsibilities of citizenship. ...In no area has democracy failed as it has in race relations."

March 5, 1963. Catholic Bishop Robert E. Tracy of Baton Rouge, La., speaking in Donaldsonville to white and Negro Catholics of the civil parishes of Iberville, Ascension, and St. James, declared, "There is no reason some Christians should discriminate against other Christians and segregate them. Talk is cheap, but what is not cheap is to live Christianity." The Bishop was reporting on the Ecumenical Council which he attended in Rome, and replying to a question from the floor.

August 5, 1963. Roman Catholics of north and central Louisiana were called upon by their Bishop, Charles P. Greco, Diocese of Alexandria, "to accept desegregation with understanding and restraint" and to help end "discrimination based merely on race, color, creed or national background." His pastoral letter was read in all churches and chapels of the diocese. (More than 85,000 Catholics, and which includes all civil parishes north of Rapides, Avoyelles and Vernon. There are 83 church parishes and more than 100 missions.)

North Carolina.--January 8, 1963, the Federated Ministerial Association of Almance County adopted the report of its Race Relations Committee which urged the association to: encourage equal job and educational opportunities, make the church itself an example to business and education by eliminating barriers based on race, and suggested joint meetings with Negro community leadership.

May 12 & 26, 1963. At all Episcopal churches in Raleigh (May 12) and in Greensboro (May 26) a letter from Bishop Richard H. Baker and

Coadjustor Thomas Fraser, Jr., expressing alarm and grief over racial unrest in North Carolina cities. The letter was read during morning services and urged church members to exercise the discipline of love and forgiveness and implored all those in authority:

> ...to act quickly in achieving a resolution of this tension which will grant to all men the equality and dignity given to them by God. We ask all people to support the merchants and institutions serving the people of this city when they strive to provide all men this equality and dignity. We ask all people to work, to pray, and to act courageously to end the strife with which we are beset and to help achieve in this city a harmony and brotherhood that God wills for all people.

Raleigh.--June 1963, the following excerpt of a statement issued by the Raleigh Ministerial Association's Human Relations Committee some two to three weeks after the more Christian and forthright statement issued May 13 by the Raleigh Merchants' Bureau and followed two days later by a full page ad with 1,000 signatures of white people supporting integration of public facilities:

> We urge that the City Council of Raleigh, the Mayor's Committee and the responsible leadership of the city continue to seek means of bringing about the immediate desegregation of restaurants, theatres, and hotels in the city. We personally pledge our support of any establishment that desegregates and will encourage other people to do the same.

June 1963. The North Carolina Methodist Conference, after spirited debate, adopted a resolution urging that racial barriers be lowered in community institutions and places of public accommodation. The resolution urged members of local churches to "voluntarily open the doors of their stores, motion picture houses, restaurants, churches, schools, and other facilities to all people of every race."

June 19, 1963. Two hundred and fifty ministers, priests, rabbis and laymen, "appealed to the conscience of North Carolinians" on the "whole issue of race relations" at a meeting of newly formed North Carolina Council on Religion and Race. The five-point statement of policy declared:

1) We believe that to discriminate against any individual because of race or religion is immoral...
2) Above any directive of man-made laws, or the economic expediency of the moment is the eternal moral law of God: each of us is his brother's keeper...
3) Peace between men is a vain dream until there is peace within the conscience of each individual...

4) It is not enough for the victories in human rights to be gained solely through legal and economic maneuvers; the voice of religion and churchmen must be heard...
5) Bigotry, hatred, violence and doctrines of racial superiority have no place in our religions traditions...

South Carolina.--January 19, 1963, 122 Columbia (S. C.) ministers representing 12 denominational groups, issued a statement giving their views on racial problems then facing South Carolina citizens. They confessed their failure to apply more fully the Christian principle of brotherhood in their personal lives and in the churches they served, and declared their conviction that racial problems and their solutions are basically moral and spiritual. They pledged support to public officials and other citizens supporting law and order.

June 13, 1963. Excerpts from a statement made by Bishop Paul Hardin, Jr., of the South Carolina Conference of the Methodist Church:

> ...It is a source of personal concern and grief to me to see my beloved Southland and the Methodist Church torn by the race issue. My anguish is all the more acute when I realize that basically the main issue is not race but simple justice and personal dignity. It is as natural for a colored person to seek his place under the sun as it is for a white man to do so. In Christian calmness and diginity, let us work together in an effort to grant justice and opportunity to all people--not because of economic and political pressure, but because we believe that justice is the common property of all free men.

Tennessee.--Spring, 1963, the Cumberland Presbyterian Synod of West Tennessee adopted a report at its annual synod meeting urging ministers to "preach their true convictions concerning these social problems of our day, especially the recognition and acceptance of all races as children of God."

May 22, 1963. The Nashville (Tenn) Association of Churches unanimously adopted a resolution praising Mayor Beverly Briley's recent handling of racial disturbances in Nashville, and commending him for naming a Human Relations Committee to work on racial, cultural and religious problems in the community. The group "pledged its prayers and support in helping the committee resolve racial problems."

August 25, 1963. Bishop William L. Adrian of the Tennessee Diocese had his pastoral letter read in all Catholic masses. The letter urges Catholics make the effort to provide equal opportunity in areas of "employment, education, and public accommodations..."

August 26, 1963. Nashville, Tennessee, the head of the Roman Catholic church in Tennessee urged church members to do away with racial discrimination by meeting with Negroes and talking "openly and calmly about our mutual hopes and problems."

Texas.--June 5, 1963, the Episcopal bishop of the Dallas, (Texas) Diocese Bishop C. Avery Mason, called for support of Bishop Lichtenberger's statement, saying, "It speaks for itself, and we will act accordingly. This, of course, has been our policy." The Dallas diocese has been quietly implementing the church's stand on integration for a number of years. The diocesan convention has long been integrated, also the diocese's Camp Crucis--which is used for summer retreats. In some Dallas neighborhoods, members of both races regularly attend churches. In 1962, the Department of Christian Social Relations conducted a number of inter-racial conversations among clergy and laymen in the area.

June 29, 1963. Editorial in The Baptist Standard, editor, Dr. E. S. James. Mr. James said that the Southern Baptists "were ashamed to acknowledge the truth to ourselves that we, the second largest religious group in the nation, have done so little to secure justice and equality for all men." He added that he was ashamed because President Kennedy had to remind ministers of their moral duties.

Virginia.--June 5, 1963, the Presbyterian Synod of Virginia advocated that church and secular leaders lead in ending racial segregation. The statement said further,

> We believe...the time has come for the state, the South, and the nation to move quickly to settle the racial question...

The Synod set plans to call on its various institutions to report at next year's meeting on the progress they have made on the stand "that enforced segregation of the races...is out of harmony" with the church.

June 13, 1963. The Virginia Methodist Conference issued a recommendation for racial integration of all prep schools and colleges it supports in the state, to be put into effect not later than the 1964-65 academic year. Approved by a majority of three-to-one, a conference spokesman said the new policy was not mandatory but merely a strong recommendation.

Week of July 13, 1963. The Norfolk (Va.) Presbytery announced "a deep and urgent concern over the relation of the races and especially as this affects and challenges the Christian church." The adopted statement continued:

> Enforced segregation of the races is discrimination which is out of harmony with Christian theology and ethics; and the church, in its relationship to cultural patterns, should lead and not follow.
>
> We call upon the sessions and congregations of Norfolk Presbytery to engage in serious and prayerful study of racial relations and social justice, especially as it bears upon the seating of worshippers and admission of believers as to the membership of our church regardless of race.

August 24, 1963. The Virginia Conference of the Evangelical United Brethren Church condemned the State of Virginia for its "subterfuge in establishing the tuition grant as a device for closing the schools in Prince Edward County." The adopted report continued:

> ...we recommend careful consideration of the educational problems in said county and if possible the giving of financial and moral support to establishing and maintaining of schools to educate the children of both Negro and white. ...we deplore the denial of any citizen of equal access to tax-supported public institutions or facilities; the denial of any citizen the right to equal participation in voting; we commend those who have hired Negroes and individuals and groups who take steps to eliminate racial discrimination in housing, education, employment, and the use of public facilities. We believe human rights must always take priority over property rights.

Statements of National Church Organizations.--May, 1962, the Woman's Division of Christian Service of the Methodist Church called on its members to study the principles and goals stated in "A Charter of Racial Policies," and for the speedy ratification and commitment to work for implementation within jurisdiction, conference, district and local woman's society. The Charter included the following: to eliminate in the church all forms of segregation based on race, to create opportunities for inclusive fellowship and membership in local churches, and to work toward changing community patterns of racial segregation in education, housing, voting, employment and public facilities.

October 1962. At the annual assembly of the International Convention of Christian Churches, a total of $6,353 was presented to the United Nations. Among the numerous resolutions passed were several dealing with race. The delegates expressed "concern to the officials of the state of Mississippi" and appealed to their "sense of decency and respect for law, order and principles of Christianity and fair play." The resolution deplored the "defiance of the federal court orders by the officials of the state of Mississippi regarding the entrance of James Meredith to the University of Mississippi" and encouraged the Justice Department in its efforts to secure compliance. Other resolutions urged church agencies to work for more speedy integration, and asked the denomination's schools to hasten integration of student bodies, faculties, and staffs.

May 9, 1963. The strongly worded resolution that urged the Southern Baptist Convention, the previous day, to express concern for Negro demonstrators jailed in Birmingham, Alabama turned up for vote so toned down it was almost unrecognizable as the same resolution. In its new form it made no mention of either Negroes or Birmingham, but simply "the problems involved in our social adjustments today." These must be solved in a Christian context, it said, and it pledged to help all "who do not enjoy freedom." The resolution passed without debate despite the loud applause accorded the original motion when it was presented by the Rev. Robert E. Seymour of Chapel Hill, N. C. He had asked that Baptist be petitioned to "pray for us who are in prison out here" and urged to end discrimination in their communities.

May 22, 1963. The United Presbyterian General Assembly approved a church constitution revision requiring local congregation to make "certain membership is not refused because of color, origin or wordly condition." This action is subject to ratification by local Presbyteries in the 3,500,00 membership. The assembly also petitioned President Kennedy to call a White House Conference on civil rights as soon as feasible to hasten the day when "color or national origin" will be irrelevant to rights of citizenship, and suggested that church boards, agencies and local units examine their contracts for goods and services to make sure funds are not used to support racially discriminatory or segregated institutions.

May 26, 1963. The presiding bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the U.S.A., Arthur Lichtenberger, issued a statement calling attention to the recent action of the Diocese of Washington which directed all diocesan-related institutions to eliminate any discriminatory practices within six months. The diocese further requested the Bishop and Executive Council to take steps necessary to disassociate such diocesan and parish-related institutions from moral of financial support if these practices were not eliminated in the specified time. The bishop's statement included the following points: to demonstrate by specific actions by identification of the church with those who are victims of oppression; to support and strengthen racial protests, financially and personally; to eliminate all discrimination in church and church-related institutions.

June 6, 1963. The 270-member general board of the National Council of Churches adopted a statement calling upon the church "to confess her sin of omission and delay and to move forward to witness to her essential belief that every child of God is a brother to every other." The Council pledged that its leaders would "engage personally in negotiations, demonstrations, and other direct action." It urged all affiliated communions and invited members of all faiths to join in support of civil rights legislation and to witness that the racial crisis is a "national moral issue and not a regional problem." The Council announced the formation of a Commission on Religion and Race to coordinate the action program. (See Action Section)

June 17, 1963. Dr. Fredrik A. Schiotz, president of the American Lutheran Church, sent a memorandum to the pastors making the following suggestions: 1) let your people know where you stand, 2) be sure that your own congregation does not withhold the hand of welcome from a Negro guest or applicant for membership, 3) Encourage your people to write to their senators and congressmen, 4) Encourage lay leaders to participate in community consultations, bringing together white and Negro leaders for conversation and peaceful action. The pastors were reminded of the resolution adopted by the Church Council in February, 1963, which included: "Should a congregation not practice the proclamation of the Gospel of our Lord without limitation to nationality or race and not admit to membership in the Congregation Lutherans who may wish to transfer into the congregation or not admit people to membership classes who may wish to be instructed, the district president shall report this violation of church practice to the Executive Committee of the District and to the Church Council."

June 18, 1963. The Central Conference of American Rabbis pledged "unequivocal support" to Negroes today in their battle for equal rights and opportunities. The 400 members of the Reform group called for an "all-out effort" by the 1,000,000 members of Reform Judaism's 650 congregations to press for strong civil rights legislation by Congress. Warning that "a filibuster to prevent passage" of such legislation would "pose a threat to our survival as a democracy," the Rabbis voiced dismay at the "senseless and often brutal delays" in extending "full civil rights for Negro citizens."

June 22, 1963. A resolution asking the General Conference of The Methodist Church for swift integration of the church at all levels was passed by 375 missionaries, about half on furlough after foreign assignment. Most pledged to work actively for desegregation while here, giving lectures and joining picket lines.

June 24, 1963. At a youth forum of about 150 delegates from 37 states, sponsored by the United Church of Christ, the Rev. Archie Hargraves, field secretary of the division of church extension, urged white people to join the fight against segregation in what he described as a worldwide revolution by "people of color." He warned that unless people face integration as a fundamental moral issue "the Negro people are prepared to say 'the hell with it' and smash the whole rotten fabric to pieces, taking upon themselves, before God, the reconstruction of a better world from the rules of the old one that is a lie and a mockery to God's purposes. ...The acid test is whether we in America can accept the proposition that a Negro may marry whomever he loves and loves him. The Christian church will either prove itself or destroy itself on the basis of its response to this proposition."

July 6, 1963. During this week the Lutheran Church in America appealed to its 6,200 congregations to eradicate all vestiges of racial segregation from their own church activities, and to join the fight for "justice in race relations" in American society by initiating and supporting race reconciliation efforts and backing legislation to assure equal opportunity for all in housing, education, employment, voting, and access to public facilities. The statement emphasized that Christians can no longer temporize with racial barriers because any form of segregation or discrimination "is in violation of God's will."

July 9, 1963. The Lutheran Human Relations Association of America, at its annual institute, issued a statement which calls for alerting pastors to utilize their pulpits to give active support to the President's civil rights legislative program; and for Christians to demonstrate their protest against unjust discrimination and degrading practices which would limit Negroes from reaching their maximum potential before God.

July 14, 1963. Cardinal Spellman's denunciation of racial discrimination was reiterated today in all the 402 parishes of the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of New York. The Cardinal had made the attack on July 11 at the dedication of Drew Houses in Harlem. Excerpts of his address were read as the sermon in all churches. This is a very rare occurrence.

July 14, 1963. The president of the Lutheran Church in America, the Rev. Dr. Franklin Clark Fry (who is also president of the Lutheran World Federation and chairman of the central committee of the World Council of Churches) called on the 3,200,000 members to help end racial discrimination. He made the request in a pastoral letter to the 6,812 pastors, calling attention to the decision of the church's executive committee last month to take "action leading to justice in race relations." His letter continued, "The time has come to act. The doors must be open to all. Everyone who is eligible, by faith or scholastic attainments or need should be welcomed to full membership or enrollment as a student or admission as a patient or guest on equal basis with the people of the majority race." The church, he said, "is bound to seek souls [and] the obligation of Lutherna Christians [includes] civic affairs as well as purely church matters. ...Under God the time has come to act and to lead others by precept and example."

July 17, 1963. At a called meeting of the executive meeting of the House of Bishops, the Protestant Episcopal Church in the U. S. A. endorsed the Washington march and passed a resolution urging both laymen and ministers to join it. There were some quiet dissents from Southern Episcopalians, which received scattered applause and hisses.

July 25, 1963. A committee of the fourth World Conference on Faith and Order condemned racial discrimination and urged Christians to fight it "whatever the cost." The conference is sponsored by the World Council of Churches.

July 27, 1963. At an emergency meeting the National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice adopted the following recommendations:

1. Called for all Roman Catholics to support, as a moral imperative, the President's civil rights program, and to build grass roots support of it.
2. Urged Catholics to take part in other demonstrations and picket activities in cases where "sincere negotiations" fail to achieve equal opportunities for Negroes.

There are 57 local Catholic Interracial Councils, coordinated by the NCCIJ.

August 15, 1963. Two major institutions of American Reform Judaism called on lay and rabbinic leaders of the 650 Reform congregations not to deal with construction companies, banks, and other businesses that discriminate against Negroes. The appeal, also directed to more than 1,000,000 Reform worshippers, was made by the Commission on Social Action, joint body of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations and the Central Conference of American Rabbis (comprising 850 spiritual leaders). Stressing the need for concrete action at the grassroots level, the "Call to Racial Justice" included these recommendations:

1. Businessmen should institute and enforce nondiscriminatory employment and promotion policies, make efforts to introduce Negro employees into work forces, and provide training to upgrade jobs for Negro employees.
2. Members of labor, business and professional groups should take positive steps to encourage the introduction of Negroes into skilled trades and professions.
3. All members are to support and participate in efforts for racial integration in their own communities, neighborhoods and public schools.
4. Members should not patronize public places or businesses that discriminate against Negroes as either patrons or employees.
5. Members should not frequent private clubs that refuse membership on racial grounds.
6. Members should invest in financial institutions that make funds and services available on a non-discriminatory basis.
7. Members should give active support to the enactment of local, state, and Federal legislation and to forceful executive action on all levels of government.
8. Congregations should use integrated crews in construction of new houses of worship.

August 23, 1963. Roman Catholic Bishops of the United States in a pastoral letter said "The conscience of the nation is on trial" over racial discrimination, and urged, "we must act to remove obstacles that impede the rights and opportunities of our Negro brethren... We should do our part to see that voting, jobs, housing, education, and public facilities are freely available to every American." The letter was read at all masses in many Catholic churches and chapels on Sunday, August 25. A National Conference Welfare spokesman said that Bishops were not required to have it read and that some, for various reasons, might ignore it.

August 30, 1963. The 1,100 delegates of the Methodist Conference on Human Relations, representing 10,000,000 Methodists, approved the following points in a statement to be submitted in a petition to the Methodist General Council:

1. Called for federal and state laws "that will open all facilities serving the general public to all persons without regard to race."
2. Urged church units to employ their economic power to aid integration,
3. Advocated that the 135 church-related colleges, including many in the South, and all Methodist hospitals and other institutions be opened to all races and proposed "that the name of the church and funds from its budget shall be withdrawn from any institution pursuing a policy contrary to this recommendation."

The 1963 statements of religious bodies speak for themselves. It now seems evident that the church is ready to attack discriminatory practices and racial injustice both within its own institutions and without. Paraphrasing the words of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.,* the church, which has been "merely a thermometer that recorded the ideas and principles of popular opinion" may indeed become, like the early Christian church, "a thermostat that transformed society."

The question is: how influential will these statements be on the individual church member?

---

*Letter from a Birmingham Jail.

1963

APPENDIX

Recent Examples of Southern Church Action: Positive and Negative

ALABAMA, 1963 :

Birmingham, April 28--Groups of three or four Negroes visited 39 white churches. They were accepted at nine, where they were escorted inside and directed to pews. (This was after 26 days of demonstrations with more than 400 arrests.)

Gadsden, June 16-- Several downtown white churches accepted Negroes for services without incident.

Linden, June 13-- The Rev. Joe H. Patterson resigned, effective June 29, as pastor of the Linden Baptist Church when deacons in his congregation objected to his recommendation of an "open door" membership policy in the church. That night his home was stoned and a cross was burned on his lawn; his wife and three young children were there alone. Sentiment in the congregation changed in his favor, and he was asked to reconsider his resignation, but refused.

ARKANSAS, 1963:

August 2, 1963--In the past few months one Southern Baptist church has opened its doors to Negroes, the first in the state to do so.

Gillett, week of June 24--Rural Negro church bombed with dynamite.

FLORIDA, 1963:

Dade County, April 15--At the invitation of Bishop Coleman F. Carroll, 17 Catholic, Jewish, and Protestant religious leaders of Dade County met to lay the groundwork for a program of mutual cooperation in racial and other moral community problems.

Pensacola, Aug. 28, 1963--The Southern District of the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod admitted a number of Negro churches to district membership along with new white congregations: total admitted, 27. There was no separate listing of the number of Negro churches.

GEORGIA, 1963:

Albany, June 19--A manifesto asking peaceful negotiation of differences was issued by 47 Negro ministers. They have had at least one meeting with white business leaders.

Seven youths who had led anti-desegregation demonstrations sought sanctuary in the Shiloh Baptist Church.

Albany, July--St. Mark's Episcopal Church has announced it is a "house of prayer for all people," and Negroes have attended services there. The rector, the Rev. H. W. Shipps, requested that "anyone who does not understand...please call so we can have a quiet discussion."

Albany, July 20--The B'nai Israel Temple turned away two (white) Jewish members of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee who were accompanied by a small Negro boy. A temple member who observed the Friday night incident said an usher met the group and refused to let them in; they left quietly.

Athens, August 25--Two white churches admitted Negroes for the first time today; six Negroes attended the First Methodist Church and the First Baptist Church. There were no incidents.

Atlanta, January 22--A new organization, the Greater Atlanta Methodist Ministers Alliance, was formed at the annual joint meeting of the Greater Atlanta Methodist Ministers Association (white) and the Atlanta Methodist Ministers Alliance (Negro). The combined group will meet monthly. Formerly the Negro and white groups met jointly only at the annual meeting. About 200 white and 100 Negro ministers joined in forming the GAMMA.

Atlanta, Jan. 24--A resolution deploring racial barracades on two southwest Atlanta streets was adopted by the North Georgia Diocese of the Episcopal Church. Another resolution, urging all church-related institutions be required to make clear they "do not use race as a basis for admission...," was ruled out of order and not acted upon. The Bishop stated that the church's policy was quite clear and the resolution unneccessary.

Early in March it was announced that Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s five year old son was rejected for admission to Lovett Episcopal Day School. The enrollment at Lovett includes about 40% non-Episcopalians. ~~and about 30% are Jewish.~~ On March 26, Cecil A. Alexander, Atlanta architect, submitted his resignation as trustee of Lovett in protest. On June 14 the board of trustees by unanimous vote denied applications of Negroes and instructed the headmaster not to accept any applications from Negroes. On July 3, Episcopal Bishop Claiborne of Atlanta withdrew any "implied or official" Episcopal Church support of Lovett School, and announced that the Episcopal priest serving as headmaster at Lovett had submitted his resignation. The headmaster, the Rev. James R. McDowell, has accepted the position of headmaster of (Episcopal) Sewanee Military Academy in Tennessee. The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity has announced plans to picket the school; the Bishop has given permission for religious services to be continued: chapel, weekly Communion Service, and religious instruction.

Atlanta, May 25--The Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Atlanta received its first Negro priest; the Rev. William E. Calhoun was ordained at the Cathedral of Christ the King.

Atlanta, May 28--Two Negro student chaplain internes were accepted at Grady Hospital, to begin in June. Both are Baptist and will serve the spiritual needs of hospital patients.

Atlanta, June 30--The board of directors of the Presbyterian Survey, official publication of the Presbyterian Church, U.S., adopted a policy of supporting Atlanta restaurants which have desegregated. The Board of Women's Work had already done so.

Atlanta, July 7--St. Mark Methodist Church admitted a Negro visitor. All Episcopal, Lutheran, most Presbyterian, and some Methodist and Baptist churches have admitted Negro visitors for some time without incident. (See "Example of Church Ambivalance"at end of appendix for account of Atlanta First Baptist.)

Augusta, April 29--The Augusta Evangelical Ministers' Association recommended voluntary desegregation of local schools. In a statement to the Augusta Herald the ministers said, "we believe that voluntary desegregation done in the Christian spirit is the most effective solution..." The resolution asked that ministers "be invited to join the asssociation, regardless of color or race, in compliance with the provisions of our constitution."

Carrollton, June 27--The Rev. Donald H. Harrison asked members of St. Margaret's Episcopal Church to lend their support to his opposition to organization of a white citizens council. Mr. Harrison is also chaplain to Episcopal students at West Georgia College, desegregated Fall, 1963.

Decatur, July 28--A Christian Church minister preached "the time has come for every congregation in the Atlanta area to declare unequivocably that the church ...must be open to all God's children without restriction."

Macon, July 1--Mercer University (Baptist) and Wesleyan College (Methodist) were among the ten establishments signing contracts with the federal government to operate the businesses where their post office stations are situated on a non-discriminatory basis.

Macon, Sept. 6--At least three Negro students have been registered for classes at Mercer University. One student is from Ghana; the other two are local.

Savannah, June 24--Bishop Thomas J. McDonough announced that Catholic schools in the Diocese of Savannah will be integrated effective September 1, 1963. This policy applies to all grades of both elementary and high schools.

Savannah, July 13--Clergymen issued a statement calling for a "real and just solution" of the racial crisis and the "immediate resumption of negotiations." The ministers included the Episcopal, Catholic and Methodist bishops of the city; they also offered their services in reaching a settlement.

Savannah, July 14--Negroes sought to worship at several white Savannah churches; all were turned away without incident.

Savannah, July 17--The Protestant Ministerial Association issued a request that July 28 be a day of prayer (during efforts to negotiate racial problems).

Terrell and Lee Counties, July 3--Work of rebuilding three southwest Georgia Negro churches began on this date, nearly a year after the buildings were destroyed by incendiary fires.

KENTUCKY, 1963:

Evarts, June--Last summer the Evarts Congregational Christian Church (United Church of Christ) invited children and teachers from the Negro churches of the community to participate in the Daily Vacation Church School. The minister, the Rev. Carolyn Welch, reported that the program was successful and was, she thought, enriching not only to the church but to the community. The same program was followed this year, with even larger attendance and community participation.

October 1963--The Kentucky-Tennessee Conference of Congregational Christian Churches (white) and the Tennessee-Kentucky Conference of Congregational Christian Churches (Negro) will hold a joint annual meeting for the second time, looking toward eventually combining the two conferences. Committee work of the two groups has already been unified wherever possible.

LOUISIANA, 1963:

Baton Rouge, July 29--Desegregation of the 11th and 12th grades in four Roman Catholic high schools in East Baton Rouge Parish will begin in 1964.

Buras, July 6-16--Window panes were broken in the rectory of Our Lady of Good

LOUISIANA, continued:

Harbor Church. It was the second time the rectory had been fired on since nearby Our Lady of Good Harbor School was integrated last September. Last November 13, 26 window panes were shattered by birdshot. On August 27 Our Lady of Good Harbor School, operated by the Catholic Sisters of St. Francis, was closed after being damaged by a midnight explosion. The school had been scheduled to reopen, still desegregated, on September 3.

New Orleans, March 24--An article by John Carporon in the Washington Post stated that the color bar had been removed in all Catholic schools in the Archdiocese of New Orleans, with an estimated 200 Negro Catholic youngsters attending formerly all-white parochial schools. Catholic schools in the archdiocese were desegregated in policy in the fall of 1962, but few had Negro students.

Ponte A La Hache, June 27--A Roman Catholic priest, who charged a Belle Chasse man punched him in a disagreement over the cleric's conducting a biracial religious instruction class, asked and got a court dismissal of simple battery against the man.

Plaquemine, Aug. 25--Negroes attended services at two white Protestant churches today: 7 were admitted to the Northside Baptist Church (seated in a separate section) and 8 attended the Episcopal church. At the First Methodist and First Baptist churches groups of Negroes were turned away.

MISSISSIPPI, 1963:

At the height of the 1962 riots on the University of Mississippi campus, Episcopal priests went out into the face of death as a sort of two-man truth squad, talking to students, relieving them of knives, shovels, bottles, bricks and other more lethal weapons.

June 2--The clerical delegates of the Mississippi Methodist Conference voted 89-85 in a closed session to sever relations with the Rev. Ralph Edwin King, a white Methodist minister who was arrested as a racial demonstrator. He was refused permission, by the bishop, to question the decision or to speak to the assembly.

Clarksdale, Aug. 8--An interdenominational group of ministers from other parts of the country tried without success to call upon the city government, to urge a reconciliation of differences.

Jackson, May 24--Negro and white clergymen held, for the first time, a joint session to discuss the city's racial problem and"to seek peaceable amelioration of the Negro's just complaints." They agreed to devote their sermons the following Sunday, May 26, to this issue.

Jackson, May 29--A group of 12 leading white ministers, including five bishops and representing eight denominations, released a statement urging "communications" between the races. The statement continued, "we have met with responsible civic leaders and with representatives of two ministerial associations... our progress has been exceedingly limited."

Jackson, June 16--Four young Negro women attended St. Andrews Episcopal Church without incident. (This was the day following the funeral of Medgar Evers.) Negroes were refused admission at Central Presbyterian and First Christian churches. The previous Sunday (June 9) Negro visitors were turned away at two Methodist and two Baptist Churches. One of the Methodist churches was Galloway Memorial, and on June 10 the pastor, the Rev. W. B. Selah, resigned. The assistant pastor, the Rev. Jerry Furr (signer of the "Born of Conviction" statement in January) said he would also resign. Others were the Capital Methodist and Calvary Baptist churches and the First Baptist Church (which said Negroes had attended in the past but were unwelcome now because of racial tension). Five Negroes attended Mass at St. Peters Roman Catholic Church, where Negroes have gone regularly for years. On June 30 three white churches refused to admit Negroes.

MISSIPPI, continued:

June 28--Of the 28 young white Methodist ministers who signed the January 1963 "Born of Conviction" statement proclaiming their belief in "freedom of the pulpit" and opposing racial discrimination in Mississippi, 12 have left the state and seven have moved to other churches within Mississippi under varying degrees of pressure and frustration. Nine still remain in their original churches. Those who left the state did so voluntarily; none was expelled from the Methodist Conference. All were targets for segregationist reaction within their churches and communities; a few suffered violence or threats of violence. Tires were slashed, rocks thrown at parsonages, a cross was burned by the Ku Klux Klan at at least two parsonages. Harassment by telephone was general. One minister's wife was dismissed from her teaching job; another minister lost his part-time teaching position. All, however, have had some loyal support from their congregations.

Tupelo, July--The ruling board of the First Methodist Church voted 40-4 to seat Negroes.

NORTH CAROLINA, 1963:

January 30-- The North Carolina Council of Churches, embracing 15 denominations, elected a Negro, Dr. Samuel E. Duncan, as vice president. The council also voted to hire a full-time worker in the area of social concerns and pledged funds to pay his salary. A resolution was adopted commending the governor for his Good Neighbor Council and encouraging "the employment of qualified people without regard to race."

June 17-23, 1962--The annual national conference of the Methodist Student Movement advocated the desegregation of swimming facilities at Lake Junaluska, the Methodist Southeastern jurisdiction summer assembly grounds in North Carolina. The students also voted to set up an interracial seminar in Mississippi or Alabama, at which Negro and white students will have the opportunity to confront the racial issue in the light of Christian ethics, and adopted a statement supporting Methodist participation in union discussions with other churches.

Ahoskie, July 22-28--Negro and white preachers jointly conducted week-long, nightly series of integrated services and meetings.

Charlotte, Summer 1963--An interfaith North Carolina Council on Religion and Race was formed.

Lexington, June--During this month the First Methodist Church admitted Negro worshippers.

Raleigh, May 12--As Negroes demonstrated here for the fifth straight day, the pastor of the First Presbyterian Church declined to deliver a sermon because of his "keen disappointment" in his congregation's apathy over Raleigh's racial troubles. Only two or three members of the congregation had heeded Dr. Albert Edwards' request to express themselves to local businessmen on the racial controversy. "If Christian people do not express themselves at a time like this," he said, "then who will?" The church has admitted Negro visitors in the past and ten were present on this Sunday.

NORTH CAROLINA, continued:

The Raleigh Ministerial Association voted 42-1 in favor of desegregating business facilities.

Only one church, Calvary Baptist, barred and locked the church door as ushers turned away 12 Negro college students during the mass attendance by Negroes of local churches. Later, the church voted (80% affirmative) in favor of admitting Negroes and 12 Shaw University students were seated on May 19. The same week, Longview Methodist Church joined the list of churches indicating all persons are welcome. The Rev. Worth B. Cotton, pastor, told the congregation "as Christian Church we cannot turn these people away."

Raleigh, May 15--The First Baptist Church rejected (367-147) the application for membership of Charles Earle, a Shaw University student from Jamaica. The Southern Baptist Convention has loaned Earle $375 to help finance his education. Earle is president of the Student Council and has been a leader of student demonstrations.

Raleigh, May 20--The West Raleigh Presbyterian Church endorsed, and offered "encouragement and cooperation," the resolution of the Raleigh Merchants Bureau calling for lowering of racial barriers in government and business.

Raleigh, June 13--Six Episcopal clergy (4 Negro and 2 white) were turned away when they attempted to eat at downtown S. & W. Cafeteria. The ministers were attending a church conference at St. Augustine's College in Raleigh. The group prayed, read the Bible, and left quietly. The cafeteria desegregated the following week.

Thomasville, July 18--A shot was fired into a Negro church during a rally.

OKLAHOMA, 1963:

Jan. 24--The Oklahoma Diocese of the Episcopal Church approved a resolution requesting all Episcopal schools in the state to announce in all bulletins or promotional material that no students shall be "barred because of race, creed, or color."

Oklahoma City, Aug. 24--The N.A.A.C.P. Youth Council staged the first kneel-in here when 20 pairs of Negro youths attended 20 churches; they were turned away from three.

Summer, 1963--Catholic Bishop Reed of Oklahoma City has inserted a non-discriminatory clause in church construction contracts.

Tulsa, August 2--The National Council of Churches local chapter joined with the N.A.A.C.P. recently to help collect 10,000 signatures to a petition asking city officials to wipe out segregation in all public places with a city ordinance backed by stiff fines. Speedy approval was predicted for the measure, which is also supported strongly by Catholic and Jewish leaders.

SOUTH CAROLINA, 1963:

Charleston, June 27--Catholic hospitals in Charleston and Columbia will accept Negro patients this fall; all services will be available to them, hospital officials said. But Negro doctors will not be permitted to practice in these hospitals.

SOUTH CAROLINA, continued:

Columbia, Oct. 28, 1962--The first break in hotel segregation was accomplished by the House of Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church. The body rented an entire downtown motor hotel so that its two Liberian missionary bishops, who are African, would be housed with white bishops during the annual meeting. Since restaurants (except for chain-store lunch counters) were still segregated, the two bishops took their meals with other bishops at Trinity Church or at private homes.

March 28--the Rev. Charles Webster, director of Baptist student work at Clemson College, charged that he had been forced out of his church post because of his contacts with Clemston's only Negro student--Harvey B. Gantt.

Farmington, Jan. 13--The Trinity Episcopal Church at Farmington, whose congregation of about 140 families is white, chose as pastor a Negro, the Rev. Joseph A. Pelham, of Detroit and a member of the Michigan Episcopal Diocese staff. The Senior Warden said the Rev. Mr. Pelham was "head and shoulders" above more than a dozen other candidates and the parishioners have accepted him with "widespread enthusiasm."

Florence, Aug. 27--The Rev. L. B. Burgess, pastor of the Mt. Zion AME Church, said some 12 Negro ministers probably will accept the invitation of the all-white Florence Pastors' Conference to join them. A joint meeting is anticipated soon.

Sumter, July 19--This city, which has been without racial demonstrations for two years, witnessed prayer groups at city hall and the courthouse.

TENNESSEE, 1963:

Knoxville, Aug. 4--Three hospitals (Baptist, Presbyterian, and Catholic) announced their simultaneous desegregation during previous week.

Knoxville, May 5--A group of Catholic and Presbyterian ministers sponsored an "Operation Friendship" in Blount and Knox Counties. Participating were 650 persons from 24 churches and synagogues. At the National Conference on Religion a and Race last January, the Interracial Home Visit program was one of the official recommendations. Chicago's Friendship House provides a service of consultation in person or by mail, "how to do it" literature, summer study weekends featuring actual participation in a Visit, and analyses of various aspects of the technique. It has assisted religious and secular groups, interfaith committees, private and civic human relations agencies, and ordinary citizens wanting to help eliminate racial discrimination at the grass roots level.

Southern cities other than Washington, D. C. and Knoxville, Tenn. where Interracial Home Visits have been held in cooperation with Friendship House are: College Park, Md.; Covington and Louisville, Ky.; and several other cities where those conducting the visits are not making them public at present.

TEXAS, 1963:

The Texas Council of Churches completed a Race Relations Progress Study in the Spring of 1962. The church report of the study consisted of 15 mimeographed pages and was one of eight commission reports studied by the conference. It was based on questionnaires completed by 873 churches (out of 4,178 mailed) and replies from 76 interdenominational agencies. The findings were presented to the Study Conference on Race Relations Progress in Texas held at Perkins School of Theology April 24-26.

TEXAS, continued:

The report revealed that chances of belonging to a racially integrated church in Texas are best when the church is: 1) a large church, 2) with a middle-class constituency, 3) composed of those with professional or graduate level training, 4) in a downtown urban location, and 5) is a Presbyterian or an Episcopal church.

One third (two-thirds of those having over 1,200 members) of the churches replying to the questionnaire claimed some degree of desegregation, token in the large majority. The conference workgroup warned that token desegregation, like a successful vaccination, often seems to retard significant integration.

Other areas studied were schools, colleges, public facilities, recreation, employment, hotels-motels-restaurants, and housing. The conference program was of high quality, but small attendance seemed to reinforce the findings of the work groups that the churches are quite willing to let government take the lead in fighting discrimination.

June 5, 1963--The Texas Annual Conference of the Methodist Church heard a report from the board of Christian Social Concerns calling upon all church-related institutions to make their service and facilities available to people of all races, and urged that the Conferences of the Central Jurisdiction (Negro) be included in the organization. The conference approved the report, but a resolution calling for the conference to go on record as favoring desegregation in all Texas Methodist schools did not get a second.

Waco, week of June 17-- At least two churches publicly announced they are open to all.

Amarillo, June 23--Approximately 40 Negroes worshipped in five white churches.

Beaumont, July 15--The Rev. Wm. B. Oliver III, of Dallas, has been appointed pastor of the Graham Congregational Church, effective September 8. He is the first white pastor to take an all-Negro church in the history of the United Church of Christ.

Dallas, July 17--The white congregation of the Cedar Crest Baptist Church has voted to admit Negroes if they appear at services. In the past several months, four Southern Baptist churches in Texas have opened their doors to Negroes, the first in the state to do so. Names of others are so far unknown.

Dallas, Aug. 4-- The city's racially-mixed South Oak Cliff area launched (under sponsorship of five white churches) a neighborhood program to promote community development and interracial cooperation.

Houston, July 2-- A third Negro, Terrance Boone, sought membership in the First Baptist Church Saturday and was referred to a conference of members. The church, of which Dr. Kenneth White, president of the Southern Baptist Association, is pastor, previously rejected membership applications of two Negroes. White said from the pulpit Sunday that the church has adopted a new policy of questioning applicants for membership.

Sherman--Biracial ministerial alliance has helped open communications on employment opportunities this year.

VIRGINIA, 1963:-

Sept. 27, 1962--The five-year-old Hemlock Haven segregation controversy ended as Southwest Virginia Episcopal laymen and clergy voted for a "separation by sex" plan at the youth camp near Marion, Va. The resolution to conduct a diocese camp passed by voice vote within ten minutes after it was introduced. The special council was called last June by the Right Rev. William H. Marmion, diocesan bishop, to decide the camp question and to take a second look at the proposed 1963 budget of $275,112 (which was not passed at the regular Council meeting last May).

VIRGINIA, continued:

Spring, 1963--The Virginia annual conference of the Methodist Church set the academic year 1964-65 as the "absolute deadline" for integration of its church-related colleges.

Charlottesville, June 3--Thirty-one ministers of the Charlottesville-Albemarle Ministerial Association met Saturday to discuss current racial problems, and 30 agreed to request city council to appoint a biracial committee.

During his Sunday sermon, the Rev. Donald A. Givens, pastor of Jefferson Park Baptist Church, said "the church's sole purpose is to win souls to Christ...each member should remember this regardless of his feelings."

Danville, July 16--Thirteen white ministers again urged Mayor Stinson to enlarge his all-white racial advisory committee "to include citizens of both races." Ministers represented Baptist, Methodist, Disciples of Christ, Lutheran, Episcopal, Presbyterian, Catholic, Jewish and Greek Orthodox churches.

Danville, Aug. 7--The First Christian Church voted to oust its pastor, the Rev. Cecil Robert Taylor (38 and father of three sons) chiefly because he was one of 13 white ministers to urge city council to appoint a biracial committee to solve racial problems during massive demonstrations in May. Shortly before the first demonstrations began, the Rev. Robert L. McCan was voted out of the First Baptist Church because of a sermon in which he encouraged an end to discrimination. This is the second time the Rev. Taylor has lost a church; he was asked to leave Sandersville, Ga., in early 1962. A native of Lynchburg, Mr. Taylor said he hoped he could stay in the South.

Fredericksburg, April--The Methodist Church admitted its first Negro member. There was some criticism of the minister, the Rev. J. William Hough, and a petition was circulated for his removal. Both the governing body of the church and the local ministerial association asked that he be reappointed. On May 26 a second Negro was admitted to membership and "occasioned no comment." Mr. Hough was reappointed June 15.

Martinsville, June 7--Henry County Christian Civic League called on local business leaders to voluntarily desegregate public facilities and employment, and requested City Council appoint an official biracial committee.

Richmond, July 7--The Rev. Robert W. Hare (white), of Raleigh, N.C., became pastor of the (Negro) First Presbyterian Church, U.S.A.

May 29--Three Episcopal bishops publicly supported the statement issued by the presiding bishop, the Rt. Rev. Arthur Lichenberger, urging members to support racial equality.

The Rt. Rev. Robt. F. Gibson, bishop of Diocese of Virginia (Richmond) reported there are integrated parishes, the youth conference at Roslyn has been integrated for several years, and the youth conference at Shrinemont in Rockingham County is integrated.

The Rt. Rev. William H. Marmion bishop of Southwestern Virginia (Roanoke) said

VIRGINIA, continued:

the diocese has integrated parishes and the youth conference is integrated by race but segregated by sex, beginning this summer (Hemlock Haven near Marion).

The Rt. Rev. George P. Gunn, bishop of Southern Virginia, supported the statement but did not report any integration.

The bishops also noted that St. Stephen's School in Alexandria has accepted a Negro student and a Negro girl is on the waiting list of St. Catherine's School in Richmond. Her application has been approved by the board.

WASHINGTON, D. C., 1963:

October, 1962--Interracial home visits, patterned on those begun in 1955 by Friendship House, a Catholic interracial organization with headquarters in Chicago, began in the Washington, D. C. area. In January the Chicago consultation committee was co-sponsor with Protestant and Jewish groups for a metropolitan-wide mass Interracial Home Visit Day that brought 2,500 white visitors to the homes of 500 middle-class Negro hosts. In March the same interfaith committee arranged a second mass visit day, with a similar number of hosts--this time white--inviting in white neighbors and leading a discussion with Negro guests on equal housing opportunities.

June, 1963--Trustees of the House of Mercy, a home for unwed mothers, operated by the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Washington, D. C., voted to disregard race in future admissions. In its 70 years the home has never admitted a Negro woman, but the diocese had threatened to cut off financial aid if it failed to integrate.

June 14--Clergymen participated in the protest against racial discrimination in a silent march from the White House to the Justice Department.

Aug. 28-- More than 40,000 clergy and church members participated in the national demonstration before the Lincoln Memorial to dramatize the Negro demand for jobs and freedom from discrimination. The demonstration also supported the President's legislative program now before Congress.

* * *

Example of Church Ambivalence: The First Baptist Church of Atlanta, Ga.

(This account of attempts by Negroes to attend an Atlanta church is given in detail because of its extreme example of what can happen in a Southern church.)

April 21--Several Negro ministerial students have attempted to attend services at the First Baptist Church in the past few weeks, both on Sunday morning and at Wednesday night prayer meeting. Prior to this date Negroes had been admitted but were seated in the basement where the overflow crowd from the sanctuary listened to services over a public address system. On April 21 three Negro students were forcibly ejected, while one remained and another voluntarily left. Amos Brown, Morehouse ministerial student who was "dragged" out of the church by an usher, he said, commented that he had listened to the services on television "It would be terrific if he [Dr. McClain, pastor] tried to put into action some of the things he preaches about on Sunday morning." On May 2, 14 Negro and white theological students were turned away from prayer meeting.

May 17--In Detroit, Michigan to deliver chapel messages to the American Baptist Convention, Dr. Roy O. McClain agreed to meet with 30 ministers, most of them

Negroes, who were disturbed by reports that Negroes had not been allowed to worship in his church. Dr. McClain told his critics the First Baptist Church has no policy on integration or segregation. He said he'd had meetings with groups in the church trying to develop a better climate where integration could take place. "As far as I personally am concerned," Dr. McClain said, "I'm for integration." The ministers had asked the program committee to remove McClain from the program, but the committee declined.

June 24--An integrated group of eight students attended evening services despite being asked to leave by one usher. The area was roped off by ushers. On June 30 and July 7, a group of Negro and white students were turned away while Dr. McClain, on televisinn, preached "ignorance is the mother of prejudice," and called prejudice "a cancer" which "will kill you, literally; it will eat your innards out." The group began picketing the church on July 7. They returned for evening services and an elderly white minister from California (already under $500 bond for attempting to enter the church with the group on June 30) was arrested and charged with "disorderly conduct-demented" on complaint of the pastor. He charged in court that he was dragged down the church steps by his heels. During the morning demonstration, radio and television newsmen were asked to leave their cameras outside the church or not come in. One usher came down the steps and placed his hand over the lens of a TV newsman's camera photographing the pickets.

A crowd of white men, most dressed in sport shirts or tee shirts and slacks, gathered across Peachtree Street from the church during most of the morning service. Their comments on the situation rose to catcalling and jeers. They were not arrested or removed.

Nathan J. Porter, a young Brazilian-born Baptist minister who is a member of First Baptist, led a brief impromptu worship service with the whites and Negroes who were picketing the church after being refused entrance. Mr. Porter is a member of the Southern Baptist Home Mission Board here. He spoke briefly with the group on the power of love and the need for forgiveness. The quiet demonstration seemed to bring more extreme reactions from onlookers and church members than on previous Sundays. A girl of college age walked down the church steps and away in tears after the service. Other members came down the steps, between the rows of pickets, with grim, drawn faces. After almost everyone had left the church grounds, except a few ushers clustered close to the building and the pickets who stood stolidly on either side of the front steps, a beautiful, blonde little girl came to stand at the center of the scene and leaned on a handrail on the steps. The little girl stood and looked quietly for a long time, neither smiling nor frowning, until the pickets dispersed.

Aug. 25--The white minister who was arrested received the maximum misdemenor sentence: 12 months in prison and six months in public work camp plus $1,000 fine. His case has been appealed. On Sept. 17 he was removed to Grady Hospital because of a hunger strike, for intravenous feeding if necessary.

Officials testified against Jones and passed charges; we should mention.

Rel-Soc

1963

THE MESSAGE

IN THE NAME OF GOD, THE FATHER; JESUS CHRIST, OUR LORD; AND THE INDWELLING SPIRIT.

Greetings --

Methodists from all parts of the United States and overseas have gathered in Chicago, Illinois at the call of eleven general agencies of our Church, to search for God's Will for Ourselves, our Church and our Society --

I. THE BASIS OF OUR INVOLVEMENT

God made us one in his act of creation, one in his act of redemption of all mankind through Jesus Christ, and one in the fellowship of the Church, through the presence of His Holy Spirit among us. This oneness demands that the Church involve itself in today's racial crisis.

Though race problems are rooted in tradition and social practices, basically these involve the nature of God, the purpose of life, the way of salvation, and the essentials of the Christian faith. To violate the oneness of mankind is to violate our faith.

For the Christian every moment is a call to live with God for our neighbor. The urgency of God's call and the magnitude of evils which destroy our oneness compel us to daily obedience to Him.

The Church is that body which covenants to obey gladly the demands of God's urgent call. Taking "the form of a servant" in the world for the sake of the world, the Church must not hesitate to pronounce God's judgment upon itself and the world. Therefore, we, as members individually and corporately of Christ's body, should repeatedly inquire:

1) Where is The Methodist Church currently in its structure and program in regard to race relations?
2) What are the immediate goals toward which The Methodist Church should move in race relations?
3) How can The Methodist Church make the greatest progress toward these goals?

II. THE CALL TO INVOLVEMENT

The Church

We are deeply troubled in our proclamation of the Gospel to the world by the conflict between our confession and our practice of race relations in the life and structure of our Church. We must have the courage to sense God's judgment, and to examine our complacent indifference. We must become so definitely identified and involved in the struggle for justice and human righteousness that we bear within ourselves the suffering of those who are victims of injustice.

Before the Church can proclaim the Kingdom's coming to the world, we must repent of our loss of true oneness in the inner life of the Christian community. As a Church we will earn the right to call our communities to repentance only when we have corrected the un-Christlike practices we have allowed in His body.

The Methodist Church is now called to an inner suffering which will allow for its own change. It is called to a losing of what it has been and for a risking of what it is.

Thus we will be freed from our preoccupation with our own structure and from an absorption in our own life.

The Methodist Church is called to change now -- to remove the symbol and fact of racial segregation in order that it may give itself as a living sacrifice in an age when the Holy Spirit might use its body.

The call to suffer is to all Methodists, regardless of race or color.

We must all of us desire a oneness so much that we do not hold back for the lack of a blueprint for its immediate effectiveness.

The hour is upon us to stride forward in faith. Problems inherent in inclusiveness must be solved; such as acceptance of the principle of inclusiveness in all aspects of local church life, pulpits open to all ministers, salary and pension adjustments, adequate and continued representation.

We, therefore, urgently recommend:

1) That the 1964 General Conference be requested to call upon all Jurisdictional Conferences to take immediate steps to effect the transfer of the Annual Conferences of the Central Jurisdiction into regional jurisdictions,

2) To call upon the regional jurisdictions to merge the Central Jurisdiction Annual Conferences so transferred with existing or newly created Annual Conferences of the regional jurisdictions. These transfers and mergers shall be completed not later than 1968.

3) It is recommended, further, that the Commission on Inter-Jurisdictional Relations and the Committee of Five be requested to work out an over-all plan to facilitate the transfers and mergers incident to the abolition of the Central Jurisdiction.

4) That the Council on World Service and Finance provide the funds, equitably apportioned to all conferences, needed to equalize salaries and pensions.

5) That in every conference bishops and cabinets carefully prepare the ground for the assignment of pastors, and district superintendents without regard to race.

6) That in every local church membership, service and office be clearly available to anyone who is willing and able, without regard to race.

7) That we make it perfectly clear on all levels of the church's life

   a) that in our schools and colleges there is no racial line for teachers or students,

   b) that our hospitals and homes are available to physicians, interns, residents, nurses, administrators and patients without regard to race,

   c) that in our homes for young and old those who minister and those who are ministered to, are selected without regard to race,

   d) that all agencies, boards, and commissions, are to be constituted and are to secure and promote staff members and employees without regard to race.

We acknowledge that the Church belongs to God. For too long we have behaved as if it belongs to man. We cannot prevent another person from approaching the altar of God because of his race without being guilty of grievous sin. It is no part of a white Christian's obligation to test the motives of Negroes who enter a house of worship, since God himself tests all our motives alike. If the Christian fellowship is to be the true body of Christ, it must include all who come, without regard to race. Leaders in an effort to bring about these conditions shall be supported by Bishops, District Superintendents and all fellow Methodists.

Youth are called the hope of the future, the church of tomorrow. However, youth are in the church today. They are, they desire to be, and they need to be a part of the church in this time, not in some vague future time. By destiny youth today are bound in the citizenship of a changing era. This era calls upon the liberality, the idealism and the dedication of youth so to condition themselves that their children may be raised in the enlightenment of non-prejudice and an atmosphere of freedom. It is the obligation of the church to challenge youth to break with the traditions and customs of the past that are offensive to God. It is for youth to accept the imperatives of the Christian gospel in their own society and the society of the adult world, remembering how Paul challenged the young man Timothy to be an example to his elders.

The Methodist Church has been given by God the privilege of witnessing to Him in 44 nations of the earth. There we have members and churches made up of the people of these nations. Many are involved in the world-wide revolution which seeks to throw off all hindrances to development into full manhood as we see it in Jesus Christ. We rejoice whenever missionaries and national Christian leaders in such places as Angola, Rhodesia, Mozambique and many other nations make their clear witness for full human rights. It is a part of the world mission of the Church for us who live in the United States to work openly and devotedly for the removing from our national and church life of all un-Christian conditions in human affairs.

The World

A. Public Schools

The Methodist Church has long declared its belief in and support of the public school system of our nation. Now it must demand that the benefits of public education be provided to all without any reservation because of race. It must work toward the full integration of schools.

We recognize that segregated housing makes more difficult the integration of schools. Past discrimination has created inequalities in the readiness of white and Negro pupils. Also the lack of job opportunities for persons of color destroys many incentives for pursuing an education. Therefore, we commit ourselves to the immediate goal of helping to create and sustain for every child the opportunity to learn in a setting which gives respect to him as a person, and encourages him to develop every possible gift which God has given him.

Furthermore, integrated educational facilities are imperative in order that the children of those who are white may not be isolated from an actual society and be unprepared to live in a real world. A child, Negro or white, educated in a segregated school is deprived of meaningful friendships and adequate social understanding.

B. Right to Vote

Every citizen of a democracy has the right to vote. To deny this right to any citizen is to weaken the nation. To refuse to exercise this responsibility is to encourage democracy's demise.

It is the duty of a Christian to exercise his franchise and to seek to remove all barriers that deprive any person of his right to vote.

C. Civil Justice

Although we are a nation founded on respect for law, it is incredible that police handling, jail conditions and court procedures in many communities still grieviously violate human dignity and American democractic principles. The correction of these abuses ought to come from the local communities, or failing this, from other levels of government in defense of civil rights. It is the function of the Church and the Christian man to call such violations to the attention of the community conscience and to work for their correction.

D. Housing

In all parts of the nation segregated housing contributes to other types of discrimination.

Christians must insist that all people have the freedom to reside wherever their economic means and their personal wishes permit.

We further believe that the local church should prepare its members to live in integrated neighborhoods and challenge them to help in creating fully inclusive communities. The practice of Christian principles in this matter will eliminate the panic and economic problems which might otherwise result. In addition, Christians must work for local, state and federal legislation directed to insure freedom of residence. The barriers erected in this area are subtle and difficult to remove. However, we call upon all persons particularly those engaged in real estate and financing to seek to correct abuses in housing and put into practice Jesus' injunction to regard all men as neighbors.

E. Employment

Another area where discrimination prevails is in employment and the upgrading of employees. A nation-wide effort in training is called for to offset the devastating effects of long-term segregated school systems. As members of minority races are trained, jobs for which they are capable should be made available on all levels. In no case should there be different levels of compensation for the different races when persons with the same qualifications are engaged in the same work.

F. Public Accommodations

The issue of discrimination in public accommodations has been dramatized by the "sit-in movements" of recent years. Any business or institution open to the public is obligated to serve all the public.

Let no person refuse services to customers or applicants because of race.

Where community patterns of rejection are encountered in such public facilities as restaurants, hotels, motels, hospitals and recreational areas, Christians should use all their influence to change those patterns.

G. Social Change

Christians are committed to the principle of positive outgoing Christian love as the method of effecting social change. We, therefore, urge the use of persuasion, negotiation, concilation and reasonable patience as the preferred method.

Extensive gains have recently been made in community transformation from the direct action of religiously motivated Negroes with minimum participation of white Christians. The desirable goal is for communities to take corrective action voluntarily. When community officials fail, however, to take steps voluntarily it becomes necessary for citizens to call attention to the grievances. In communities where the political, business or religious leadership has shown a willingness to engage in bi-racial talks looking toward the correction of grievances, public demonstrations have proved unnecessary. White Christians have not participated in direct action demonstrations in any large number during the present summer, however, many have become involved.

Each Christian must carefully examine his commitment to see if he does not now feel called to become personally involved in such witness.

While it is widely stated that "outsiders" inflame local situations, let the Church be the first to attest that in the fellowship of Jesus Christ and in the unity of the human family there is no "outside." Any man's deprivation is every man's concern. If the body of Christ is wounded at any point, all members of that body feel the hurt. The rights of American citizens are the proper concern of every American citizen.

III. COMMITMENT TO INVOLVEMENT

We call on every Methodist to rediscover a unique sense of joy in living in these days. The tensions of our times are the result of the stirrings of the Kingdom of God for which we pray in Our Lord's Prayer. As self-confessed followers of the Christ whose most redemptive act came out of the tensions in the streets of his city and from his death on a cross, let us now search our lives for the markings of that cross on our hearts.

We are called by Our Lord, who in His coming to earth identified himself with our agony and need, to identify ourselves with the agony and need of all men. We rejoice to bear the name of the One who bore in his body the sufferings of others. Let us now take into our own bodies the experiences and feel the rejections of our brothers.

Thus we shall come to a new kinship with Christ which will release us into joy.

-25 ff.: Need a topical summary of significant actions (+ statements) by denominational bodies....
-x: all the strong action re on housing, employment, investment, etc.

pp. 38 ff.: Spike 35 comments

THE CHURCH AND RACE: A REPORT ON THE ROLE OF RELIGION IN RACE RELATIONS

-38f.: Put stuff on NCC Commission on Rel. & Race ahead of chronological stuff.

I. NEW SOCIAL CONCERN OF AMERICAN RELIGION

-Need a ¶ at end of Part I explaining organization of the essay

Rel-Soc 1963

During 1963 the church, through its national leaders, has moved in the area of race relations with a swiftness and decisiveness it has not displayed for more than a century. In joining Negro Americans in their struggle for equal rights, the church is not attempting to assume leadership of the movement; it only wishes to serve and to aid. This service and aid has included taking part in the now famous "March on Washington" of August 28, 1963 as well as participation in other nonviolent demonstrations (e.g., 36 clergymen, including the Rev. Dr. Eugene Carson Blake, chief executive officer of the United Presbyterian Church, were among the 283 persons arrested during an attempt to integrate an all-white amusement park just outside Baltimore on July 4, 1963.). In addition, interfaith committees have been formed in at least 40 cities, and small groups of leading clergymen are prepared to go to areas of racial unrest and disturbance.

are at work in

A number of religious bodies have formed activist groups both within and without the organizational structure of the church for a concerted attack on racial discrimination. Much of the groundwork for the current activism was laid last January at the National Conference on Religion and Race held in Chicago. Representatives of the major religious faiths agreed that the church had played a too timid role in resolving racial problems and set up a committee to assist organized religion in transforming into action the ideas and plans discussed during the conference. The new program of active participation of the clergy in demonstrations protesting racial segregation heralds a new and impressive determination by church leaders to "do something." How much effect this active intervention is going to have cannot yet be predicted ~~measured~~. If it spreads to the average church and church member throughout the nation so that there is both community and national support of civil rights programs and legislation, it is bound to have great impact. If it means only participation ~~and support~~ by national offices and support by denominational boards of the announced objectives by most denominations in eliminating barriers in employment, housing, education, voting, and public facilities, the influence will not be very so effective. This summer and fall ~~may~~ be a decisive period in American history, religious and secular.

Mention some of the speakers

⊙ from p. 2

★ p. 43: crucial recommendation

So far, enthusiasm for personal involvement in the direct action movement is mainly (though not entirely) confined to national religious bodies and northern churches and clergy. It is recognized that this commitment of the church may cause some internal agony and strife, but many religious leaders believe it may inspire a spiritual rebirth within the church. It may, also, be an aid in reducing violence and bringing about reconciliation in strife-torn communities.

OMIT

This new awareness of the church's responsibility in race relations was very evident in the Chicago Conference on Race and Religion. There seemed to be a realization that education in the faith of the church must include not only the instruction of members in the beliefs of the church, but what the church expects man to do. Education in principles of religious belief must also teach the application of these principles by the individual.

The "kneel-ins" by the Negro students (often accompanied by white ministerial students), which were the outgrowth and continuation of the Student Protest Movement begun in February 1960, have spotlighted the failure of many local churches to combat racial injustice. The applications of Negro students to church-related colleges have forced a reexamination of conscience by the religious groups which continue to maintain segregated facilities.

insert on p. 1

Especially in southern communities, religious groups can be helpful in reducing the racial friction which accompanies and follows demonstrations, demands for equal opportunities, and desegregation. A common religion is a bond which acts as a powerful reconciling force however few the numbers are, and cultural change through the influence of persons on persons is a process which does not lend itself to precise measurement, one which cannot be accurately described or analyzed.

An increased awareness of the role of religion in race relations--that of bringing to bear the moral and social strength of the church against racism--has been evident since the late fall of 1962. The Rev. Dr. George D. Kelsey, professor of Christian ethics at Drew University, declared that racism, which is a much more serious internal threat to the United States than communism, is also a religion and a natural foe of Christianity. He emphasized this point with a convincing theological insight:*

> Racism must be understood for what it is--a religion competing with the Christian faith. The racist affirmation of superiority is not, as is commonly supposed, merely a social theory. Rather, it is an affirmation of faith, a declaration concerning the nature of human being. The racist consciousness affirms the condemnation of one race and the creative destiny of another by Nature. This is a conviction concerning the nature of human being, concerning the givenness of human nature. ...
>
> According to Christian faith man is made in the image of God. Herein lies his dignity. The gift of the image is an act of pure grace. The dignity of man is accordingly bestowed. It is not an acquisition, nor is it a quality which he possesses. The glory of the image of God is only reflectively in man. Man finds his life as man only in so far as he lives by love, the Divine Word. The idea that man is created in the image of God means that he is created in, by, and for love. Man is being-in-relation. He is truly man and is truly free when he responds to God in obedient love.

Commenting editorially on Dr. Kelsey's definition of racism (Racism: The Nation's False Religion, February 6, 1963) the Christian Century warned:

> The tragedy for American Christianity is that whereas communism is recognized as a foe of Christian faith, racism is not. On the contrary, racism has its most virulent forms within the Christian church and among Christian people. In some quarters racism even receives blessings derived from distorted biblical study and twisted theology. This enemy, unrecognized or else dignified by corrupt codes of genteel morality, destroys the Christian faith from within. There is no way to escape, no way to conquer this enemy unless we see that racism is, as Kelsey puts it, "diametrically opposed to the insights of Christian faith."

Since 1954 every major religious body has issued statements on race. The statements have been direct, explicit, and unequivocal on one point: that enforced segregation is morally and spiritually wrong. These resolutions of the national boards and at national conferences (which most local churches have disregarded and many have publicly repudiated) served to affirm the opinions and beliefs of the majority of ministers--and also to salve their consciences. This is not to say that the resolutions had no influence. They have been useful as standards around which moderates could rally and as weapons with which the more social conscious could defend themselves.

* In a message issued for Race Relations Sunday, February 10, 1963, by the National Council of Churches. The Council includes 33 Protestant and orthodox denominations with about 40,000,000 members.

In communities wrestling with the problems of social change, the statements or manifestos prepared and signed by white ministers have been more cautious and have dealt mainly with appeals to "law and order" and for "communication."

Same ¶

More recent statements by both local ministerial groups and ministers have stressed "freedom of the pulpit"; increasing numbers of courageous clergymen have dared to say publicly that the acknowledgment of the fatherhood of God must include the brotherhood of man.

Even in 1958 a few local ministerial groups issued statements which included the basic Judeo-Christian ethic*. Two examples are the statements of the Gainesville-Hall County (Ga.) Ministerial Association: "As Christians we must reflect the mind of Christ, not the attitudes and practices of the community...we are brothers by creation, by need and by redemption"; and that of the 300 Dallas ministers: "racial problems are moral and spiritual as well as political matters ...the only solution to this or any other problem of human relations lies in the application of the concept of Christian love in which we seek for others that which we desire for ourselves." But only in Mississippi, beginning soon after the Oxford riots last Fall, have statements by local groups of ministers said anything about the wrongfulness, sinfulness, or immorality of segregation while both public sentiment and the legal and political structure of the state have been aligned against desegregation.

What are the reasons for the church's past failure in race relations? Will D. Campbell, who served for seven years as director of the Southern office of the Department of Racial and Cultural Relations, National Council of Churches, in his book, Race and the Renewal of the Church, cited the following: the preoccupation with law and order, the emphasis on humanistic arguments for desegregation, the often uncritical reliance on sociological approaches, and the organizational structure of American Protestantism. But he believes there is still (time for the church, if indeed it is still the church*, to find its life and be renewed. This is how Campbell answers arguments for a slower and more careful pace:

* "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." Matthew 22:37-40.

> The early church did not exist in utopia. Neither did it have the notion we seem to have today that if it could somehow change the society in which it existed into a sea of tolerance and brotherly love then it could truly be the church. It is dishonest and cowardly to assume that if we can make culture into what the church wishes it to be but isn't, the church can then be what it ought to be. The church will not regain its health when it is able to influence society to desegregate the many aspects of its life. Originally it was because of the brokenness, the misery of society, that the church could have any identification, any existence at all. We may be living in such a time.

---

* For the purpose of this report we are defining the church visible as a group of people who have made a covenant with God and have, therefore, accepted certain dogmas, precepts, and ethics according to their denominational polity and practice; and the church spiritual(transcendent: that which is the essence) as the body of Christ, the mystical force which unites all true believers to make them one.

II. THE CHURCH'S VOICE AND VIEWS YESTERDAY

Good

> It is asking too much of the church as an institution to take any forthright stand on any issue, especially if it is controversial. The very nature of an ecclesiastical organization is such that it will never rise to the occasion when decisions are called for. ...The church follows, it does not lead. It can come along after a decision has been made by the community and hallow that decision and make it holy, but it cannot or will not make the decision and lead others to it.*

The majority of the manifestos issued in previous years by local Southern groups of ministers, usually on the eve of desegregation of the public schools after a court order, tend to support this evaluation of the role of the church: it has tended to reflect society rather than mold it.

On November 3, 1957, a statement dealing with the "keep the schools open" crisis in Atlanta and signed by 80 ministers, was released for publication. At this time statements by public officials and states' rights groups were solidly opposed to any desegregation. The six principles set forth in this statement as essential to a solution are summarized below:

1. Freedom of speech must at all costs be preserved.
2. As Americans and as religious leaders, we have an obligation to obey the law.
3. The Public School System must not be destroyed.
4. Hatred and scorn for those of another race, or for those who hold a position different from our own, can never be justified.
5. Communication between responsible leaders of the races must be maintained.
6. Our difficulties cannot be solved in our own strength or in human wisdom but only through prayer and in obedience to the will of God.

On November 22, 1958 a second statement, signed by 312 ministers and rabbis representing 16 denominations, reaffirmed the six principles set forth in the first manifesto and added a proposal of three "practical steps."

---

* From a report on "The Role of the Church in Desegregation Efforts in Atlanta," by the Rev. Samuel Williams, pastor of the Friendship Baptist Church and professor of philosophy and religion at Morehouse College, Atlanta, Ga., to the Nashville Conference on The Ethical Demands of Integration, December 27-29, 1962. The conference was co-sponsored by the Fellowship of Southern Churchmen and the Southern Regional Council.

1. We appeal to our churches and synagogues to encourage and promote within their fellowship a free and intelligent discussion of the issues we confront.
2. We appeal to our community and state leaders to give their most creative thought to maintaining a sound public school plan.
3. We request the appointment of a Citizens' Commission to preserve the harmony of our community.

The churches were only asked to promote discussion of the issues. Nowhere was it said that segregation was morally wrong and should, therefore, be ended. Instead, under Principle 2 the statement said:

> ...However, we believe that the Constitution of the United States in its provisions for human rights is in accord with Divine Law, and we must, therefore, learn to live with and under the law.
>
> We do not believe in the wisdom of massive integration and are sincerely opposed to the amalgamation of the races. We reaffirm our conviction that the integrity of each race should be maintained on a basis of mutual esteem and free choice, rather than of force. ...We believe it is possible, under the ruling of the Supreme Court, for States to take reasonable steps to comply with the law of the land and at the same time give due consideration to local situations and avoid an indiscriminate desegregation of the public schools.

by

There were two exceptions to the general attitude of the Atlanta churches: the Religious Society of Friends and the Unitarians, both interracial groups. The Friends, in particular, worked with groups of students, parents, and teachers before the Atlanta school desegregation.

Similar statements came from 60 members of the Richmond (Va.) Ministers Association; 31 Protestant ministers and two rabbis in Columbus (Ga.); 173 clergymen--Jewish, Protestant and Roman Catholic --in Houston (Texas); the Baptist Ministers Union of Chattanooga (Tenn.) 76 members of the Norfolk Ministers Association; and 300 clergymen in Dallas (Texas).

But even in 1958, with all the preoccupation about orderly school desegregation, there were some statements by local ministerial groups which did advocate Judeo-Christian principles. One, the Christian Guide to Race Relations, which was adopted April 28, 1958 by the Gainesville-Hall County (Ga.) Ministerial Association, declared that "as Christians we must reflect the mind of Christ, not the attitudes and practices of the community in which we live." Its principles are summarized below:

1. The Bible and science teach that God made of one blood all nations of men.

2. We are brothers by creation, by need, by redemption.
3. Men's rights, liberties, opportunities and privileges are guaranteed to them by their Creator and Redeemer as individial persons, rather than as members of a race or nation.
4. In His Kingdom there are no races, only two humanities: those of Adam, of the flesh, and those born of Christ, of the Spirit...we must live by the laws of His Kingdom.
5. The Christian's love causes him to identify himself with all men. For a tradition to block this self-identifying love is to violate God's compassion.

In Falls Church and Fairfax County (Va.) 48 ministers in the late summer of 1958 signed and circulated a statement which declared, in part: "Enforced segregation not only defies the basic law of the land but, more importantly, contradicts that very Gospel which we are called to preach. ...We state our conviction that enforced segregation in our schools on the basis of race is contrary to the will of God. We are opposed to all attempts to circumvent the law, including the use of church facilities as a substitute for the school system." This statement was issued during the most embarrassing period of church race relations in Virginia. A survey of clergymen (announced July 1958) in Charlottesville (Va.) disclosed that of 17 ministers polled, 11 said they would be opposed to the use of churches for private schools. Five ministers said they were sure their churches would be made available if needed. Various churches of the major denominations--Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, Episcopal--had cooperated in the plan of using church buildings for private schools for white children only after the public school system had been closed by the segregationists. No provision for the education of Negro children was made.

Even the National Council of Churches did not speak very forcefully on race in 1958. On November 28 the Council urged churches to "express strong support for the implementation of the Supreme Court decision concerning school integration." It added: "The churches must begin with themselves. There is a great gulf between what they say on a national level and what they do or encourage or permit in many communities." The message for Race Relations Sunday, issued by the council's Department of Racial and Cultural Relations, was more emphatic and charged that Christians have too long accepted a "system riddled by prejudice and injustice." The message urged local churches to reexamine their attitudes and behavior in the light of the Christian gospel, opening membership in the church without regard to race.

Resolutions on Race: National

In 1958 most denominations passed resolutions dealing with race; a few brief examples are here given:

The first National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice:

> The desegregation of the nation's schools is not merely a legal question but it is also a deep moral issue.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, U.S.:

> All people have been created in the image of God and are to be treated as such...men are essentially one.

The Southern Baptist Convention:

> Urged Baptists to "help and not hinder the progress of justice for all peoples...strengthening fellowship with people of every race" and denounced social usages that "deny basic American freedoms" to any citizen.

The Episcopal Bishops:

> Called on Christian leadership to heal the nation's "urgent and frightening" racial divisions and to "obey the laws of this land and do all in their power to substitute reason for emotion in the solution of America's fierce racial tensions. They called on religious and civic leaders to reject "easy standards of local expediency" in matters of racial discrimination and urged them to provide a "creative and positive leadership so that all races may enjoy "without discrimination and without separation all opportunities" of church and civil life. Among these it included education, housing, employment, and public accommodations.
>
> A resolution passed by the House of Deputies shortly before the Bishop's resolution condemned "civil disobedience" and called upon all church members to "face seriously their obligation to conform to Federal and Supreme Court orders in regard to giving all students equal access to our public schools." It urged churchgoers to "cleanse themselves of all spirit of racial discrimination," and said that discrimination by reason of color or race between men had its root in "human sin."

The Roman Catholic Bishops:

> Appealed to "responsible and sober-minded Americans of all religious faiths, in all areas of our land," to "seize the mantle of leadership from the agitator and the racist." They took a firm moral stand against compulsory racial segregation and noted that "discrimination based on the accidental fact of race or color cannot be reconciled with the truth that God has created all men with equal rights and equal dignity."

The Council of Bishops of the Methodist Church:

> We earnestly urge all our people to accept the ruling of the courts in good faith...we commend our people who, while not > always sharing the same attitude on integration, are determined to demonstrate in their own lives the qualities of understanding, tolerance and brotherhood."

Although the above statements stressed obedience to law, there was no recognition of the possibility of a compromise on moral grounds. All the eminent churchmen agreed that the stigma of inequality within the "family of the children of God" is morally intolerable. However, the statements carefully refrained from calling for an end to segregation in the church. As the religious leaders of the nation were issuing their pronouncements and resolutions for the enlightenment and guidance of their members, resistence to desegregation was increasing within the church all over the South. By 1959 many prosegregation groups had been formed to put pressure on the local minister and church. The Methodist Laymen's Union was organized in Birmingham, Ala. on March 19, 1959; the Association of Catholic Laymen of New Orleans had been organized in 1957; a Dallas Pastors' Segregation Committee was organized in May, 1958; "Concerned Churchmen," a prosegregation group of the Episcopal Church in North Carolina, was organized in August of 1958; and the Presbyterian Laymen for Sound Doctrine and Responsible Leadership was organized in Jackson, Miss., in October 1959 with chapters in Memphis, Tenn., and Sumter, S. C.

During this trying period, some individual ministers were taking courageous stands in their churches, and all over the South clergymen were taking leading roles in interracial groups working for integration. Many were officers or executives in councils on human relations. The main theme of the human relations groups during this period was also law and order, although many also urged members to live up to their religious convictions.

In his discussion of the preoccupation of the church with "law and order," Will Campbell* declared:

> Before 1954, most liberal churches and churchmen were not insistent upon a doctrinaire position of strict obedience to the law. Today the American churches argue that segregation must be abolished because it is illegal.
>
> ...Advising their people to desegregate because the law said to do so seemed less risky than taking a bold position based on the Christian doctrine of man, the Biblical imperative of justice, and the sovereignty of God.

Campbell noted that in 1960, after the sit-in movement, the General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., the

* Race and Renewal of the Church

National Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and several other groups discarded the "let us obey the law" position and began advocating civil disobedience. He continued:

> ...we must say quite frankly that it appears that the churches have often used it [the appeal to law] to evade their deeper responsibility. It has been the easy way. But the church has not always appealed to law for the righteousness of its action.*

This slow awakening of church conscience contrasts sharply with the lethargy of most southern church-goers. There have been, of course, a few isolated instances of great courage, of forthright statements and actions by some adherents to all the faiths. But their very scarcity points up all the more forcefully how inneffective the faith of the church has been in its application to everyday living.

---

* In South Carolina 180 years ago, Presbyterians had to build their little churches with an open fireplace. When the Angelican sheriff came along the worshippers could say that they were merely visiting a private dwelling.

Need a statement explaining why Ala. + Miss are the only ones covered in text rather than appendix. I also recommend inclusion of revised + shortened matl. in pp. 25-31 in main text. (Nat'l statement)

III. THE CHURCH'S VOICE AND VIEWS TODAY

What the church is saying in 1962-1963 about racism indicates a great change in attitude, a coming to grips with the racial problem. The growing spirit of brotherhood in all religious bodies, though uneven and even fragile, leads to a hope that the full weight of religious cooperation and influence may yet prove to be a decisive factor in changing the hearts and minds of people and accomplishing goals of interracial cooperation.

Alabama: Law-and-Order, and Brotherhood.

Although the 1962-1963 statements by Alabama ministerial groups seem to echo the 1958 refrain of "law and order," they do include slightly stronger pronouncements on freedom of speech, the responsibility of elected public officials, and the fatherhood of God. In Alabama the official state attitude is defiance of federal desegregation decrees. There has been little evidence of widespread public opposition to state policy. There is more and stronger organized opposition to change in Alabama than in any other state except Mississippi.

On October 9, 1962, the Huntsville Ministers' Association adopted a statement stating that "every human being is created in the image of God and is entitled to respect as a fellow human being with all basic rights, privileges and responsibilities; warning that "defiance is neither the answer nor the solution, nor are inflammatory and rebellious statements of the type...that will save us from violence, discord, and confusion; and urging all citizens to "abide in the meantime with a peaceful acceptance of the decisions of the same courts with regard to desegregation cases which we know inevitably will be made in Alabama." A similar statement was adopted on November 1, 1962, by 30 members of the Montgomery Baptist Pastors' Conference. They called on state officials to "maintain order" and urged Alabama leaders to "refrain from inflammatory statements and activities...designed to incite riots and mob action..."

Two month later, on January 17, 1963, eleven Alabama religious leaders jointly offered for public and, obviously, gubernatorial consideration, an opinion on the race situation. It clearly proclaimed opposition to earlier denunciatory statements in Alabama about courts, federal orders, and the defiant inaugural address by Governor George Wallace pledging that he would maintain segregation.

The conservative Birmingham News commented favorably on the statement in an editorial on January 20, 1963:

> Whether the individual citizen agrees with the clerics' state ment or not, it is the News' opinion that they say rightly that freedom of speech must be "preserved and exercised."
>
> There is a vast near-silence as to opinion not that reflected in the inaugural address.
>
> Is there no such opinion--other than that of a handfull?
>
> The ministers have added to the above the phrase, "...without fear of recrimination or harassment." Clergymen place a condition which should not be expected.
>
> There is ample freedom to speak. But he who speaks must anticipate, if he is saying the unpopular, recrimination, even harassment, That is the root cause of near-silence--few dare risk expressing a contrary point of view.
>
> Men of the cloth have spoken. Will anyone else? Silence indicates even to our own people that so vast is support for projected official policy that opposition is not to be expected.
>
> Some may plan to speak out--later. But as to this there is only uncertainty as deep as silence itself.

During the week-end of May 18-19, 1963, the Woman's Society of Christian Service and the Wesleyan Service Guild of the North Alabama Conference of the Methodist Church, representing some 24,000 churchwomen in North Alabama, issued a plea to keep Alabama schools open in the face of possible desegregation. They called for observance of law and order and urged the churchwomen to strive to create a climate of understanding and good will in the communities in which they live.

Bishop Nolan B. Harmon, the presiding bishop of the North Alabama Methodist Conference, on June 12, 1963, called attempts by Governor George Wallace to block entry of two Negro students at the University of Alabama "a moral mistake and in the long run a political blunder." Ministerial and lay delegates to the annual conference gave Bishop Harmon a standing ovation after he read a statement he said he felt "compelled to make." The bishop added that it is not the business of the church to direct the state, "but it is the business of the church to speak when state forces are so directed as to injure the God-given rights of any man." Governor Wallace is a Methodist layman.

Some statements were issued by the clergy which reflect the segregationist point of view. ~~An analysis of these, and of segregationist action in the church, will be found in Section VI, THE BLACK MUSLIMS AND THE RELIGIOUS RIGHT WING~~. ~~Some~~ Examples of such statements follow:

delete

May 13, 1963. The Birmingham Baptist Association's Executive Committee and the Birmingham Baptist Pastor's Conference called for "self-examination and prayer" by Birmingham area residents toward resolving the crisis facing the city. They "deplored illegal demonstrations and the use of children in them"; abhorred "acts of violence, bombings, and acts coolly calculated to provoke violence"; requested non-residents of Birmingham to leave to local men of good will the working out of differences"; and commended "the law enforcement officers of city, county and state, for their forebearance and self-control in carrying out their official duties."

June 2, 1963. Episcopal Bishop (George Miseley) Murray, Coajutor of Alabama, stated to The Living Church that the cause of the Birmingham demonstrations was a power struggle for leadership among the city's Negro community. He added that the "police and sheriff's forces have been exemplary in their conduct during these demonstrations and have been gentle but firm in the enforcement of the law. Only in the very last few days, under extreme provocation, in the face of wild demonstrations by thousands of marchers who refuse to turn back when lawfully ordered to do so, have the police needed to use fire hoses... and police dogs--on leashes--for their own protection."

June 6, 1963, Montgomery. Although it adopted a resolution asserting there is "no Scriptural warrant" for segregation, the Alabama-West Florida Methodist Conference elected three lay segregationists to represent them at the 1964 quadrennial Methodist General Conference. Among the delegates was Governor George Wallace of Alabama, an ardent segregationist.

OMIT

Mississippi: Freedom of the Pulpit. In Mississippi the attitudes and policies of public officials and the expressed opinions of the general public regarding desegregation have been even more adamant and defiant than in Alabama, and the frequency and degree of violence have been greater.

Considering the situation there, Mississippi clergymen have been commendably courageous in issuing forthright statements, singly and in groups, ever since the Oxford riots last fall. For nearly 2,000 years the wisdom of the Scripture has expounded this fundamental insight; that faith is the intangible by which man can surmount the adversity of this world by the power of his spirit. Perhaps it was because of the turbulent political and social atmosphere that the Mississippi clergy realized, as did Sir Winston Churchill, "It is only in adversity that we discover we are nothing but spirits."

Each of the statements issued stresses "freedom of the pulpit," the acknowledged Protestant ethic that the minister when speaking from the pulpit is charged by God to speak the truth as he sees it, and as one through whom God may speak to his people. There is a danger that "freedom of the pulpit"--like "law and order" in 1958--may be for some ministers a substitute issue for the deeper issue of race. But for those who issued the above-mentioned statements it seems to be a parallel concern and a defense of their right to speak as they believe.

One of the few moderate newspapers in Mississippi, the Delta Democrat-Times in Greenville, stated in an editorial on January 6,1963:

> Throughout the dark days which have plagued Mississippi for so long, a group of men to whom many have turned for guidance have been --as a group -- sadly silent. The reasons for this silence by ministers of God have been legion, but the effect has been devastatingly specific. The field has been left to the professional haters and the mis-guided who would distort the brotherhood of man into the brotherhood of some men.
>
> The bloodshed and rioting which erupted at Oxford made many ministers painfully aware of their failure. Here and there individual clergymen, ever mindful of what has happened to other ministers who raised their lone voices of protest in the past, acknowledged their failures and the failure of the church to take the lead in solving our overwhelming race relations problem and called for new directions and new vigor from the pulpit.
>
> Perhaps it was because of their example, but they are no longer so lonely. Last week a group of 28 young Methodist ministers, Mississippi-born all, collectively called for an end to race hatred and closer attention to the gospel of Christ. They also took a firm stand against closing of the public schools for any reason.
>
> At the end of the week they had been joined by others in their church. Dr. J. P. Stafford, lay leader of the Methodist Mississippi Conference, called their statement "very worthwhile." In a meeting in Okalano, 23 more Methodist ministers "enthusiastically" supported the stand. Their position was all the more significant since they represented the North Mississippi Methodist Conference....
>
> The church did not survive because its early members feared being labelled non-conformists or suffering mental and physical harm. It is time for the church--and its members--to cast back to the strength which was the early Christians. There is a task to be done in Mississippi, and the young Methodist clergymen have shown the way.

The "Born of Conviction" statement, issued the first week in January, 1963, made the following points:

1. The church is the instrument of God's purpose. This is His church, and ours only as stewards under His Lordship. Effective practice of the stewardship for the ministry clearly requires freedom of the pulpit....

2. We affirm our faith in the official position of the Methodist Church on race: "Our Lord Jesus Christ teaches that all men are brothers. He permits no discrimination because of race, color, or creed. ...We believe that God is Father of all peoples and races, that Jesus Christ is His Son, that all men are brothers, and that man is of infinite worth as a child of God."

3. We affirm our belief that our public school system is the most effective means of providing common education for all our children...essential to the preservation and development of our true democracy. ...

The following Sunday, January 6, Dr. W. B. Selah, pastor of the largest Methodist church in Jackson, endorsed the statement and added one of his own:

> ...For 17 years I have preached the law of Christian love from the pulpit of Galloway Methodist Church. This law means that we must seek for all men, black and white, the same justice, the same rights, and the same opportunities that we seek for ourselves. Nothing less than this is Christian love. To discriminate against a man because of his color or his creed is contrary to the will of God. Forced segregation is wrong. We should voluntarily desegregate all public facilities. We should treat all men not on the basis of color but on the basis of conduct.
>
> In the light of Christian principle there can be no color bar in a Christian church. ...As Christians we cannot say to anyone, "you cannot come into the House of God." No conference, no preacher, no official board can put up a color bar in the church. That matter is determined by the nature of Christianity which is an inclusive fellowship of those who seek the Lord. ...When a person seeks membership in the church he is not asked about the color of his skin. He is asked about his faith in God as revealed in Christ. Salvation is not by color but by faith. There can be no color bar in a Christian institution.

August 18, 1963, Oxford, Miss. The Rev. Duncan Gray, Jr. rector of St. Peter's Episcopal Church, said ~~today~~ that the burden of guilt for racial injustice is "particularly heavy" upon his state. He continued, in his sermon at the Washington Cathedral:

> Racial injustice is not an easy thing for the average white Southerner to face. But he can never face it unless he hears both God's words from the Cross and His words of judgment. On the Cross, God would take His place beside the Southerner, share his predicament, take his sins and, consequently, give him strength to endure judgment. ...Let me alone! is often our most fervent prayer. We wish that love, duty, righteousness and justice were simply our own to do with as we pleased without responsibility to man or to God. ...But the words of God stand over us and our society...they point out what we are and what we were intended to be.

January 4, 1963. Twenty-three of 29 ministers representing the North Mississippi Methodist Conference "enthusiastically voted" to back the "born of conviction" statement; the resolution was presented by District Superintendent W. L. Robinson. Dr. J. P. Stafford, lay leader of the Methodist Mississippi Conference, said, "Let's face it, brotherhood is as much a part of the teachings of Jesus Christ as salvation and faith."

June 15, 1963. The Most Reverend Richard O. Gerrow, Roman Catholic bishop of Mississippi, broke a 39-year silence on current issues to call the assination of Medgar Evers "a shocking and saddening ("than the death of one man" and called for positive steps toward recognizing occurrence more meaningful the legitimate grievances of the Negro population."

Georgia: Segregation Is Sinful, But....

Appendix A to end of section

The Presbyterian Church's Synod of Georgia on May 15-17, 1963, urged all its institutions to abandon racial segregation in a resolution amended (after heated discussion) so as to make it non-compulsory. Institutions include Agnes Scott College and Columbia Theological Seminary in Decatur, Ga.; Presbyterian College and Thornwell Orphanage in Clinton, S. C.; the Rabun Gap-Nacoochee Vocational School, Ga.; and two Presbyterian homes for the aged. Columbia Theological Seminary has been integrated for some years. A recommendation was approved to urge all presbyteries to send senior high fellowship councils to the Georgia-Florida leadership school in St. Petersburg; a Negro presbytery has not previously attended. The Synod asked that the Rock Eagle 4-H Camp at Eatonton be requested to make its facilities available for men's conferences on a non-discriminatory basis.

June 5, 1963. Passed almost unanimously a report on Christian social concern which urged Methodist to endorse the United Nations and requested approval of an earlier statement of principals on racial matters, condemning violence and discord, which it said "emphasized the need for both Negro and white to plan together for the future of our state," and noting that "desegregation [of public facilities] is not the dire calamity that some ... citizens have thought" nor a guarantee of friendship and neighborliness. Dr. Harry V. Richardson, president of Interdenominational Theological Center and a vice president of the Georgia Council of Churches, was the first Negro to address the South Georgia Methodist Conference in recent times.

April 29, 1963. The Evangelical Ministerial Association of Augusta, Georgia, comprising clergymen from about 60 of 100 Augusta. Protestant churches, adopted a resolution supporting voluntary desegregation of the county schools, after five Negroes had petitioned, on March 14, the Richmond County Board of Education for voluntary desegregation. The resolution stated: "We believe that voluntary desegregation done in a Christian spirit is the most effective solution to this particular problem ...we commend both these groups, the Negroes and the board, for the manner in which they are approaching this matter and we urge that they continue in this spirit of understanding and cooperation in future negotiations.

June 15, 1963. A number of Atlanta (Ga.) religious leaders were asked to comment on the current racial crisis. According to Miss Jo Ann Crasford, Religious Editor of the Atlanta Constitution, the majority of churchmen and ministers interviewed felt the action of churches in any "moral crisis" lies not in the resolutions adopted by its hierarchy, but in the actions performed by its members.

June 20, 1963. The Rev. Louis F. Huckaby, chaplain at Crawford Long Hospital and chairman of the conference's Board of Christian Social Concerns, spoke after the report had been read to the conference:

> "I challenge you to be Christian. Our past stands haven't changed many minds, many lives, or many churches... Desegregation deserved the backing of the church in its pronouncements and leadership...The church should have led the way...We were more interested in maintaining the status quo than magnifying the universality of the gospel of Jesus Christ. We've placed a guard of stewards at the church door lest colored visitors come in." He defined integration as "something spiritual" that begins only when people learn to trust and love each other. The report and Dr. Huckaby's speech were adopted; he received a standing ovation.

July 1, 1963. In a joint statement issued by the Baptist Convention's Public Affairs Committee, the Christian Life Commission, and the administration committee of the Executive Committee, Georgia Baptist pastors and their congregations were urged "to continue to exercise their moral and spiritual influence for understanding and good will between the races." The committees issued the statement after hearing a report from Dr. Searcy S. Garrison, Convention executive secretary-treasurer, on a recent White House Conference, called by President Kennedy to discuss some aspects of the current race problem.

July 11, 1963, Columbus. Three Negro church organizations -- Mt. Calvary District Sunday School and Baptist Training Congress, a 10,000-member group; the Columbus Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance; and the Adult Liaison Committee--expressed opposition to further demonstrations.

July 28, 1963. The Rev. Don McEvoy, director of the Atlanta chapter of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, preaching at the First Christian Church in Decatur, declared:

> The time has come for churches in Atlanta to declare themselves "unequivocably" open to all. ...[the church] must rid itself of its involvement in this sinful separation of brethren. The time has come for every congregation in the Atlanta area to declare unequivocably that the church belongs to God and not to men, and thus must be open to all of God's children without restriction. ...Ministers have been silent on this issue, for the most part, because social customs have been more binding on us than the commands of Christ. We have been more concerned with avoiding controversy than we have with being Christian. The result has been that we have usually given our pastors a choice between an emasculation of their ministry or martyrdom. ...The white churches have been overly concerned with the possible loss of members and financial support if they gook a forthright stand. Better we should be concerned over the loss of the church's soul. Make no mistake about it. The whole future of the church is at stake in our response to this present crisis. Segregation is sin. To block human fellowship is to block fellowship with the Divine.... Either we face up to the Christian implications of human brotherhood or our whole church parroting of other New Testament doctrines is idle and meaningless chit-chat.

July 3, 1963. The bi-racial Greater Atlanta Methodist Ministers Alliance adopted a resolution praising city officials, the Chamber of Commerce, newspapers, and restaurant owners for "their stand in encouraging the desegregation of parks, swimming pools...and public facilities. The association is composed of about 300 pastors.

Arkansas.--April 18, 1963, Catholic, Protestant and Jewish representatives united in a Greater Little Rock (Ark.) Conference on Religion and Human Relations. More than 100 representatives of 40 churches and church organizations heard leaders of their denominations

call for an end to discrimination in education, economic opportunity, churches and housing. The leaders jointly referred to segregation as a "moral problem" and as "sin." In conclusion, the Rev. David A. Boileau, professor at St. John's (Catholic) Home Missions Seminary, suggested three areas for conference work:

> We must clean up our own house. We all run segregated facilities. We must ask ourselves if segregation or token integration is right and we must destroy segregation in our churches, schools, and societies. Each must examine his own conscience. And we must establish in our community the role of religion as a force in society. If we bring the force of religion to bear on segregation this will wipe it out.

Florida.--June 12, 1963, the Florida Synod of the United Presbyterian Church departed from its announced program to name a committee on race relations. The synod also considered a working pact with the Presbyterian Synod of Jamaica, island nation south of Cuba. Jamaica, with a preponderance of Negro population, sent several members of the Jamaica Synod to the conference for consultation.

Kentucky.--June 16-20, 1963, The Fourth Interracial Consultation on the Southern Church and Race Relations was held at the College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky. The group issued a "statement of concern" which concluded: "We...dedicate ourselves to work with all others to continue progress in eliminating racial discrimination in voting, public accommodations, education, employment, and housing."

May 17, 1963. The Rt. Rev. C. Gresham Marmion, Episcopal bishop of Kentucky, admonished the diocesan convention, "We dare not be a religious club, which is the way some of our churches operate. ...In our churches we should not just tolerate, but we should welcome people of all races..."

June 13, 1963. The Kentucky Methodist Conference called on its churches to "explore avenues leading to the invitation of all races to worship together." The following day it adopted a statement that said:

> We deplore the practice of racial segregation as unfair, illegal, and un-Christian. Regarding present social upheaval between the two races, we applaud all non-violent attempts to breakdown segregation barriers which now exist.

August 11, 1963. The Record, official weekly newspaper for the Roman Catholic archdiocese of Louisville, commented in an editorial that the "overall Knights of Columbus record in the racial area is unbelievably bad." It said that knights and other Catholic organizations in the archdiocese should eliminate any segregation that exists in theory or practice, and should recruit Negro members. It quoted local Knights of Columbus officials as saying there were no Negro members in the Louisville archdiocese; no Negroes had asked for membership.

Louisiana.--February 1, 1963, at an Institute of Religion sponsored by the American Friends Service Committee and held in Baton Rouge, La., Rabbi Charles Mainband, then of Hattiesburg, Miss., (now located in Longview, Texas), said that patience and determination were necessary virtues needed to overcome racial bigotry. "People are more inclined to lose their identity in a group on matters of controversy," he continued, "We are inclined to slough off both the privileges and responsibilities of citizenship. ...In no area has democracy failed as it has in race relations."

March 5, 1963. Catholic Bishop Robert E. Tracy of Baton Rouge, La., speaking in Donaldsonville to white and Negro Catholics of the civil parishes of Iberville, Ascension, and St. James, declared, "There is no reason some Christians should discriminate against other Christians and segregate them. Talk is cheap, but what is not cheap is to live Christianity." The Bishop was reporting on the Ecumenical Council which he attended in Rome, and replying to a question from the floor.

August 5, 1963. Roman Catholics of north and central Louisiana were called upon by their Bishop, Charles P. Greco, Diocese of Alexandria, "to accept desegregation with understanding and restraint" and to help end "discrimination based merely on race, color, creed or national background." His pastoral letter was read in all churches and chapels of the diocese. (More than 85,000 Catholics, and which includes all civil parishes north of Rapids, Avoyelles and Vernon. There are 83 church parishes and more than 100 missions.)

North Carolina.--January 8, 1963, the Federated Ministerial Association of Almance County adopted the report of its Race Relations Committee which urged the association to: encourage equal job and educational opportunities, make the church itself an example to business and education by eliminating barriers based on race, and suggested joint meetings with Negro community leadership.

May 12 & 26, 1963. At all Episcopal churches in Raleigh (May 12) and in Greensboro (May 26) a letter from Bishop Richard H. Baker and

Coadjustor Thomas Fraser, Jr., expressing alarm and grief over racial unrest in North Carolina cities. The letter was read during morning services and urged church members to exercise the discipline of love and forgiveness and implored all those in authority:

> ...to act quickly in achieving a resolution of this tension which will grant to all men the equality and dignity given to them by God. We ask all people to support the merchants and institutions serving the people of this city when they strive to provide all men this equality and dignity. We ask all people to work, to pray, and to act courageously to end the strife with which we are beset and to help achieve in this city a harmony and brotherhood that God wills for all people.

Raleigh.--June 1963, the following excerpt of a statement issued by the Raleigh Ministerial Association's Human Relations Committee some two to three weeks after the more Christian and forthright statement issued May 13 by the Raleigh Merchants' Bureau and followed two days later by a full page ad with 1,000 signatures of white people supporting integration of public facilities:

> We urge that the City Council of Raleigh, the Mayor's Committee and the responsible leadership of the city continue to seek means of bringing about the immediate desegregation of restaurants, theatres, and hotels in the city. We personally pledge our support of any establishment that desegregates and will encourage other people to do the same.

June 1963. The North Carolina Methodist Conference, after spirited debate, adopted a resolution urging that racial barriers be lowered in community institutions and places of public accommodation. The resolution urged members of local churches to "voluntarily open the doors of their stores, motion picture houses, restaurants, churches, schools, and other facilities to all people of every race."

June 19, 1963. Two hundred and fifty ministers, priests, rabbis and laymen, "appealed to the conscience of North Carolinians" on the "whole issue of race relations" at a meeting of newly formed North Carolina Council on Religion and Race. The five-point statement of policy declared:

1) We believe that to discriminate against any individual because of race or religion is immoral...
2) Above any directive of man-made laws, or the economic expediency of the moment is the eternal moral law of God: each of us is his brother's keeper...
3) Peace between men is a vain dream until there is peace within the conscience of each individual...

4) It is not enough for the victories in human rights to be gained solely through legal and economic maneuvers; the voice of religion and churchmen must be heard...
5) Bigotry, hatred, violence and doctrines of racial superiority have no place in our religions traditions...

South Carolina.--January 19, 1963, 122 Columbia (S. C.) ministers representing 12 denominational groups, issued a statement giving their views on racial problems then facing South Carolina citizens. They confessed their failure to apply more fully the Christian principle of brotherhood in their personal lives and in the churches they served, and declared their conviction that racial problems and their solutions are basically moral and spiritual. They pledged support to public officials and other citizens supporting law and order.

June 13, 1963. Excerpts from a statement made by Bishop Paul Hardin, Jr., of the South Carolina Conference of the Methodist Church:

> ...It is a source of personal concern and grief to me to see my beloved Southland and the Methodist Church torn by the race issue. My anguish is all the more acute when I realize that basically the main issue is not race but simple justice and personal dignity. It is as natural for a colored person to seek his place under the sun as it is for a white man to do so. In Christian calmness and diginity, let us work together in an effort to grant justice and opportunity to all people--not because of economic and political pressure, but because we believe that justice is the common property of all free men.

Tennessee.--Spring, 1963, the Cumberland Presbyterian Synod of West Tennessee adopted a report at its annual synod meeting urging ministers to "preach their true convictions concerning these social problems of our day, especially the recognition and acceptance of all races as children of God."

May 22, 1963. The Nashville (Tenn) Association of Churches unanimously adopted a resolution praising Mayor Beverly Briley's recent handling of racial disturbances in Nashville, and commending him for naming a Human Relations Committee to work on racial, cultural and religious problems in the community. The group "pledged its prayers and support in helping the committee resolve racial problems."

August 25, 1963. Bishop William L. Adrian of the Tennessee Diocese had his pastoral letter read in all Catholic masses. The letter urges Catholics make the effort to provide equal opportunity in areas of "employment, education, and public accommodations..."

August 26, 1963. Nashville, Tennessee, the head of the Roman Catholic church in Tennessee urged church members to do away with racial discrimination by meeting with Negroes and talking "openly and calmly about our mutual hopes and problems."

Texas.--June 5, 1963, the Episcopal bishop of the Dallas, (Texas) Diocese Bishop C. Avery Mason, called for support of Bishop Lichtenberger's statement, saying, "It speaks for itself, and we will act accordingly. This, of course, has been our policy." The Dallas diocese has been quietly implementing the church's stand on integration for a number of years. The diocesan convention has long been integrated, also the diocese's Camp Crucis--which is used for summer retreats. In some Dallas neighborhoods, members of both races regularly attend churches. In 1962, the Department of Christian Social Relations conducted a number of inter-racial conversations among clergy and laymen in the area.

June 29, 1963. An Editorial in The Baptist Standard, by the editor, Dr. E. S. James, ~~Mr. James~~ said that the Southern Baptists "were ashamed to acknowledge the truth to ourselves that we, the second largest religious group in the nation, have done so little to secure justice and equality for all men." He added that he was ashamed because President Kennedy had to remind ministers of their moral duties.

Virginia.--June 5, 1963, the Presbyterian Synod of Virginia advocated that church and secular leaders lead in ending racial segregation. The statement said further,

> We believe...the time has come for the state, the South, and the nation to move quickly to settle the racial question...

The Synod set plans to call on its various institutions to report at next year's meeting on the progress they have made on the stand "that enforced segregation of the races...is out of harmony" with the church.

June 13, 1963. The Virginia Methodist Conference issued a recommendation for racial integration of all prep schools and colleges it supports in the state, to be put into effect not later than the 1964-65 academic year. Approved by a majority of three-to-one, a conference spokesman said the new policy was not mandatory but merely a strong recommendation.

Week of July 13, 1963. The Norfolk (Va.) Presbytery announced "a deep and urgent concern over the relation of the races and especially as this affects and challenges the Christian church." The adopted statement continued:

> Enforced segregation of the races is discrimination which is out of harmony with Christian theology and ethics; and the church, in its relationship to cultural patterns, should lead and not follow.
>
> We call upon the sessions and congregations of Norfolk Presbytery to engage in serious and prayerful study of racial relations and social justice, especially as it bears upon the seating of worshippers and admission of believers as to the membership of our church regardless of race.

August 24, 1963. The Virginia Conference of the Evangelical United Brethren Church condemned the State of Virginia for its "subterfuge in establishing the tuition grant as a device for closing the schools in Prince Edward County." The adopted report continued:

> ...we recommend careful consideration of the educational problems in said county and if possible the giving of financial and moral support to establishing and maintaining of schools to educate the children of both Negro and white. ...we deplore the denial of any citizen of equal access to tax-supported public institutions or facilities; the denial of any citizen the right to equal participation in voting; we commend those who have hired Negroes and individuals and groups who take steps to eliminate racial discrimination in housing, education, employment, and the use of public facilities. We believe human rights must always take priority over property rights.

Statements of National Church Organizations.--May, 1962, the Woman's Division of Christian Service of the Methodist Church called on its members to study the principles and goals stated in "A Charter of Racial Policies," and for the speedy ratification and commitment to work for implementation within jurisdiction, conference, district and local woman's society. The Charter included the following: to eliminate in the church all forms of segregation based on race, to create opportunities for inclusive fellowship and membership in local churches, and to work toward changing community patterns of racial segregation in education, housing, voting, employment and public facilities.

October 1962. At the annual assembly of the International Convention of Christian Churches, a total of $6,353 was presented to the United Nations. Among the numerous resolutions passed were several dealing with race. The delegates expressed "concern to the officials of the state of Mississippi" and appealed to their "sense of decency and respect for law, order and principles of Christianity and fair play." The resolution deplored the "defiance of the federal court orders by the officials of the state of Mississippi regarding the entrance of James Meredith to the University of Mississippi" and encouraged the Justice Department in its efforts to secure compliance. Other resolutions urged church agencies to work for more speedy integration, and asked the denomination's schools to hasten integration of student bodies, faculties, and staffs.

May 9, 1963. The strongly worded resolution that urged the Southern Baptist Convention, the previous day, to express concern for Negro demonstrators jailed in Birmingham, Alabama turned up for vote so toned down it was almost unrecognizable as the same resolution. In its new form it made no mention of either Negroes or Birmingham, but simply "the problems involved in our social adjustments today." These must be solved in a Christian context, it said, and it pledged to help all "who do not enjoy freedom." The resolution passed without debate despite the loud applause accorded the original motion when it was presented by the Rev. Robert E. Seymour of Chapel Hill, N. C. He had asked that Baptist be petitioned to "pray for us who are in prison out here" and urged to end discrimination in their communities.

May 22, 1963. The United Presbyterian General Assembly approved a church constitution revision requiring local congregation to make "certain membership is not refused because of color, origin or wordly condition." This action is subject to ratification by local Presbyteries in the 3,500,00 membership. The assembly also petitioned President Kennedy to call a White House Conference on civil rights as soon as feasible to hasten the day when "color or national origin" will be irrelevant to rights of citizenship, and suggested that church boards, agencies and local units examine their contracts for goods and services to make sure funds are not used to support racially discriminatory or segregated institutions.

May 26, 1963. The presiding bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the U.S.A., Arthur Lichtenberger, issued a statement calling attention to the recent action of the Diocese of Washington which directed all diocesan-related institutions to eliminate any discriminatory practices within six months. The diocese further requested the Bishop and Executive Council to take steps necessary to disassociate such diocesan and parish-related institutions from moral of financial support if these practices were not eliminated in the specified time. The bishop's statement included the following points: to demonstrate by specific actions by identification of the church with those who are victims of oppression; to support and strengthen racial protests, financially and personally; to eliminate all discrimination in church and church-related institutions.

June 6, 1963. The 270-member general board of the National Council of Churches adopted a statement calling upon the church "to confess her sin of omission and delay and to move forward to witness to her essential belief that every child of God is a brother to every other." The Council pledged that its leaders would "engage personally in negotiations, demonstrations, and other direct action." It urged all affiliated communions and invited members of all faiths to join in support of civil rights legislation and to witness that the racial crisis is a "national moral issue and not a regional problem." The Council announced the formation of a Commission on Religion and Race to coordinate the action program. (See Action Section)

June 17, 1963. Dr. Fredrik A. Schiotz, president of the American Lutheran Church, sent a memorandum to the pastors making the following suggestions: 1) let your people know where you stand, 2) be sure that your own congregation does not withhold the hand of welcome from a Negro guest or applicant for membership, 3) Encourage your people to write to their senators and congressmen, 4) Encourage lay leaders to participate in community consultations, bringing together white and Negro leaders for conversation and peaceful action. The pastors were reminded of the resolution adopted by the Church Council in February, 1963, which included: "Should a congregation not practice the proclamation of the Gospel of our Lord without limitation to nationality or race and not admit to membership in the Congregation Lutherans who may wish to transfer into the congregation or not admit people to membership classes who may wish to be instructed, the district president shall report this violation of church practice to the Executive Committee of the District and to the Church Council."

June 18, 1963. The Central Conference of American Rabbis pledged "unequivocal support" to Negroes today in their battle for equal rights and opportunities. The 400 members of the Reform group called for an "all-out effort" by the 1,000,000 members of Reform Judaism's 650 congregations to press for strong civil rights legislation by Congress. Warning that "a filibuster to prevent passage" of such legislation would "pose a threat to our survival as a democracy," the Rabbis voiced dismay at the "senseless and often brutal delays" in extending "full civil rights for Negro citizens."

June 22, 1963. A resolution asking the General Conference of The Methodist Church for swift integration of the church at all levels was passed by 375 missionaries, about half on furlough after foreign assignment. Most pledged to work actively for desegregation while here, giving lectures and joining picket lines.

June 24, 1963. At a youth forum of about 150 delegates from 37 states, sponsored by the United Church of Christ, the Rev. Archie Hargraves, field secretary of the division of church extension, urged white people to join the fight against segregation in what he described as a worldwide revolution by "people of color." He warned that unless people face integration as a fundamental moral issue "the Negro people are prepared to say 'the hell with it' and smash the whole rotten fabric to pieces, taking upon themselves, before God, the reconstruction of a better world from the rules of the old one that is a lie and a mockery to God's purposes. ...The acid test is whether we in America can accept the proposition that a Negro may marry whomever he loves and loves him. The Christian church will either prove itself or destroy itself on the basis of its response to this proposition."

July 6, 1963. During this week the Lutheran Church in America appealed to its 6,200 congregations to eradicate all vestiges of racial segregation from their own church activities, and to join the fight for "justice in race relations" in American society by initiating and supporting race reconciliation efforts and backing legislation to assure equal opportunity for all in housing, education, employment, voting, and access to public facilities. The statement emphasized that Christians can no longer temporize with racial barriers because any form of segregation or discrimination "is in violation of God's will."

July 9, 1963. The Lutheran Human Relations Association of America, at its annual institute, issued a statement which calls for alerting pastors to utilize their pulpits to give active support to the President's civil rights legislative program; and for Christians to demonstrate their protest against unjust discrimination and degrading practices which would limit Negroes from reaching their maximum potential before God.

July 14, 1963. Cardinal Spellman's denunciation of racial discrimination was reiterated today in all the 402 parishes of the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of New York. The Cardinal had made the attack on July 11 at the dedication of Drew Houses in Harlem. Excerpts of his address were read as the sermon in all churches. This is a very rare occurrence. ?

July 14, 1963. The president of the Lutheran Church in America, the Rev. Dr. Franklin Clark Fry (who is also president of the Lutheran World Federation and chairman of the central committee of the World Council of Churches) called on the 3,200,000 members to help end racial discrimination. He made the request in a pastoral letter to the 6,812 pastors, calling attention to the decision of the church's executive committee last month to take "action leading to justice in race relations." His letter continued, "The time has come to act. The doors must be open to all. Everyone who is eligible, by faith or scholastic attainments or need should be welcomed to full membership or enrollment as a student or admission as a patient or guest on equal basis with the people of the majority race." The church, he said, "is bound to seek souls [and] the obligation of Lutheran Christians [includes] civic affairs as well as purely church matters. ...Under God the time has come to act and to lead others by precept and example."

July 17, 1963. At a called meeting of the executive meeting of the House of Bishops, the Protestant Episcopal Church in the U. S. A. endorsed the Washington march and passed a resolution urging both laymen and ministers to join it. There were some quiet dissents from Southern Episcopalians, which received scattered applause and hisses.

July 25, 1963. A committee of the fourth World Conference on Faith and Order condemned racial discrimination and urged Christians to fight it "whatever the cost." The conference is sponsored by the World Council of Churches.

July 27, 1963. At an emergency meeting the National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice adopted the following recommendations:

1. Called for all Roman Catholics to support, as a moral imperative, the President's civil rights program, and to build grass roots support of it.
2. Urged Catholics to take part in other demonstrations and picket activities in cases where "sincere negotiations" fail to achieve equal opportunities for Negroes.

There are 57 local Catholic Interracial Councils, coordinated by the NCCIJ.

August 15, 1963. Two major institutions of American Reform Judaism called on lay and rabbinic leaders of the 650 Reform congregations not to deal with construction companies, banks, and other businesses that discriminate against Negroes. The appeal, also directed to more than 1,000,000 Reform worshippers, was made by the Commission on Social Action, joint body of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations and the Central Conference of American Rabbis (comprising 850 spiritual leaders). Stressing the need for concrete action at the grassroots level, the "Call to Racial Justice" included these recommendations:

1. Businessmen should institute and enforce nondiscriminatory employment and promotion policies, make efforts to introduce Negro employees into work forces, and provide training to upgrade jobs for Negro employees.
2. Members of labor, business and professional groups should take positive steps to encourage the introduction of Negroes into skilled trades and professions.
3. All members are to support and participate in efforts for racial integration in their own communities, neighborhoods and public schools.
4. Members should not patronize public places or businesses that discriminate against Negroes as either patrons or employees.
5. Members should not frequent private clubs that refuse membership on racial grounds.
6. Members should invest in financial institutions that make funds and services available on a non-discriminatory basis.
7. Members should give active support to the enactment of local, state, and Federal legislation and to forceful executive action on all levels of government.
8. Congregations should use integrated crews in construction of new houses of worship.

August 23, 1963. Roman Catholic Bishops of the United States in a pastoral letter said "The conscience of the nation is on trial" over racial discrimination, and urged, "we must act to remove obstacles that impede the rights and opportunities of our Negro brethren... We should do our part to see that voting, jobs, housing, education, and public facilities are freely available to every American." The letter was read at all masses in many Catholic churches and chapels on Sunday, August 25. A National Conference Welfare spokesman said that Bishops were not required to have it read and that some, for various reasons, might ignore it.

August 30, 1963. The 1,100 delegates of the Methodist Conference on Human Relations, representing 10,000,000 Methodists, approved the following points in a statement to be submitted in a petition to the Methodist General Council:

1. Called for federal and state laws "that will open all facilities serving the general public to all persons without regard to race."
2. Urged church units to employ their economic power to aid integration.
3. Advocated that the 135 church-related colleges, including many in the South, and all Methodist hospitals and other institutions be opened to all races and proposed "that the name of the church and funds from its budget shall be withdrawn from any institution pursuing a policy contrary to this recommendation."

The 1963 statements of religious bodies speak for themselves. It now seems evident that the church is ready to attack discriminatory practices and racial injustice both within its own institutions and without. Paraphrasing the words of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.,* the church, which has been "merely a thermometer that recorded the ideas and principles of popular opinion" may indeed become, like the early Christian church, "a thermostat that transformed society."

The question is: how influential will these statements be on the individual church member?

---

*Letter from a Birmingham Jail.

IV. ACTIONS AND ACTIVITIES OF THE CHURCH IN RACE RELATIONS

~~Beginning~~ With the July 4, 1963 demonstrations of clergymen at Gwynn Oak Park in Maryland, the first time a group of influential church leaders of the three major faiths had participated together in direct action protests against discrimination, the church began to move from the conference table and pulpit into the firing line of racial tension, applying the tactics of direct action to underscore its often-expressed statements condemning racial discrimination. July and August news items have noted: nuns walking picket lines in Chicago, clergy joining demonstrations in many northern cities, and the new Religion and Race Commissions leading the recruitment of 40,000 church-men to join the August 28 March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom. The NCC also set up a volunteer operation in New York City which prepared 80,000 lunches (sold for 50¢ from refrigerated trucks in Washington) for the marchers.

While it should be noted that clergymen individually or in small groups had previously participated in sit-ins, Freedom Rides, and prayer pilgrimages, (e.g., Albany 1962) to protest discrimination, the summer of 1963 marked the beginning of a nationally organized and nationally led religious compaign to eradicate racial inequality and intolerance in America.

Catholic, Jewish, and major Protestant faiths are now planning local demonstration campaigns on a nation-wide basis, with religious leaders actively participating.

Toward this end new interracial action groups have been formed in a number of Protestant denominations to plan programs and to co-ordinate efforts. The more recent ones are: The Commission on Religion and Race formed by the National Council of Churches (June 17), the Commission on Religion and Race named by the Unitarian Universalist Association (June 29); the American Baptist Convention's plan for Baptist Action for Racial Brotherhood (northern-June 24); and the United Church of Christ's Committee (July 6). All these committees have as their announced purpose the spear-heading of a planned allout attack on racial discrimination with more active participation by the clergy. The United Presbyterian Church's Commission on Religion and Race (May 19), will emphasize "creative action" with other faiths and removal of racial bars in Presbyterian congregations, institutions, and agencies. The Protestant Episcopal Church appointed an 18-member Advisory Committee on Intergroup Relations (June 28), to assist the Christian Social Relations Department in program plans for legislation, direct action, and speeding up desegregation within the church.

Religious oriented action groups formed outside the organizational structure of the denomination include the new Presbyterian Interracial Council (June 16); and the older Catholic Interracial Council (after 25 years of local activity; organized nationally, 1960), the Lutheran Human Relations Association of America (1953), the Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity (1959), the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, the American Jewish Committee Institute of Human Relations, and the congregational Christian's Race Relations Department (1952). In most of the above, membership is restricted to clergy and laymen of the denomination.

Interdenominational groups include the new Committee of Southern Chruchmen, and the oldest group of all, the Fellowship of the Concerned. Organized in 1949 in Atlanta, Georgia, to promote the spiritual approach to social issues, the Fellowship has been since its inception interfaith, interdenominational, and interracial. It is still active today.

In the past, the influence of the church in race relations had been somewhat limited. All three of the major religious groups in the United States -- Catholic, Jewish, and Protestant -- had made some progress in improving race relations. But until quite recently the agencies of the church had represented a small percentage of church leaders and laymen. All agreed that too many local congregations were apathetic and skilled workers in race relations too few. There was an expressed fear among some leaders in church affairs that initiative had passed beyond the control of religious men.

The Christian Century, in an editorial of October 10, 1962, "The Agony of the Church," discussed the contradiction between the American dream and American deed and said it resulted in a split national personality. The editorial continued:

> A much more tormenting struggle is now taking place within the soul of the white Christian church. What is merely a dilemma for the nation is an agony for the church. This is so because in the church the principles of human dignity and equality are accepted not merely as humanitarian ideals to strive for but as divine imperatives which God commands his children to obey. Yet it is in the white church that these commands, so far as the Negro is concerned, are most flagrantly disobeyed. ...

The unwillingness of the church to lay upon its conscience the nation's primary domestic problem or to tolerate the ministers who do so is one measure of the church's shame. A deeper measure of infamy is its stubborn refusal to repent of its offense, on account of race, against the unity given it in Jesus Christ. It loves the cruel falsehood of racial exclusiveness more than it loves Christ. In its refusal to repent of the guilt of division within itself on account of race, in its perpetuation of differences caused solely by race, the church rejects the cross borne by its Lord. No wonder it prefers to hear pleasant ineptitudes instead of the gospel of Jesus Christ, sharper than a two-edged sword!...

The racial struggle would put a dilemma for the church even if she had no conscience about the equal rights of the Negro as a child of God. Even for the most rigid racist in her fellowship, the clash between truth and prejudice is at least an annoyance. But the dilemma turns into an agony in the hearts of Christians who have a conscience about the way the white church treats the Negro. They know that God has commanded us to love one another. They know that this command includes the Negro. They know that fulfillment of this command brings the Negro into the white church and vice versa. They know that you cannot love a person innately inferior. They know that they are disobedient, and they know that they stand guilty before God. It will be a tragic day for the Christian church if anything other than repentant obedience to the will of Jesus Christ takes away that agony.

The National Conference on Religion and Race.--What has been hailed by many religious leaders as a milestone in the development of religious involvement in race relations was the first National Conference on Religion and Race. It was held in Chicago last January, attended by some 800 religious leaders and race relations representatives, and convened by three religious bodies--the National Catholic Welfare Conference, the National Council of Churches, and the Synagogue Council of America. This is how Dennis Clark, Executive Secretary of the Catholic Interracial Council of New York, described the aims of the conference in an article for Ave Maria: "It was a driving attempt to match religious courage to religious conscience. It was an effort to pit theism against racism in the mind of the nation." Mr. Clark continued.

It became clear that for the first time in this country there is a religious consensus about race relations that is achieving broad practical gains.

This is the first time this kind of consensus ever really moved in the land. In the early part of the last century there was a consensus among religions about race--a consensus of indifference. ...

> ...The moral and social strength represented at this conference could only be brought to bear in a country as big and diverse as ours. If all the constructive force represented at this meeting really rolls against racism, the old dragon will surely fall.

In the words of Mathew Ahmann,* who served as executive secretary of the conference, "the Conveners hoped and planned for a Conference which would concretely examine the role of religious institutions in race relations, and then move on to propose and inspire renewed action, and interreligious projects to increase the leadership of religion in ending racial discrimination in the United States."

But J. Irwin Miller, president of the National Council of Churches, warned that merely ending racial discrimination was not enough: "We can abolish every system and practice and custom and regulation which now offends...if we do not at the same time work with equal vigor and determination to eliminate the spirit which embraces and supports all of these, then we will find that little has been accomplished and that somehow all the new regulations and programs have become servants of the old spirit."

To this end, the workshops drew up recommendations for churches and synagogues to follow in launching specific projects at the local level. Here are some of the areas in which increased religious action was called for:

1. Total elimination of racial bars in church-related institutions and schools.
2. Diligent work under religious auspices to help Negro families find houses in restricted white neighborhoods.
3. Contract clauses in all religiously sponsored building projects that will demand nondiscrimination of contractors.
4. More backing for minority voter registration.
5. Interreligious task forces in the inner-city and suburban areas to work for housing improvement and freedom of residence.
6. A service corps to aid in rural reconstruction.
7. More religious representation with respect to urban planning decisions.
8. Steady church and synagogue policy to fill the vacuum in civic life by developing community organizations where none exist now.

---

*Mr. Ahmann is the Executive Director of the National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice, and is the editor of The New Negro (1961).

9. Widespread home-visiting programs and other work to foster interracial association.

Among the roadblocks to progress noted by conference workers were these: the appalling apathy of local congregations, the need for persons skilled in promoting racial change, and the difficulty of getting religious groups to face up to the moral implications of racism.

An Appeal to the Conscience of the American People.--The Conference (which Dr. Kyle Haselden, editor of the Christian Century and author of The Racial Problem in Christian Perspective, declared "may prove to be epochal") concluded by issuing "An Appeal to the Conscience of the American People." The appeal denounced racism as "our most serious evil," called for "a renewed religious conscience on this basically moral evil," and urged the American people to seek: 1) "a reign of justice," 2) "a reign of love," 3) "a reign of courage," and 4) "a reign of prayer." "We call upon all the American people," the appeal concluded, "to work, to pray and to act courageously in the cause of human equality and dignity while there is still time, to eliminate racism permanently and decisively, to seize the historic opportunity...for healing an ancient rupture in the human family, to do this for the glory of God."

Follow-up Committees Formed.--Provision was made for a follow-up committee and, temporarily, for a continuing secretariat to put the resources of the conference at the disposal of local groups which want to transform words, ideas, and plans into action. But this is not the sole action the delegates had in mind; it is merely the means to such action. More than 40 interfaith local committees have been formed for regional action in target areas.

In his January 27 Report of the Committee on Follow-up, the Rev. Arthur E. Walmsley* (chairman) issued a statement which, in the light of recent developments, has proved to be an overly cautious estimate of the Conference's impact upon religious groups. Mr. Walmsley stated:

> Why did we hold this meeting? Surely few of us have any illusions that we can transform the churches into the forefront of the civil rights struggle. To congratulate ourselves for doing today what common sense and conscience say should have been done by religious institutions generations ago would be the height of hypocrisy or worse, a radical misreading of the movement of contemporary events, and the ways by which God transacts His will in history. ...

---

*Executive Secretary of Christian Citizenship, National Council of Protestant Episcopal Church.

> Much has been made in the lectures of the prophetic tradition of the Old Testament. But the prophetic message is not only an exhortation to do justly and love mercy. It is clearly apparent that what God wills in our day is a massive transformation of human relations--internationally, interreligiously, interculturally, interracially. The prophetic message is that if the Israel of God--either the Old or the New--will not respond to his will, God will then choose new agents. Further, he will cast out a stiff-necked and rebellious people, driving them into a captivity in Babylon for their apostasy. The captivity into which we have been thrust is our near total irrevelance as a moral factor in contemporary society. ...

The real hope of the Conference lies in the degree to which we recognize that fact.

National Religious Action Against Racial Discrimination.--While religious leaders were facing the reality of the appalling gap between church pronouncements and church action regarding race, as revealed at the January Conference on Religion and Race, the civil rights crisis of the summer of 1963 burst into the eyes and ears of the nation, beginning with the Birmingham riots in early April. They were galvanized into action, and the formation of commissions on religion and race began. The programs of these commissions (listed below) typify the two-pronged effort, both within and without the church: within--to eliminate discrimination in the church and its institutions; without--to attack injustice in society by personal involvement in every phase of the struggle, including negotiations, sanctions, demonstrations, and legislative support.

> May 16--Some 250 commissioners of the United Presbyterian Church, USA, chartered a new organization called the Presbyterian Interracial Council--an independent group not officially related to or dependent upon the denomination. Its purpose is to press for direct action in areas of discrimination and segregation, and local and regional units will be established. Its first official act was to send to Birmingham a small group of volunteers prepared to demonstrate if local integration leaders desired their participation.

> May 20--The United Presbyterian Church USA, (northern) allocated 300,000 to fight racial discrimination among its 8,250,000 members. The more than 800 commissioners (delegates) voted that the fund will be administered by a new United Presbyterian Commission on Religion and Race composed of the "strongest Negro leadership" in the church and of the chief executives of the denomination's major boards and agencies. The commission will emphasize "creative action" with other faiths, emergency financial aid to churches and ministers penalized by strong stands for integration, recruitment of experts on race relations, and special training programs. The assembly instructed the new commission to report next year on racial restrictions in United Presbyterian congregations, institutions, and agencies to catalogue actions taken to support civil rights.

May 31--The top leadership of the Mormon Church was reported to be seriously considering the abandonment of its historic policy of discrimination against Negroes. This would, in effect, desegregate the three-level Mormon Heaven. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has a lay priesthood to which almost every male adult member belongs. Mormon theology teaches an afterlife with three stages of celestial bliss possible, admittance being governed by one's condition during life and progress in the priesthood. Since Negroes belong only to the first degree of membership, they are limited to the lowest degree of paradise. Women's places in paradise are determined by the achievement of their husbands. The church has also forbidden Negroes the right of marriage in a Mormon temple, and interracial marriage is also forbidden. On June 7, denial that priesthood membership might be opened to Negro Mormons was issued by Hugh B. Brown, second Counselor in the first presidency of the church. He said, "I was not quoted correctly. We are not considering that."

June 8--The Delaware Conference of the Methodist Church approved the transfer of eight of its Negro churches in the New York area to the predominantly white New York Conference. This is one step toward abolishing the all-Negro Central Jurisdiction, the Conference reported.

June 24--A Committee for Social Action was appointed by the Convention of the South, composed of 125,000 Negro church members in 11 Southern States from Virginia to Texas, the segregated Negro conference of the United Church of Christ. "The committee will work toward the achievement of social justice and the realignment of all conferences and associations along geographical rather than racial lines."

June 27--The Unitarian Universalist Association set up a 12-member Commission on Religion and Race.

June 28--The Protestant Episcopal Church appointed an 18-member Advisory Committee on Intergroup Relations to assist the Christian Social Relations Department in program plans for legislative, support, direct action, and speeding up desegregation within the church.

The Commission on Religion and Race of the National Council of CHURCHES, with Dr. Robert Spike as the executive director, announced it will concentrate on three areas of action designed to put more force behind the Council's position against racial discrimination. The adopted program follows:

1. Legislation
   a. Mass services across nation during "one great hour of freedom" to focus attention on civil rights legislation (date to be announced).
   b. Mass demonstration in Washington if Congress fails to act on, or if Southern Senators filibuster against, proposed civil rights legislation.
2. Community Action and Demonstration
   a. Local ministers to set up 24-hour-a-day vigils in prisons to prevent "police brutality" against civil rights demonstrators under arrest.
   b. Establishment of interfaith groups in cities to check on desegregation of churches, housing, schools, and employment.

3. Desegregation in the Church

(a.) National governing bodies of member denominations to withhold financial aid for construction projects of individual congregations unless contractors guarantee against racial discrimination in hiring.

Omit

In addition, The Commission will develop a detailed program on how to open suburbs as peacefully as possible to families of minority groups. The two-point program will: 1) organize all church and synagogue groups in suburbs to enter into program of effective action; 2) set up working kit of materials to cover procedure.

July--Seven Catholic Sisters and Catholic Interracial Council members in Chicago joined Negro and white students in picketing Chicago's Illinois Club for Catholic Women in protest of the Club's policy of discrimination. Shortly after, the club issued a statement declaring all qualified women will be welcome without restriction.

July--In one of the first tri-faith stands on civil rights, the National Council of Churches, the Synagogue Council of America, and top Catholic officials drafted and presented to Congress a joint statement backing strong civil rights legislature.

July--The Methodist Episcopal Church will vote in 1964 on a plan to overhaul its organization to eliminate separate "jurisdictions" for its 10,000,000 white and Negro members. Approval of the plan is expected, although not without determined opposition from Southern Methodist.

July 4--The United Church of Christ (2,056,000 members) created a Committee on Race Relations and authorized $1,000.000 to expand and improve the church's work in race relations. Dr. S. Gary Oniki is the executive coordinator. Projects include: higher education; citizenship education for Negroes; payment of bail bonds, legal defense, and economic aid for persons arrested while demonstrating; housing and assistance to Negro tenant farmers; and humanitarian work for needy persons in urban areas. The church also voted to withdraw financial support from its segregated educational institutions, and to make loans for new construction contingent upon nondiscrimination in building work and a commitment to an interracial policy by the congregations.

July 10--Leaders of the American Baptist Convention (northern) drew up a plan of Baptist Action for Racial Brotherhood. It is designed to prick the conscience of the denomination's 1,500,000 members. The Rev. Thomas Kilgore, Jr., is head of the 15-member committee.

August--Three major Catholic dioceses (Washington, D. C.; Oklahoma City-Tulsa; Greensburg, Pa.) have banned the issuance of construction contracts to builders who violate fair employment practices. The Roman Catholic Church spends annually $2,000,000,000 on construction, more than any other U. S. institution other than the Federal Government.

Obviously, the church has decided that "the time is now" for action in the area of racial discrimination. Besides supplying manpower for demonstrations, the various religious commissions on religion and race are sending groups of churchmen to racially tense communities to urge local church leaders to become more active.

In northern communities, the National Council of Churches is leading efforts to overcome discrimination in housing, education and employment, as well as in the churches. Local clergy and laymen are asking residents of communities to sign petitions supporting equal housing opportunities for Negroes; residents are being asked to agree not to move out if Negroes move into their neighborhoods. In Chicago, priests and ministers circulated among a crowd of belligerant, rock-throwing whites in an attempt to calm then when a Negro family moved into a formerly all-white section. Several clergy stayed overnight with the family.

Large white churches are being urged not only to integrate their congregations but to hire Negroes as assistant ministers. Many church-operated hospitals, orphanages, and homes for the aged reject Negroes; some of the major religious denominations have warned that funds will be cut off unless there is desegregation within the year. Church staffs are urged to recruit Negroes for replacements as openings occur. Sunday School materials are being revised and rewritten. Seminaries are planning to have representatives visit Negro colleges to recruit Negro candidates for the ministry. Interracial home visits are being promoted to destroy racial sterotypes. Religion and race committees also plan programs to reduce school dropouts and to train the illiterat They urge strong church support for civil rights legislation.

Church leaders know that these new and forceful programs for civil rights and human dignity will disturb many and alienate some of the membership. They acknowledge that it can and may result in loss of financial support from some churches and church members and bring about dissention within the local churches. But church leadership believes that the racial upheaval may prove to be of genuine spiritual value to the church, forcing it to cast aside irrelevant issues and preoccupation with "success" as measured by yearly increases in membership and revenue. They hope the church will become again the agent of God ~~to~~ and will remove the stigma of racial discrimination from the nation.

The power of the church to influence the minds and hearts of the American people was made clear by New York Times correspondent James Reston in his column of August 30. In discussing what might happen as a result of the now famous August 28 "March on Washington," Reston wrote:

... the first significant test...will come in the country this weekend. It is no good waiting for a political reaction in Congress, for if there is no moral reaction out in the country, there will be no effective political reaction here /Washington/. ...Congressmen...want to be re-elected, and all of them know the political power of the church...If the preachers said what they really thought about this racial crisis and even half of those who heard and believed them wrote their honest convictions...to Capitol Hill, the political balance on racial equality might easily be transformed. ...For while the politicians here are not saying much about the march, they are listening. And if such a mammoth demonstration, dramatizing the basic religious concept of equality, does not get an impressive response even from the churches, Congress could easily conclude that the nation was indifferent or worse.

Response of Local Southern Churches and Congregations to National Anti-discrimination Edicts.--How much of this new spirit of religious renewal and sudden and impressive determination by United States church leaders to do something, rather than just say something, about the evil of segregation is evident in the Southern Church? Are local congregations and ministers facing up to what has been defined as the most crucial issue in the life of both church and society: race?

Certainly the majority of Christian churches in the South continue to constitute the single greatest obstacle to even the simple matter of church attendance by Negroes. Some have even made bouncers of their ushers who have closed or physically barred the church door. In a few instances, Negroes have been bodily carried out of the church even as the minister was proclaiming the compassion and love of Christ and asserting that this is for all people. Undoubtedly, this action on the part of the Christian church has caused bewilderment and chagrin to many church members; great embarrassment to foreign missionaries; and guilt, anger, and frustration to those responsible for decisions to bar the doors of the church to Negro Christians. The attempts to restrict church attendance as if the House of God were a private club makes preposterous the position of missionaries and clashes violently with the basic premise of Christianity: that it is for all mankind.

It has apparently been easier for local clergy and ministerial associations to issue manifestos on the desirability of alleivating racial tension by opening to all persons the schools, lunch-counters and restaurants, theatres, and hotels than the doors of their own churches. Businessmen may well have reflected that if the churches had practiced an "open door" policy, community transition from segregation to desegregation would be easier for them.

There have been, of course, some notable and magnificent exceptions. Those local churches, ministers, and ministerial associations which have assumed leadership and responsibility in desegregation efforts in their communities could, in 1962, almost be counted on the fingers of both hands. In 1963 the examples are multiplying and spreading--not, perhaps, as quickly and in as great numbers as could be hoped--but increasingly nonetheless. Unfortunately, there also continue to be examples of evasion or repudiation by the local Southern church of national anti-discrimination edicts. A state-by-state breakdown of examples of church action in the South - action both positive and negative - can be found in the appendix to this study.

V. THE NEGRO CHURCH AND THE NON-VIOLENT MOVEMENT.

The failure of the organized church in race relations is made painfully apparent by the fact that there still is today a "Negro Church wing," a wing which not only has separate churches and ministers, but also separate conferences, theological schools, and ministerial associations. The steps that have been taken toward integrating the church have been slow and hesitant indeed. At present, more than 11,000,000 Negroes, half the entire Negro population of the United States, remain in segregated churches. Some 10,000,000 belong to the separate all-Negro Protestant conferences of the Baptist and Methodist churches. About 25,000 belong to the all-Negro 11-state convention of the United Church of Christ. About 500,000 belong to predominantly Protestant bodies, although chiefly in all-Negro congregations, and about 500,000 are Roman Catholics. At the national level, in most denominations and in interdenominational bodies, Negroes have considerable representation. But the pattern rarely is reflected on the local scene--North and South.

Thus, it is hardly surprising that the relationship between the Negro churches and the non-violent Negro revolt is virtually that of blood kinsmen. More of the leaders of the revolt come from the ranks of the clergy than from any other source, and the New Testament provides a very large portion of the ideological legitimation for the movement. Yet the life and teachings of Gandhi are probably more important than those of Jesus in the philosophy of non-violent direct action.

Maybe, but this is a moot pt., & if it remains in the study it will cause a lot of resentment in many quarters. Why not say that Thoreau, Tolstoi & Gandhi, as well as JX, are important prophets in the Movement?

Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., acknowledged "moral leader" of the protest movement, has explained his own reconciliation of these two philosophies (which may seem to some persons in spiritual conflict) in his latest book:*

> ...I was introduced to the life and teachings of Mahatma Gandhi. As I read his works I became deeply fascinated by his campaigns of non-violent resistance. The whole Gandhian concept of satyagraha (satya is truth which equals love and graha is force: satyagraha thus means truth-force or love-force) was profoundly significant to me. As I delved deeper into the philosophy of Gandhi,... I came to see for the first time that the Christian doctrine of love, operating through Gandhian method of non-violence, is one of the most potent weapons available to an oppressed people in their struggle for freedom...

---

*Strength to Love, "Pilgrimage to Non-violence."

The traditional religious influence of the church in the life of the Negro American has always been strong, and, largely because of this influence, the Negro churches have been the headquarters and assembly points for civil rights action groups. Mass meetings and training sessions have been religiously oriented, with much stress on prayer, returning love for hate, and only non-violent resistance to harassment and economic reprisal. The nation is indebted to the Negro church for exerting such a strong and sustained influence upon its members. It is because of their genuine religious fervor, their deep faith in God and in Christ, that the non-violent concept has been so widely accepted and practiced. With few exceptions the movement has remained non-violent and its participants have been able to return patience for persecution, a rigid self-control for harassment, and sometimes even love for hate.

In local situations it has been the Negro ministers who have rallied community support for social reform by preaching about moral as well as civil rights and the necessity to say, in word and deed, to the white community, "we will no longer accept discrimination; the time has come to act."

A year ago the Rev. Andrew J. Young, director of the Citizenship Education Program for the Southern Christian Leadership Conference and the United Church of Christ, declared:*

> If Negroes have no more to hope for than equality with the white man, then they might as well give up. Negro writers... are saying now, "who wants to integrate a sinking ship?" We tell our people...we are not working for the freedom to sin as the white man have sinned, that life must hold more for us than a gray flannel suit and split-level families taking Metrecal. ...If men are created in His /God's/ image and thrown into a harsh and often brutal arena of history, their lives are shaped in his presence and they are accepted as they are and offered the challenge of loving obedience. ...We become fellow heirs with Christ, breaking down the dividing wall of hostility between man and man and man and God, and sharing literally in the fulfillment of creation. ...
>
> This, I think, is the basis of Christian citizenship training in our society now. The non-violent movements are becoming schools for the new American, because here people learn that life is not basically good. They know the evil of men and yet they learn also that life involves the necessity of suffering for what is right. They can have no illusions about the way in which the world actually exists. This is not a suffering that is imposed upon them; it is a creative and voluntary suffering. ...We are coming to have more understanding of the nature and purpose of God as a result of living in his world and working to break down some of the barriers of hostility that exist. ...

---

*The Report of the Fourth Interracial Consultation on the Southern Church and Race Relations, College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky., July 16-20, 1962, "The Church and Citizenship Education of the Negro in the South," pp. 68-80.

We see in a sense a new reformation that is coming into being in the Negro church. Sunday morning is perhaps no longer the hour in which the real church meets. The social community of those like-minded, the intimate fellowship, meets on Sunday morning at 11:00 o'clock, but the real church that comes together to take upon itself the responsibility of changing the world meets on Monday night. It is an interdenominational fellowship. ...This is the company of the committed that is gathering to hear their missionary orders. ...But these are the people of God in our time, we think.

But while the Negro church has played a major role in the Negro revolt and while that revolt may in turn be bringing about the "new reformation" described by the Reverend Young, it should be noted that more than half of the young Negroes in the non-violent action groups consider themselves non-Christians, non-believers in the traditional meaning of religion. Nevertheless, the precepts they cherish and the principles they attempt to practice are tap roots of the Christian faith--brotherhood, humility, hope, and charity. Gayraud S. Wilmore, assistant professor of Social Ethics at Pittsburgh Theological Seminary has given the following description of such non-believers:*

There is, however, an authentic secularism, singularly unpopular in religious America these days. It is critical of the church not so much because of what the church professes as because of its retreat from the struggle for freedom and justice, its fear of the truth whenever the truth does not correspond to its creed, its loss of the sense of the beauty and the terror of natural life. There are secularist who speak disparagingly of the church because they know very well what the Lordship of Christ means, but find themselves unable to accept the relationship between this Christ and the bland, middle-class Christianity which the church represents to them. Usually unaware , although sometimes quite consciously, they propagate the gospel and demonstrate its relevance in the idiom of the arts, the sciences, in the field of politics and human relations. They often mis-understand and distort the meaning of the faith, but despite themselves, some of these people are caught up in and used by the action of God for reconciliation.

---

* The Secular Relevance of the Church, pp. 25-26. Westminister Press. Mr. Wilmore is also general editor of the series, Christian Perspectives on Social Problems.

> One is sometimes struck with the amazing congruence between this secular understanding of the human situation, their passion for human freedom and justice, and that of prophetic Christianity.

Perhaps the Negro protest movement will not only force Americans to live up to their Constitution and Bill of Rights, but also force the church to become truly the church.

* * * * * * * * * * * * * * * *

VI. THE BLACK MUSLIMS AND THE RELIGIOUS RADICAL RIGHT WING

Although its goals are obviously social, the Black Muslim movement is a religious movement and its appeal to Negroes stems from the current social unrest and distrust of the dominant white majority. Despite its neurotic extremism, the organization's commitment to high standards of personal and group morality are commendable. Dr. C. Eric Lincoln,* who has studied the Muslim movement in considerable depth, had this to say about the "Muslim Mythology" in a recent New South article:

> The Black Muslims are bitterly anti-Christian, for Christianity is held to be the white man's most pernicious scheme for enslaving the non-white people of the world, while the white propagators of that religion relax in luxury and ease wherever they have found believing dupes. ...
>
> In Muslim mythology, Black Man--"the Original Man," was created by Allah, the one true God. The white man, however, is a "made thing," a beast, a synthetic man called into being by Yakub, the evil principle which is everywhere in opposition to peace, justice and equality. ...
>
> Since the white man is the son of the devil, the white man himself is a devil by nature and is incapable of doing good. Ultimately, the blue-eyed devils must be destroyed. Such is the will of Allah.

Many observers believe that the Black Muslim movement has been able to make gains in membership, particularly in the ghettos of the large cities in the North, because of the failure of the white moderate and of the "power structure" of the nation to listen to and accommodate the reasonable and just requests of the Negro leaders.

---

*Professor of Philosophy, Clark University, Atlanta, Ga., and author of The Black Muslims in America, Beacon Press, 1961.

"Extremist Attitudes in the Black Muslim Movement," New South, January, 1963.

A lucid and penetrating description of the appeal of Black Muslimism to Negroes was made by James Baldwin in his best - selling book, The Fire Next Time:

> Power was the subject of the speech I heard. We were offered, as Nation of Islam doctrine, historical and divine proof that all white people are cursed and are devils, and are about to be brought down. ...The white man's rule will be ended forever in ten or fifteen years (and it must be conceded that all present signs would seem to bear witness to the accuracy of the prophet's statement). ...Very little time was spent on theology, for one did not need to prove to a Harlem audience that all white men were devils. They were merely glad to have, at least, divine corroboration of their experience, to hear--and it was a tremendous thing to hear--that they had been lied to all these generations, and that their captivity was ending, for God was black. ...And now, suddenly, people who have never before been able to hear this message hear it and believe it, and are changed. Elijah Muhammad has been able to do what generations of welfare workers and committees and resolutions and reports and housing projects and playgrounds have failed to do: to heal and redeem drunkards and junkies, to convert people who have come out of prison and keep them out, to make men chaste and women virtuous, and to invest both the male and the female with a pride and serenity that hang about them like an unfailing light. He has done all these things, which our Christian church has spectacularly failed to do. ...
>
> "I've come," said Elijah, "to give you something which can never be taken away from you," ...This is the message that has spread through streets and tenements and prisons, through the narcotics wards, and past the filth and sadism of mental hospitals to a people from whom everything has been taken away, including, most crucially, their sense of their own worth. People cannot live without this sense; they will do anything whatever to regain it. ...
>
> God is Black. All black men belong to Islam; they have been chosen. And Islam shall rule the world. The dream, the sentiment is old; only the color is new. And it is this dream, this sweet possibility, that thousands of oppressed black men and women in this country now carry away with them after the Muslim minister has spoken, through the dark, noisome ghetto streets, into the hovels where so many have perished. The white God has not delivered them; perhaps the black God will.

If the god of the Black Muslims is black, the god of the white fundamentalist religious groups currently associated with the radical right is lily white. Like the Muslims, however, white religious extremists preach a gospel of hate and fear. And they too have their devils, a host of Satans ranging from Khrushchev to Kennedy, from the National Council of Churches to the United Nations. Their literature, a literature that takes on the status of Holy Writ for many southern churchmen and church groups bitterly opposed to desegregation, depicts a nation besieged from without and betrayed from within by a vast "Communist conspiracy."

---

Italics are mine.

Among the leaders of the rightist religious groups, Billy James Hargis of the Christian Crusade and Fred C. Schwarz of the Christian Anti-Communist Crusade are perhaps the best known. Others are: Verne Kaub of the American Council of Christian Laymen (who has sometimes been called the Dean of the American Right Wing); Carl McIntyre of Christian Beacon; Harvey Springer of Western Voice; James Fifield of the Freedom Clubs and the televised Lighted Window; Bob Shuler of The Methodist Challenge; Edgar C. Bundy of the Church League's News and Views; C. O. Staksklev of Truth and Liberty; John L. Rice of Sword of the Lord; William D. Herrstrom of Bible News Flashes; W. C. and Sarah Moore of Herald of His Coming; Max A. X. Clark of National Christian Journal; Howard E. Kershner of Christian Economics; Russell and Ann Ackley of Portions in Due Season; F. Henry Sattler of The Malist; Joseph Matt of The Wanderer; Stormy Jordon of the ironical postcards.

Elwyn A. Smith, writing in the November 14, 1962 issue of Christian Century, warned that "Billy James Hargis, for example, contends that he preaches the gospel of Christ, the 'greatest anti-communist power in the world today'--and he delivers a message of love and hatred a alike that make mincemeat of faith and reason alike."

Mr. Smith continued:

> The churches have not yet proved capable of convincing their members, much less the American people, that the Christian gospel is altogether incompatible with preachments of hate. ...The blend of hard political right with religious revivalism is a familiar American formula by which a moralistic minority lays bare the sin which, if eradicated by the children of righteousness, is sure--so goes the claim--to purge the guilt of the nation.
>
> ...One wonders whether people like Billy James Hargis and Fred Schwarz will not compromise fundamentalism so seriously that in large regions of the country it will no longer be recognizable as religion. When this /right-wing revivalism/ fever has passed, fundamentialism's weakened sense of divine love may well have been wholly supplanted by anti-communism's gospel of fear.

United Press International Correspondent, Louis Cassels reported in a story this spring that "right-wing pressures which threatened to disrupt American churches have waned during the past year. But the radical right is still causing trouble for churches in some communities. And even in areas where its influence has declined sharply, church leaders are wary of a possible resurgence." The following observations are based on a nation-wide survey conducted by the National Council of Churches and reported by Mr. Cassels:

> Of the 96 state and local councils responding to the survey, 52 reported a decrease in such attacks. Fifteen others said they had never experienced any serious trouble. Fifteen councils said things are about the same, and 14 felt there has been some increase in rightist pressure during the past year.
>
> Many of the respondents said that rightist groups are trying as hard as ever to stir up distrust of the clergy and the National Council of Churches, but church members are not listening to the attacks as critically as they once did. (Denver, Colo.; Long Beach, Calif.; Wichita Falls, Tex.; Spokane, Wash.)

Reports indicating "little change" came from Miami, Florida, Atlanta, Georgia, and Oklahoma.

The Christian Crusade has recently fallen on hard times. At the 1963 Annual Convention, August 4, the Rev. Billy James Hargis complained to the 500 delegates from 33 states that income for the first seven months of this year had been only $396,000 as compared to $470,000 for the same period last year. A total of $18,000 was collected at the conference (six persons contributing $1,000 each). Hargis also complained that the crusade was losing members to the fast-growing John Birch Society. The Christian Crusade was a fundamentalist religion movement when Hargis started it in Sapulpa, Oklahoma, 17 years ago. In recent years he has shifted its emphasis to "awakening America" to the internal threat of communism. He indicated that more emphasis may be placed on religion in the future and announced the formation of a youth affiliate crusade, the Torch Bearers, and said there would be chapters on 76 campuses this September. (Two-week seminars this summer trained 116 youths as leaders for "patriotism and Christianity.) The monthly magazine and the programs on radio stations in 55 cities will continue.

The coming election year may well intensify activities of all these groups, particularly in areas where there are right-wing candidates for public office. Baptists Hargis and Robert Welch (founder and head of the John Birch Society) have avowed white supremacists in their organizations, and there are distinct racist overtones in their attacks on civil rights legislation. As for religion, Welch contends that there are about 7,000 ministers in the United States who are communist sympathizers.

* * * * * * * * * * * * * * * *

VII. THE CHURCH MARCHES WHERE?

In analyzing and assessing the role of the church in American life, religious leaders generally agree that its principal failures have been these:

- The church follows rather than leads.--"...the forces of religion must lead rather than follow in this battle to build a society and a world in which the dignity of every human being is jealously guarded..." Dr. Julius Mark, president of the Synagogue Councils of America.*

- Religion is not relevant to life today; no religion in America can Practice its convictions and preach racism.--"Careful and responsible thinkers refer to racism as the core of many of our problems today. What we do about it is the ultimate test of our vaunted democratic way of life, /and we must/ ...remove the last vestiges of injustice, legal inequality, and discrimination from our committees, parishes, schools, and other institutions." Cardinal Albert Meyer, Pontifical Commission for Bibical Studies for the Second Vatican Council.*

- Clergymen lack the courage of their convictions, and are susceptible to pressure from church members.--"By negligence and silence we have all become accessories before the God of mercy to the injustice committee against the Negroes in our nations." Rabbi Abraham J. Heschel, Jewish Theological Seminary.*

/We have a/"clear duty /to/ make clear to all our people the cancerous nature of this evil and its threat to our society if it be not eliminated." J. Irwin Miller, president, National Council of Churches.*

- Church members are apathetic or resistant to social change; religion is more widely professed than respected among us.--/In some parts of the nation/ "the conduct of the Christians is worse than the laws." Dr. Franklin M. Littel, Chicago Theological Seminary.*

"It is not enough merely to publicize a social doctrine. It has to be translated into action." Pope John XXIII, in his encyclical letter, Mater et Magistra."

The Church Follows Rather than Leads.--Why has the church hesitated in becoming involved in the social conflict of our time? The social activist is moving into a whole new phase of life; the church, until recently, has been the tail end of the movement. Only after the Negro students began the sit-in movement (February, 1961) did the church begin to change its emphasis from "law and order" to a real confrontation with the moral and ethical implications of segregation. The kneel-ins brought this issue into the pews and altars of the churches. No longer was it possible to evade facing, and taking a stand on, the responsibility of the church toward segregation.

---

*Speaking at the Religion and Race meeting in Chicago, January 1963.

The church was not always such a laggard, and the men of God most remembered and revered through the ages were those involved in the great moral issues of their time. Jesus was crucified because he would not cease to express his convictions of faith. John Wesley, when preaching the word of God to the miners in England, learned that their poverty had to be taken into consideration and their general condition improved before religion could be meaningful to them.

Will Campbell writes in his book, Race and the Renewal of the Church:

> Christendom came very close to gaining the whole world. It is now, or so say its critics, dangerously close to losing its own soul. In no area more crucial to the future of the church is this more true than in the area of race relations. ...
>
> In Africa and Asia the leadership is found today in the tidal wave of nationalism sweeping those two continents and carrying their peoples toward political and economic independence. In America, the most promising and exciting developments in human relations are taking place, not in the churches, but in government.
>
> The church might have influenced these developments by being true to its own nature. It might have determined their success or failure, but it failed to act. It waited until government took the initiative to rescue human rights. And today when the church acts in the human relations field, it follows government or political authority. It imitates the action of the state or it confirms such action with a pious benediction. Moreover, when it has acted, the church has been too often an echo of the cry for law and order, democracy, the rights of man, human dignity, constitutional process, the public schools.
>
> These things are good, but are they the most basic, most distinctive, concern of the church? ...We have been asking the wrong questions. Instead of demanding, what can the Christian do to improve race relations? we should be asking, what must the Christian be? As the body of Christ, the church first of all must be the redeemed community. Then will it be empowered to redeem the world, and not before.

> The sin of the church is not that it has not reformed society, but that it has not realized self-renewal. Its sin is that it has not repented. Without repentance there cannot be renewal.

~~In the summer of 1963, as previously noted,~~ The church has begun taking an active role in the civil rights movement--Jewish rabbis, Catholic priests and nuns, and Protestant ministers (many of them national leaders) began walking picket lines, joining sit-ins demonstrations and marches, even going to jail. But again the church is following; it is supporting the Negro and interracial action groups, the secular liberals, and civil rights legislation.

The church has recently shown more determination to bring moral and economic pressure to bear on its own institutions--schools and colleges, hospitals, church building programs, and rental property--to eliminate any racial discrimination. There is some evidence that these stronger national policies are giving courage to local ministers and churches to take ~~coution~~ cautious first steps toward "open door" policies. However, in areas where this happened, it has usually followed desegregation of public accommodations after either demonstrations or negotiated settlements.

Religion is Not Relevant to Life Today.--There is a growing demand for a religion that is personal and is applied; that says what it means and means what it says. If the test of the Judeo-Christian religion is to love God and your neighbor, its practical application is exemplified by the Good Samaritan. The sick and the needy, the troubled and mourning are not to be found in the churches on Sunday morning. The people most in need of help seldom come to church; the church must go to them.

Today the racial problem is the most deeply disturbing dilemma of religious faith and conscience. Too many churches are operated like country clubs with programs totally unrelated to the lives of the people. Too many clergymen evade this troublesome issue and repeat cliches and prescriptions for peace of mind. Some use the cautious approach of telling the congregation, "the national board has recommended..." or else speak in vague generalities to avoid stepping on the toes of the conscience of any large contributor to the church budget. Perhaps the white Protestant church in particular needs Negro ministers or African missionaries to break through their complacency and expose their hypocracy, fear, doubt, and the evasions and rationalizations of the vestries, the boards of deacons, and the building committees. Such a program might make of Christianity something a searching person could honestly accept.

In the slum areas of the inner city, the old patterns of churches and religion no longer work; to the ministers who tried to apply them, they seemed irrelevant. It became clear that unless the minister was concerned with their everyday life the people were not going to listen to him. The kinds of programs that have developed from this new attitude are dynamic and effective. Two examples follow:

> In one East Harlem parish, the store-front church evolved to include a counseling center, narcotics program to help drug addicts, medical clinic, remedial reading clinic, library, and recreation program for teen-agers.
>
> In another city, a minister organized a reform Democratic club for community improvement in a slum area. The club was successful in getting its candidate elected to the state assembly, another as state committeeman, and an appointee to serve in city administration Department of Buildings to represent the rights of the tenants of sub-standard housing.

But such examples are all too few and too seldom found. The splendor of the church is everywhere revealed along Fifth Avenue downtown; the service of the church is scarcely revealed at all to those in the ghettos of Fifth Avenue uptown.

The inconsistency of the church's mission boards sending money and missionaries to the African countries for generations, and then refusing to admit the mission-educated students to American church-related schools has been castigated by churchmen, journalists, and missionaries. Charging that U. S. missionaries too often "peddle pious piffle" instead of becoming involved in the life of the people to whom they are supposed to minister, the Rev. Harris Mobley, a Mercer alumnus, in a frank address to Mercer University students scored the actions of American missionaries who refuse "to get involved in the wounds of the African." He continued:

> African Christian leadership is "fed up with playing second fiddle to the missionaries. Our paternalism, cultural ignorance and disrespect for things African have all but finished us. ..." What the African people want "is human dignity and self-respect." The mission boards have not been getting "the best people for the jobs. Too often they attract mediocre characters who could not make it at home." Besides being unwilling to work with Africans "at the bottom," they are not able to work with those at the top...

" "Let's insist on a better reason for brotherhood than political expedience or economic feasibility...racial segregation is offensive to human dignity, to the Negro in particular, but most of all to God."

The real question is not "whether Negroes want to worship in our churches but if we want them to come. It is not will it hurt the cooperative program, local giving, even peace in the church, but will it hurt a greatly concerned God if we don't. Not what it will do to the building program, but to the building of the Kingdom of God. Our ultimate danger is not in losing members but in losing the very soul of the church."

Clergymen Lack the Courage of Their Convictions, and Are Susceptible to Pressure from Church Members

The dilemma of the Southern minister who believes that Christians and Christian churches should, as a matter of principle, be in the forefront of the forces working for racial tolerance and that any Christian should be admitted to the church has been well documented. Pressure from congregational leaders, ostracism and obstruction, threats of violence, petitions to remove the minister--these are all familiar patterns. The wonder is that as many clergymen as have been noted in the news have been willing to pay the price of this difficult decision.

Ralph McGill, in a May 19th 1963 column of the Atlanta Constitution, discussed the intolerant attitude of laymen which defeats and sometimes destroys a southern minister. The Atlanta columnist wrote:

"I want to tell you about churches and preachers," the letter said. "The churches belong to the members. The minister is just a guest, or, to be plain, a hired man. We, the members, decide to whom we will offer the job of filling our pulpit. When, and if, we want him to go we will vote to tell him so as we voted to ask him to come. All this talk about a minister taking the lead is just stuff. The members will decide what members to accept, and to whom doors will be opened and to whom closed. This is the truth of it, and all this talk about Christian 'duty' is meaningless. The Christian members of churches will decide. The preacher is just a hired man."

The writer was a woman. One could imagine her, cold-eyed and angry, but also icily-controlled, as she put down her dogma. She named her particular affiliation. It is that of an evangelical group that generously supports foreign missions, with emphasis on Africa and Latin America. That the writer represents a considerable body of thought is undenied by the almost weekly actions of ushers at some churches and the humiliations of ministers unable to have an open church door.

If the description of the "preacher" as "just a hired man," or hired guest, is a harsh one, let us face the fact that the record is an uncomfortable one in that it too often sustains the statement made. A church in Columbus, Ga., abruptly fired its hired man a few years ago for saying the race problem was a moral one. A pleased church member, a party to the firing, was quoted as saying, "Now we can get a preacher with the right sort of religion." This will remain as the classic utterance of all time. It exactly fits the letter writer's description of things ...the hired man will be asked out if he doesn't do what the members order. More than a hundred ministers have been booted out of deep-South churches since 1954 and, quite obviously, more are on the way.

The number, however, likely will not be large, though the attitude of being ready and willing to fire the church hired man is more prevalent than is generally comprehended. It is by no means restricted to rural or city fundamentalist churches where God himself is hailed as the first and greatest segregationist. It is a fiercely nurtured state of mind at an undetermined number of rich and comfortable urban churches where, indeed, the "right sort of religion" is the first and great commandment.

The appendix to the "Action" section of this report lists both courageous actions by ministers and retaliation by church members. The probability is that many more ministers have left their churches under varying degrees of pressure without any publicity and with other reasons given for their departure from the community or state. The Rev. Dr. Albert McClellan of Nashville, Tenn., a Southern Baptist executive, says he knows definitely of only three pastors "forced out" of their pulpits recently over the race question. But he said "there could be many more,' and that he knew of several others who resigned voluntarily because they felt they couldn't preach forthrightly on the racial problem. In Mississippi, Methodist Bishop Marvin Franklin said "a little more than usual left last year." Since in the South the admission of Negroes to white churches or ministers advocating an "open door" policy is considered news, the reported number of forced departures is extremely low by percentage.

A recent nationwide survey of about 4,000 ministers by Columbia University's Bureau of Applied Social Research showed that a third of them reported being criticized by members for preaching about controversial issues, such as race relations. About a third also are unhappy enough about the situation to want to leave their parishes, though they haven't done so, the study found.

Some denominations, including the United Church ofChrist, the United Presbyterian Church, U.S.A., the Protestant Episcopal Church, and the Lutheran Church have set up special funds to aid those who lose their pulpits over the issue. Union Theological Seminary sent a special letter to all alumni offering special two-week "study leaves" to those under heavy fire locally.

Church Members Are Apathetic or Resistant to Social Change; Religion Is More Widely Professed than Respected Among Us.

In religious circles this view is widely accepted; why is it true? Has the church for too long shown tacit agreement with the prevailing opinion that religion is just for Sundays in church and has nothing at all to do with the outside activities of church members from Monday through Saturday?

Should it be necessary to question whether the church's concern is limited to personal and private sin (as many southern churchmen do) since personal life is social life (unless one happens to be a recluse or a hermit)?

Clergy and laity alike are taking another look at the church--from within--and there is much discussion going on as to the methods of measuring church "success" or "effectiveness." Regularly attending comfortable, air-conditioned buildings to be mildly inspired by music, stained glass, and not-too-disturbing sermons does not demand real interest in or respect for the church. Neither do "togetherness" church suppers, picnics, and missionary teas.

Obviously, church policy can be bent and molded so as to conform more to personal preferences, to local "way of life." And the Christian faith has ofttimes been watered down so as to make it more palatable, more easily acceptable, more adjusted to human desires, needs, prides, and prejudices.

If members are to be challenged to live creatively "in the gap between the will of God, theologically understood, and the concrete human situation, pragmatically understood,"* the church and the minister must offer more.

The Negro church has offered more, and has been revitalized and transformed. Can the white church change? Would a "transfusion" of the energy and vitality of the Negro church (which most white churches are stubbornly resisting) aid the fragmented church to regain its wholeness?

Has the church failed to put across its conviction that prejudice is immoral? Has it stubbornly refused to crusade against racial discrimination and resolve its own differences over this issue? According to its own spokesmen, it has. What then, of the future? Can the church regain its former position of respect, influence, and moral leadership? A few, at least, of its leaders and severest critics believe that it can.

* by P. Lehmann, as quoted by David W. Barry, Executive Director, New York Mission Society, in a paper, "Guidelines for Evaluation of the Local Urban Church." 1963.

"The strongest centers of resistance have been invaded and most of them have given ground," said Dr. Harry Richardson, president of the Interdenominational Theological Center in Atlanta, to church leaders from throughout the nation on April 18, 1963. "If the present conditions continue, we can almost expect the disappearance of the race problem as we have known it within 40 years." Dr. Richardson made the following points:

- the church in the South in 40 years will be more worldly minded. It will be concerned with the welfare of human beings
- the church will be more interested in helping bring into the world a better life for people; it is up against movements that are determined to do that.
- the church must be led by a new kind of minister--men who have no other aim or interest than to serve for God's sake and His sake alone;
- today's ideals of success--a big salary, a big church, popularity, a role as communicator to millions--must pass. The church will have to be led by those who ask nothing other than to lose themselves in service to God and to their brother:

The late Pope John XXIII realized the church must free itself of old and irrelevant restrictions and divisions before it could reach out to a new concept of world brotherhood--a union of all creeds and races. He made a good beginning in the short time he had, and his vision of what the church could become, as enunciated in his magnificent encyclicals, inspired all religious leaders. His message on race (Pacem in Terris) in particular had worldwide influence and significance.

> It is true that nothing is easy, and we do not hide this fact from ourself. But with the help of God and with a sincere tribute of subjection to Him, true progress in brotherhood and peace is possible.

American churchmen today know only too well how difficult it is to attain "true progress in brotherhood" between Americans of different color and different creed. But, guided by Pope John's eloquence and by the example he set not just for Roman Catholics but for men of all faiths, they are also learning that the bonds between men far outnumber the barriers. And they may yet raise the church to new heights of greatness, to new horizons of glory.

APPENDIX

Recent Examples of Southern Church Action: Positive and Negative

ALABAMA, 1963 :

Birmingham, April 28--Groups of three or four Negroes visited 39 white churches. They were accepted at nine, where they were escorted inside and directed to pews. (This was after 26 days of demonstrations with more than 400 arrests.)

Gadsden, June 16-- Several downtown white churches accepted Negroes for services without incident.

Linden, June 13-- The Rev. Joe H. Patterson resigned, effective June 29, as pastor of the Linden Baptist Church when deacons in his congregation objected to his recommendation of an "open door" membership policy in the church. That night his home was stoned and a cross was burned on his lawn; his wife and three young children were there alone. Sentiment in the congregation changed in his favor, and he was asked to reconsider his resignation, but refused.

ARKANSAS, 1963:

August 2, 1963--In the past few months one Southern Baptist church has opened its doors to Negroes, the first in the state to do so.

Gillett, week of June 24--Rural Negro church bombed with dynamite.

FLORIDA, 1963:

Dade County, April 15--At the invitation of Bishop Coleman F. Carroll, 17 Catholic, Jewish, and Protestant religious leaders of Dade County met to lay the groundwork for a program of mutual cooperation in racial and other moral community problems.

Pensacola, Aug. 28, 1963--The Southern District of the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod admitted a number of Negro churches to district membership along with new white congregations: total admitted, 27. There was no separate listing of the number of Negro churches.

GEORGIA, 1963:

Albany, June 19--A manifesto asking peaceful negotiation of differences was issued by 47 Negro ministers. They have had at least one meeting with white business leaders.

Seven youths who had led anti-desegregation demonstrations sought sanctuary in the Shiloh Baptist Church.

Albany, July--St. Mark's Episcopal Church has announced it is a "house of prayer for all people," and Negroes have attended services there. The rector, the Rev. H. W. Shipps, requested that "anyone who does not understand...please call so we can have a quiet discussion."

Albany, July 20--The Bnai Israel Temple turned away two (white) Jewish members of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee who were accompanied by a small Negro boy. A temple member who observed the Friday night incident said an usher met the group and refused to let them in; they left quietly.

Athens, August 25--Two white churches admitted Negroes for the first time today; six Negroes attended the First Methodist Church and the First Baptist Church. There were no incidents.

Atlanta, January 22--A new organization, the Greater Atlanta Methodist Ministers Alliance, was formed at the annual joint meeting of the Greater Atlanta Methodist Ministers Association (white) and the Atlanta Methodist Ministers Alliance (Negro). The combined group will meet monthly. Formerly the Negro and white groups met jointly only at the annual meeting. About 200 white and 100 Negro ministers joined in forming the GAMMA.

Atlanta, Jan. 24--A resolution deploring racial barracades on two southwest Atlanta streets was adopted by the North Georgia Diocese of the Episcopal Church. Another resolution, urging all church-related institutions be required to make clear they "do not use race as a basis for admission...," was ruled out of order and not acted upon. The Bishop stated that the church's policy was quite clear and the resolution unneccessary.

Early in March it was announced that Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s five year old son was rejected for admission to Lovett Episcopal Day School. The enrollment at Lovett includes about 40% non-Episcopalians, and about 30% are Jewish. On March 26, Cecil A. Alexander, Atlanta architect, submitted his resignation as trustee of Lovett in protest. On June 14 the board of trustees by unanimous vote denied applications of Negroes and instructed the headmaster not to accept any applications from Negroes. On July 3, Episcopal Bishop Claiborne of Atlanta withdrew any "implied or official" Episcopal Church support of Lovett School, and announced that the Episcopal priest serving as headmaster at Lovett had submitted his resignation. The headmaster, the Rev. James R. McDowell, has accepted the position of headmaster of (Episcopal) Sewanee Military Academy in Tennessee. The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity has announced plans to picket the school; the Bishop has given permission for religious services to be continued: chapel, weekly Communion Service, and religious instruction.

Atlanta, May 25--The Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Atlanta received its first Negro priest; the Rev. William E. Calhoun was ordained at the Cathedral of Christ the King.

Atlanta, May 28--Two Negro student chaplain internes were accepted at Grady Hospital, to begin in June. Both are Baptist and will serve the spiritual needs of hospital patients.

Atlanta, June 30--The board of directors of the Presbyterian Survey, official publication of the Presbyterian Church, U.S., adopted a policy of supporting Atlanta restaurants which have desegregated. The Board of Women's Work had already done so.

Atlanta, July 7--St. Mark Methodist Church admitted a Negro visitor. All Episcopal, Lutheran, most Presbyterian, and some Methodist and Baptist churches have admitted Negro visitors for some time without incident. (See "Example of Church Ambivalance"at end of appendix for account of Atlanta First Baptist.)

Augusta, April 29--The Augusta Evangelical Ministers' Association recommended voluntary desegregation of local schools. In a statement to the Augusta Herald the ministers said, "we believe that voluntary desegregation done in the Christian spirit is the most effective solution..." The resolution asked that ministers "be invited to join the asssociation, regardless of color or race, in compliance with the provisions of our constitution."

Carrollton, June 27--The Rev. Donald H. Harrison asked members of St. Margaret's Episcopal Church to lend their support to his opposition to organization of a white citizens council. Mr. Harrison is also chaplain to Episcopal students at West Georgia College, desegregated Fall, 1963.

Decatur, July 28--A Christian Church minister preached "the time has come for every congregation in the Atlanta area to declare unequivocably that the church ...must be open to all God's children without restriction."

Macon, July 1--Mercer University (Baptist) and Wesleyan College (Methodist) were among the ten establishments signing contracts with the federal government to operate the businesses where their post office stations are situated on a non-discriminatory basis.

Macon, Sept. 6--At least three Negro students have been registered for classes at Mercer University. One student is from Ghana; the other two are local.

Savannah, June 24--Bishop Thomas J. McDonough announced that Catholic schools in the Diocese of Savannah will be integrated effective September 1, 1963. This policy applies to all grades of both elementary and high schools.

Savannah, July 13--Clergymen issued a statement calling for a "real and just solution" of the racial crisis and the "immediate resumption of negotiations." The ministers included the Episcopal, Catholic and Methodist bishops of the city; they also offered their services in reaching a settlement.

Savannah, July 14--Negroes sought to worship at several white Savannah churches; all were turned away without incident.

Savannah, July 17--The Protestant Ministerial Association issued a request that July 28 be a day of prayer (during efforts to negotiate racial problems).

Terrell and Lee Counties, July 3--Work of rebuilding three southwest Georgia Negro churches began on this date, nearly a year after the buildings were destroyed by incendiary fires.

KENTUCKY, 1963:

Evarts, June--Last summer the Evarts Congregational Christian Church (United Church of Christ) invited children and teachers from the Negro churches of the community to participate in the Daily Vacation Church School. The minister, the Rev. Carolyn Welch, reported that the program was successful and was, she thought, enriching not only to the church but to the community. The same program was followed this year, with even larger attendance and community participation.

October 1963--The Kentucky-Tennessee Conference of Congregational Christian Churches (white) and the Tennessee-Kentucky Conference of Congregational Christian Churches (Negro) will hold a joint annual meeting for the second time, looking toward eventually combining the two conferences. Committee work of the two groups has already been unified wherever possible.

LOUISIANA, 1963:

Baton Rouge, July 29--Desegregation of the 11th and 12th grades in four Roman Catholic high schools in East Baton Rouge Parish will begin in 1964.

Buras, July 6-16--Window panes were broken in the rectory of Our Lady of Good

LOUISIANA, continued:

Harbor Church. It was the second time the rectory had been fired on since nearby Our Lady of Good Harbor School was integrated last September. Last November 13, 26 window panes were shattered by birdshot. On August 27 Our Lady of Good Harbor School, operated by the Catholic Sisters of St. Francis, was closed after being damaged by a midnight explosion. The school had been scheduled to reopen, still desegregated, on September 3.

New Orleans, March 24--An article by John Carporon in the Washington Post stated that the color bar had been removed in all Catholic schools in the Archdiocese of New Orleans, with an estimated 200 Negro Catholic youngsters attending formerly all-white parochial schools. Catholic schools in the archdiocese were desegregated in policy in the fall of 1962, but few had Negro students.

Ponte A La Hache, June 27--A Roman Catholic priest, who charged a Belle Chasse man punched him in a disagreement over the cleric's conducting a biracial religious instruction class, asked and got a court dismissal of simple battery against the man.

Plaquemine, Aug. 25--Negroes attended services at two white Protestant churches today: 7 were admitted to the Northside Baptist Church (seated in a separate section) and 8 attended the Episcopal church. At the First Methodist and First Baptist churches groups of Negroes were turned away.

MISSISSIPPI, 1963:

At the height of the 1962 riots on the University of Mississippi campus, Episcopal priests went out into the face of death as a sort of two-man truth squad, talking to students, relieving them of knives, shovels, bottles, bricks and other more lethal weapons.

June 2--The clerical delegates of the Mississippi Methodist Conference voted 89-85 in a closed session to sever relations with the Rev. Ralph Edwin King, a white Methodist minister who was arrested as a racial demonstrator. He was refused permission, by the bishop, to question the decision or to speak to the assembly.

Clarksdale, Aug. 8--An interdenominational group of ministers from other parts of the country tried without success to call upon the city government, to urge a reconciliation of differences.

Jackson, May 24--Negro and white clergymen held, for the first time, a joint session to discuss the city's racial problem and"to seek peaceable amelioration of the Negro's just complaints." They agreed to devote their sermons the following Sunday, May 26, to this issue.

Jackson, May 29--A group of 12 leading white ministers, including five bishops and representing eight denominations, released a statement urging "communications" between the races. The statement continued, "we have met with responsible civic leaders and with representatives of two ministerial associations... our progress has been exceedingly limited."

Jackson, June 16--Four young Negro women attended St. Andrews Episcopal Church without incident. (This was the day following the funeral of Medgar Evers.) Negroes were refused admission at Central Presbyterian and First Christian churches. The previous Sunday (June 9) Negro visitors were turned away at two Methodist and two Baptist Churches. One of the Methodist churches was Galloway Memorial, and on June 10 the pastor, the Rev. W. B. Selah, resigned. The assistant pastor, the Rev. Jerry Furr (signer of the "Born of Conviction" statement in January) said he would also resign. Others were the Capital Methodist and Calvary Baptist churches and the First Baptist Church (which said Negroes had attended in the past but were unwelcome now because of racial tension). Five Negroes attended Mass at St. Peters Roman Catholic Church, where Negroes have gone regularly for years. On June 30 three white churches refused to admit Negroes.

MISSIPPI, continued:

June 28--Of the 28 young white Methodist ministers who signed the January 1963 "Born of Conviction" statement proclaiming their belief in "freedom of the pulpit" and opposing racial discrimination in Mississippi, 12 have left the state and seven have moved to other churches within Mississippi under varying degrees of pressure and frustration. Nine still remain in their original churches. Those who left the state did so voluntarily; none was expelled from the Methodist Conference. All were targets for segregationist reaction within their churches and communities; a few suffered violence or threats of violence. Tires were slashed, rocks thrown at parsonages, a cross was burned by the Ku Klux Klan at at least two parsonages. Harassment by telephone was general. One minister's wife was dismissed from her teaching job; another minister lost his part-time teaching position. All, however, have had some loyal support from their congregations.

Tupelo, July--The ruling board of the First Methodist Church voted 40-4 to seat Negroes.

NORTH CAROLINA, 1963:

January 30-- The North Carolina Council of Churches, embracing 15 denominations, elected a Negro, Dr. Samuel E. Duncan, as vice president. The council also voted to hire a full-time worker in the area of social concerns and pledged funds to pay his salary. A resolution was adopted commending the governor for his Good Neighbor Council and encouraging "the employment of qualified people without regard to race."

June 17-23, 1962--The annual national conference of the Methodist Student Movement advocated the desegregation of swimming facilities at Lake Junaluska, the Methodist Southeastern jurisdiction summer assembly grounds in North Carolina. The students also voted to set up an interracial seminar in Mississippi or Alabama, at which Negro and white students will have the opportunity to confront the racial issue in the light of Christian ethics, and adopted a statement supporting Methodist participation in union discussions with other churches.

Ahoskie, July 22-28--Negro and white preachers jointly conducted week-long, nightly series of integrated services and meetings.

Charlotte, Summer 1963--An interfaith North Carolina Council on Religion and Race was formed.

Lexington, June--During this month the First Methodist Church admitted Negro worshippers.

Raleigh, May 12--As Negroes demonstrated here for the fifth straight day, the pastor of the First Presbyterian Church declined to deliver a sermon because of his "keen disappointment" in his congregation's apathy over Raleigh's racial troubles. Only two or three members of the congregation had heeded Dr. Albert Edwards' request to express themselves to local businessmen on the racial controversy. "If Christian people do not express themselves at a time like this," he said, "then who will?" The church has admitted Negro visitors in the past and ten were present on this Sunday.

NORTH CAROLINA, continued:

The Raleigh Ministerial Association voted 42-1 in favor of desegregating business facilities.

Only one church, Calvary Baptist, barred and locked the church door as ushers turned away 12 Negro college students during the mass attendance by Negroes of local churches. Later, the church voted (80% affirmative) in favor of admitting Negroes and 12 Shaw University students were seated on May 19. The same week, Longview Methodist Church joined the list of churches indicating all persons are welcome. The Rev. Worth B. Cotton, pastor, told the congregation "as Christian Church we cannot turn these people away."

Raleigh, May 15--The First Baptist Church rejected (367-147) the application for membership of Charles Earle, a Shaw University student from Jamaica. The Southern Baptist Convention has loaned Earle $375 to help finance his education. Earle is president of the Student Council and has been a leader of student demonstrations.

Raleigh, May 20--The West Raleigh Presbyterian Church endorsed, and offered "encouragement and cooperation," the resolution of the Raleigh Merchants Bureau calling for lowering of racial barriers in government and business.

Raleigh, June 13--Six Episcopal clergy (4 Negro and 2 white) were turned away when they attempted to eat at downtown S. & W. Cafeteria. The ministers were attending a church conference at St. Augustine's College in Raleigh. The group prayed, read the Bible, and left quietly. The cafeteria desegregated the following week.

Thomasville, July 18--A shot was fired into a Negro church during a rally.

OKLAHOMA, 1963:

Jan. 24--The Oklahoma Diocese of the Episcopal Church approved a resolution requesting all Episcopal schools in the state to announce in all bulletins or promotional material that no students shall be "barred because of race, creed, or color."

Oklahoma City, Aug. 24--The N.A.A.C.P. Youth Council staged the first kneel-in here when 20 pairs of Negro youths attended 20 churches; they were turned away from three.

Summer, 1963--Catholic Bishop Reed of Oklahoma City has inserted a non-discriminatory clause in church construction contracts.

Tulsa, August 2--The National Council of Churches local chapter joined with the N.A.A.C.P. recently to help collect 10,000 signatures to a petition asking city officials to wipe out segregation in all public places with a city ordinance backed by stiff fines. Speedy approval was predicted for the measure, which is also supported strongly by Catholic and Jewish leaders.

SOUTH CAROLINA, 1963:

Charleston, June 27--Catholic hospitals in Charleston and Columbia will accept Negro patients this fall; all services will be available to them, hospital officials said. But Negro doctors will not be permitted to practice in these hospitals.

SOUTH CAROLINA, continued:

Columbia, Oct. 28, 1962--The first break in hotel segregation was accomplished by the House of Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church. The body rented an entire downtown motor hotel so that its two Liberian missionary bishops, who are African, would be housed with white bishops during the annual meeting. Since restaurants (except for chain-store lunch counters) were still segregated, the two bishops took their meals with other bishops at Trinity Church or at private homes.

March 28--the Rev. Charles Webster, director of Baptist student work at Clemson College, charged that he had been forced out of his church post because of his contacts with Clemston's only Negro student--Harvey B. Gantt.

Farmington, Jan. 13--The Trinity Episcopal Church at Farmington, whose congregation of about 140 families is white, chose as pastor a Negro, the Rev. Joseph A. Pelham, of Detroit and a member of the Michigan Episcopal Diocese staff. The Senior Warden said the Rev. Mr. Pelham was "head and shoulders" above more than a dozen other candidates and the parishioners have accepted him with "widespread enthusiasm."

Florence, Aug. 27--The Rev. L. B. Burgess, pastor of the Mt. Zion AME Church, said some 12 Negro ministers probably will accept the invitation of the all-white Florence Pastors' Conference to join them. A joint meeting is anticipated soon.

Sumter, July 19--This city, which has been without racial demonstrations for two years, witnessed prayer groups at city hall and the courthouse.

TENNESSEE, 1963:

Knoxville, Aug. 4--Three hospitals (Baptist, Presbyterian, and Catholic) announced their simultaneous desegregation during previous week.

Knoxville, May 5--A group of Catholic and Presbyterian ministers sponsored an "Operation Friendship" in Blount and Knox Counties. Participating were 650 persons from 24 churches and synagogues. At the National Conference on Religion a and Race last January, the Interracial Home Visit program was one of the official recommendations. Chicago's Friendship House provides a service of consultation in person or by mail, "how to do it" literature, summer study weekends featuring actual participation in a Visit, and analyses of various aspects of the technique. It has assisted religious and secular groups, interfaith committees, private and civic human relations agencies, and ordinary citizens wanting to help eliminate racial discrimination at the grass roots level.

Southern cities other than Washington, D. C. and Knoxville, Tenn. where Interracial Home Visits have been held in cooperation with Friendship House are: College Park, Md.; Covington and Louisville, Ky.; and several other cities where those conducting the visits are not making them public at present.

TEXAS, 1963:

The Texas Council of Churches completed a Race Relations Progress Study in the Spring of 1962. The church report of the study consisted of 15 mimeographed pages and was one of eight commission reports studied by the conference. It was based on questionnaires completed by 873 churches (out of 4,178 mailed) and replies from 76 interdenominational agencies. The findings were presented to the Study Conference on Race Relations Progress in Texas held at Perkins School of Theology April 24-26.

TEXAS, continued:

The report revealed that chances of belonging to a racially integrated church in Texas are best when the church is: 1) a large church, 2) with a middle-class constituency, 3) composed of those with professional or graduate level training, 4) in a downtown urban location, and 5) is a Presbyterian or an Episcopal church.

One third (two-thirds of those having over 1,200 members) of the churches replying to the questionnaire claimed some degree of desegregation, token in the large majority. The conference workgroup warned that token desegregation, like a successful vaccination, often seems to retard significant integration.

Other areas studied were schools, colleges, public facilities, recreation, employment, hotels-motels-restaurants, and housing. The conference program was of high quality, but small attendance seemed to reinforce the findings of the work groups that the churches are quite willing to let government take the lead in fighting discrimination.

June 5, 1963--The Texas Annual Conference of the Methodist Church heard a report from the board of Christian Social Concerns calling upon all church-related institutions to make their service and facilities available to people of all races, and urged that the Conferences of the Central Jurisdiction (Negro) be included in the organization. The conference approved the report, but a resolution calling for the conference to go on record as favoring desegregation in all Texas Methodist schools did not get a second.

Waco, week of June 17-- At least two churches publicly announced they are open to all.

Amarillo, June 23--Approximately 40 Negroes worshipped in five white churches.

Beaumont, July 15--The Rev. Wm. B. Oliver III, of Dallas, has been appointed pastor of the Graham Congregational Church, effective September 8. He is the first white pastor to take an all-Negro church in the history of the United Church of Christ.

Dallas, July 17--The white congregation of the Cedar Crest Baptist Church has voted to admit Negroes if they appear at services. In the past several months, four Southern Baptist churches in Texas have opened their doors to Negroes, the first in the state to do so. Names of others are so far unknown.

Dallas, Aug. 4-- The city's racially-mixed South Oak Cliff area launched (under sponsorship of five white churches) a neighborhood program to promote community development and interracial cooperation.

Houston, July 2-- A third Negro, Terrance Boone, sought membership in the First Baptist Church Saturday and was referred to a conference of members. The church, of which Dr. Kenneth White, president of the Southern Baptist Association, is pastor, previously rejected membership applications of two Negroes. White said from the pulpit Sunday that the church has adopted a new policy of questioning applicants for membership.

Sherman--Biracial ministerial alliance has helped open communications on employment opportunities this year.

VIRGINIA, 1963:--

Sept. 27, 1962--The five-year-old Hemlock Haven segregation controversy ended as Southwest Virginia Episcopal laymen and clergy voted for a "separation by sex" plan at the youth camp near Marion, Va. The resolution to conduct a diocese camp passed by voice vote within ten minutes after it was introduced. The special council was called last June by the Right Rev. William H. Marmion, diocesan bishop, to decide the camp question and to take a second look at the proposed 1963 budget of $275,112 (which was not passed at the regular Council meeting last May).

Spring, 1963--The Virginia annual conference of the Methodist Church set the academic year 1964-65 as the "absolute deadline" for integration of its church-related colleges.

Charlottesville, June 3--Thirty-one ministers of the Charlottesville-Albemarle Ministerial Association met Saturday to discuss current racial problems, and 30 agreed to request city council to appoint a biracial committee.

During his Sunday sermon, the Rev. Donald A. Givens, pastor of Jefferson Park Baptist Church, said "the church's sole purpose is to win souls to Christ...each member should remember this regardless of his feelings."

Danville, July 16--Thirteen white ministers again urged Mayor Stinson to enlarge his all-white racial advisory committee "to include citizens of both races." Ministers represented Baptist, Methodist, Disciples of Christ, Lutheran, Episcopal, Presbyterian, Catholic, Jewish and Greek Orthodox churches.

Danville, Aug. 7--The First Christian Church voted to oust its pastor, the Rev. Cecil Robert Taylor (38 and father of three sons) chiefly because he was one of 13 white ministers to urge city council to appoint a biracial committee to solve racial problems during massive demonstrations in May. Shortly before the first demonstrations began, the Rev. Robert L. McCan was voted out of the First Baptist Church because of a sermon in which he encouraged an end to discrimination. This is the second time the Rev. Taylor has lost a church; he was asked to leave Sandersville, Ga., in early 1962. A native of Lynchburg, Mr. Taylor said he hoped he could stay in the South.

Fredericksburg, April--The Methodist Church admitted its first Negro member. There was some criticism of the minister, the Rev. J. William Hough, and a petition was circulated for his removal. Both the governing body of the church and the local ministerial association asked that he be reappointed. On May 26 a second Negro was admitted to membership and "occasioned no comment." Mr. Hough was reappointed June 15.

Martinsville, June 7--Henry County Christian Civic League called on local business leaders to voluntarily desegregate public facilities and employment, and requested City Council appoint an official biracial committee.

Richmond, July 7--The Rev. Robert W. Hare (white), of Raleigh, N.C., became pastor of the (Negro) First Presbyterian Church, U.S.A.

May 29--Three Episcopal bishops publicly supported the statement issued by the presiding bishop, the Rt. Rev. Arthur Lichenberger, urging members to support racial equality.

The Rt. Rev. Robt. F. Gibson, bishop of Diocese of Virginia (Richmond) reported there are integrated parishes, the youth conference at Roslyn has been integrated for several years, and the youth conference at Shrinemont in Rockingham County is integrated.

The Rt. Rev. William H. Marmion bishop of Southwestern Virginia (Roanoke) said

VIRGINIA, continued:

the diocese has integrated parishes and the youth conference is integrated by race but segregated by sex, beginning this summer (Hemlock Haven near Marion).

The Rt. Rev. George P. Gunn, bishop of Southern Virginia, supported the statement but did not report any integration.

The bishops also noted that St. Stephen's School in Alexandria has accepted a Negro student and a Negro girl is on the waiting list of St. Catherine's School in Richmond. Her application has been approved by the board.

WASHINGTON, D. C., 1963:

October, 1962--Interracial home visits, patterned on those begun in 1955 by Friendship House, a Catholic interracial organization with headquarters in Chicago, began in the Washington, D. C. area. In January the Chicago consultation committee was co-sponsor with Protestant and Jewish groups for a metropolitan-wide mass Interracial Home Visit Day that brought 2,500 white visitors to the homes of 500 middle-class Negro hosts. In March the same interfaith committee arranged a second mass visit day, with a similar number of hosts--this time white--inviting in white neighbors and leading a discussion with Negro guests on equal housing opportunities.

June, 1963--Trustees of the House of Mercy, a home for unwed mothers, operated by the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Washington, D. C., voted to disregard race in future admissions. In its 70 years the home has never admitted a Negro woman, but the diocese had threatened to cut off financial aid if it failed to integrate.

June 14--Clergymen participated in the protest against racial discrimination in a silent march from the White House to the Justice Department.

Aug. 28-- More than 40,000 clergy and church members participated in the national demonstration before the Lincoln Memorial to dramatize the Negro demand for jobs and freedom from discrimination. The demonstration also supported the President's legislative program now before Congress.

* * *

Example of Church Ambivalence: The First Baptist Church of Atlanta, Ga.

(This account of attempts by Negroes to attend an Atlanta church is given in detail because of its extreme example of what can happen in a Southern church.)

April 21--Several Negro ministerial students have attempted to attend services at the First Baptist Church in the past few weeks, both on Sunday morning and at Wednesday night prayer meeting. Prior to this date Negroes had been admitted but were seated in the basement where the overflow crowd from the sanctuary listened to services over a public address system. On April 21 three Negro students were forcibly ejected, while one remained and another voluntarily left. Amos Brown, Morehouse ministerial student who was "dragged" out of the church by an usher, he said, commented that he had listened to the services on television "It would be terrific if he [Dr. McClain, pastor] tried to put into action some of the things he preaches about on Sunday morning." On May 2, 14 Negro and white theological students were turned away from prayer meeting.

May 17--In Detroit, Michigan to deliver chapel messages to the American Baptist Convention, Dr. Roy O. McClain agreed to meet with 30 ministers, most of them

Negroes, who were disturbed by reports that Negroes had not been allowed to worship in his church. Dr. McClain told his critics the First Baptist Church has no policy on integration or segregation. He said he'd had meetings with groups in the church trying to develop a better climate where integration could take place. "As far as I personally am concerned," Dr. McClain said, "I'm for integration." The ministers had asked the program committee to remove McClain from the program, but the committee declined.

June 24--An integrated group of eight students attended evening services despite being asked to leave by one usher. The area was roped off by ushers. On June 30 and July 7, a group of Negro and white students were turned away while Dr. McClain, on televisinn, preached "ignorance is the mother of prejudice," and called prejudice "a cancer" which "will kill you, literally; it will eat your innards out." The group began picketing the church on July 7. They returned for evening services and an elderly white minister from California (already under $500 bond for attempting to enter the church with the group on June 30) was arrested and charged with "disorderly conduct-demented" on complaint of the pastor. He charged in court that he was dragged down the church steps by his heels. During the morning demonstration, radio and television newsmen were asked to leave their cameras outside the church or not come in. One usher came down the steps and placed his hand over the lens of a TV newsman's camera photographing the pickets.

A crowd of men, most dressed in sport shirts or tee shirts and slacks, gathered across Peachtree Street from the church during most of the morning service. Their comments on the situation rose to catcalling and jeers. They were not arrested or removed.

Nathan J. Porter, a young Brazilian-born Baptist minister who is a member of First Baptist, led a brief impromptu worship service with the whites and Negroes who were picketing the church after being refused entrance. Mr. Porter is a member of the Southern Baptist Home Mission Board here. He spoke briefly with the group on the power of love and the need for forgiveness. The quiet demonstration seemed to bring more extreme reactions from onlookers and church members than on previous Sundays. A girl of college age walked down the church steps and away in tears after the service. Other members came down the steps, between the rows of pickets, with grim, drawn faces. After almost everyone had left the church grounds, except a few ushers clustered close to the building and the pickets who stood stolidly on either side of the front steps, a beautiful, blonde little girl came to stand at the center of the scene and leaned on a handrail on the steps. The little girl stood and looked quietly for a long time, neither smiling nor frowning, until the pickets dispersed.

Aug. 25--The white minister who was arrested received the maximum misdemenor sentence: 12 months in prison and six months in public work camp plus $1,000 fine. His case has been appealed. On Sept. 17 he was removed to Grady Hospital because of a hunger strike, for intravenous feeding if necessary.

Religion

UNDER GOD comments
CHRISTIAN ACTION COUNCIL
No. 4, 1963

U of C "Student Tour" in S. C.

The Christian Action Council had the privilege recently of being "host" to a group of University of Connecticut students on a "Come and See Tour." Its purpose was to enable "Yankee" students to obtain an "in depth" introduction to South Carolina life and culture.

The Rev. Warren Molton (Wofford graduate and originally from N. Augusta) as director of the University Christian Fellowship was the initiator of the project which brought 10 students and 1 adult advisor to the Palmetto state.

The full and comprehensive program included visits with political, economic, and religious leaders, tours of several industries, talks with Negroes, etc. — all planned to focus attention on changes taking place in our midst and the relation of the churches to these changes.

Moral Responsibility for Safe Driving

Harold Holmes, director of the Religious Activities Committee of the National Safety Council, recently conferred for two days with church leaders in South Carolina. Considerable enthusiasm was expressed, and plans made, for the "Highway Safety Week-end" on November 2-3.

The "Fatal Five" causes of highway fatalities, he pointed out, in 80% of the cases are "in the hands and mind" of the "man behind the wheel:" (1) speed too fast for conditions, (2) driving while intoxicated, (3) failure to yield right-of-way, (4) improper passing, and (5) reckless driving.

News letter This

REQUIRED Bible Reading and Prayers in Public Schools — Unconstitutional

". . . We find that the states are requiring the selection and reading at the opening of the school day of verses from the Holy Bible and the recitation of the Lord's Prayer by the students in unison. These exercises are prescribed as part of the curricular activities of students who are required by law to attend school. They are held in the school building under the supervision and with the participation of teachers employed in those schools.

". . . We agree with the trial court's finding as to the religious character of the exercises. Given that finding, the exercises and the law requiring them are in violation of the establishment clause . . .

"The conclusion follows that in both cases the laws require religious exercises and such exercises are being conducted in direct violation of the rights of the appellees and petitioners . . .

"Nothing we have said here indicates that such study of the Bible or of religion, when presented objectively as part of a secular program of education, may not be effected consistent with the First Amendment. But the exercises here do not fall into those categories. They are religious exercises, required by the states in violation of the command of the First Amendment that the government maintain strict neutrality, neither aiding nor opposing religion . . .

"While the free exercise clause clearly prohibits the use of state action to deny the right of free exercise to anyone, it has never meant that a majority could use the machinery of the state to practice its beliefs . . .

"The place of religion in our society is an exalted one, achieved through a long tradition of reliance on the home, the church, and the inviolable citadel of the individual heart and mind. We have come to recognize through bitter experience that it is not within the power of the government to invade that citadel, whether its purpose or effect be to aid or oppose, to advance or retard."

(These are key paragraphs from the Majority Decision of Mr. Justice Clark in the 8-1 Supreme Court opinion, issued on June 17, 1963.)

Cuban Refugees

South Carolina Episcopalians are studying the possibility of a "Bishop's Flight" of Cuban refugees to be located in South Carolina.

A total of 161,941 Cubans had been registered with religious agencies in Miami as of March, 1963. Protestants, through Church World Service, have resettled nearly 11,000 — although no previous concerted effort has been made by any denomination in this state.

The fact that only about 60,000 refugees have been relocated by all Cuban relief committees — although other have relocated through friends or their own initiative, indicates the need that still exists.

Justice — Not Just Race

(The following statement was made by Bishop Paul Hardin, Jr. at the S. C. Conference (S.E.J.) of the Methodist Church on June 13, 1963.)

". . . In view of the circumstance which surrounds us throughout the South and in our own beloved state, the chair desires the privilege of making a statement.

Nearly three years ago the Methodist Church granted me the great privilege of returning to the state of my birth and rearing. Since then I have traveled all over South Carolina, and spoken in many churches and places in the discharge of my episcopal duties.

Ample opportunity has been given for the people to discover that I am neither a die-hard conservative nor an irresponsible liberal.

It is against the light of that background that I speak when I say that it is a source of personal concern and grief to me to see my beloved Southland and the Methodist Church torn by the race issue.

My anguish is all the more acute when I realize that basically the main issue is not race but simple justice and personal dignity. It is as natural for a colored person to seek his place under the sun as it is for a white man to do so.

The words "integrationist" and "segregationist" have become epithets.

They form a smokescreen which beclouds the issue and divides our ranks.

It is as wrong and as sinful to despise your brother over the race issue as it is sinful to hate him for any other reason. Let no Christian, therefore, scornfully refer to anyone as a segregationist, and let no Christian angrily call his brother an integrationist.

Rather let us remember that as Christians we are taught of God's Word that all men are children of God.

In Christian calmness and dignity, let us work together in an effort to grant justice and opportunity to all people — not because of economic and political pressure, but because we believe that justice is the common property of all free men."

Youth and Military Service

Four basic positions are the "live options" of each young man in regard to military service: (1) active participation in the armed forces, 1-A; (2) conscientious objector in non-combatant service; 1-A-O; (3) conscientious objector in non-military service, 1-O; and (4) non-cooperation refusal to register.)

Dr. Stewart Patterson points out: "Whatever choice the individual as a Christian may make, he carries the responsibility of witnessing for Christ. Careful thought should be given and counsel sought not only as to what choice to make, but, also as to how and where the witness may be made." (from "The Christian and Military Service," 15¢)

New Prison Chaplain

The Rev. Adlai Lucas — a Baptist minister who has just completed two years of special study in North Carolina — has recently been employed as chief chaplain at the State Penitentiary. Mr. Lucas is a native of South Carolina, graduate of U.S.C. and Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary.

Ellis MacDougall, Director of the Department of Corrections, invited several church leaders to serve as a special "Advisory Committee on Chaplaincy" to assist in the selection of the chaplain and the interpretation of his work. The committee consisted of Dr. Horace Hammett (Baptist), The Rev. John Pinckney (Episcopal), Dr. Karl Kinard (Lutheran), Bishop Paul Hardin (Methodist), and The Rev. Arthur Martin (Presbyterian), together with Council executive Howard G. McClain.

Retarded Children

There were 3,400 retarded children in public school "special classes" during the past school year, according to the State Department of Education. It is estimated that there are 20,000 "mentally retarded" children in the public schools (nearly 3% of the 600,000 enrolled) — thus less than one-fourth are in "special classes."

A recent survey indicated that there were no known church-school classes for the mentally retarded in South Carolina.

Lottery — "A Frankenstein Monster"

New Hampshire's approval of a state lottery caused the WASHINGTON POST (5/2/63) to editorialize that it was "an insult to the intelligence of 20th century Americans." Also it stated: "In the hope of raising $4 million a year for its schools the state will stimulate among its people the demoralizing psychology of winning something for nothing and invite within its midst corruption that almost always accompanies organized gambling. This is a shocking letdown in standards . . ."

Dr. E. E. Blanche, a noted statistician who has extensively studied gambling practices, has said: "Morally and legally wrong and outlawed, lotteries do more than mulct the rich and poor alike; lotteries change the very pattern of living, distort the sense of values, and incubate the eggs of crime. Examine the sociological and economic implications of the lottery, and you will behold a Frankenstein monster capable of consuming both those who run the lotteries and those who play them. The financial returns, insignificant in proportion to the national income or the Federal expenditures, are like the thirty pieces of silver paid for the betrayal." (THE ANNALS, May, 1950)

Congressman Paul Fino has latched on to the New Hampshire action to promote his continuing effort to gain passage of his bill to establish a national lottery.

"Money, Money, Who's Got the Money?"

The Christian Action Council's budget of $21,750 comes from denominations, local churches, and individuals. We have been encouraged by recent denominational increases (Baptist state convention, up to $4,200 for '63, and Presbyterian Synod up to $1,500 for 1964), as well as $200 from 7th Episcopal Area, A.M.E.

Adequate financial support will always depend, however, on local churches and individuals.

> Fall, 1963, will mark the conclusion of 30 Years of Service of the Christian Action Council. A modest hope is that 200 churches and 125 individuals (who have not previously contributed) will make $30 gifts this year.

In Focus

Our special thanks are due to the large number of persons who helped to plan and make possible the "Come and See Tour" for the U. of Connecticut students. It was a solid educational experience and made an unforgetable impact on the students.

We extend our "welcome" to all new pastors, church workers, and seminarians who are in S. C. churches this summer. This includes the new chief chaplain at the Penitentiary, Rev. Adlai Lucas. His appointment should help to awaken us all to the fact that penal institutions and prisoners should become the object of special attention and action to churchmen in this state.

It is encouraging to hear a crescendo of opinion by business leaders that segregation presents a moral challenge to our state and nation. Church leaders should not only support political and business leaders in their desegregation endeavors but also set an example of responsible leadership for every attitude and practice of full opportunity to Negro citizens.

Howard G. McClain

News-Notes

. . . Dr. L. M. Allison, dean of Erskine Theological Seminary, has taken special responsibility in the Council's proposed "continuing education for young pastor's" program.

. . . Bishop Carey A. Gibbs, A.M.E. bishop in South Carolina, has been installed as presiding bishop of the African Methodist Episcopal Church. Council president Neil Truesdell participated in the services.

. . . The Rev. Clyde Ireland, pastor of Greenville's Church of the Redeemer, is the new chairman of the Department of Christian Social Relations, Episcopal Diocese of Upper South Carolina.

. . . Dr. Spencer Rice, former principal of Spartanburg High School, is the new executive director of two Methodist boards (Education and Christian Social Concerns) as of July 1. "Moral Man and Moral Society" is to be the '63-'64 theme for Christian Social Concerns.

Christian Action Council
907 Richland St. — Columbia, S. C.

Mr. Harold Fleming
5 Forsyth St. N.W.
Atlanta 3, Ga.

COMMENTS is the information bulletin on Christian Citizenship and public affairs published by the Christian Action Council, 907 Richland St., Columbia, S. C. It is issued each month, except July. Second class postage at Columbia, S. C. Neil Truesdell, President; Howard G. McClain, Editor; Eben Taylor, Associate Editor. VOL. VII, NO. 4, April, 1963.

RESPONSIBILITIES OF RELIGIOUS FREEDOM
First National Institute Religious Freedom and Public Affairs Project

THE DIALOGUE

THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIANS & JEWS

EDITORIAL

This issue of The Dialogue presents materials drawn from Religious News Service reports on the First National Institute of the National Conference of Christians and Jews Religious Freedom and Public Affairs Project, held in Washington, D.C., November 18-21, 1962. It is not the concern of The Dialogue to add to the wide publicity enjoyed by the Institute, but rather to share with our readers well-balanced approaches to some current controversies in the area of church-state relations. Appended are excerpts from the religious press, summarizing and evaluating the presentations and stimulating further discussion.

—The Editor

NCCJ HEAD URGES UNITY OF PURPOSE

Dr. Lewis Webster Jones, President of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, opened the Institute with an appeal for unity of purpose despite political and religious differences. He expressed the hope that Institute participants would "provide a new example of charity and love in our sense of brotherhood toward each other."

Explaining the Institute, Dr. Jones said the some 120 participants included "professional lay leaders of the social action arm of your Church, Church editors and theologians, citizens of every shade of religious opinion and of no religious affiliation, professors of government, political science, and law, and elected government officials from city councilman to mayor to state senator to congressman."

"Each of you has been selected to attend this Institute, because you are a citizen of national prominence and leadership," Dr. Jones said. "You are here as individuals and not as representatives of organizations, and we ask you to speak your minds freely and frankly — only by frank confrontation can we grapple with these issues intelligently."

Highlighting some of the questions with which the Institute grappled, Dr. Jones said: "How do our religious groups wield their political power on issues that concern them in the realm of politics; and as we engage in political controversy, what is their responsibility to other religious groups and to the democratic process? On the other hand, how have politicians attempted to manipulate the religious vote, and what is the significance of this for our pluralism and democratic unity?"

Dr. Jones said that one of the purposes of the Institute was to "examine the changing nature of our pluralism from the historic perspective, permit each one of the groups that make up our pluralism to define their understanding of religious liberty and what is required of our political order so as to enhance that liberty."

He stressed the opportunity of the participants to discuss the "conflicting Constitutional understandings of the First Amendment that prevail in America today," as well as the chance to examine "specific incidents where religious groups have been in conflict in the public order."

STATUS OF RELIGIOUS LIBERTY: PAST AND PRESENT

A Protestant Hits "Christian America" Myth

The myth of the "good old days" of a "Christian America" in which religious liberty flourished must be discarded by Protestants if they are to join with their Catholic and Jewish neighbors in building a workable pluralistic society, according to Dr. Franklin H. Littell, professor of church history at the Chicago Theological Seminary. He said that colonial society was "nominally Christian and in fact heathen" and that the religious liberty sought by the predominantly Protestant settlers was "their own, not that of others." "Protestants must bury forever the pernicious legend of the 'Found-

1962-1963

PA-Bgi
JS-file

Religion (Clemson)

Oct. 6, 1962 - Statement by Dr. Neil Truesdell of Newberry, S. C.
A personal statement issued by Dr. Truesdell as president of the Christian Action Council at the request of the Council's Executive Committee.

Great issues call for great principles. A strong principle of Judeo-Christianity is the obedience to the supreme power of government.... It is a cardinal principle of ethics that the highest powers of government be obeyed. Otherwise, there is always the danger of lawlessness, confusion and anarchy

Many fine citizens of the South and of South Carolina believe they have been aggrieved. Regardless of the opinions concerning the issues involved, many South Carolinians have experienced deep sorrow as a result of the events in Mississippi. Many are deeply concerned.... What happened in Mississippi probably had to happen. But it does not have to happen again. If there should be a recurrence it would be a double tragedy--double because we had not learned from the first incident. But it must not happen in our State, for to do so would be a violation of the finest Christian ethics.

Under God, we are a State and nation of law. The Federal decrees are the ultimate governing and legal power. As citizens we have no choice but to obey, for once any law is successfully circumvented all law is weakened. Once law is taken lightly the liberty and freedom of every citizen is threatened. These must be preserved at all cost, for liberty and freedom are the foundation of the most priceless possessions of any citizen....

The Christian Action Council calls upon every Christian, every citizen within the State, to proclaim to the world that we are a State of law, that we are motivated by the highest of all laws--the royal law of love. This is a place where the redemptive power of Christ can accomplish its holy work-- a work which, under His power--will lead this State into its finest hour and most noble era. With the message of God's love for all mankind going out from each pulpit, with the response to that love being enacted in the lives of all of our citizens, we can face the future with confidence. The God who has directed the destinies of this State from the moment the first settler came to this colony will not forsake us now. Only let us remain in His love, and live in the spirit of that love in our relationship with our fellowmen.

* * * * * * *

Jan. 20, 1963 - Statement signed by 121 white ministers of 13 denominations in the Columbia area. Over 2/3rds of them were pastors. This statement was issued by the ministers as their own personal sentiments, making no pretense of speaking for any church, denomination or church-agency. By denomination these included:

1 Assembly of God
1 Associate Reformed Presbyterian
18 Baptists
1 Christian(Disciples of Christ)
1 Church of God(Cleveland, Tenn.)
18 Episcopalians
1 Greek Orthodox
26 Lutherans
1 Lutheran, Missouri Synod
1 Nazarene
30 Methodists
16 Presbyterians
3 Roman Catholics

Having the privilege of exercising our ministry in the greater Columbia area, we ministers of the Gospel address the Christian citizens of our community at this moment of opportunity.

We affirm that the Christian view of man includes recognition of each person as a child of God having dignity and worth imparted to him by God himself. This is demonstrated in the redemptive cross of Jesus Christ, God's act of unmerited, unrestricted love. His resurrection gives promise of victory over every evil which suppresses full development of man as a son of God. This belief demands that we aid our fellow-man especially whenever his God-given rights are limited or denied.

We confess that we ourselves stand under the judgement of God for our failure to apply more fully the Christian principle of brotherhood in our personal lives and in the churches we serve.

We declare our conviction that racial problems and their solutions are basically moral and spiritual. Christians of our beloved state are presently being confronted with opportunities to witness to their affirmation that all citizens be given equality of opportunity for full development of their capacities as children of God. Channels to endorse and support such a principle, for example, are presently ours in education and in employment opportunities.

- More -

In our nation, these opportunities are guarded by law. Christians are constrained to obey the interpretation and application of these laws by the courts. We anticipate that public officials and other citizens will affirm their allegiance to and support of law and order. We pledge our support to this endeavor.

As Christians, we must be found in the ranks of those who lead our city and state in orderly obedience, in justice and brotherhood.

* * * * * * *

Jan. 21, 1963 - Statement issued by the S. C. Baptist Convention's Christian Life and Public Affairs Committee.
Although this is issued only as the unanimous statement by the 10 members of the Committee, it is said to represent a "consensus of the point of view of a majority of Baptists who have been 'messengers' at recent convention sessions." Officers of the Committee include Dr. John Murdoch of Greenwood, Chairman; James A. Rogers of Florence, vice-chairman; Tom McMahan of Columbia, secretary.

1. We heartily commend the public officials of our state for their wise and consistant efforts to preserve order and to encourage respect for the law during the difficult period of racial re-adjustment through which we are now passing. As we face further crises in this process, we express the hope and prayer that bitterness and violence of every form may be avoided and that every citizen of the state will work to preserve order, without which our problems are not solved, but further complicated and enlarged. The history of our region, both past and recent, as well as the tenets of our religion, underscore the urgent necessity of maintaining respect for constituted governmental authority.

2. We earnestly and respectfully urge that the public schools be kept open and that every effort be made to prevent the interruption of normal educational processes. Education is essential to the highest interests of both religion and democracy.

3. It is important that we maintain clear, candid, and sympathetic communications in all areas of our public life during these critical days. There are differences of opinion and convictions between groups of responsible citizens and between groups of sincere Christians. It is imperative that we face these differences in a spirit of mutual respect and postive good will; that we seek to find constructive means of resolving our differences in accord with the teachings and the Spirit of Christ. Whatever legal measures are taken in dealing with the problems thrust upon us by racial tensions, the burden of working out a peaceable and mutually harmonious relationship of good will between the races, and between those who differ concerning practical ways of dealing with this problem, rests most heavily upon the churches. We believe that the continued proclamation of the Christian gospel of redeeming grace and the application of the gospel to our attitudes and to each individual situation as it arises, will ultimately result in solving our racial problems with justice and equity for all.

* * * * * * *

Jan. 22, 1963 - Officials from several of the largest denominations in S. C. met unofficially in Columbia on January 8th in the first such inter-church leaders conference ever held in this state. The first purpose of their meeting was inter-church communication. The second purpose was the facing of problems of common concern. Correspondence, growing out of this meeting, resulted in the statement issued today, which is signed by these 10 leaders as individuals rather than officials. While not part of this formal statement, this group expressed high commendation of the attitudes and actions of the authorities of this state and at Clemson College.

"The fourth Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States has ruled in favor of the admission of Harvey Gantt into Clemson College.

Such a ruling goes contrary to the customs and traditions of the South and and of our own state of South Carolina in particular. While many of our citizens may resent the decision, it is unthinkable that we, as a nation dedicated to rule by law should abandon the principles of our American Government and our American way of life to obtain our selfish ends, however desirable they may seem.

As followers of our Lord Jesus Christ who died that all might live, let us remind all men, white and colored, that we are bound by the law of love of God and love of neighbor as the pre-eminent virtue of the Christian way of life. Therefore, it is our duty by this law of love of God and neighbor to avoid every form of violence and hatred in our relations among ourselves and to use peaceable means to reach conclusions founded on justice and order and the universal law of Christian love.

Let not the Sovereign State of South Carolina be disgraced by violence. May God grant to us peace and order and that we do unto every man as we would have him do unto us."

Signed by: --

Rev. Dr. Horace G. Hammett, Executive Secretary, (Baptist); Bishop Paul Hardin, Jr, (Methodist); Rev. Dr. Karl W. Kinard, President (Lutheran Synod); Bishop C. Alfred Cole, (Episcopal Discese of Upper South Carolina); Bishop Francis F. Reh, (Roman Catholic); Rev. Dr. Arthur M. Rogers, Stated Clerk (A.R.P. Synod); Rev. Otto Stucki, Superintendent, (Nazarene); Rev. Ira D. Crewdson, Executive Secretary,(Christian); Bishop Gray Temple, (Episcopal Diocese of S. C.); Rev. Arthur M. Martin, Executive Secretary, (Presbyterian).

* * * * * * *

January, 1963 - Fountain Inn-Simpsonville Ministers' Fellowship issued a lengthy statement on "A Christian Stand on Violence":

...We do not wish to make any comment upon any argument related to the admittance of Negro students. We seek to dispel confusion and uncertainty about the use of violent action upon such occasions, and for this sole purpose we hereby place upon the public record the teachings of the Christian Faith as they apply to this particular issue.

A Christian citizen does not encourage, or approve of, or take part in, the use of violent action as a substitute for, or in defiance of established laws.

He will refrain from any action which violates the safety, dignity or property of another person. He will not travel to another community to invade the problem-solving processes of that community. Specifically, he will refrain from assault, arson, stoning, cursing, spitting, shoving, obstructing the way, or any other invasion of another person's lawful enjoyment of life, liberty, or the pursuit of happiness. Knowing that crowds of spectators may suddenly become mobs of rioters, he will be especially prudent to avoid this possibility. Knowing that abstinence from violence does not insure sinlessness of intention, he will refrain from so-called "non-violent" demonstrations which intrude upon the affairs of a community other than his own....

A Christian citizen works within the established framework of the law.... A Christian citizen has a responsibility to criticize the structure and operation of the law, and to change the law, if need be, by lawful means.

If the law is not obedient to Christ, the Christian must protest. He will protest by every legal means. He may withdraw himself or his children from such schools, if that is his decision. He may sustain suits to test the validity of the laws, or to impeach those who administer them. He will seek to develop a national political party which will elect officials who will enact the necessary changes in the laws.

A Christian citizen makes use of every opportunity to pray that the justice and love of God will prevail over injustice and hatred....

* * * * * *

NOTE: The following is from a letter written by Sen. Edgar A. Brown (Barnwell) to one of the officers of the Christian Action Council, after Sen. Brown had issued a strong statement against violence at Clemson:

I appreciate so much your nice letter of January 4, approving my attitude against any possible violence at Clemson.

Most of my mail is enthusiastic in its approval. I have had only one or two "crackpot" letters, and these do not worry me because when the basic principle is right, there is no occasion for worry....

* * * * * * *

Methodist: Section on Human Relations and Economic Affairs - Rev. Ralph A. Cannon, Chairman - of the S. C. Conference Board of Christian Social Concerns (S.E.J.) letter to President Robert Edwards (a Methodist layman) of Clemson:

Historically speaking, periods of transition have always been painful in the affairs of men.

Simply and sincerely, before an hour of significant change for Clemson College and the state of South Carolina, we want to express to you our support.

As Mr. Gantt is admitted to Clemson College we want you and the Board of Trustees to know that we are grateful for every effort that has been made to make this an orderly transition.

We strongly affirm that such adjustment to new conditions is consistent with our state's honorable traditions and illustrious past, her citizens' allegiance to the nation, and her peoples' faith in the providences of a just and holy God.

May you know that as fellow Christians we wish to share with you in the heavy weight of responsibility you face in behalf of all the people of South Carolina.

* * * * * * *

S. C. Methodist Advocate, 1/17/63, carried the following unsigned guest editorial which was entitled, "A Shaft of Light":

"Wednesday, January 9, 1963, was a day of history in South Carolina, and sensitive souls vibrate with the thrill and satisfaction of those who see history unfold before their eyes. And it was a day of glory, too....

And all of this [the redocration, etc. of the State House] is symbolic of the dawn of a new day in South Carolina, when proud traditions of honor and dignity are being recalled as bases from which to move into yet another great transition period of history.

Sensitive to the great moment of history have been two men whose voices have spoken to given politicical expression to the new mood. One, a political stalwart of many a battle, the Hon. Edgar A. Brown, a few days ago opened the door and let in a ray of light.*

And Wednesday, South Carolina's Governor Ernest F. Hollings...shook the door wider open and turned in a great shaft of light.In his farewell address to the Legislature, many a South Carolinian and American could see that the mantle of statesmanship, even in temporary political defeat, had been placed on his shoulders, and more than that, the shoulders are adequate to the occasion...

...realistically we can all be grateful that no longer are we saying: 'If you come in, we'll throw you out, locking the door in your face, and at the same time locking ourselves out also' No, we are not really going to carry out that bluff. We are going to say now: 'If you come in, we will treat you as a fellow human being.'

So the prediction...that ultimately South Carolina would prefer desegregation to disgrace is about to come to pass. Though first to secede and last to re-unite, there is a bright hope that she will re-unite with grace and dignity, even in the closing hours of her choice. The great ideals of freedom, equality under the law, respect for human dignity, nurtured in this Great Republic and this State, 'will not now be rejected in the house of their fathers,' as a Saint of the Twentieth Century has often said.

Many a grateful native son has today gratitude in his heart for Fritz Hollings who spoke so eloquently in his farewell address for a government of laws and not of men."

---* In reply to an enquiry from the Charleston NEWS AND COURIER, carried in The STATE on 12/31/62 Sen. Edgar A Brown said: "The people of this state are law-abiding and know my position on good government...If the ultimate decision of the federal courts direct that Harvey Gantt should be admitted to Clemson College, ..[Clemson officials] will not tolerate violence on the campus or any action that would do violence to the good name of Clemson College and the State of South Carolina. Violent attitudes and actions...would inevitably deliver the college into the hands of armed Federal forces...as Little Rock and Oxford..Therefore, I am determined to ..demand that Clemson be kept under the control of..South Carolina

---out-going governor of S.C., in his final address to the S.C. General Assembly on 1/9/63 said:

"We have all argued that the Supreme Court decision of May, 1954, is not the law of the land. But everyone must agree that it is the fact of the land. Interposition, sovereignty, legal motions, personal defiance have all been applied to constitutionalize the law of the land. And all attempts have failed.

As we meet, South Carolina is running out of courts. If and when every legal remedy is exhausted, this General Assembly must make clear South Carolina's choice, a government of laws rather than a government of men.

As determined as we are, we of today must realize the lesson of 100 years ago, and move on for the good of South Carolina and the United States. This should be done with dignity.

It must be done with law and order. It is a hurdle that brings little propress to either side. But the failure to clear it will do us irreparable harm."

****

NOTE: The two following "documents," issued earlier, indicate and are illustrative of the nature of numerous sermons and other pastoral expressions of concern. It is important to note, also, that a number of pastors - especially in the Columbia area - commented favorable to their people of the "quiet, orderly, and Christian response" of people in that community to the desegregation of the lunch-counters on Main Street in the late summer.

"A COMMUNION MEDITATION" by the Rev. J. Walter Johnson, Central Methodist Church - Spartanburg, October 7, 1962 (World Communion Sunday):

"These are days that try men's souls, and I think it's partly our fault that they do. Beset, as we are, by an emotionally-packed problem such as disturbs our Southland today, are we not guilty of having abetted it by resorting to our deep-seated feelings of resentment, rather than working toward its solution with a calm and courageous Christian intelligence? Shall we continue to give vent to these deep inner impulses of hate, and prejudice, and selfishness? Shall we continue in this country to sneer at a human being's aspirations to the respectable status of equality, and forever kick it around as a political football? Or is this not a good time to take a new lead, and see what a sympathetic and understanding love can do - under the leadership of Christ's spirit?

Now this we should know: - as Christians we are a responsible people, and we are therefore to be guided by an intellectual concept of God's righteousness, and not by our baser emotions. We should be in the forefront of this racial disturbance today, giving hope and encouragement and Christian leadership to those of our population who are trying so desperately to reach for the more excellent way. "Whatsover things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." Well, that's the Gospel, and we are called to the table of communion to remember the Christ who inspired it."

****

"A Pastoral Letter" from the Rev. E. Paul McWhirter, Methodist District Superintendent of the Greenville District on Nov. 8, 1962, to ministers, General Superintendents, Church Lay leaders, District stewards, and chairmen of all commissions in all churches of that District:

"I have been greatly concerned in the past few months over our problem in the south...In Albany, Georgia recently we were caused to be ashamed of the actions of some of our people....In the Osford, Mississippi incident two lives were lost and many other injured....This is not our way of life, nor our hope for the future.

In the next few months we will be facing what could be a repetition of the above. I hope not! I write to you seeking your help. First - let us begin today by keeping this first in our prayer life...Secondly - Write a letter to our Governor Elect, Dr. Donald Russell and express a concern that he stand for what is right and Chritian. We do not want our schools closed. In Prince Edward County in Virginia people are suffering and will continue to do so for years because of the closing of the public schools. Urge the Governor Elect to uphold the federal law....

Thirdly - Write to your state senator, representatives and mayor urging them to stand for truth and right.... Friends, there is nothing Christian or Holy in avoiding a controversial issue such as this. We run a great danger of being a part of an ugly riot by remaining silent. Do we want a world as some people would have it or do we want a world as Christ would have it?"

Religion

council PLATFORM

Summer 1963, Volume 8, Number 1

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF JEWISH WOMEN ONE WEST 47th STREET, NEW YORK 36, N. Y.

GUIDELINES FOR COUNCIL PUBLIC AFFAIRS: 1963-64

The big, exciting event of the year in most Sections will be the launching of the NCJW School for Community Action. A deepened understanding and awakened concern will be stirred in Council member "students" at the School about the problems of preparing young people today for living, working and dealing with the vast complexities of the automated "space age" which is to be their world.

To tie in the learning and directions for action of the NCJW Schools with year-round Section Public Affairs activity will come naturally. As in the past several years, Council Public Affairs 1963-64 will continue to be most intensely involved — on the national scene, at state capitals and in the community — with problems concerning the nation's children and youth. A central objective of Council's work for youth will be to give the children of minority families the chance — and the extra help they must get — to overcome the special handicaps of a history of deprivation, discrimination and low expectations. Major working goals will be to assuure to every youngster:

- the best possible education and preparation for employment.
- a decent home and open choice of neighborhood to grow up in.
- an equal chance to make the most of his abilities as an adult working member and participating citizen of our democracy.

In today's world, international problems of peace and disarmament and the economic and social conditions of people at the other side of the globe affect the life of each individual and the future of every American youngster. The world view of NCJW Public Affairs 1963-64 will focus on these continuing — and each year more urgent — objectives:

- a sound and undiminished program of aid to the less developed nations
- a strong and effective United Nations
- international agreements for disarmament and a nuclear test ban.

The following preview of Council's Public Affairs program for the next club year is designed to give Section Public Affairs leaders a framework for Section activity. Major issues at the top of the year's calendar are briefly sketched; guidelines are indicated for legislative and community action; and National materials are described.

Big Dates for 1963-64 Public Affairs

November 12-13, 1963

Annual United Nations Institute
United Nations Headquarters, New York, N. Y.

On-the-scene reports by UN delegations of various nations and Secretariat staff.
Attendance at United Nations meetings.

February 17-18, 1964

Washington Public Affairs Institute
Gramercy Inn, Washington, D.C.

Top legislative issues discussed by Congressional leaders and Government experts.
Visits with Congressmen and Senators.

Watch for registration and program details for both institutes.

Civil Rights

The upsurge of demand by Negro Americans for equal opportunity and treatment, which is their right, has shaken every thinking individual out of the complacent notion that the answer to the race relations problem can be found in continuing the current slow-paced "gradual" movement toward equality. The Negro's "cup of endurance has run over," in the words of a prominent leader of the direct action protest movement which is sweeping the nation; and the demand of our Negro fellow-citizens for an immediate and rightful share in the "blessings of liberty" must be met with new bold action in the months ahead.

When the President pointed up this "moral crisis" facing the nation, he called upon the American people to act now "in the Congress, in your state and local legislative body, and above all, in all of our daily lives." Every concerned citizen — and that includes every member of Council — will take up the President's challenge "to stop and examine his conscience" and give serious thought to this question: "What am I doing in my own community and in my own personal life to put into practice my belief in equal rights — to change the old habits and patterns of racial prejudice and discrimination?"

Threading through Council's program in the coming year will be an intensified effort to remove in every area of American living the injustices of racial discrimination. By support of needed legislative and administrative action on all levels of government, and especially by direct personal action, Council women will help their communities move with longer and faster steps toward the full practice of equal opportunity. They will be motivated not only by their democratic principles, but because they are concerned about the distorting effect on their own children of growing up in a segregated, homogeneous community, with its built-in prejudices against people who are different in color, belief or economic status.

Community Action: Ways of working toward equality in the major areas of Council activity in the coming year — in the schools, in housing and neighborhoods, and in youth employment — are pointed up in the following program outline, and in greater detail in National materials described in these columns. New learning and insights will be gained by Council members at the NCJW School for Community Action about what needs to be done to assure equal opportunity and a fair chance to long-deprived youngsters of minority families in their communities. This increased understanding will be a spur to more intensive, informed action by Sections and individual Council members to erase practices of segregation and discrimination where they live.

Federal Legislation: An extensive civil rights program was presented to Congress in June by the President as urgent priority business, in response to the growing insistency of Negro demands for equal rights. He asked for legislation to achieve the following aims: outlaw discrimination in public places; speed school desegregation by giving the Attorney General authority to initiate suits; intensify action to halt discrimination in federal jobs and federally financed activities; give federal agencies authority to withhold funds from programs which practice discrimination; create a federal agency to mediate local racial disputes. The President renewed his request for legislation to extend and strengthen the Civil Rights Commission; to provide federal voting referees who would assure registration without discrimination; and to establish a sixth grade education as proof of literacy for voting. To help prepare Negro youth for better job opportunities, the President asked Congress to authorize additional federal funds for expanded vocational education, training of out-of-school youth and for work-study programs.

The President urged Congress to remain in session until a significant civil rights program is enacted. The inevitable Senate filibuster is expected to draw out the civil rights debate through the summer months and perhaps into the fall. Council will watch developments, and Sections will be alerted to action in support of civil rights legislation as required. It is unlikely that all the urgently needed federal measures recommended by the President, which Council fully supports, will be enacted in the first session of Congress. NCJW efforts in behalf of the laws necessary to assure equal rights to all Americans will be carried forward into 1964 and beyond.

National Materials: Guidelines on How To Do It

Race Relations and Everyday Living. March 1961 Council Platform. True stories which offer cues to individual and group action on the home scene to break down barriers of racial segregation and discrimination. Includes a self-quiz which can be used as a checklist for action to achieve better race relations and as a tool for self-appraisal by individual members.

Council Reports on Civil Rights. January 1963 Council Platform. Reports by Council leaders in various parts of the country on local progress and problems in race relations. Suggests similar evaluation by Council in other communities.

Education

The new NCJW School for Community Action will revitalize Section interest in a long-standing Council program objective: a strong public education system offering the best schooling we can give to every American child. At the NCJW School, Section members will examine the state of American education today to find out whether the public schools are equipped for this most urgent task; who decides what kind of schools the children in their district attend and how the bills are paid; and what citizens can do to improve their public schools. Section "students" will also take a hard look at the urgent special problems of educating children who start out with the disadvantages of slum living and economic and cultural poverty, usually compounded by the discouragement of racial discrimination.

Council's heightened concern for strengthening public education will also be directed to such questions as: the growing uniformity of viewpoint and restraints on independent thinking in American education; the problem of religious practices in the public schools; and the threat to the future of public education from growing pressures for government aid to parochial schools.

Community Action: Ways for the Council Section and the individual citizen to participate in school affairs and help to mobilize greater public interest and support for better schools will emerge from discussions at the NCJW School for Community Action. Concrete guidelines are to be found in the National materials prepared for the School.

Public Affairs leaders will have an important role in following through on activities chosen by the Section for action, such as: mobilizing support for greater public participation in board elections and decisions and for school bond issues and taxes; testifying at school board hearings in support of adequate budget and programs to meet changing and growing school needs; and pressing for equal and unsegregated educational opportunities for all.

Federal Aid: Despite early signs that education aid would get priority attention in the 88th Congress, it appears unlikely at this writing that any significant federal assistance to the public schools will be enacted in the first session. The administration's omnibus bill or package approach, designed to draw support from various groups, failed to rally the necessary Congressional support. Separate measures — particularly for aid to higher education, expansion of special science, language and guidance programs under the National Defense Education Act and extension of aid to "impacted areas" with federal personnel — have been introduced and seem to have more chance of enactment than a package program including significant public school aid.

The growing urgency of federal funds for public education will be pointed up at the NCJW School for Community Action, and Council's push for this priority legislative objective will be stepped up in 1964. Pressures for government aid to parochial schools are expected to increase and will continue to be a major obstacle to enactment of federal aid to education. Council will continue to oppose the use of government funds for private and parochial schools or for sectarian colleges, which would violate the principle of separation of church and state and, perhaps most important, would weaken the American democratic system of public education.

State Legislation: Increased state support is essential in most states to equalize the quality of education in each school district and to keep pace with steeply rising modern education costs, which cannot be met by limited local tax resources. Sections may obtain information and guidance for legislative action needed on the state level from the Council state legislation chairman.

National Materials: Guidelines on How To Do It

NCJW School Syllabus and Readings. Syllabus outline and readings for Lecture and Seminar II on "The American School" and Lecture and Seminar III on "Those Who Are Being Left Behind" offer guidelines and background for study and action toward better schools and equal educational opportunity.

Equality in Education. April 1962 Council Platform. Discussion of special educational needs and the question of equal educational opportunity for children of deprived and minority families. Includes guidelines for community action.

Censorship and Complacency in Education. May 1963 Council Platform. Discussion of trend toward uniformity or concensus of opinion — including the effort to find non-denominational or "neutral" expressions of religious belief — and the discouragement of critical thinking in American education.

The School Prayer Controversy: Why Jews Take Sides. Reprint from April 1963 Council Woman, with discussion guide and bibliography. Impact and meaning of the Supreme Court decision declaring the New York Regents prayer unconstitutional.

For release in fall 1963: Discussion materials on Religion and Public Education. The extent of religious practices and observances, released time and shared time; community relations problems and Council's position. Discussion of the question of government aid to parochial schools. Major court decisions on the constitutionality of religious practices and government aid.

Youth Employment

The urgent, explosive nationwide problems of large numbers of out-of-school, out-of-work youth have stirred a growing public awareness and concern in recent months. But few concrete steps to deal with these problems have been taken in most communities. Council study and activity in this area — which has been going on since 1959 — should gain momentum in the year ahead, stimulated by increased public interest and by understanding gained by Section members at the NCJW School for Community Action.

Sections which have completed surveys of the employment needs of youth in their communities have generally found these basic problems which need nationwide attention: Guidance programs are inadequate and not sufficiently concerned with spotting and working with potential dropouts. Vocational training opportunities are inadequate and not geared to jobs of today and the future. Negro youngsters are most seriously disadvantaged by inadequate and segregated schooling, lack of guidance and training, and by discrimination in apprenticeship programs and employment.

Community Action: Sections which have completed their surveys will step up plans to follow through on their findings with needed services and support for government and private programs. They will take their cue from local experts and from suggested activities described in National materials. Questionnaires are still available for Sections which have not yet conducted surveys of youth employment needs in their communities.

Federal Legislation: The Youth Employment Act of 1963 contains proposals to begin to meet problems of youth who are out of school and out of work. Two programs are provided: a youth conservation corps to reach boys outside of urban areas to give them supervised work experience, some training and the satisfactions of constructive and regular work; and a local areas employment program for boys and girls in city community work projects in public and private non-profit agencies. This would prepare these young people for regular employment or for a return to school and more training.

Passage of the Youth Employment Act has high priority in the 88th Congress and on Council's legislative calendar. If this measure is not passed before the end of the first session, Council will urge renewed and vigorous efforts for such legislation in 1964.

State Legislation: The state legislature can initiate programs to concentrate special services in schools with the highest drop-out rates; to finance research and pilot programs in the schools to keep youngsters in school and work with them after they have left school; to improve vocational training and make it available to a large segment of youth in the state.

Subsidized work and training programs, begun in some states, aim at these goals: preparation for a particular job; motivation for returning to school; or motivation to participate constructively in the life of the community. Stronger fair employment laws are needed at the state level including authority to initiate complaints for effective enforcement.

After passage of the Youth Employment Act and appropriation of funds by Congress, it will be up to the states to allocate funds and plan programs to take advantage of the federal grants. In some states programs have been outlined in advance. In some regions, voluntary groups — Youth Commissions, Mayor's and Governor's Youth Employment Committees — have outlined local programs which could be the basis for state legislation as soon as a federal aid bill passes. Council Sections can contribute to the work of such groups what they have learned in community surveys.

National Materials: Guidelines on How To Do It

NCJW School Syllabus and Readings. Syllabus outline and readings related to the film showings gives guidance for study and initial action on youth employment needs of localities.

Employment Needs of Youth. A guide and questionnaires for conducting surveys on youth employment problems.

A Start for Youth. Suggestions for Section activities to develop local guidance, training and employment opportunities for youth.

A Start for Youth Bulletin Number 1. A review compiled at the end of 1962 of the status of federal legislation, state and local programs to aid in the training and employment of youth. Useful materials are listed and described. Subsequent bulletins planned.

Housing and Family Welfare

It is self-evident that the home and neighborhood where a child grows up will significantly shape the adult he becomes. Yet, in this era of affluence nearly one-third of American families are living in what is officially called "substandard housing." At the NCJW School for Community Action, "students" will discuss some of the problems of providing decent housing in sound neighborhoods for all the youngsters of their community — no matter what the economic position or skin color of their families. They will also take a look at some of the gaps in programs and services needed to help families move out of the trap of poverty and dependency.

Renewed membership interest in housing and urban problems will be the cue for follow-through activity in the Section's Public Affairs program. Objectives will be: to find out about housing and community development needs and work with other concerned citizens to rid the community and central city of slums and deteriorated neighborhoods; to provide good housing for families of every income level; and to assure open occupancy to all without discrimination.

Community Action: Using the updated Guide to Better Housing, described in the National materials listed below, Sections will be able to plan a local survey as the basis for action needed in their community and find out how citizen groups such as Council can best help to arouse public backing for sound housing programs. A primary objective of local action will be to break down the walls of racial segregation and assure equal access to all available housing and neighborhoods. This will take the form of individual direct action by Section members in support of open occupancy in their own neighborhoods, backed up by a push for fair housing laws and for effective enforcement of those already on the books. Citizen pressure will also be needed to see that the President's Executive Order banning discrimination in federally aided housing is put into practice in their communities.

Federal Programs: No major housing legislation has been enacted since the Housing Act of 1961. To meet growing and changing needs of America's urban areas, measures will be introduced in Congress in 1964, and will be supported by Council to: extend Federal aid to states and localities for building low and middle income housing; expand urban renewal and community development programs; and increase housing opportunities for the elderly. Along with other groups, Council will continue to press for the establishment of a Department of Housing and Urban Development at Cabinet level as essential for an effective national program to deal with the mounting complex problems of urban America.

State Legislation: The states have an important function in housing and family welfare services — both of them essential to Council's emphasis on equal opportunity for youth. Enabling legislation is necessary to take advantage of available federal funds for low and middle income housing and renewal of deteriorating urban neighborhoods. State fair housing laws must be passed and enforced to remove discrimination in private housing.

The states can also make an important contribution to the rehabilitation of families receiving public assistance. Last year Congress adopted important amendments to the Social Security Act in the area of public welfare which, to be effective, requires state action. But what have the states done to take advantage of these programs? As yet very little. A concerted effort is needed for state legislation to take advantage of the new federal grants and programs for children — in their own homes and in day care centers.

National Materials: Guidelines on How To Do It

Guide to Better Housing. With kit of background materials. Fact-finding and community action guide for Section efforts toward the goal of decent housing, sound neighborhoods and open occupancy for every family in the community. (Revised edition to be released in late fall 1963.)

NCJW School Syllabus and Readings. Syllabus outline and readings for Lecture and Seminar IV on "Those Who Start Behind" give background for understanding and discussion of the impact on youngsters of slum living and family problems.

Housing in a Balanced Community. April 1960 Council Platform. Discussion of middle-income housing problems and the consequences of segregation for blighted central cities and homogeneous suburbs — for both Negro and white families.

Suburbs, Slums and the New Metropolis. December 1958 Council Platform. A look at some of the basic and still mounting problems of America's large metropolitan areas — from the center core out into the farthest suburb.

The "Quiet" Integration in the Suburbs, by Margaret Fisher. June 1963 Council Woman article by the associate director of the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing describing how the residents of many suburban communities are working to open in their neighborhoods to Negro families.

At the start of the club year, Sections are urged to contact their state legislation chairman to find out what legislation has been passed this past year and what issues are to receive emphasis in the next legislative session. The state legislation chairman will want to know about any special interest of Sections in a particular area of needed legislation. In states where there is no Council state legislation chairman, Sections can begin to study state issues and be ready to refer information to the state chairman as soon as she is appointed.

Medical Care for the Aging

Despite strong expectations that the 88th Congress would enact a program of medical care insurance for the aging, there has been no activity yet on Capitol Hill on the bills introduced at the beginning of the session. Council will continue to press for a program of medical insurance for the elderly under social security in the next Congressional session to help America's senior citizens meet the costs of major illness in the later years.

Immigration

Efforts will be carried forward into the next session to revise the national origins quota system as the basis of immigration. Council has long opposed this discriminatory system which bases selection for immigration on the national origins of the U.S. population according to the 1920 census. Pending legislation introduced by Senator Philip A. Hart (Mich.) in the 88th Congress would alter present laws so as to make reunification of families easier, give a better break to people from Southern and Eastern Europe and eliminate remaining quota obstacles to admission of persons who possess talents and skills urgently needed in this country. This legislation, which is unlikely to be passed in the first session, will be supported by Council in 1964.

Foreign Affairs

The atmosphere of constant crisis which surrounds the development and conduct of American foreign policy makes it difficult for people to recognize and understand the truly basic problems. The development of such an understanding is, nonetheless, the objective of Council's program in foreign affairs. Council, like many other major national voluntary organizations, is aware that in this age of high speed communication every reporter or commentator is anxious to bring the public something "new." The citizen, therefore, must have sound convictions based on knowledge in order to withstand the onslaught of those who seek to sway his views or arouse his emotions. Only then will he be safe from manipulation by politicians or pressure groups.

The three major issues selected for emphasis during the next club year are those which Council believes are basic to the long range foreign policy objectives of the United States: disarmament, foreign economic policy and support of the United Nations.

Disarmament

The successful conclusion of a nuclear weapons test ban would represent a major step toward disarmament. The fate of such a treaty in the United States Senate, however, has become the cause of considerable concern. Even before a treaty has been drafted there are some Senators — not all of them isolationist — who are saying that they believe such an agreement is not worth the risk to our national security.

In the belief that a good deal of honest opposition is based on fear of the unknown, the National Council of Jewish Women has been urging greater study and consideration of the economic and political effects of disarmament. Sound policies do not develop out of fear, but out of understanding of changes and risks and how to deal with them. It is equally true that little understanding of the true nature of the problems of disarmament is likely to grow from the unthinking, emotional approach of some groups.

Three of the key points in Council's continuing action program for disarmament are, therefore: 1) support of the Disarmament and Arms Control Agency and dissemination of its research and information; 2) encouragement to individuals, businesses and communities to devote serious study to the economic impact of disarmament; 3) setting up study and discussion groups to consider the way in which world law can be developed to replace the use of national force.

In addition, of course, there is the need for continued support of the United States government in its efforts to secure a treaty to ban nuclear weapons testing as a first step toward disarmament. Sections are urged to indicate to their Senators that there is strong public support for a nuclear weapons test ban treaty.

Foreign Economic Policy

Despite the fact that foreign economic aid programs have been in effect since the Marshall Plan of 1948, they have not yet been accepted as an integral part of United States foreign policy. Every Congress must review, sometimes reorganize, authorize anew and finally appropriate funds. The whole process is so political and unpredictable that it is extremely difficult to do any long range planning of foreign aid programs.

During this Congressional session, the President himself complicated the situation with the appointment of a special study committee under the chairmanship of General Lucius Clay. The recommendations of the Clay report, with its emphasis on narrowing the scope of the program and on cutting appropriations undoubtedly pleased many economy-minded Congressmen. However, in the years ahead, it may prove to be a considerable handicap to the development of

Be Ready for Action

To make legislative action possible without delay, as needed throughout the Congressional session, it is important for the Section Board to adopt a basic position early in the club year on outstanding issues. (See pages 16-17 of Education for Action for suggested procedure for obtaining Board approval for Section action.) Priority legislative objectives for Council in the next session are indicated in these guidelines under each major program area.

sound programs of assistance to the new nations for their economic and social development.

Despite the fact that polls show that 58 percent of the American people support foreign aid, members of Congress hear almost exclusively from those who oppose it. Indeed, it is ironic that the overwhelming public acceptance of the Peace Corps has not seemed to increase in any way the popularity of foreign aid. There needs to be greater understanding that those Americans who contribute their services as Peace Corps volunteers can only be effective if they are backed up by the economic support of all Americans through foreign aid programs.

Economic problems will also figure prominently on another level during the coming year. The forthcoming trade talks will begin to put into effect the broad tariff reduction powers granted the President by the last session of Congress. These negotiations will, however, be a significant test not only for our own expanding trade needs but also for western Europe and the common market. If the United States and the common market face each other as two hostile trade blocs, then hope will fade for the growth of world trade and for the cooperation of the nations of the free world in quickening the development of nations in Africa, Asia and South America.

The understanding and support of the American people of the efforts being made to achieve these objectives is essential to their success. Although it is not possible to say how just what form Council's action in this area will take, it will continue to be of important concern.

United Nations

The effectiveness of the United Nations as an international peace-keeping organization is constantly under attack. It is always being pressured to serve the interests of particular members or groups of members. These pressures relate to financing, administrative organization and the authority of the Secretary General, as well as to the agenda items before the General Assembly and Security Council.

Recently, financing has been a prominent issue, with questions of support of the United Nations being directly related to the UN peace-keeping operations in the Congo and the Middle East. The unwillingness of the Russians, the French and the Arab states to finance these operations has created a critical situation. The United States has done its share not only in direct financing, but also in the purchase of UN bonds.

In a little noticed vote in the House of Representatives recently, however, an amendment to cut our contribution to the United Nations by $19 million — a way of forcing immediate repayment of the bonds — was defeated by only seven votes.

Community Action: Because of constant sniping against the United Nations, particularly by right-wing groups, indications of public support are essential. In this connection, community-wide events and observances are particularly valuable. Council Sections are urged to promote, sponsor and participate in:

UNITED NATIONS DAY. October 24, 1963

UNITED NATIONS WEEK. October 20-26, 1963

TRICK OR TREAT FOR UNICEF. October 31, 1963

HUMAN RIGHTS DAY. December 10, 1963

Un Day and UN Week are annual occasions for community-wide observances designed to stimulate interest in the United Nations and to promote understanding of its objectives. For information on activities to observe UN Day and UN Week write to:

American Association for the United Nations
345 East 46th Street, New York 17, New York

U.S. Committee for the United Nations
375 Park Avenue, New York, N. Y.

The children in your community, with some adult direction, can help children all over the world by participating in the annual United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund (UNICEF) Halloween "Trick or Treat" program. Money collected is used for medical care and food for millions of children in other countries. For information on how to organize a "Trick or Treat" program for UNICEF write to:

U.S. Committee for UNICEF
331 East 38th Street, New York 16, N. Y.

The big event of 1963 will be the 15th anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. This will provide an opportunity for a significant international event and, more important, for looking at the human rights records of our own communities. Equal opportunity for all Americans is still not at hand and Human Rights Day 1963 presents an additional stimulus to community action. A most effective Guide to Community Action called The Great Question — Human Rights has been prepared and sponsored by a group of over thirty national organizations, including Council, and will be sent to Sections.

On the "action" front, it is to be hoped that the President will submit several international conventions in the human rights field to the Senate for ratification. If this is done, strong public support will be needed.

National Materials: Guidelines on How To Do It

Toward A Disarmed World. November 1962 Council Platform. An examination of some of the economic and political problems which will result from a disarmament agreement.

Meeting Attacks Against the United Nations. Informational kit answering current attacks against the UN and its agencies. Includes brochures, reprint of "The Council Story in the UN" and a Monitor Sheet with instructions for use.

Council Platform is a regular Public Affairs discussion and information bulletin. Additional copies will be sent regularly to Sections on request in quantity needed for discussion groups.

Council Platform is prepared by the staff of the Public Affairs Department, Helen Raebeck, head, Betty Rosen and Arlene Gilbert, professional assistants, and Olya Margolin, Washington Representative.

Religion

The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

THE PURPOSE of this Society shall be to encourage men to respond positively to God's call for unity in the Church. The unity of God with man, and man with man, is made by God in Baptism and Holy Communion. We commit ourselves to establish total participation in the Church for all persons without regard to race, class, or national origin; to give mutual support to all who act in this ministry of reconciliation; and to express this concern at parish levels and in a more creative witness throughout the community at large.

IN FAITHFULNESS to Jesus Christ, Who values all men equally, and Who prayed that all might be One in Him, and in understanding of the essential unity of the Church, the Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity affirms the unity in His Body of all persons without any distinction as to race, color, national origin or class. In accord with the councils of the Church, we affirm that any form of segregation or separation based on such distinctions in either the Church or the general community is contrary to the will of Christ and must be resisted by His Church and its members.

WE CONFESS OUR FAILURE to seek steadfastly this unity of persons and we penitently admit to prejudices which may separate us from brothers. Praying daily that the Church may be rid of all divisions based on race, color, national origin or class, and that a more just social order be established, the members of the Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity will work toward this end within the Church and their communities as they are individually and corporately able. They constitute this Society as a sign of their commitment and as a means of resource to the Church, and they invite other Churchmen to join them in its objectives, which are to seek:

1. A recognition that our responsibility lies with all persons in a given geographical area and is concerned with drawing these persons into full fellowship through Baptism and Holy Communion within that one parish unit.

2. Mutual support amongst this society for all clergy and laity who, in seeking total participation in parish life for all, find themselves at odds with accepted social mores.

3. Increased acceptance and implementation of the principle that the Church is an inclusive fellowship which seeks out and welcomes all persons into the worship and parish life of any congregation without distinction as to race, color, national origin or class.

4. Elimination of criteria based on race, color, national origin or class for applicants to Church camps, conferences, schools, colleges, hospitals, or other institutions or agencies which the Church may operate or sponsor in any way.

5. Understanding of the prophetic role of the Church, both through corporate and individual effort, in seeking the elimination of racial and other prejudicial barriers in society, whether these be erected by governmental process or through custom.

6. That condition of harmony among peoples which is the benefit of a mutual recognition of the Lordship of Jesus Christ, so that brothers may dwell together in unity and see Him so lifted up that He will draw all men unto Him.

If you agree with this Statement, take your stand with three thousand others and use the attached form to join. If there is a Chapter of the Society where you live, you will be informed about local activities. Whether you are active in a chapter or not, your membership in ESCRU makes you part of a growing fellowship of Churchmen who are ready to move beyond words into the concrete implementation of these objectives. You must decide what you can do where you are.

* * * *

With still others being formed, as of late 1962 there were ESCRU chapters in these dioceses: Michigan, Missouri, Chicago, Maryland, New York, Ohio, Long Island, Minnesota, Rhode Island, Virginia, Pennsylvania, and Massachusetts. Informal ESCRU groups meet in other dioceses and at some seminaries on occasion.

USE THIS FORM TO JOIN ▶

TO: THE EPISCOPAL SOCIETY
5 FORSYTH STREET, N.W.
ATLANTA 3, GEORGIA

CHECK ONE AND SIGN:

☐ As a member of the Episcopal Church and in agreement with the principles of the Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity as set forth in its Statement of Purpose, I apply for membership in the Society and enclose my dues for one year.

☐ I would like to support its work and be counted as a "Friend of the Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity". I enclose a contribution of $3.00 or more and understand that I may share in all activities and literature of the Society but may not hold office or vote.

_____
SIGNATURE

DATE_____

MR.
MISS
MRS.
REV.
RT. REV.

_____
NAME (PLEASE PRINT OR TYPE)

_____
ADDRESS

_____

_____ _____
PARISH DIOCESE

Beginning in 1964 minimum annual dues will become $4.00

Checks may be made payable to ESCRU or Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity. Additional contributions are needed to support the work of the Society and will be gratefully received.	DUES: Annually $3.00 per person minimum	ANY ADDITIONAL CONTRIBUTION	TOTAL ENCLOSED
	$_____	$_____	$_____

Contributions to ESCRU are tax exempt.

Behold,
how good and joyful
a thing it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!

PSALM 133

Board of Directors

1962-1963

President
THE REV. JOSEPH A. PELHAM*
Detroit, Michigan

Vice-President
DR. THOMAS F. PETTIGREW*
Cambridge, Massachusetts

Secretary
THE REV. JOHN W. B. THOMPSON, JR.*
Mobile, Alabama

Treasurer
MR. MALCOLM E. PEABODY, JR.*
New York, New York

THE REV. JAMES P. BREEDEN
Boston, Massachusetts

MR. JOHN A. BUGGS
Los Angeles, California

THE REV. R. MARTIN CALDWELL, JR.
Southern Pines, North Carolina

THE REV. WALTER D. DENNIS
Hampton, Virginia

MR. SIDNEY B. DEXTER
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

MRS. GEORGE EDWARDS
Detroit, Michigan

MRS. JOHN FOUNTAIN
Riverside, Connecticut

DR. LUTHER H. FOSTER
Tuskegee, Alabama

DR. REUBEN H. GROSS
New York, New York

DR. VAN S. LAWRENCE
Minneapolis, Minnesota

MR. HAROLD A. LETT
Newark, New Jersey

MR. MAURY MAVERICK, JR.
San Antonio, Texas

THE VERY REV. PAUL MOORE, JR.*
Indianapolis, Indiana

THE REV. C. KILMER MYERS
New York, New York

THE RT. REV. JAMES A. PIKE
San Francisco, California

MRS. HAROLD SORG
Berkeley, California

THE RT. REV. CHANDLER W. STERLING*
Helena, Montana

THE REV. MCRAE WERTH
West Newbury, Massachusetts

THE REV. CANON ALLAN N. ZACHER, JR.
St. Louis, Missouri

THE REV. LAYTON P. ZIMMER
Swarthmore, Pennsylvania

*Executive Committee

Executive Director
THE REV. JOHN B. MORRIS

THE EPISCOPAL SOCIETY FOR CULTURAL AND RACIAL UNITY
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Religion

NCCJ

what is the national conference of christians and jews?

NCCJ

...was founded in 1928 by Charles Evans Hughes, Newton D. Baker, S. Parkes Cadman, Roger W. Straus, Carlton J. H. Hayes and other distinguished Americans.

It is a civic organization of religiously motivated people, seeking through education and discussion to promote civic cooperation and mutual understanding among men of good will of all religious and ethnic groups without compromise of religious beliefs.

Its purpose is positive: to approach more closely the national ideal of building "one nation, under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

It seeks the resolution of community problems by bringing to bear on them the moral insights shared by all the major religious groups and all persons of good will who make up our pluralistic society.

NCCJ's program is educational and follows a multiple approach at various levels to the intergroup situation in the community. It reaches millions of Americans annually by conducting programs with and through existing institutions and organizations of society.

It is not an "interfaith" movement. It does not aim at any sort of amalgamation of religious bodies or a least common denominator of doctrine. It does not engage in common worship. It seeks in all its work to guard against the dangers of religious indifferentism.

It is neither a propaganda organization nor a pressure group. It does not lobby, it does not pass resolutions "viewing with alarm." It is not an "action group" in the conventional sense. But the education it seeks to promote is itself a profoundly important form of action if it brings about a change of heart.

NCCJ provides a means for men and women of good will of differing religions to work together on common civic concerns.

THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIANS AND JEWS NOW STARTS ITS 36TH YEAR OF INCREASING PROGRAM TO BUILD BETTER HUMAN RELATIONS. WITH A BUDGET OF APPROXIMATELY THREE MILLION DOLLARS—A DEDICATED STAFF WORKING OUT OF NATIONAL HEADQUARTERS AND 65 REGIONAL OFFICES—WE SHALL CONTINUE TO WORK TOWARD THE GOAL OF BRINGING MUTUAL UNDERSTANDING INTO OUR NATIONAL LIFE.

Joseph C. Wilson

NATIONAL SPECIAL GIFTS CHAIRMAN

Events of 1963 have made it startlingly clear that our country's deepest need is not a more powerful technology, or even a more buoyant economy. More important by far is the need for people to learn to respect and understand one another. On this depends the very survival of our society.

The National Conference of Christians and Jews makes a unique contribution to this vital need, and its campaign deserves the vigorous support of business leaders throughout the United States.

Joseph C. Wilson
President, Xerox Corporation

major NCCJ program development areas and significant programs

We must help our children grow into emotional maturity so they do not use prejudice and hostility as a crutch for their own personality inadequacies.

NCCJ conducts "rearing children of good will" institutes, varied to meet local community needs, but focused upon the important role of parents in teaching children attitudes suited to democratic living.

The dissemination of accurate and objectively reported news about Catholics, Protestants, Eastern Orthodox and Jews helps to break down religious isolationism and prejudice.

The Religious News Service of the National Conference furnishes 450 newspapers, magazines and church publications and more than 200 radio and TV stations with photos, special features and daily dispatches on religious news.

To achieve the maximum impact in education, we must help train teachers and community leaders to acquire new understandings and skills in religious, racial and ethnic relations.

Since 1941 NCCJ has cooperated with leading colleges and universities in all parts of the country in a summer workshop program. In a university setting teachers and community leaders spend two to six weeks together, sharing, exchanging and learning practical ways of teaching good human relations.

Today's young people are tomorrow's leaders and America's future may very well depend upon the moral and spiritual values they acquire.

NCCJ is increasingly emphasizing its program for youth leaders. Conferences and institutes for high school youth provide opportunities to discuss issues of deep concern to young people.

It is evident that there can be no positive education for good human relations where peace and order are in jeopardy or where minority groups are victims of discrimination.

NCCJ's program in police-community relations includes an annual week-long national institute at Michigan State University, divisional police institutes and human relations programs for local police officers.

Opportunities for labor and management to meet and talk to one another about common human relations problems in non-crisis situations provide greater areas of understanding.

NCCJ institutes involving labor, management and community leaders help to create an understanding of mutual responsibility in crucial human relations problems.

In matters of interreligious relations the important consideration is not that agreement be reached but that lines of communication be kept open for a frank exchange of ideas and viewpoints.

A unique function of NCCJ through its program of dialogue is its role as a conferring agency, bringing together people of different religious affiliations for a friendly and frank exchange of viewpoints.

The development of sound informational materials on basic human relations problems expands knowledge and understanding.

NCCJ's extensive publication program produces intergroup relations materials for schools and colleges, churches and synagogues, civic agencies and the media of mass communications.

BROTHERHOOD WEEK, sponsored by the National Conference of Christians and Jews, has been observed since 1934. It is a time of renewal and resolution to sustain Brotherhood throughout the year.

NCCJ LEADERSHIP

Co-Chairmen

ROBERT D. MURPHY, President, Corning Glass International

LEWIS L. STRAUSS, Former U.S. Secretary of Commerce

CARROL M. SHANKS, Financial Consultant and Civic Leader

President LEWIS WEBSTER JONES

THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIANS AND JEWS is wholly supported by voluntary contributions from individuals, corporations, foundations, fraternal organizations and religious groups. These contributions make possible a network of 65 regional offices and their year-round programming for better human relations.

With its already established and proven experience in promoting understanding among all people, its educational program geared to reach people in all walks of life, NCCJ is uniquely qualified to meet the challenge of building a better democracy.

With your help and your contributions we can build toward the national ideal of one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

NCCJ

THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIANS AND JEWS

Co-Chairmen
Carrol M. Shanks — Robert D. Murphy — Lewis L. Strauss

Secretary
Oscar M. Lazrus

Treasurer
George B. Moran

Chairman—Finance
Samuel D. Leidesdorf

President
Lewis Webster Jones

Executive Vice-President
Sterling W. Brown

ALBUQUERQUE, N. M.
8205 Guadalupe
Trail, N.W.

ASHEVILLE, N. C.
910 Southeastern Bldg.
Greensboro, N. C.

ATLANTA 3, GA.
1144 Bank of Georgia Bldg.

BALTIMORE 2, MD.
514 Keyser Bldg.

BEAUMONT, TEX.
P.O. Box 2465

BIRMINGHAM 3, ALA.
927-8 City Federal Bldg.

BOSTON 8, MASS.
73 Tremont Street

BRONX 51, N.Y.
529 Courtlandt Ave.

BROOKLYN 1, N.Y.
105 Court Street

BUFFALO 2, N.Y.
Suite 36
Hotel Statler-Hilton

CHAMBERSBURG, PENNA.
765 Garfield Street

CHARLOTTE 2, N. C.
121 E. 3rd Street

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.
3323 Windsor Court

CHICAGO 1, ILL.
203 No. Wabash Ave.

CINCINNATI 2, OHIO
313 Keith Bldg.

CLEVELAND 14, OHIO
304 Investment Ins. Bldg.
E. 6th St. & Rockwell Ave.

DALLAS 1, TEX.
1028 Dallas Athletic Club Bldg.
1805 Elm Street

DENVER 2, COLO.
307 Denver Natl. Bldg.
821-17th Street

DES MOINES 9, IOWA
707 Empire Bldg.

DETROIT 2, MICH.
150 W. Boston Blvd.

DULUTH 2, MINN.
313 Bradley Bldg.
10 East Superior St.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA
Box 301
Blandon, Penna.

EL PASO, TEX.
614 E. Yandell Blvd.

FORT WORTH 2, TEX.
214 Danciger Bldg.
Fifth & Throckmorton

GREENSBORO, N. C.
910 Southeastern Bldg.

HARTFORD 3, CONN.
983 Main Street

HEMPSTEAD, L.I., NEW YORK
27 West Columbia Street

HOUSTON 2, TEX.
1109 Scanlan Bldg.

INDIANAPOLIS 4, IND.
108 E. Washington St.
Room 1501

JAMAICA 33, N.Y.
92-32 Union Hall St.

KANSAS CITY, MO.
916 Walnut St.

KNOXVILLE, TENN.
P.O. Box 685

LAS VEGAS, NEV.
United Fund Bldg.
1622 South A Street

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
1921 W. 22nd Street

LOS ANGELES 5, CAL.
Suite 202
3335 Wilshire Blvd.

LOUISVILLE 2, KY.
501 Republic Bldg.

MEMPHIS 3, TENN.
223 Falls Bldg.

MIAMI 32, FLA.
305 Calumet Bldg.
10 N.E. Third Ave.

MILWAUKEE 2, WISC.
759 N. Milwaukee St.
Room 419

MINNEAPOLIS 2, MINN.
520 National Bldg.

NEWARK 2, N.J.
790 Broad Street

NEW ORLEANS 12, LA.
610 International Bldg.
611 Gravier Street

NEW YORK 19, N.Y.
43 West 57th Street

NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y.
330 Niagara Street
Lewiston, N.Y.

NORFOLK, VA.
269 Boush St.

OKLA. CITY 2, OKLA.
310 Com. Exch. Bldg.

OMAHA 2, NEB.
848 Insurance Bldg.

PHILA. 7, PA.
1211 Chestnut St.

PHOENIX 4, ARIZ.
624 Luhrs Bldg.

PITTSBURGH 22, PA.
1307 Keenan Bldg.

PORTLAND 5, ORE.
729 S.W. Alder St.

PROVIDENCE 6, R.I.
92 Benevolent Street

RICHMOND 30, VA.
203 Westwood Bldg.
2317 Westwood Ave.

SAN ANTONIO 5, TEX.
632 Three A Life Bldg
118 Broadway

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
4247 Park Blvd.

SAN FRANCISCO 3, CAL.
Suite 815
Central Tower
703 Market Street

SEATTLE 1, WASH.
701 Seaboard Bldg.

SHREVEPORT, LA.
3507 West College

SOUTH BEND 1, IND.
128 Franklin Place

ST. LOUIS 1, MO.
915 Chemical Bldg.
721 Olive Street

TAMPA 4, FLA.
1216 E. Sligh Street

TULSA 3, OKLA.
515 S. Denver

UPPER NEW YORK STATE
43 West 57th St.
New York 19, N.Y.

WASHINGTON 5, D. C.
735 Southern Bldg.
1425 H St., N.W.

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y.
175 Main Street

WICHITA 2, KAN.
257 No. B'way
Suite 104

WICHITA FALLS, TEX.
718 - 10th St.

WILKES-BARRE, PENNA.
44 N. Franklin Street

WILLIAMSPORT, PA.
R.D. #2
Montoursville, Pa.

WILMINGTON, DEL.
1011 Washington St.

Canadian Council of Christians and Jews
506-508 Ryrie Bldg., 229 Yonge St., Toronto, Canada

L WDV
Religion

Southern Field Service

National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice

1046 Baronne Street • New Orleans, Louisiana, 70113 • 523-2901

NON-DISCRIMINATION CONTRACT---Bishop Connare of Greensburg, Pa. and Bishop Reed of Oklahoma City have inserted non-discriminatory clauses in their church construction contracts.

FOLLOWING HIS STEPS---A moving story of Bishop Waters' development of a full understanding of racial justice, told in his own words, is available at our office. All you have to do is write for it. The director of the Southern Field Office, Henry Cabirac, at Bishop Waters' invitation, visited with him and with interested groups in Raleigh, Durham, Charlotte, Asheville, and Greenville, North Carolina urging more work for voter registration, further public school desegregation, and equal employment opportunities.

ATLANTA PROGRESS---Parochial schools in Atlanta have had the largest registration in history--this follows desegregation and shows that people of Christ will follow His path. Archbishop Hallinan is giving his full support to the Atlanta Interracial Council which is presenting excellent panels to parish organizations and other places when requested. Atlanta hospitals are desegregated.

CHARITY---Front pages all over the nation carried the story when a New Orleans area pastor was slugged by one of his parishoners who objected to integrated classes for children preparing for their First Communion. Perhaps the sequel in which the pastor refused to press charges against the assailant was not given the same coverage.

FIGHTER---Congratulations are in order for John P. Nelson, vice-chairman of the National Council and secretary of the New Orleans Council on Human Relations, who was one of those responsible for the lowering of the racial barrier at Tulane University. Not content to rest on his laurels, John has filed suit to open Terrebonne Parish, Louisiana schools to Indians in the area.(Remember-discrimination is not limited to one color.)

TRAVELER---Mr. Cabirac's been on the go--places he has visited in recent months include Savannah, Charleston, Washington, New York, Mobile, Nashville, Jackson, Atlanta, Chicago, Birmingham, Lafayette, Monroe, Dallas, Shreveport, Little Rock, Oklahoma City, Austin, San Antonio, Houston, Raleigh, Greensboro, Durham, Charlotte, Asheville. If you want him--just buzz him--he'll come arunning provided you get him enough in advance so he can plan his trip to cover as many places as possible.

RATES BASED ON COLOR---It has come to our attention that some Southern-based insurance companies charge Negroes as much as 80 per cent more than national companies do. If you know anything about this practice, please help fight it.

LITERATURE---Here are some recommended pieces of literature we have on supply. Dr. Spock's "Prejudice in Children's Conversations with Dr. Spock"--.25 cents. "Challange to Religion"--National Conference on Religion and Race--$1.65, and "How to Organize a Catholic Interracial Council"--$1.50.

LET'S WORK---If you're interested in racial justice how about getting out and doing something. Pope John XXIII in "Mater et Magista" urged we translate doctrine into deeds. The Interracial Review suggests 12 steps:

1. Read and Study--know what the facts are.
2. Find Others--who are concerned and want to do something.
3. Raise the Issue--don't stand silent, be the first one to talk about it.
4. Join--it's O.K. to be a loner, but groups get things done.
5. Attend--once you've got it started keep the movement alive by attending the meetings.
6. Write and Visit--let your editors, legislators, pastors, and civic officals know what you think. Put it in a letter and, better still, take time to go and visit them.
7. Break Down Isolation--get the races together. They can't know each other as humans if they don't have the chance to meet.
8. Children--let them know truth and justice from the start at home.
9. Hospitality--how about a coffee party at home as a fine place to get people together.
10. Times of Tension--promote harmony so your neighborhood will be ready when passions rise and tempers flare--remember this isn't all strawberries and cream and it might get nasty--so be prepared.
11. Provide Information--let your community leaders know what is going on in other places.
12. Pray--let's face it--we need help and only He can give it.

PERMISSION OF CHANCELLORY NEEDED---All priests desiring to participate in the August 28 march on Washington are required to get the permission of their Chancellory Office and have this forwarded to His Excellency Archbishop O'Boyle in Washington. Archbishop O'Boyle is providing board and lodging for that one day to all those in need of it. For further information please write the National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice, 21 West Superior Street, Chicago 10, Illinois.

NATIONAL CONFERENCE ON RELIGION AND RACE---By now you are all aware of the historical National Conference on Religion and Race which was held in Chicago in January. This is the first time in the history of the country that the heads of the three faiths agreed to meet on a national level on any subject. Follow-ups of the conferences are being held throughout the country and there have been some concrete results. In your own community you should try to co-operate with such a follow-up committee, or if there is none, try to initiate one.

PARTICIPATION OF ALL CATHOLICS IN CHURCH ACTIVITIES---Unfortunately because Negroes have been resented for so long they frequently avoid participation in all forms of Catholic life such as parish and diocesian organizations, schools, etc., even when they are able to join. Those of us that are interested in Christian Unity and racial justice and charity should do everything possible to encourage Catholic Negroes to participate to the fullest extent.

PRESIDENT'S CIVIL RIGHTS BILL---All Southern Catholic who are interested in implementing the principles of our Bishops regarding racial justice and charity have given priority to putting our house in order. This is correct. However our concern for justice should not stop here. If you will recall the Bishops' statement "Discrimination and the Christian Conscience" these principles should be applied to all walks of life.

Just as we are very much concerned with such evils in the community as indecent literature because it affects Catholics as well as non-Catholics, this should be the case with racial injustice. We therefore urge you to contact your Senators and Congressmen to ask that they modify some of their opposition to this bill, or in the case of the few areas of the South where your Senators and Congressmen are on the defensive, to encourage them to vote for it. It would be better not to identify yourself as belonging to a Catholic Interracial Council or a Human Relations Council.

Southern Field Service
1046 Baronne Street
New Orleans, La. 70113

RETURN REQUESTED

4

BULK RATE
U. S. POSTAGE PAID
Permit No. 303
New Orleans, La.

Mr. Paul Rilling
#5 Forsyth St., N.W.
Atlanta 3, Ga.

Religion

SOME REACTIONS OF A CITY PASTOR TO THE EFFECTIVE CITY CHURCH STUDY

George D. Younger, Mariners' Temple Baptist Church, New York, N.Y.
Distributed by the Department of the Urban Church Presbyterian Board of National Missions, U.P.U.S.A.

The most striking difference between the materials prepared for the initial conference on the Effective City Church Boards in April 1955 and those used at the summary meeting in Pittsburgh in November 1960 is the frame of reference within which they are written. Where the preparatory materials wanted to compare and measure the city church in relation to the surrounding community, those resulting from the study feel it necessary to evaluate the city church in relation to the theological definition of "church." Where the earlier viewpoint looked at the city church from the outside, the final approach is looking from the inside.

This is an important distinction, for it marks out clearly the end of an era in urban church work. All of us are familiar with the pioneering work of Park, Burgess and others in urban sociology and of H. Paul Douglass, Kincheloe, Sanderson and others in church and society. Standing as watchmen on the city wall, they warned the churches of the urban (now metropolitan) explosion that was engulfing them. Using the techniques of the static sociology of their time, they traced out the dimensions of the surrounding community and the institution of the church within that community. Taking it for granted that each communion and each congregation was sure what it meant to be a church, they pointed the way to creative interaction between the local congregation and its surrounding community. The response of the denominational executive and the pioneering pastor to this knowledge can be summed up in the slogan: "The church must serve its community."

Many of the most significant projects in city work during the past four decades have been undertaken on the basis of this knowledge, and we cannot underestimate the importance of their contributions. Yet there has also been a growing uneasiness with the fruits of this approach. Devastatingly summed up for us by St. Hereticus in his satirical "coloring book" for Christianity and Crisis, the community approach has often resulted in producing ministers -- and congregations -- who are to be colored "the color of their environment."[1] The most obvious fruit is the endless succession of "church extension" congregations multiplied in suburbs across the continent, each carefully chosen in accordance with a community "survey" and each expected to "serve its community." A less obvious fruit -- but equally gnarled and wormy -- is the scattering of "inner-city experiments" in some of our urban areas, each keenly aware of community trends and proclaiming proudly its accomplishment of "serving the community." Important as it may be to know and seek to serve the community in which a church is placed, it is not sufficient reason for its existence as a church. Nor is it very helpful in distinguishing an "effective city church" from an effective supermarket, branch bank or settlement house.

Malaise about this approach has perhaps not been so marked among pastors in urban situations as it has been among the very people who were most responsible for it in the first place. Sociology had moved on from studying the outlines of a community and its institutions to using the more dynamic tools of psychology and the "depth interview" in an attempt to understand its sources and its movement. Values and norms were felt to be as significant as membership and frequency of attendance. The individual self-consciousness became as legitimate an object of inquiry as the ecology of which he was a part. In addition, as Frances Potter's introductory report showed, there is a lack of clarity and agreement among executives, pastors and other students of the urban church concerning "the major types of churches that can be found in a metropolitan area." All agreed that the "city church" includes all churches from downtown to the fringes of suburbia, but they could agree on little else.[2] The "traditional" categories of "downtown," "inner city," "neighborhood" and "suburban" proved no more effective an indicator of the type of community and the type of church than the ridiculously broad definition used by the Bureau of the Census to designate a community as "urban." The categories prove to have little specificity, and each shades into the other. In addition, they can do little with the downtown and suburban prestige churches that draw from the whole metropolitan area or the newest urban phenomenon, the "slurb," where a relatively new housing area already contains a slum population. The measuring rod that had seemed so sure in the 1920's, the urban community, had proven to be quite inadequate.

Some urban pastors had other misgivings about the conventional way of approaching urban problems. Under the influence of a resurgent theological concern for the church, they proclaimed, "Let the church be the church." Carrying the church's banner, they were willing to seek to colonize any part of the metropolis. Their inspiration and their norm was the life of the church itself. And they were as likely to engage in Bible studies as community studies. Although the impact of their experience upon the wider church was first interpreted in older terms ("They are serving their community."), during the past decade it began to become more apparent that their primary importance was theological and not sociological.

None of these influences fully account for the shift in emphasis, but it is most important to note that a change of viewpoint has occurred. This was not just a change in the viewpoint of a few reserchers trying to fulfill an assignment for a department of the National Council of Churches and its member denominations. This has been a change that has occurred among urban pastors and their churches as well. We are fortunate that, at the time that we wish to be more theologically oriented in our approach to metropolitan situations, the technicians who will be investigating and measuring our churches are more concerned to measure effectiveness in terms of what the church is than in terms of what the community is.

The natural tendency of the local pastor in relation to studies of this kind has been to resist investigation and measurement. "There are too many imponderables." "We're only getting started," "They're going to be looking at the wrong things" -- these are some common reactions. Yet, as the initial study report pointed out, it is impossible to measure "effectiveness" without first defining the "objectives," "purposes" or "goals" in terms of which effectiveness is to be measured.[3] Every local congregation -- and every pastor -- has some objectives, purposes or goals by which it seeks to forward its work. When these are made clearer to the researchers and investigators, then it becomes possible to measure effectiveness. If we are to avoid having superficial or irrelevant criteria applied from outside our situations, then it will be necessary for us to articulate with greater depth and precision than most local churches have been doing what we consider to be our main objectives, our fundamental purposes, our primary goals.

The initial study report also outlined the four "manifestations of the local church" which might be used as criteria for measurement. (These might better be understood as relationships, as I have indicated in parentheses.)

1. the church as an institution (in relation to itself)
2. the church as a congregation of individuals (in relation to individuals)
3. the church as a part of the social structure in the community (in relation to society)
4. the church as the "local outpost of the Kingdom," a manifestation of the Body of Christ (in relation to God)[4]

All these criteria have their importance, and none of us can avoid setting our direction or measuring our performance by standards that include the church in all these relationships. Yet, the final reports made to the 1960 conference make it plain that, if the church concentrates on the first three relationships (which, incidentally, are the most easily measurable!) to the exclusion of the fourth, it has forfeited the very purpose for which it exists. Definitions of effectiveness, then, have to proceed primarily from an adequate theological doctrine of the church. Difficult as it may be, the church cannot be judged "effective" or "less than effective" without some reference to the purposes of God.

The standard which the researchers chose to do their measuring was stated thus: "The Church is called by God to become the Body of Christ in order to carry on Christ's ministry of reconciling the world to God."[5] This definition was reached on the basis of statements of the Third World Conference on Faith and Order at Lund, Sweden and the North American Conference on Faith and Order at Oberlin. An exegete might point out that there are many terms and images used to describe the church in the New Testament; a theologian might point out the inevitable compromise involved in formulating "ecumenical statements;" a local pastor might point out the difficulty of seeing theological descriptions in the empirical reality of a congregation. But the important point has been marked out: a church can only truly be measured in relation to God and to its own call to be a church.

Not all of the contribution of five years of discussion and study is to be found in the area of methodology, however. Approaching the church on the basis of its own doctrine and self-understanding, the researchers have given some important theoretical undergirding (and, incidentally, raised some disturbing questions) to the rule-of-thumb, pragmatic model of a local congregation on which most inner-city parishes and many suburban ones have been operating for quite some time. Stated simply, this model can be said to combine aspects of both the "congregational" and the "parish" approach. It has seen a local congregation and its constituency as a series of concentric rings: leaders or "militants" at the center, along with clergy and professionals; a wider circle of faithful members who are strong on religious observance; a still wider circle of weak or indifferent members; surrounded then by another circle of constituents who are involved in one or another of the church's activities; beyond whom lie the rest of the "parish," everyone who is as yet untouched by the life of this local congregation. Depending on their understanding of what it means to be a "member," different communions will draw a line at one or another of these rings and say that at this point membership ceases and wider constituency begins. Yet all have basically modified the traditional understandings of congregation or parish which came to them from their confessional group.

Charles Glock was the first researcher to raise the question whether the description of adherents of a local congregation as "members" or "non-members" was not so vague as to be meaningless. He suggested that "religiousness as a concept" be measured according to "the kind and degree of commitment" which a church expects and receives from its parishioners. As an analytical model, he suggested four dimensions into which members' faith-responses might be divided:

1. experiential (religious feelings)
2. ritualistic (religious practices)
3. ideological (religious beliefs)
4. consequential ("works," what people do and what attitudes they hold as a consequence of their religious experience, practice and belief)

He recognized that these are all dimensions of commitment and are all expected of the church member. Yet he also recognized that the churches are unclear as to what they expect of parishioners in each of these dimensions, and that church members tend to emphasize some dimensions of commitment to the exclusion of others.[6]

Yoshio Fukuyama, operating on the basis of this clue, refined Glock's proposal to four dimensions which seemed to be more meaningful and to represent distinctive styles of religious orientation:

1. cognitive (what people know about religion; "the knowledgeable church member")
2. cultic (an individual's practice of religion; "the active church member")

3. creedal (what a person believes; "the believing church member")
4. devotional (religious feelings and experience; "the devout church member")[7]
Using these categories and questionnaires designed to measure the extent to which church members fitted into one or more of these categories, Fukuyama found strong basis for the practical model already being used by urban churches. 1/3 of the respondents did not possess any of the characteristics used to define religious orientation; they were "nominal" church members who considered themselves Christians without knowing or believing very much in the Christian faith, who considered themselves part of the Christian fellowship without being active in it or sharing its experience. An additional 1/6 was cultically oriented, which meant that they were faithful in religious observance only. Still another 1/6 was oriented to only one of the other three dimensions, and only 1/3 oriented in 2 or more dimensions. Although not stated, we can probably assume that only a relatively few people met the test of being able to be measured along all four dimensions.[8]

Other findings of interest in this study of the quality of church membership were: 1. the shift from cognitive to devotional orientation as a typical style as one moved from youth to age along the age scale; 2. the increased intensity of a member's beliefs as one moves along the dimensions from cognitive through cultic and creedal to devotional; 3. the correlation between social class (high socio-economic status, high educational attainment, in prime productive years, married with children) and the modal dimension, the cultic; 4. creedal and devotional styles as "deviant modes of religious expression" associated with old age, lack of family ties, low educational attainment and low socio-economic status; and 5. dominance of the Protestant churches by nuclear family interest, which fail to provide for those widowed, divorced or unmarried, and by "institutionalization of religion at the cognitive level, " which works against members' achieving other dimensions of their faith.

Far less helpful than Fukuyama's findings are the attempts of Phillip Hammond to discover the relation of ideology to church participation. Starting out with categories of members as "ego-centric" (less attached to traditional beliefs, less community oriented), "socio-centric" (same in belief, but community oriented), "ecclesia-centric" (traditional in belief, less community oriented) and "theo-centric" (traditional and community oriented), he emerged with the tautological conclusion that the theo-centric were the most likely to participate in church activities, while the ego-centric were least likely. This is a good example of the kind of measuring-rod that is not likely to be very helpful either to local congregations or to researchers.

Three observations must be made about this whole process of measuring effectiveness, however. They apply, no matter what the criteria which are being used:
1. Tentativeness of Data: Although sociological studies and depth interviews can produce helpful data, we can never forget that their findings are quite a bit less than absolutes. In the first place, they represent a situation or a person's reactions only at the time at which the study is made, a kind of cross-section in time of a situation which has kept on changing. Second, their conclusions are often based on answers to a very limited number of questions. These questions are framed so that they will be indicative of the respondent's state of mind, but there is always the possibility of misinterpretation on the part of interviewer or interviewee. Finally, the results which are given "labels" and presented as findings actually represent small, though significant variations in totals, scores and correlations. The interpretation of such numerical ratios is a job for technicians and may sometimes tell far more about the questionnaire than about the congregation or individual being studied.

2. Need to Set Own Standards: One of the most significant findings of Project Laity, a parallel study to the Effective City Church Study which used some of its research instruments, was that "the means and standards used in successful problem solution were...group generated rather than drawn from available denominational sources."[9] Although outside standards of effectiveness and studies by those outside a church's situation can be of help, this project setting up lay-ministerial groups in 27 different local churches found that continuing groups which made the most progress on their own situation were those which met the following conditions: a. relevant persons within both power and policy processes of the local church were involved in the initial planning process; b. adequate definition of the situation which the planned change is designed to improve; c. vague goals at first, so that the nature of the goal can change as things move along; and d. goals which originate from within the experience and conditions of the local church. This seems to indicate that the most a set of criteria can do for urban churches is to provide them with a set of guide lines for conducting their own self-study. The best criteria in the world will not be helpful in measuring or stimulating effectiveness in parishes when imposed from the outside.

3. Relation of Local Congregation to Wider Church: In spite of what has just been said, it is obvious that no local group can adequately assess every factor in its own situation or generate de novo the necessary responses to the challenges they face. This means that a non-threatening consultative relationship needs to be established with denominational authorities. Project Laity also showed that when such help was available, local churches were able to move ahead faster and more effectively. However, most denominational boards in spite of protestations that they exist "to serve the local church" -- conceive their relation to the local church primarily as a promotional or program implementation function rather than a consultative one. They seem to be bringing "pressure" on the local groups rather than seeking to help them. We must also note that it is equally difficult to get churches of various denominations in a given area together because of the same "threat" which each poses to the other. Yet, many times this sort of mutual facing of their situation is precisely what is called for.

Every new emphasis carries within it the seeds of its own distortion and eventual destruction. This must be recognized in connection with present attempts to evaluate the city church in relation to a theological definition of the church rather than in relation to the community at large. We face a highly fluid and complex situation in every metropolitan area. The fact that primary attention is being given to the nature of the church in relation to God and to its own membership does not release us from the necessity of continuing attention to the situation in which the church is carrying out its mission and the people whom it is not reaching. Frances Potter suggested in her initial report that the methods used by the United States International Information and Educational Exchange to test whether or not it was reaching its audience might have some relevance in assessing a church's effectiveness. This would mean gauging the response of the "unsure" and "antagonistic" as well as of the "committed."[10] At a time when many are pointing to the growing estrangement between modern culture and every phase of the church's life, we cannot afford to keep our eyes only on "inside" fators. We need to study as deeply and carefully as ever the situation in which the church is seeking to witness.

There is a certain falsity to the whole process of trying to draw up "criteria" or "guidelines" or objectives. It seems to assume that we can start from scratch and create churches as if nothing had gone before. Unfortunately we start in this process at exactly the same place in which every local congregation and its minister must start: in media res, right smack in the middle. There is a certain coolness and sterility about the whole process that would like to "plan" everything out, as if it is ever possible to start with a completely clean slate. Every local congregation must face not only what it presently is and what it wants to be; it must also bear the burden of what it has been. Even when the new minister comes in as "the new broom" or the population moves in bringing "a changed situation," there is no easy way to separate the present and future from the past.

This is also very true to the nature of the church itself, for here also we start in media res. Christ has come, the apostles have witnessed, and we are built on that foundation. In addition, we bear all the burdens, for good or ill, of our denominational and Protestant past. Therefore, it is quite unrealistic (as well as untheological) to start out as if we had nothing to go by and nothing to live down. Charles Estus, in a very perceptive paper prepared for the 1960 conference, has pointed out that sociologists can offer some guidance as churches make strategy decisions. Talcott Parsons outlines four basic strategy problems facing any group: 1.) adaptive (how to adapt to physical, social, economic and political environments), 2.) goal consummatory (how to realize the purposes of the church), 3.) integrative (how to harmonize the activities of persons and groups so that all contribute to the achievement of its purposes), and 4.) normative (how to gain commitment of members to purposes and their acceptance of standards governing the behavior of members). Estus points out that, in the light of the studies made in the Effective City Church inquiry, it is clear that, although integration around purposes is often a problem, the most basic problem facing urban churches is the normative one.[11] At this point it is most important that we recover some sense of a church that has existed in the past and of which we are now a part, a church that cuts across congregational lines and gives some sense of form to each local conventicle. We do not face this problem without resources, for we are already in the middle of the church's history.

One final observation: It is interesting to note that, although the Effective City Church study points strongly to the presence of criteria for measuring effectiveness within the church's own theological understanding of itself, it says nothing about methods being available from her theology. At this point a local pastor would like to express his great appreciation for all that the social sciences and the arts of administration can teach the local congregation. But he would also like to point out that we find quite clearly in Scripture and in the life of the believing fellowship a resource that cannot be overlooked: the Christian experience of repentance and forgiveness. I know of no other way that any local church can approach the task of self-study, and I am sure that it is even more necessary when others approach from the outside to apply general standards to all the particularities of a given situation. Without this experience of God's grace, we have the nightmare of the "organization man:" a group-think set of standards for evaluation that will be handed to every national and local executive, a slavish attempt on the part of clergy and congregations to "shape up" in those areas where they know they will be tested, a "successful" product according to the specifications or the limbo of disfavor and withdrawal of financial support -- a straight-line process that is supposed to move from plan through execution to evaluation. But we know that we all labor under the gaze of a Judge who so marks our inadequacies that none can stand. We know that it is constantly necessary to be humbled by our failures and partial execution, so that we shall once again come to repentance and open ourselves to God's renewing grace. Therefore, if the note of repentance and renewal has been missing in these preparatory studies, let us make sure that they will be considered a basic part of the process by which any denomination seeks to encourage churches to "effectiveness" and help them measure how they stand not only in the eyes of men but of God.

For Further Thought in Spare Moments:

How Should Criteria Be Applied?

"1. We might agree at the very start that all of our methods of evaluation will be highly fallible. We will never be sure how effective we have been in helping men to learn to know and love God, and we cannot define how God can be expected to perform His works.

2. We all recognize that we cannot impose our criteria, measures, and norms on groups that do not accept them as valid. Indeed, we may decide that self-application of criteria is the best method.

3. It seems clear that all of our evaluation will really be evaluation of progress, rather than achievement. Since the command is "Be ye perfect," we will never try to separate sheep from goats, but rather will try to distinguish limited from greater progress toward achievement of our ultimate objectives.

4. We will achieve a greater measure of "objectivity" and fairness if, having studied as carefully as possible, and having defined certain criteria for effectiveness, we apply these impartially to all the churches or programs for which they were designed. (It is a familiar democratic principle that before the law prominent and poor men are regarded in the same way.)"

Quoted from "What Is An Effective City Church"
By--Frances Squire Potter
Department of Urban Church
Division of Home Missions
National Council of Churches

Standard, Efficiency, Effectiveness

The effectiveness of any person or group can be judged in three ways. First, some standard can be used to determine whether the action of a person or group conforms with the standard. Secondly, action can be judged in terms of the efficiency of the action in realizing that standard. Thirdly, effectiveness can be judged in terms of the degree to which that is actually the purpose of action. The working statement of the purposes of the Church then becomes the standard with which these three forms of judgment are made. (Whitman et al, "A Frame of Reference for the Study of the Effective City Church, p. 1)

"Parish" and "Congregation"

One source of weakness of a parish ministry lies in the possible failure of such a ministry to realize true community among the members of the congregation. There are no structural deterrents to the distortion of the purpose of the Church to create reconciled community, as St. Paul describes it. All too often the parish ministry becomes a professional staff rendering services to the immediate neighborhood. This professionalization and subsequent "programming" of the life of the church is substituted for the community called by God to carry on Christ's ministry of reconciliation.

On the other hand, the basic weakness of the "gathered congregation" form of the local church is the ease with which the essential unity of members in Christ is distorted to become a unity in class, age, sex, or race. The consistent tendencies in all the local churches in our sample is for such distortion. The emphasis upon fellowship and community all too quickly becomes purely social and finally loses its sense of mission along with the basis for true community. (Ibid., pp. 3f)

The Problems of Heterogeneity

The church is unique among voluntary association in its commitment to serve everyone. While many reject its appeal, the commitment nevertheless has its effect...Generally speaking, when compared with other voluntary organizations, the parish church is distinguished by its heterogeneity rather than its homogeneity.

The fact of this heterogeneity has a profound implication for the task of organizaing the church's program. In effect, it defines that task as developing a program that will appeal to and involve many different kinds of people... This is clearly beyond the capacity of the smaller one-minister parish and would strain the resources of even the most well-endowed larger one. Some compromise is obligatory. In the average church, age and sex are taken to be the two most important characteristics determining members' interests and capabilities, and church programs are organized primarily around age and sex distinctions.

...In most secular organizations, age and sex tend paradoxically to have less influence precisely because these organizations are open to or attract members of one sex only in certain age brackets. As a consequence they are in a better position to consider other factors over and above age and sex in the development of their programs. Because its membership is so heterogeneous, the church is in no position to ignore the importance of age and sex in the construction of its program. But it cannot easily take account of other differences because its resources are so limited, particularly in the one-minister parish. (Charles Y. Glock, "On the Nature of Church Programs")

The Role of the Minister

In a constantly changing society, freedom to break with tradition, to alter old ways of doing things and to innovate new ones, is almost a prerequisite to serving communities which have been disrupted by urban redevelopment or in which shifts in racial, religious, and social composition have occurred. How much freedom parishioners and the church-at-large are inclined to permit their ministers in meeting the challenge of social change is thus of more than academic importance. Judging from several recent studies which touch on this issue, the answer for parishioners is not very much.

...The results of these studies would appear to relate to the observation that the minister, to some degree, stands as a symbol of the divine. In part, this is reflected in the inclination of the parishioner to impose, implicitly at least, more rigid moral standards on the minister than on himself. It is also reflected in the apparent propensity to perceive the minister in traditional terms and to see any sharp break with tradition as a threat to the symbol. Insofar as ministers must break with tradition to meet the exigencies of contemporary life, it appears that the church has a major educational job to do to encourage an atmosphere in which the minister will be allowed greater freedom in defining his role. (Charles Y. Glock, "On the Nature of the Ministerial Role")

The Self-Image of the Congregation

The present study provides support to the thesis that the self-image of the congregation is a primary key to the adaptation process... When the self-image does not correspond to the demands of the situation it becomes dysfunctional. This implies that a change agent interested in promoting adaptation must concern himself not only with program techniques, but also with a careful analysis of the existent self-image and with the means by which dysfunction may be relieved.

...(Out of these studies the following factors can be summarized:) In some cases the self-image is at a subconscious level, having been transmitted by tradition. In others, it appears that the minister and core of lay leadership provide the dynamic for change as they wrestle with the situation. Serious reconsideration of the biblical mission of the church can be of significance. Frequently the situation itself raises issues and helps to break an outdated image. Sometimes outside contacts, including denominational resources, may be of significance. (Everett L. Perry and George Lee, "The Role of the Self-Image in the Life of the Congregation")

The Vertical-Horizontal Conflict

Roland L. Warren in a recent issue of "Human Organization" elaborated on the "vertical-horizontal conflict" that exists within most institutions. In the case of the urban church we note the conflict between denominational loyalty and involvement, and community identification and involvement. It is understandable that in the midst of this tension many of the urban churches revert to an extreme position - generally in the direction of the vertical of denominational dimension. If the church is to be a leaven in the community and to play a key role in the affairs of society, then there must be the horizontal outreach and dimension as well. (Walter Kloetzli, "Some Problems of the Urban Church")

Ecumenical Relations at the Community Level

In a sense this is part of the vertical-horizontal conflict; yet it is much more than this. Local pastors and church leaders must recognize that the total Protestant witness can be made more effective in many ways. Too many assume that union services are the best and only way to cooperate. Conferences and consultations about common problems and opportunities and plans in the community are certainly one very necessary ingredient for more effective Protestant witness in urban America. Then there is the level of coordinated action. Beyond this there is the level of united action. In all local efforts, whether they be by individual congregations, groups of congregations from several denominations, or congregations in conjunction with other community institutions -- Christians are expected to be found faithful to the Gospel and responsible to the Lord of the Church. Unfortunately, some are so "cooperation-prone" that they do not adequately evaluate the purposes, methods, and consequences of some community programs to which they give support. (Kloetzli, op. cit.)

Lay Ignorance of the Bible and Church History

Several of the membership interview forms used in the Effective City Church Study include a series of questions about the Bible and Church History... We believe most church members should have passed this test without difficulty. The questions could have been improved in many ways, but this would not seem to be an excuse for anyone making sufficient errors to fall into the "Poor" category.

...We could find no relationships of practical importance between the combined scores on these information questions and such variables as formal education, age, sex, occupation, amount of church activity, regular attendance at adult church school, or size of church.

The tabled results suggest that some individual churches may have adult church school classes which have raised their whole church's total score... Further, there are a number of small effects (both positive and negative) between college education and some of the questions composing the schedule. One might note that in some of the churches with the lowest scores well over half of the membership had college training.

The membership scores are poor. The deacon and church school teacher scores, considering their offices are poorer yet. Most of the errors are in the content questions, although many persons did not know such simple facts as the whereabouts of the Psalms in the Bible. It seems to us unlikely that a longer and more carefully constructed test will show great improvement in such scores, or that this present population of churches with their predominant number of college trained members, is more ineffective in this area than the average city church. (Barry Keating, "How Much Do City Church Members Know about the Bible and Church History?")

Lay Involvement in the Local Church

...the emerging picture of the functional involvement of laymen in the life of their local congregations appears as follows. Church size and polity are basic to understanding such involvement. When polity encourages more responsibility for the local church from the layman, the number of roles available is greater. The larger the church, the greater is the number of available roles. But functional involvement reaches a maximum point when the church approaches a membership of 500. And lastly, when roles are available, age, sex and class play a basic role as to who fills them. (Charles Estus, "Lay Participation in the Local Church")

Footnotes

1. Christianity and Crisis, June 11, 1962

2. Frances Squire Potter, "What Is an Effective City Church?" pp. 11-18.

3. Ibid., p. 1

4. Ibid., pp. 46-51; cf. p. 2.

5. L.B. Whitman, Glen Trimble, Barry Keating, Anne Lively and Charles Estus, "A Frame of Reference for the Study of the Effective City Church," p. 2.

6. Charles Y. Glock, "On the Expectations of the Church Concerning Parishioner Commitment;" cf. Yoshio Fukuyama, "The Major Dimensions of Church Membership (Part I)."

7. Fukuyama, op. cit.

8. Fukuyama, "The Major Dimensions of Church Membership (Part II)."

9. Glen W. Trimble, "Some Emergent Clues to Church Effectiveness, p. 3; Tom Bennett, "Some Considerations on Helping with Change in the Local Church."

10. Potter, op. cit., pp. 33f., 45f.

11. Charles W. Estus, "Research Contributions to Christian Strategy."

Religion

Paper I

Guidelines for Evaluation of the Local Urban Church

David W. Barry
Executive Director, New York City Mission Society

The work we do here, if we are successful, will replace a document that was prepared and distributed in 1953. It is worth asking ourselves, perhaps, what may be the life expectancy of anything we do and therefore for what period of time in the history of the American Presbyterian urban church we may be presumptuously offering to propose norms; is it another ten years, or less, or more, or a generation, or forever?

I have a very good recollection of the period out of which the earlier document developed, which was the final and perhaps the least productive phase of a whole generation of thought, primarily sociological thought, about the church. George Younger in his analysis describes very well the watershed between that period and this, from the time the study of the effective city church began in 1955 to the summary meeting in 1960. His summary sentence says: "Where the preparatory materials wanted to compare and measure the city church in relation to the surrounding community, those resulting from the study feel it necessary to evaluate the city church in relation to the theological definition of 'church'." He refers to the sociologists who pioneered in the understanding of urban society and to the churchmen who used this understanding to comprehend the phenomena of the urban church. The names he mentions are the men under whom I studied and worked all the earlier part of my professional life: Douglass, Kincheloe, Sanderson. We have moved, as he says, out of the era of thinking about church and community which they so ably represented, which at its best made the church understand how much it was a reflection of the secular society around it and forced it therefore, in all conscience, to try to change its society (or in less ambitious terms, "serve its community") so that church and community might move forward together toward becoming the visible Kingdom of God here on earth -- as Americans generally assumed they were doing -- and at its worst became the kind of market research that looked at communities and said: start a church in this community, because it will flourish as an institution, but avoid this other community, because the market won't support a branch outlet for what you are merchandising unless you subsidize it.

We have moved, or are moving, as Younger says, toward an understanding of church strategy that begins with a theological dimension. We ought to pause a moment, however, to look back a full cycle of the pendulum of American church history and remember that what made Douglass and Kincheloe and Sanderson such pioneers was that their work represented a daring and radical attack against an understanding of the church that was primarily theological rather than sociological or anthropological. Their work met with "shocked and grieving piety" because it dared to be objective about the church. The theology of that day was, we would say today, poor theology and shallow theology; it was theology with a hardening of the arteries; it was a theology that seemed incapable of distinguishing American social and cultural patterns from Biblical truth; but it was theological. Every approach to the understanding of the church has its traps, and the trap in the theological approach is that once you have stated the role and purpose of the church in terms of the will and purpose of God, a criticism of this definition is a criticism of God; and after all you can't set up guidelines to evaluate the effectiveness of God. All you can do is be faithful. The catch of course is that our formulations and verbalizations of the will of God, or the structures in which we embody them, are our human creations and are inevitably imperfect and incomplete, and get more so as God's plans unfold in history. We must allow God's world and God's history to teach us the lessons they are supposed to. It seems to be generally true that a church oriented too exclusively to a specific theological formula is likely to get more and more disoriented from human reality as time passes, and our theology must be kept under as careful review as the sociology of the parish.

I quote here from Robert Dodd: "I think we have to be very careful when we speak of the church as the Body of Christ. The image is useful and suggestive and very important. But it has also led some of us disastrously astray. When used within the community of faith, as the Apostle Paul used it, it is an evocative and helpful figure. But like any figure, it has limits. When used apologetically, it can confuse. The Church cannot be equated with the Lord. That equation is the danger I sense. The Church is not here to be worshipped or enshrined or perpetuated or absolutely loved. The Church is not the same as Jesus Christ. The Church is God's instrument for carrying on the work of Christ. This means that the Church is here to be used up, to be given away, to be broken and hurt as long as there is hurt in the world God loves... It is not here forever; it is here until the kingdom comes. And in this time between the times, God's purpose for the church is to be doing His redemptive work.... It bands together those who have tasted the love of Christ and it enables them to pour that love upon a waiting world."

There we have at least the outside limits of the period we are planning for; all our strategy and tactics about the church have to do not with absolutes and eternals, but with an interim period, the interim between now and the time when God makes some decisive change in the history within which we work -- and I don't mean by that the end of time, but any significant new era in history. Indeed, the changes are happening so rapidly right now that we do not know what they portend or where they are leading us: the revolutions in production and consumption and expectations of consumption; the growth of what has been called the "metropolity" as the basic form of social organization in this country, the emergence of dark-skinned citizens as full partners in the social process along with the denial of this in their continuing confinement in economic and residential ghettoes, the shrinking of the world, the automation of production, the prospective increase from a world of three billion to a world of six billion in four decades, the urbanization of other great sectors of the world -- all these and many other changes are among the factors that limit and condition anything we might say about the role of the church here and now, and set limits on our understanding not only of the church, but of the will of God, until we see better how man's life on this planet is going to unfold.

I think, however, we can be even more precise about the period of time for which we are proposing standards and guidelines, and we come back again to the rather fruitless discussion of the "successful" church in which I was engaged some months ago with George Younger and others. I am unreconstructed enough to believe still that when we are talking about evaluating the work of the church, the impact of the church upon the human world around it is one of the major factors to be taken into consideration, along with its self-judgment as to whether it is faithful to God's will and purpose for the church in its purer or more theological definition. What I have tried awkwardly to say in many ways I find has been said much better by Dietrich Bonhoeffer, speaking in a far different context from the American urban church. Here is his statement about success.

"OF SUCCESS"

Though success can never justify an evil deed or the use of questionable means, it is not an ethically neutral thing. All the same it remains true that historical success creates the only basis for the continuance of life, and it is still a moot point whether it is ethically more responsible to behave like Don Quixote and enter the lists against a new age, or to admit one's defeat, accept the new age and agree to serve it. In the last resort success makes history, and the Disposer of history is always bringing good out of evil over the heads of the history-makers. To ignore the ethical significance of success is to betray a superficial acquaintance with history and a defective sense of responsibility. So it is all to the good that we have been forced for once to grapple seriously with this problem of the ethics of success. All the time goodness is successful we can afford the luxury of regarding success as having no ethical significance. But the problem arises when success is achieved by evil means. It is no good then behaving as an arm-chair critic and disputing the issue, for that is to refuse to face the facts. Nor is opportunism any help, for that is to capitulate before success. We must be determined not to be outraged critics or mere opportunists. We must take our full share of responsibility for the moulding of history, whether it be as victors or vanquished. It is only by refusing to allow any event to deprive us of our responsibility for history, because we know that is a responsibility laid upon us by God, that we shall achieve a relation to the events of history far more fruitful than criticism or opportunism. To talk about going down fighting like heroes in face of certain defeat is not really heroic at all, but a failure to face up to the future. The ultimate question the man of responsibility asks is not, How can I extricate myself heroically from the affair? but, How is the coming generation to live? It is only in this way that fruitful solutions can arise, even if for the time being they are humiliating. In short it is easier by far to act on abstract principle than from concrete responsibility. The rising generation will always instinctively discern which of the two we are acting upon. For it is their future which is at stake.

From Dietrich Bonhoeffer's Prisoner For God,
The MacMillan Co., 1954, pp. 17-18.

If I have a bias in evaluating the church, as I am sure I do, this is a major part of it: that I want to see the church relevant to the times in which we live and the humanity within which it is set, in terms of their real needs and problems; I want it never to deny its call to be related to the total human situation around it; I want to see this relevancy expressed in such a way that no one in our society can evade confrontation with the questions that the gospel asks; and most particularly I am concerned about the continuance of this confrontation in our history, by preparing the coming generation both to ask and to answer the questions that are raised by the gospel of Jesus Christ for this time in history. To answer the question with which I started, this means that the time span for which we develop guidelines and standards must be at least a generation; whether or not what we do is revised ten years from now, our image of the church must certainly include a picture of the world our own children will live in, as well as we can discern its outlines, and the church must be preparing its young to live as Christians in that world, not just the world their parents know. And thus our guidelines must provide not only for a continuous review of our understanding of the will of God, that is, our theology; and of the facts of the human situation in which we live and work, that is, our sociology; they must provide also for some kind of projection into the future of what the human situation is likely to be, and what, to the best of our limited comprehension, are likely to be the tasks God will call upon our children to perform, and therefore how they should be prepared. For example, we will double our urban population and halve our working day in 40 years -- what does this mean in terms of how urban man prepares to use his leisure? Or more immediately, what does the church say to a condition where poverty no longer means drudgery, but no work at all -- only a relief check?

One of the best statements I have seen of the tension and interaction between our theological understanding and our sociological situation (I am using the term "sociology" here, incidentally, as shorthand for all the disciplines that may throw insight on the human situation: socioloby, psychology, city planning etc.) is the Appendix written by Dr. Elwyn A. Smith in the recent report on "Relations between Church and State" presented to the 174th General Assembly. Speaking of the Christian ethic, for which in this conference we can substitute the term Christian strategy, he says among other things: "The ethic which gives point and direction to the witness of the church to its risen Lord is contextual in that it is meaningful to man only in terms of the concrete realities of his own time... The Christian ethic can never be understood in terms of universal principles to be applied in all situations and under all circumstances (and what does that say to guidelines and standards?). The problem implicit in the definitive task of the church is the problem of living constructively 'in the gap between the will of God, theologically understood, and the concrete human situation, pragmatically understood.' (P. Lehmann). The specifically Christian character of the activity of the new men in Christ is evident only when and where theological and pragmatic insights are perfectly blended." And thus we are cautioned against trying to produce theoretical models or norms of church behavior and function and distributing such models in a guidebook to Presbytery Strategy Committees with instructions that such-and-such a community ought to have such-and-such a type of church, for this would be form without substance; the true church must arise within the tension between our theological understanding and the reality of a particular community.

Dr. Smith makes another closely related point about the definitive task of the church. He quotes from Acts 1:6-8:

> So when they had come together, they asked him, "Lord, will you at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?" He said to them, "It is not for you to know times or seasons which the Father has fixed by his own authority. But you shall receive power when the Holy Spirit has come upon you; and you shall be my witnesses in Jerusalem and in all Judea and Samaria and to the end of the earth."

And he goes on to comment: "The question which the apostles ask of their risen Lord is their own immediate version of the ultimate question: Will the purpose of God for his people Israel be finally and irrevocably triumphant here and now? The response of Christ is decisive and emphatic. The question must be rejected as it stands. Even the new men in Christ may not seek that security which supposedly would come from knowing God's secrets. The unpredictability which is the essence of the future is transparent only to the Father. The new men in Christ have only the certainty of the knowledge of their risen Lord. This they do have in the midst of their "here and now" and this will suffice. Their task is (to witness)... to call the world's attention to what God has done and is doing in Jesus Christ... Thus the apostles were delivered -- out of their yearning after a knowledge they could not have, and into a mission which could only unfold in terms of Jerusalem, Judea and Samaria, the concrete realities of their own time."

So this too is a part of the bafflement to those who would prepare guidelines for urban churches; not only is there no neat set of typologies of churches we can offer as models for different types of urban communities, but the nature of the mission itself is something withheld from us until we have come to grips with a concrete human situation, until we are actually at work in Jerusalem and Judea and Samaria, and the success or effectiveness of any given ministry is something we cannot predict; we can only discover it as God discloses it in the unfolding of the particular ministry.

Now what does all this mean to the job this conference has set for itself; the development of guidelines for evaluating the church within urban society? It gives us, I think, the central focus of our task, which is not analysis or description, which have been the preoccupation of most manuals of church self-study, but evaluation. The question we want to help churches answer for themselves is not "What are urban churches like?" or "What are urban church members like?" or "What is urban society like?" (although all these are relevant) but this:

"Is the local church in urban society helping to fulfill the purposes of God for the particular human community in which it is set?" Is it living constructively in the gap between God's will and the concrete human situation? And the answer to this question does not derive from typologies of churches or church members or communities, useful as these may sometimes be in giving insights; the answer derives rather from having insights about God's will, knowing a particular community, and knowing the church in that community. If I may offer a parallel, our purpose here is not the study of anatomy, which is always the researcher's bias; our purpose is rather more in the nature of a medical check-up, which assumes a knowledge of anatomy and also makes assumptions about the nature of good health; but the medical check-up is not aimed except very incidentally at producing new knowledge about anatomy; rather it is measuring the living organism against an idea of what God intended that organism to be at its best, and at isolating reasons why that organism may not be fulfilling its physical potential, and then offering the best available therapeutical insights to get it back on the path of healthful development.

I have suggested that the three basic elements in evaluation are a knowledge of God's will -- that is, a theological position -- a knowledge of the particular human situation, and a knowledge of the particular church. With which of these do we start?

I am not sure which one comes first, but I have a growing conviction that in the evaluative process the study of the particular church should come last. Most of the cobwebs we have in our minds about the urban church seem to derive from the fact that we look at urban society through the eyes of the institution of the church; our objectivity is severely limited by the tendency for our people, our social group, our race, our class, our constituency to dominate the urban scene as we see it out of all proportion to their real significance, or the conditioning imposed by looking at our institutions first, so that we see everything else in terms of the welfare of these institutions. In much of our evaluative work, the church is unconsciously set up as an end rather than as an instrument, much as we may deny it in holy tones; if we begin by studying the instrument, we almost inevitably come out with a strategy designed to do the kind of job the instrument is adapted for in its present structure, with minor modifications to make it more efficient, rather than defining the job to be done and then examining the adequacy of the instrument. I would suggest, then, that we start either with an attempt to define the will of God for the particular human community or with an analysis of the community itself.

I am on less certain ground here, but I am inclined to think that of these two the study of the community, in our evaluative process, should probably precede our theological statements about the will of God for the community. Logically, I suppose, our theologizing comes first, but we are seldom very logical animals, and it seems to me that too often our theological statements, when we are talking about man in the contemporary urban world, have already a set of built-in assumptions about what society is like. So while I would not argue too hard for the particular sequence I am suggesting, I think that in the evaluation of the urban church we ought to begin first with a study of the community; that is, an attempt to understand the particular human situation within which God wills the church to be his instrument to carry on the work of the living Lord and within which, of course, God is at work in many other ways as well.

Now -- if we accept this procedure, what boundaries do we set for our study? What is the community we examine to begin to understand the specific tasks God has set for his church, against which we are to evaluate its work? Here I would propose to you a concept that seems to be slowly emerging as churches begin to talk seriously about urban strategy: the basic unit of study for urban church strategy seems to be more and more the metropolitan area, the "metropolity" as John Osman calls it. This is not an arbitrary choice; I am not ignoring the importance of the neighborhood or any other social unit, but more and more the evidence seems to pile up that the definitive and determining unit in American urban culture is and is going to be the metropolitan area; the intricately interrelated combinations of central city, suburbs, and various other satellite areas that are coming to be the foci of American culture and, if our demographers are right, are going to be the basic units of all urbanized societies. It is this social unit that troubles the planners and the civic thinkers, the mayors and governors and presidents, and it is this social unit that challenges those who seek the redemption of American society and the reconciliation of men to each other and to God. Nearly two years ago John Osman made a very persuasive case in the City Church for the church to respond to the emerging challenge of the metropolis as the social unit to which a spiritual strategy must be directed: I quote a paragraph or two from his article:

> The metropolitan region is not understood, because we have been unable to see it as a complete civic body with a mind and spirit. People are apt to see it as a monster dying of its oversize as the dinosaurs died, when the contrary is true. The metropolity ushers in urban centuries; it does not mark the end of an era. The metropolitan region is in motion toward completion as the next urban unit of a new and enlarged civic system for the United States... It is more than an economic system, more than a political concept, and it cannot be held together by the most elaborate of transportation systems. Metropolity is more than just a number of people concentrated in one place. It is more than a central city and its suburbs, a central library and bookmobiles, a central police station and precincts, a metropolitan cathedral and parish churches. Metropolity is not a synthesis of villages nor of towns nor even of cities. Metropolity is the next species of the genus city... The failure to create this new community by institutional enlargement will leave American institutions deformed and undeveloped since it is the urban context in which the next stages of development in law, in government, in university and in the church must take place. One day the civic void will be filled with virtuous institutions and order and harmony will prevail in the city. On that day a man can realize his metropolitan citizenship and at that moment the metropolity will have found its vocation... Learning to fashion the institutions and to use the modern metropolity is a task for the church above all other institutions that compose it, for there cannot be a metropolity until the metropolitan region is unified and regenerated by the spirit of God, and this is the mission of the church.

You can accept that statement or not as the emerging context of urban churchmanship; it is, of course, the statement of one who thinks in terms of broad social strategies rather than of this particular man and his brother. But whether we accept it or not, we cannot ignore the truth that every urban church study shouts at us, that not only no man, but no parish is an island unto itself; that we live in a web of human interrelationships that bind the suburb and the slum together in a common destiny, and that most of these interrelationships occur within a metropolitan context. And thus, although we cannot postpone the evaluation of every parish until we have some concept of the Christian strategy for a metropolitan area, there is a very real sense in which we cannot completely define the role and purpose of any given parish church until we have a theory about the will of God for the metropolitan community of which it is a part. This is the weakness of almost every urban parish study I have even seen, that it pretends to a completeness that it does not have and cannot have except in a metropolitan context. The urban parish is mobile; where do the people come from and where do they go and what do they do and who ministers to them before and after and outside the parish limits? What happens to the father who is outside the parish all his working hours? Who determines whether the schools will fulfill a child's God-given potential, and who is my brother besides the human beings who live in my block? Where does the metropolis say yes to the will of God, and where does it say no, and who is responsible, and who should be? In today's city no single church can answer this by itself; we are too interrelated, and our strategies must somehow take account of this fact - not just through Presbytery committees, but in the evaluation of the life of every urban parish.

In my experience, it is the much-maligned successful church of the suburbs that seems most likely to become aware of this and to rebel against the parochialism of our strategy in a metropolitan situation. It is the sensitive suburban church member who is beginning to murmur against a churchmanship that insulates him against the urgency of the city's need in every way except through his pocketbook. More and more I find suburban churchmen saying: "What can we do besides give money to missions -- how can we give of ourselves?" In a mood of excessive bluntness I recently said to a suburban minister in answer to this question: "There are only two things you can give me that are meaningful: money and open-occupancy housing" -- that also is too simple an answer; we cannot answer the question of the purpose of a parish church in today's metropolis unless and until we have some sense of its relation to a metropolitan strategy for fulfilling the will of God for the particular metropolis in which we are called to serve.

I am suggesting, then, that the evaluation of an urban parish must be done against a backdrop of a metropolitan strategy for the church that I suppose in our polity must be provided by a Presbytery, following guidelines set by our confession of faith, by our national church in its pronouncements and policy statements, and presumably also by the ecumenical church in its world and national and local manifestations. We have not begun really to develop guidelines of this sort. What does God want for the people of a metropolitan area? He wants, presumably, for every person here to have the chance to fulfill a destiny that is uniquely his is God's plan. He wants every child to be given the opportunity to grow in body and mind and spirit to the maximum of his God-given potential -- that means good schools and vocational opportunities and excellent guidance, among other things. He wants every man to know of His mighty acts, and that means churches that witness to what God has done and is doing, and carry their witness to every soul in this region and teach the story of His works to each new generation. He wants men to learn to live together as brothers, ignoring the superficial differences of race and class. He wants no man to exploit another or corrupt another or stand in the way of another's fulfillment. He wants this total urban society to be dedicated to the growth and fulfillment of the individual and not his stunting in mechanical patterns of conformity. He wants this city to civilize man, not to dehumanize him; he wants this elaborate social creation to deepen man's understanding, to broaden and sensitize his sympathies, to extend his capacities, to enlarge his appreciation and horizons -- all these are surely part of God's design in making the city so central to his contemporary human creation. Howard Moody writing in a recent issue of Christianity and Crisis suggests that the city is sacramental, that is, "the outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual meaning," and goes on to quote Lewis Mumford in his book The City in History.

> We must restore to the city the maternal, life-nurturing functions, the autonomous activities, the symbiotic associations that have long been neglected or suppressed. For the city should be an organ of love; and the best economy of cities is the care and culture of men.

Until, then, we have begun to understand the will of God for the city in this way, and have made it as explicit as possible for a particular metropolis in a particular time, I find it hard to see how our evaluative processes can go much deeper than they traditionally have, which is, briefly, to assess the chances for institutional survival of a particular church given a particular social setting. No unit of the church so far as I know, has done the job of specifying what it believes to be God's purpose and will for an urban community, though the ingredients are all there in sermons, in articles, in pronouncements, in acts of conscience and concern. The church needs to pull its scattered insights together, lay and clerical, and do a disciplined job of stating what a city ought to be.

I started to give you a suggested sequence for study and already I have confused it; what I meant to say was that we start by understanding the metropolitan situation of which we are a part and then bring it under the judgmental lens of theological insight. Inevitably, I suppose, the processes go on simultaneously, for as George Younger says, we always are starting in the middle; we do not see a slum without judging it, and we have opinions about urban sprawl and urban redevelopment and schools that precondition what we see and what we say about it. But what I am pleading for is that we finally break out of the pattern of church analysis that assumes the parish, geographically defined, is the basic social unit against which we appraise the church and its vocation; we no longer live in villages, and it is possible that most working urbanites spend most of their working hours far away from the parish and its concerns, and in many urban parishes most of the important decisions that determine what life is like are made far outside the parish boundaries often by men from other churches whose ministers are giving them no more relevant guidance in making such decisions than to tell them to be honest in their work and nice to their fellow-workers and to come to church and give generously to the budget. And if our church membership rolls seem to be getting bigger and bigger, while the influence of the church seems to be getting less and less, this paradox is in no small part due to a strategy that defines the church primarily in relationship to the social units where urban man sleeps and putters and socializes, where urban woman keeps house and raises children, and where the urban child - rich or poor - is raised in artificial isolation from most of the working world. It is no wonder that the more creative young ministers head for the inner city, for there at least the enemy is visible right there in the parish and the battle is real. Our great problem is how to bring every church into the battle for the souls of men and the soul of the city, and here nothing less than a metropolitan Christian strategy can suffice, one that makes every church an active and conscious participant in an organized effort to make real the promises that we sound in our sermons and prayers and professions of faith.

Once we have begun to shape our thinking in this way, then we can really begin to evaluate the local church in urban society. For then we can see the local church not as a self-sufficient entity, but a unit of the greater body of Christ that has certain assignments. I have always heard the exegesis of the 12th Chapter of 1st Corinithians - the one body with its many members - in terms of the differentiated gifts of individuals blending into one local church. But in metropolis, we may need to read it also as the differentiated functions of local churches blending into a metropolitan church that is adequate to metropolitan society.

Now let me reformulate what I have been saying, and state it in more orderly fashion so it can be dealt with in discussion. I am proposing that if we are going to try to set up guidelines for the evaluation of the local church, it can only be done against a framework of analysis that has these dimensions:-

First, we need a theology of urban society - that is, a clear theory as to what God's intention is for these great metropolitan complexes that are dominating the life of our nation. What are they for? To civilize man? For the care and culture of mankind as Mumford says? To be gateways to human dignity as Dan Dodson says they have been since 1910? The church needs to make some forthright assertions as to what cities are for, and not passively allow the function of cities to be stated primarily in economic terms, as is now the case.

Second, we need specific statements as to the "theology" of particular metropolitan areas -- more precisely, the role God expects a particular metropolis to play in his divine plan, as well as we can understand it, and of what blocks His will... We can make generalizations about cities, but the particularities may be even more important. Cleveland and Detroit and Chicago have their likenesses, but they also have their differences. St. Louis, like Kansas City and Cincinnati and Washington, have some special and existential reason for being in God's eyes that is related to the confrontation of the culture of the North with that of the South. Washington has obviously a unique purpose in God's eyes because of its responsibility in discovering how men govern themselves and are stewards of a nation's physical and human resources in the emerging new world. Las Vegas and Miami Beach have something special to say to us; so do Albany, New York and Springfield, Illinois. No one who has ever visited Seattle, Portland, San Francisco and Los Angeles could escape the obvious fact that God's purposes for these four West Coast metropolitan magnets are clearly different and unique.

It is possible that the best contribution the urban churches of America could make right now is to try to state as precisely as possible what they understand God's purposes to be for the urban centers in which they minister. No one is doing this now except the Chambers of Commerce and the city public relations officer, a few poets, and a few novelists. I would love to have time to gather some of New York City's more perceptive thinkers and try to write the theology of New York -- what is this tremendous enterprise all about? God is trying to show us that people of all nations can live together not only in mutual respect but mutual enrichment. He wants us to discover that by appropriate division of labor training and specialization, the individual's talents and powers can be released for undreamed-of accomplishments; that this metropolitan structure can produce a wonderful variety and diversity. He is helping us discover that the imaginative use of finance can be a tremendous boon to humanity. He is telling us things about the flowering of the human spirit in art and literature and culture. He is providing a theatre here for all the governments of the planet to work together for mankind's release from all kinds of bondage. All these and much more are obviously part of God's plan for this city. And cutting darkly across His plan are all the evil and obstinate forces that resist Him, and these too are lessons the city teaches, and must be spelled out concretely for the New Yorker, as they must be for every other urbanite. Most of our American cities right now are obviously being asked by God to be gateways to dignity and fulfillment for the American Negro. What blocks His purpose here? This is the kind of statement I would like to see our urban churchmen discipline themselves to make, after the echoes of the Sunday sermon have died away.

Then there are two other parts to this framework which I want to discuss this afternoon.

Third, we need a statement of God's purpose for the particular church, set in the context of the metropolitan community, and Fourth, we need a statement of God's purpose for the particular individual who has recognized the claim of Jesus Christ upon him and has responded by becoming part of the church.

These four dimensions may not be all -- obviously they are not. But they are the crucial four for the task we have here. They do not necessarily proceed from the general to the particular. All four examinations go on simultaneously. Nor do they proceed from the abstract theology to the concrete situation. Again I remind you -- the crucial process for the Christian is to do his analysis in the tensions of the gap between God's will and human reality.

"Guidelines for the Evaluation of the Local Urban Church"

David W. Barry,
Executive Director, New York City Mission Society

Before proceeding, I want to say something about the matter of how we approach the analysis of problems, and specifically about what kind of problem the urban church is. I am grateful to Jane Jacobs for the provocative insights in her book, and one thing in it I especially appreciated was her calling attention to Dr. Warren Weaver's essay on "Science and Complexity" in the 1958 Annual Report of the Rockefeller Foundation. Dr. Weaver examined the evolution of the analytical tools of science and suggested they have moved through three stages:

(1) The ability to deal with problems of simplicity, two-variable problems, such as the relation between volume and pressure in a confined gas, which was the foundation of theoretical and experimental science up to about 1900.

(2) The ability to deal with problems of disorganized complexity, such as the prediction of facilities needed by a telephone exchange, or insurance rates, or the behavior of atomic particles, or population studies -- for all of which the development of statistical theory was crucial.

(3) The ability to deal with problems of organized complexity, as represented in the life sciences, where the problem was not to define a statistical trend but to understand a sizable number of factors integrated in an organic whole, varying simultaneously and in subtly interconnected ways.

Mrs. Jacobs' point here, with which I agree, was that the city is a problem in organized complexity, and the most serious mistakes we have made in city planning derive from a tendency to deal with it as a problem in disorganized complexity, and, for example, provide large housing projects for statistically abstracted families whose subtle and interrelated needs, including neighborhood needs other than shelter, we have not taken the trouble to understand.

I would suggest, however, that our understanding of the urban church has followed a parallel line of development. Through the 19th century and the first part of the 20th we understood the behavior of the church as a matter of simple stimulus and response: a man was exposed to the gospel, was converted, and changed into a new person, and church and society alike were a simple sum of converted and unconverted individuals. When this analysis proved too simple, particularly in the pluralistic city, we borrowed the statistical tools of the sociologist and developed our theories of the urban church as a problem in "disorganized complexity" -- progressively refined statistical groupings whose behavior we could hopefully predict, at least as groups, as we added in factors of nationality, race, class, income, occupation, education, age, marital status, and so on -- even, most recently, factors derived from psychological analysis and classification.

But in the understanding of the church, too, this approach has its limits, which are certainly reached when policy-makers begin thinking of people as statistical units and churches as types, and the tools of analysis begin to determine rather than illuminate church strategy. We are ready for a new forward step in urban church analysis which begins to examine the subtle and complex ways in which the individual relates to the local church, the church to the larger church, and the whole to family, neighborhood, metropolis and society -- and how these relationships can be the creative and redemptive ones God seems to have intended.

Thus the four "levels" of analysis I have proposed -- urbanism, the particular metropolis, the particular church, and the individual believer -- must be approached as part of a complexity of relationships we do not yet fully understand, and yet must learn how to deal with at all levels simultaneously, respecting the autonomy God has given to each level and the responsibility of each to the other. I do not pretend to have the appropriate tools of analysis or evaluation, nor can I even direct you to a textbook where they may be found, but I do believe that the minds exist within the church that can begin to look at our mission in its totality and give us the insights we need to equip us to be God's conscious instruments in today's world.

Let me turn then to the third and most familiar subject for analysis and evaluation, the local church. I have suggested that the local church must be evaluated against a definition of its particular assignments within a total metropolitan "theology," and I will try to illustrate what I mean by this. The local church uniquely has certain functions to perform that are defined geographically in terms of a particular parish that is understood to come under its care. Some of these functions are fairly universally understood and accepted in urban church strategy, as for example:

-- To maintain centers for the public worship of God, the preaching of the Word, and the administration of the sacraments, distributed so as to be accessible to all families in the metropolitan area.

-- To maintain centers for the instruction of children in the faith, also accessible to all of the homes of the metropolis, preferably within walking distance.

-- The local church, distributed widely in all neighborhoods, seems to be a rational way to make and maintain contact and communication with the people of a metropolitan area; it is the channel through which the Church can most readily become involved with all the people, because everyone sleeps somewhere.

-- Also, the local church seems to be a sensible medium for the Church to deal with those special needs centering around family and home, and with illness and other similar personal and family needs.

-- The local church, again, is the agency of the larger Church that can most readily give sacramental meaning to the major events of life: birth, marriage and death.

The foregoing are not to be understood as a complete list of functions, but rather to illustrate how the special relationship of a local church to a geographic community gives it some obvious functions within a metropolitan Christian strategy. There are other functions related to geography that seem less universally understood or accepted:

-- Public education is in general administered geographically, especially in the lower grades, so it would seem this should be a special concern of the local church.

-- Political life is also structured geographically, so that if the church is to have an effective voice in metropolitan politics, the local church would seem to have a special responsibility.

-- Neighborhood and community planning increasingly is understood to need an effective voice from the community itself, such as the local church at its best can provide, to help interpret a community and build within it a sense of identity, a common social unit to which people can feel they belong -- although sometimes the church is a divisive rather than a reconciling force among neighbors.

-- The ecumenical thrust of the church should certainly be expressed at the neighborhood level rather than being limited so much to national and world gatherings of church leaders.

Then there are other functions which we have tended to give to the local church, but for which it is an inadequate vehicle. These, I believe, we must re-examine and to some extent re-assign:

-- Stewardship, for example. Looking at this in terms of money alone, for a moment, it seems fairly evident that on the basis of our experience, using the local church as a collection agency for financing the Christian enterprise is not a sufficient answer to our need. It simply does not produce enough money, a fact we implicitly recognize every time we begin to get serious about our capital needs or about some of the problems of the social order which the church feels called on to face up to directly. In our more serious efforts we set up special gifts committees, special boards, run benefits, undertake foundation appeals, or follow the example of the many non-church groups who orient their fund-raising methods to the amount that is needed to do the job rather than adjusting their program to the funds that come in. And the funds we do produce through our local churches are obviously spent without relation to need -- almost scandalously so, when church parking lots or pew cushions get priority over urgent need the church confronts at other points in urban society. And if we consider stewardship in terms of time and talent rather than money, I suspect our record is even worse when we count on the local church to be the agency that locates each layman in the appropriate place in the metropolitan Christian enterprise for God to make best use of his abilities. It is quite possible that the efforts of the local church to "put the layman to work" do more to confuse and fragment the work of the church in the metropolis than to make it effective.

-- Evangelism is another function that probably cannot be left so largely to the local church in urban society as has been the custom. Why is it that a New Life program deteriorates into a campaign for membership and attendance? Because the whole structure of the local parish as the basic unit of Christian strategy calls out for this; attendance and participation are the obvious and available means whereby a man may express his new life when the local church is the only visible expression of the church he has. How many of our clergy are really prepared to assist a man to think through the implications of his "new life" in the complexities of his urban profession or occupation? I have heard the comment from more than one layman that his preacher answers questions he doesn't ask and resolves problems he doesn't have. In our specialized urban life we need to think through the proper structure of the church to deal with occupational and professional and industry groups and the many other forms of human association that are not based in the neighborhood.

-- Related to this is the growing realization that the instruction of adults in the Christian faith cannot be left in its entirety to the local church. To a considerable extent city man operates through interest groupings rather than neighborhood groups, and it is one of the city's great assets that it can so readily draw out of its heterogeneity specialized groups for different interests and different levels of understanding for exploration in depth that is not possible in less specialized groupings. The development of such activities as lay institutes is obviously a need for adults seeking answers in urban life.

-- Fellowship, the visible community of faith, the "convocatio," is supposed to be one of the primary functions of the local church. And yet, in the typical urban neighborhood, this key role of the church to proclaim the brotherhood of all men under God is denied rather than affirmed. The key fact in the Christian community is that Christ calls all men regardless of social place and origin. But the city neighborhoods which define the parish tend to deny our common humanity by structuring urban society by race and class and income, making a mockery of the pious statement our national churches like to proclaim these days, that the church is called to serve everyone in its community regardless of race or class. Here some noble experimentation is needed that can break out of the neighborhood parish and find the ways for the Christian to be related not just to his neighbor, but to his brother.

Then there are an increasing number of other functions the church must perform in the city, some localized and some not, that cannot be defined in terms of the local church. There are some familiar ones, such as chaplaincies to hospitals and prisons and ministries to university students and homeless men. There are relationships to be developed to the mass media, and to governmental and economic and planning structures. What structures does the church lack to deal with the varieties of forms of communal life that the city presents? The complicated and fluid thing that is the city almost daily presents some new kind of challenge to the church that the local church by itself is not equipped or organized to answer.

Having said all this, I must also say that I have a strong prejudice in favor of the battered old institution known as the local church, and conversely a prejudice against too many specialized ministries or noble new experiments intended to replace the conventional church. With all its inadequacies, the conventional church has a truly remarkable capacity both for survival and for renewal, and it is still the only reliable human anchor the gospel seems to have in this stormy urban world. My bias generally is to hang as many of our specialized assignments as possible on the local church, to give it new and diversified responsibilities, perhaps more division of labor, certainly much more skill at referral, rather than to seek new forms for the work of Christ to be clothed in.

Finally, may I speak briefly to the "theology" of the individual in the framework I have been outlining; that is, the role the individual must play in trying to fulfill the purposes of God for the metropolitan community of which he is a part. I would remind you again that we could have started at this end and asked the question: What are people for in God's plan? -- for by God's grace the individual is supremely important, and is not just a cog in some great social machine. A few generations ago, in the good old "inner-directed" days, Protestants in particular had a fairly good sense of individual significance and purpose. This needs somehow to be rebuilt for this urban age, for urban man seems more to think not only of others, but even of himself, as a statistical unit directed by outside pressures. The urban church, which has its own methods of turning persons into per capitas, can readily become only another of the urban institutions that depersonalize the person by making him another of the interchangeable, mass-produced parts of the urban machine.

The Christian faith, with the support of the democratic ethic at its best, insists that each person is created as a unique entity with a unique purpose and destiny in God's plan, and that in ultimate terms, the fulfillment of the individual in the sense is not subsidiary or secondary to the fulfillment of the destiny of a church, a metropolis or a society. In a mass society, of course, it would be easier if individuals did fall into neat and mass-produced categories, it would be easier for the political leader, the industrialist, the salesman, the TV producer, the educator, the union leader, the city planner, even the clergyman and church planner.

Thus the temptation to slide over the uniqueness of the individual and concentrate on the likenesses of groups: mothers, lawyers, commuters, Presbyterians, Catholics, unemployed, and so on.

We have our likenesses, of course, and they are certainly relevant to planning and give insights about urban man in his large numbers. They have provoked the social psychologist to examine the common needs of urban humanity, as in this listing by Dan Dodson of the needs of urban man to which the church should be addressing itself:

--The need for identity, for personal identification that lifts man out of the anonymity of urban life.

--The need for perimeters around one's self, so that his multiple roles as father, worker, citizen, club member, and so on integrate urban man rather than dividing him into unconnected selves.

--The need for perspective, so that behind the obvious achievements of man in the city, urban man can see the more fundamental work of God.

--The need for historical continuity in personality, as urban man moves from place to place in the metropolis and cuts himself off not only from neighborhoods, but from family and cultural origins.

--The need for respect for the integrity of selfhood, in a situation where all urban organizations, including the church, are trying to use people to their organizational ends.

--The need for creative expression as growth in the city where everything becomes standardized.

--The need for acceptance, especially for children in those neighborhoods where every adult rejects them, including sometimes their parents.

--The need for intimacy, where urban life tends to destroy primary group relationships.

--The need for belonging, for a deep and identifiable relationship to a group (community, family, church, fellowship, etc.) of which one is a permanent member regardless of character, behavior, contribution, or any other criterion.

--The need for community, both psychological and sociological.

We are still dominated by a philosopy which says these needs are met by "services" or "programs." But there is a slowly emerging awareness of the fact that life does not become meaningful for the individual through simply adding up activities designed to "meet needs." Many an American Negro today, for example, is discovering the meaning of his individual life not by joining a club at a church or neighborhood house, but by his personal involvement in and deep commitment to the current struggle for full rights and opportunity for all Americans. In more and more troubled urban communities, individuals are finding fulfillment not by getting into adult education classes or interest groups, but by involvement in community organization or political reform groups in which citizens are beginning to take matters into their own hands and trying to determine their own destinies.

All these are lessons for the urban church. If it is serious about its own doctrines, the "programs" of the church are secondary to the fundamental task of helping the individual to discover what God calls on him to do, to be and become, whether in the home, or on the block, or in the job, or in political action, or in direct help to his neighbor. If a person accepts Jesus Christ, then his individual life should begin to make sense in relation to what Christ said he came to do in the world. For we are coming to see that people need "assignments" in the strategies of redemption (if we may use so presumptuous a term) not only because there are jobs to be done, but also because God has made us unfulfilled until our personal purposes fit into his divine purpose. And thus the church must learn how to be a competent placement agency, a referral agency, that puts each man and each woman in the job he can do best within the whole work of the metropolitan church.

√MA-fyi Religion
JT√

Challenge to Justice
and Love

NATIONAL CONFERENCE ON RELIGION AND RACE

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, THE REV. GALEN R. WEAVER
150 Fifth Avenue
New York 11, New York
(212) ALgonquin 5-7575-6

FIELD SECRETARY, MR. MATHEW AHMANN
21 West Superior Street
Chicago 10, Illinois
(312) MOhawk 4-8222

Vol. 1 No. 4 Summer Edition

J. Irwin Miller
Chairman, Continuation Committee

Dr. Benjamin E. Mays
First Vice-Chairman

Rabbi Irving M. Blank
Chairman, Steering Committee

Rev. Arthur E. Walmsley
Chairman, Local Communities Follow-Up Committee

NEWSLETTER

The Chicago Conference won its spurs during a recent racial outburst on Chicago's south side following the move-in of a Negro family in a previously all-white neighborhood. CCRR staff moved into the Englewood area and organized the local clergy into an emergency group. Protestant and Catholic clergy, both Negro and white, toured the troubled area and appealed to their parishioners to uphold law and order. During the day they made personal visits, and teams were organized for telephone campaigns appealing to the whites. Strong sermons were delivered from the pulpits on the first Sunday following the outbreak.

The extremely dangerous situation finally subsided, and the police department gave a major share of the credit to the efforts of the clergy. Plans are now underway to organize the clergy in other areas of high tension.

CCRR also authorized its executive committee to use its discretion to engage in peaceful demonstrations, to support the President's civil rights legislative program, and to participate in the march on Washington. DR. DONALD E. ZIMMERMAN, general presbyter of the Presbytery of Chicago, is heading a committee which will consider means to promote non-discrimination policies in church and synagogue building and service contracts, fair employment policies in all religious and related institutions, and a policy of depositing and investing church and synagogue funds in financial institutions with ethical and moral policies on race.

* * *

The United Church of Christ, at its recent meeting of the Fourth General Synod in Denver, voted to cut off funds to churches and institutions which still maintain segregation by July, 1964. The REV. DR. BEN M. HERBSTER, synod president, submitted the resolution.

* * *

√ Thirty one clergymen, including several Catholic, Episcopal and Methodist bishops, have offered to mediate the racial conflict which has erupted in Savannah over the issue of integrating hotels, motels, restaurants and theaters.

* * *

CONVENERS:
Department of Racial and Cultural Relations, National Council of Churches
Social Action Commission, Synagogue Council of America
Social Action Department, National Catholic Welfare Conference

339

A state-wide council on religion and race has been formed in Oklahoma City following the White House visit. A statement was issued by Protestant, Catholic and Jewish clergy condemning racial discrimination.

* * *

A conference on religion and race was formed in Boston under the chairmanship of the RT. REV. JOHN M. BURGESS, suffragan bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Boston.

* * *

Many local Conferences on Religion and Race are beginning to organize action project committees rather than initiating activity by staging large public conferences. Committees are concerned with racial problems internal to the life of the religious communities, religious institutional problems; employment; housing; the use of the contract and purchasing power of the religious groups; establishing person-to-person communication via home visits, etc.

National Conference on Religion and Race staff and Follow Up Committee urges prompt organization of project committees concerned with major areas of racial discrimination and segregation. Also urged are involvement of top laymen with religious leaders, on the board of local conference, as well as on the various committees. The National Conference office will shortly issue a second memorandum on the organization of local interreligious units, based on experience since January in various parts of the country.

* * *

Members of Commission III of NCRR have decided to develop a detailed program on how to open suburbs as peacefully as possible to families of minority groups. It will be a two point program consisting of:

1. How to get all the church and synagogue groups in a suburb to enter into the program in order to develop effective action.

2. Setting up a well developed working kit of materials which would cover procedure methods.

* * *

THE REV. EUGENE CARSON BLAKE, chief executive officer of the United Presbyterian Church, and other Protestant, Catholic and Jewish leaders were arrested when they attempted to integrate Gwynn Oak amusement park near Baltimore in a massive demonstration on July 4. At least 36 clergy were among the 283 whites and Negroes arrested.

Other prominent churchmen rounded up by more than 50 Baltimore County Police were: BISHOP DANIEL CORRIGAN of the National Council of Protestant Episcopal Churches; the REV. RODERICK FRENCH of the World Council of Churches; and the REV. WILLIAM SLOAN COFFIN, Yale University Chaplain. Local Maryland clergy booked were: DR. FURMAN L. TEMPLETON, chairman of the National Presbyterian Interracial Council and executive director of the Baltimore Urban League; the REV. JOSEPH CONNOLLY, a Catholic priest and co-chairman of the Baltimore Interfaith Committee for Human Rights; RABBI MORRIS LIEBERMAN, co-chairman of the Interfaith Committee for Human Rights; and

MSGR. AUSTIN HEALY, pastor of St. Martin's church and director of the Baltimore Archdiocese's Inner City Program. DR. BLAKE was quoted as saying, "Our purpose is to identify the white Christian church leaders and members with active members of the Negro ministry and churches in desegregating American life." Continuing, he said, "We are hoping that in every community there will be an interracial-interfaith commission impressing upon our whole society the need of giving all Americans full status and dignity as human beings."

The demonstration also marked the first active participation of the Baltimore Archdiocese which issued a pastoral letter earlier in the year urging the removal of racial prejudice.

* * *

The National Council of Churches has organized a 25-member Commission on Religion and Race which will be responsible to the president and to the general secretary. It will be under the direction of DR. ROBERT SPIKE. The formation of the commission was part of a report which also included:

1. An invitation to Roman Catholic and Jewish leaders to join action aiding desegregation.

2. A call on individual member churches to urge "vigorously" that churchgoers involve themselves "in every phase of the struggle."

3. A call to general board members to take part personally in negotiations, demonstrations, and other "direct action."

The resolution called for Catholic and Jewish leaders to meet in Washington with Protestant and Greek Orthodox church leaders to urge congressional passage of civil rights legislation.

DR. SPIKE has reported that his commission will concentrate on three specific areas:

1. Legislation. Civil rights legislation now before Congress is a priority area. The Commission will direct a message to Congress, as well as to individual Congressmen, urging the passage of this legislation. He said that any partisan use of this legislation, including a filibuster, will be regarded "as an affront to the Christian conscience."

2. Community Action and Demonstrations. - Church officers and laymen are encouraged to take part in local direct action demonstrations sponsored by responsible human rights organizations adhering to the principle of non-violence. White Christians are unequivacally urged to join Negroes on the picket line. Bishops, other Church officers, and laymen are urged to make this kind of Christian witness at this time.

3. Desegregation in the Life of the Church. The Commission is requesting the National Council of Churches to include Negroes on its Executive Council immediately. Dr. Spike stated that the excuse for not having Negroes represented in the various top bodies has been, "We can't find qualified Negroes." He said the Commission's answer to that is, "If you can't find them, then train them."

* * *

A permanent 42-member Interreligious Committee on Race Relations has been formed in Washington, D.C. under the chairmanship of ARCHBISHOP PATRICK A. O'BOYLE. The co-chairmen serving with him are BISHOP WILLIAM F. CREIGHTON of the Washington Episcopal Diocese; BISHOP JOHN WESLEY LORD, Methodist Conference; BISHOP SMALLWOOD E. WILLIAMS, Bible Way Church Worldwide; and RABBI LEWIS A. WEINTRAUB, president of the Washington Board of Rabbis.

The following committees have been formed: steering, person-to-person communication, legal, employment, housing, welfare, education, and public relations.

The housing committee sent an appeal to the District Commissioners to issue an anti-discrimination housing order without delay.

A program of exchange visits is being planned, and a full-time executive secretary may be retained.

The ICRR plans on using the economic power of the churches which spend an estimated $40 million a year on construction in Washington.

* * *

Other conferences on religion and race are being planned in Atlanta and Kansas City.

Kansas City religious and lay leaders plan to move right with project committees in a one-day rally planned for mid September, and perhaps a larger public meeting in 1964.

The Atlanta Conference involves 50 Negro and white clergymen under the administrative leadership of DON MC AVOY, executive secretary of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, Atlanta chapter.

* * *

A United Presbyterian Commission on Religion and Race (UPCRR) was created at the recent meeting in Des Moines, Iowa of the General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church.

The new group, with an appropriation of $300,000 will be patterned after such voluntary bodies as the Catholic Interracial Council, the Lutheran Human Relations Association of America, and the Episcopal Society of Cultural and Racial Unity.

The UPCRR will be the denomination's focal point for concern on race relations and will serve as the liaison with other interfaith and ecumenical efforts. It will also design a single strategy for programs on racial integration already underway in the offices of the denomination's Board of Christian Education, National Missions Board, and its Ecumenical Relations Commission.

United Presbyterian congregations and institutions will be urged to drop whatever racial restrictions they still have and encouraged to support non-restrictive education and employment opportunities, housing and civil rights.

* * *

BISHOP ARTHUR LICHTENBERGER, presiding bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the U.S.A., issued a recent statement on the racial crises which are besetting the country, and called for Americans to undertake three actions.

".... I would ask you to involve yourselves. The crisis in communities North and South in such matters as housing, employment, public accommodations, and schools is steadily mounting. It is the duty of every Christian citizen to know fully what is happening in his own community, and actively to support efforts to meet the problems he encounters."

"I would also ask you to give money as an expression of our unity and as a sign of our support for the end of racial injustice in this land. The struggle of Negro Americans for their rights is costly, both in terms of personal sacrifice and of money, and they need help."

"I would ask you to take action. Discrimination within the Body of the Church itself is an intolerable scandal. Every congregation has a continuing need to examine its own life and to renew those efforts necessary to insure its inclusiveness fully. Diocesan and church-related agencies, schools and other institutions also have a considerable distance to go in bringing their practices up to the standard of the clear position of the Church on race...."

* * *

The recent convention of the Episcopal Diocese of Washington has taken firm action and has directed all diocesan-related institutions to eliminate any discriminatory practices within six months. It further requested the Bishop and Executive Council to take steps necessary to disassociate such diocesan and parish-related institutions from any financial and moral support if these practices are not eliminated in the specified time.

* * *

One of the first interracial home visits ever held in a southern state was conducted by 650 people, representing 170 families, visiting Negro homes in Blount and Knox counties in eastern Tennessee.

Spearheading the project were MR. AND MRS. WILLIAM CALDWELL of the Christian Family Movement (Catholic) and DR. MERRILL PROUDFOOT of the United Presbyterian Church of Knoxville, Tennessee.

The visit, called Project Friendship, was conducted by a group of 50 persons from 24 churches and synagogues. The Caldwell's and Dr. Proudfoot were delegates to the National Conference and began organizing Project Friendship immediately following their return.

In a recent presidential news conference President Kennedy was queried about Project Friendship by a reporter, and was asked whether he thought it would be in the public interest for him to encourage such visits nationally. The President replied that, "I think it would be very helpful, and you can start right here in Washington where this is greatly needed."

* * *

Interracial home visits, pioneered by Friendship House in Chicago, were started in 1955 .... and have since been held in over 40 cities. The cities where such visits have been held are: Akron, O; Aurora, Ill; Boston, Mass; Buffalo, N.Y; Cedar Rapids, Ia; Champaign, Ill; Chicago, Ill; Cleveland, O; College Park, Md; Columbus, O; Covington, Ky; Davenport, Ia; Dayton, O; Des Moines, Ia; Downers Grove, Ill; Fort Wayne, Ind; Franklin, Pa; Gary, Ind; Glencoe, Ill; Harvey, Ill; Joliet, Ill; Kansas City, Mo; Kokomo, Ind; Leavenworth, Kans; Los Angeles, Cal; Louisville, Ky; Milwaukee, Wisc; Minneapolis-St. Paul, Minn; Napa, Cal; New York, N. Y; Omaha, Neb; Peoria, Ill; Providence, R.I; Rockford, Ill; San Diego, Cal; South Bend, Ind; Terra Haute, Ind; Warren, O; Washington, D.C; and Waukegan, Illinois.

* * *

The North Carolina Council on Religion and Race was formed in Charlotte under the temporary chairmanship of DR. W. R. GRIGG, secretary of the Department of Interracial Cooperation for the Baptist State Convention.

This is believed to be the first organization in the state to cross the three faith lines on the matter of race relations.

* * *

Recent developments in anti-discrimination campaigns in Milwaukee have led the committee to advance the date of its conference on religion and race from January, 1964 to mid-September. EPISCOPAL BISHOP DONALD H. V. HALLOCK said the committee wants to convene the conference before ARCHBISHOP WILLIAM E. COUSINS leaves September 22 for the ecumenical council sessions at the Vatican.

BISHOP HALLOCK said the committee will concentrate on local problems with local speakers, emphasizing equal rights in housing and employment.

* * *

A conference on religion and race will be held in Peoria, Illinois in mid-January with leaders of the three major faiths. The executive committee consists of THE MOST REV. JOHN B. FRANZ, Bishop of Peoria Diocese of the Catholic Church; RABBI JOSEPH GINSBERG; RABBI JULIUS HYATT; THE REV. FRANCIS W. LICKFIELD, Episcopal Bishop of the Quincy Diocese; and the REV. JOHN STORY, pastor of Immanuel Evangelical and Reformed Church.

* * *

JOSEPH CARDINAL RITTER charged in St. Louis that "the weapons of segregation, discrimination and economic oppression can be every bit as cruel as gas chambers and concentration camps."

Dismissing the doctrine of racial superiority as "insane," the Archbishop of St. Louis urged citizens to unite in a "holy discontent" at instances of race prejudice.

The Cardinal said racism is being practiced in St. Louis as in other parts of the country. He particularly singled out housing discrimination for condemnation and said it is estimated that 70 percent of all Negro homes in St. Louis are in "blighted" areas.

Outlining the approach of the Church to such problems as racial discrimination, he commented:

"The Church is not and should not be a power bloc, capable of forcing compliance with directives of its leadership. Rather, it is for the Church to enunciate principles and their application to modern problems clearly and without equivocation, leaving it to men of the Church as free citizens to devise the most effective means of applying them to concrete situations."

DR. W. SHERMAN SKINNER, president of the St. Louis Metropolitan Church Federation, told the meeting that members of the major faiths have a "bad conscience" on the race issue, because they have failed to carry out the teaching of the churches.

He described segregation as "a moral and religious issue" and said it "defies the basic tenets of Biblical faith--the oneness of God, the Fatherhood of God, the nature of man as made in the image of God."

Dr. Skinner warned that discrimination "damages the offender as deeply and tragically as any other immoral act."

"No people can live a moral lie and long survive in strength, " he said.

RABBI EPHRAIM EPSTEIN, president of the St. Louis Rabbinical Association, criticized churches for failing to take adequate action on the race problem.

"The religious communities of America have been too silent and too reluctant to raise the voice of protest against the forces of evil who sow discord, disharmony and inequality in our land," he said.

* * *

The three major faiths are reluctant to put out the welcoming mat unconditionally for Negroes, according to a Negro pastor who was an "added" speaker at the St. Louis Conference on Religion and Race.

"That I appear here tonight as a Negro suggests that neither of these faiths can adequately speak for the Negro," said the REV. AMOS RYCE, pastor of Lane Tabernacle. "It suggests that we are not completely welcomed by either of the three faiths."

Rev. Ryce was added to the conference list of speakers after at least one segment of the Negro community had threatened to boycott the session because of lack of more Negro representation on the program.

Rev. Ryce said that Judaism, "by its historical nature, has remained a closed society" as far as Negroes are concerned.

Of Catholicism, he had this to say:

"While the Catholic houses of worship have remained in the Negro ghetto, the flight of their once white membership to suburbia has left a membership of blacks presided over by white priests, predominantly white nuns, and other white hierarchy."

"The thoughtful Negro is bewildered that the Catholic Church, with all of its ancient paraphernalia for discipline, has not been able to bring into leadership more Negro priests, more nuns and, with its increasingly large Negro constituency, has not found it necessary to bring more Negroes into its policy-making levels."

"Structurally, therefore, it is felt that the Catholic Church cannot speak for the Negro."

Rev. Ryce was equally hard on Protestantism, saying that Protestant churches "remained so aloof and pervasively purist" on the Negro problem because "white Protestantism has, with few exceptions, forsaken the inner city." He accused his fellow Protestants of wishing "that the Negro would stay in his 'proverbial place'."

He said a Negro ghetto has been established religiously, intellectually and socially--"the difference being that the Negroes are confined to their ghetto without choice" while members of the Jewish, Catholic and white Protestant ghettoes "may move about."

"The movement of one Negro in certain neighborhoods can chase a thousand whites; and two Negroes can put 10,000 to flight," he asserted.

* * *

REV. ARTHUR E. WALMSLEY, chairman of the NCRR follow-up committee, said that "racism is making gains because of the silence and apathy of the well-meaning white moderate."

He also said that "Negro leadership has just about given up" in regard to what gains can be made quietly and comfortably, and that "it will take a massive effort to make a dent now."

The St. Louis Conference on Religion and Race resolved to set up a permanent organization to carry on interracial work through the combined efforts of the three major faiths.

The resolution proposed that the organization have a chairman, with the "three titular leaders of our major religious communities and a representative of the Negro religious community" as co-chairmen.

It was proposed that the organization have a full-time executive secretary and that it be financed jointly by the Catholic, Protestant and Jewish religious communities.

* * *

Religious bodies aren't doing a good job in the field of interracial relations, a Protestant, a Catholic and a Jew agreed at a recent symposium in Portland, Oregon. The symposium was sponsored by the University of Portland in cooperation with the National Conference of Christians and Jews, the Greater Portland Council of Churches and the Oregon Board of Rabbis.

"The basic pattern of most churches down to this day is indifference on racial issues," said DR. GORDON W. LOVEJOY of Greensboro, N.C., program consultant on religion and race for the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

"Changes in race relations usually have been dictated either by economics or by the courts, not by moral right," he stated. "Regardless of doctrine, the church has ducked and equivocated on race. On race, we are more worried about the judgment of our neighbors than the judgment of God."

* * *

DR. JOHN J. O'CONNOR, professor of history at Georgetown University, Washington, D.C., and vice chairman of the National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice, described Catholic action in race relations as "high altitude whirling, never getting down to where it affects people."

"The Negro has had it -- the Negro is going to stand and fight," he said. "He looks toward the Church. If we let him down now, no matter what we do, no one will pay any attention."

RABBI MARTIN FREEDMAN of Congregation B'nai Jeshurun, Paterson, N. J., cited the Black Muslim movement and its rejection of Christianity "as a white man's religion" as an example of "the church's failure on race."

While "every major church group in the U.S. is against discrimination," he said, "the struggle is in the local church and the diocese."

* * *

The Communal Affairs Committee of the American Jewish Committee (AJC) under the chairmanship of ARTHUR M. OPPENHEIMER, met with JOHN MC DERMOTT, executive director of the Chicago Conference on Religion and Race to discuss committee action on one of the possible projects: Elimination of social discrimination in clubs; expanding employment opportunities for minorities in religious institutions; and promotion of intergroup education in Jewish religious

At another meeting of this committee, RABBI MARC TANNENBAUM, director of Interreligious Affairs for the AJC, suggested the committee undertake a study of textbooks to see how they depict religious and racial groups.

* * *

The clergymen of Menomonee Falls, Wisconsin, a suburb of Milwaukee with a population of 22,000 residents, has formulated a plan to prepare the community for integration.

The REV. MICHAEL HOWARD, assistant pastor of the Good Shepherd Roman Catholic Parish, said approximately 2,000 Negro families are expected to be displaced within the next few years in Milwaukee by expressways and urban redevelopment. Many Negroes will probably move to Menomonee Falls, which is only twelve miles northwest of Milwaukee.

The plan will: Organize groups of laymen to discuss and promote feelings of racial justice; urge church members to pledge themselves to open occupancy, setting the stage for a community-wide legal guarantee; encourage sermons on race questions, followed by assessments of congregation attitudes; promote non-discriminatory clauses in church contracts for supplies and building construction, and to promote equal employment opportunity.

The churches already backing the plan are Catholic, United Church of Christ, Presbyterian, Methodist, Lutheran, Episcopalian, and Evangelical United Brethren..

* * *

The General Assembly of the Unitarian Universalist Association adopted a resolution at its recent meeting which called for the appointment of a seven-man Commission on Religion and Race whose purpose would be to "explore, develop, stimulate, and implement programs and actions to promote the complete integration of Negroes and other minority persons into our congregations, denominational life, ministry, and into the community."

* * *

MATHEW AHMANN, executive director of the National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice (NCCIJ) has been appointed field secretary to the National Conference on Religion and Race. Ahmann, who will continue as executive director of NCCIJ, assumed his new post July 1.

He will continue to operate out of 21 W. Superior Street in Chicago. The NCCIJ recently concluded an all-day emergency meeting of its 57 Catholic Interracial Councils at which it endorsed all out support of the administration's legislative program, approved of participation in peaceful demonstrations, and passed a resolution to participate in the march on Washington on August 28.

* * * * * * * * * * * * *

Religion
Materials
(statement)

COMMITTEE FOR RACIAL JUSTICE NOW of the Fourth General Synod of the United Church of Christ

THE FELLOWSHIP OF THE COMMITTED

In response to the summons of the Fourth General Synod, calling the members of the United Church of Christ to commit themselves before God and the nation to racial justice now,

I COMMIT MYSELF AS A CHRISTIAN:

- To work now for inclusive membership in my church;
- To seek now the enactment of appropriate civil rights legislation in the areas of education, employment, housing, public accomodations, and voting; at every level of government, and to protest the evasion of such laws;
- To engage now in persuasion, in negotiation, in reconciliation and in non-violent responsible demonstrations when such actions are necessary for racial justice;
- To establish now at least one friendship across racial and cultural lines;
- To fortify myself and deepen my commitment to racial unity and justice now by daily prayer, by study, and by sharing my experiences with others.

Application Form

I desire to enroll in the FELLOWSHIP OF THE COMMITTED.

Name: _____ Church: _____

Address: _____

Please return the above application to the Committee for Racial Justice Now, United Church of Christ, 289 Park Avenue South, New York 10, New York.

REPORT COMMITTEE, COUNCIL FOR CHRISTIAN SOCIAL ACTION

In the face of the enormous and complex issues which mankind faces, an intensive and far-reaching program of social action was never so much needed as today. Endeavoring to be "servants in the service of men," Christians must seek and must do the will of God wherever the powers of evil, so flagrantly challenging in our time, must be met, in order that justice, peace and love may prevail.

It is to help the churches meet the issues of such a time that the Council for Christian Social Action exists, established by the United Church of Christ to make "the implications of the Gospel effective in society."

The Report Committee recognizes that there exists difference of opinion respecting the kind of program which the CCSA has developed. Since the CCSA functions in controversial areas of witness, such differences are inevitable. The committee has received three memoranda involving criticism: (1) from an unofficial group of laymen in Southern California, (2) from the deacons and trustees of a church in New Jersey, and (3) from one individual. The Report Committee has given attention to these criticisms, but feels that their point of view does not reflect the will of the United Church of Christ in these crucial testing times. It is the conviction of the Report Committee that the CCSA has competently and creatively served our churches.

We recognize that in developing and promoting "a program of social education and action," errors and mis-judgments may be made by the CCSA. The CCSA should not be held in its own mind or in the mind of its supporters as infallible. Criticisms are welcomed. We are confident that the CCSA gives respectful attention to such criticisms. The Report Committee expresses its confidence in the CCSA and its staff; believes that they serve our churches well; and thus we strongly encourage full support of the CCSA among our churches.

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. General Synod commends the CCSA for the statement in Advance Reports pp. 125-127 on the mission of the Church and the functions of the CCSA with respect to implementing this mission.

2. General Synod, believing that the program of social action needs to be established primarily in the local church, encourages the CCSA to develop more extensive field services, as budget permits, and suggests that the Conferences endeavor to provide trained leadership in social action on their staffs as a service to their churches.

3. General Synod approves the preparation of study papers by the CCSA in which varying points of view are presented and questions raised for study and discussion.

4. General Synod recognizes validity and value in the issuance by the CCSA of statements as useful guidance to churches and individuals with respect to decisions on social issues. We believe that the expression of views by the CCSA on specific issues provides necessary leadership. We commend the procedures outlined in Advance Reports p. 127 which have been designed to assure competent judgments. These procedures should be conscientiously followed. We encourage even fuller consultation with local church groups and with authorities expert in particular fields to ensure the greatest possible care in preparing a final statement or a study paper.

OVER

5. General Synod commends the CCSA for its educational program with respect to the United Nations, and urges expansion of this program. It recommends that the CCSA explore ways of securing financial support through Conferences and Associations to send delegates to UN seminars, and suggests that individual Conferences explore the feasibility of sponsoring a UN seminar for their own churches. It makes appreciative note that the International Relations Office of the CCSA is now housed, for more effective service to the churches, in the new Church Center for the United Nations adjacent to the UN.

6. General Synod approves the "Resolution on Nuclear Testing," commending it to the churches for study and discussion and directing that the required actions be taken by the officers of the General Synod and the CCSA.

Resolution on Nuclear Testing

WHEREAS, The Second General Synod in its "Call to Christian Action in Society" said: "We therefore call upon our churches and their members to pray and work: ... for effective international control and reduction of all national armaments, including the testing of nuclear weapons." and

WHEREAS, The Third General Synod in its Pronouncement on "National Responsibility and International Relations" said: "We welcome the increased attention now being given by both government and private organizations to plan for the reduction, control, and eventual elimination of national armaments. We also urge the United States to persist in the effort to reach multilateral agreement on the cessation of all kinds of nuclear weapons testing," and

WHEREAS, the government of the United States is working toward this goal, as evidenced by repeated Presidential statements, by persistence in negotiations with other nuclear powers, by the announced intention to engage in new discussions in Moscow in July of this year, following the failure of the Geneva Conference to reach agreement, and by the decision to conduct no further tests in the atmosphere so long as other states do not do so, and

WHEREAS, by providing a first step in the reduction and control of armaments, by eliminating future fallout, and by helping to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons, a test-ban treaty is in the interests of American security, as well as in the interest of general human well-being,

BE IT RESOLVED that the Fourth General Synod of the United Church of Christ, meeting in Denver, Colorado, July 4-11, 1963, commend and support the continuous and now renewed effort by our government to reach agreement by the principal nuclear powers on the permanent cessation of nuclear weapons testing; and be it further

RESOLVED, that the General Synod, in pursuance of its previous pronouncements, urge all our churches and all their members to communicate to the President and to their United States Senators their support of this effort, and be it further

RESOLVED, that if a test-ban treaty is agreed upon by the negotiating powers, and assuming that such treaty will carry safeguards for the security of the United States and of the free world, the Council for Christian Social Action is authorized and requested, by communications to our churches and by testimony in the United States Senate, to work for its favorable consideration by the Senate.

RESOLVED, that copies be sent to the President, Secretary of State, chairmen of Committees of Congress, the press, and others (approximated language)

7. General Synod, in line with its earlier actions on the issue of racial justice, supports the following resolution on "Fair Employment Practices and Civil Rights Legislation":

Fair Employment Practices and Civil Rights Legislation

The Fourth General Synod urges all instrumentalities, conferences, associations, churches and church-related institutions:

1. To review their current employment policies in respect to the calling of ministers, the employment of professional personnel and other staff, and to take affirmative steps to implement fair employment practices, and

2. To further fair employment practices by including non-discriminating provisions in all contracts and agreements, and

3. To purchase services from and, in the investment of funds, to give preference to those firms which follow fair employment practices.

4. To advocate, demonstrate and involve themselves in support of the principles of the proposed Civil Rights Act of 1963 and the legislation providing for federal fair employment practices and to urge their Senators and Representatives to support such legislation on a non-partisan basis in this session of Congress.

The Fourth General Synod approves the authorization of a committee by the Executive Council to evaluate the policies and practices in the United Church of Christ in respect to fair employment, to initiate procedures for prompt and effective achievement of fair employment policies and practices, to give attention to: ~~(to be edited)~~

a) location of specific job opportunities,
b) use of personnel records with the churches,
c) special emphasis on locating qualified persons regardless of race in recruitment of personnel,
d) initiation of in-service training for purposes of promotion,
e) discovery of potential existing leadership,
f) development and training of leadership,

OVER

g) promotion and upgrading of personnel on the basis of ability, and
h) transmittal of information about non-discriminatory practices and procedures to agencies used for recruitment of personnel, and expects the committee to report periodically to the Executive Council of the General Synod.

The Fourth General Synod instructs the Council for Christian Social Action to present testimony in support of Civil Rights and fair employment practices legislation before committees of Congress.

8. General Synod declares its policy to be to contribute funds only to institutions and churches which as of July 1, 1964, have a policy of openness without respect to race, national background or ethnic origin, and further urges the instrumentalities, conferences and churches to adopt and pursue such a policy in respect to contributions.

9. General Synod urges ministers and local churches to study the findings of the National Conference on Religion and Race and to cooperate in inter-faith action on race in their communities.

10. General Synod commends the CCSA for its statement on Tax Exemption for Churches (Appendix B. pp. 142-143) and encourages further study of this question by the CCSA, instrumentalities, conferences, and churches.

11. General Synod endorses the decision of the CCSA to appoint an Economic Life secretary when budget permits, to serve as a specialist in the relationship of the Gospel to such matters as automation, tax policy, poverty, labor-management problems, agriculture, and business and vocational ethics.

12. General Synod values the services performed by the Washington Office of the CCSA, as described in Advance Reports pp. 138-139. This provision of a staff resource person in the area of governmental issues is deemed an appropriate church program.

13. General Synod commends the staff of the CCSA for leadership given in cooperative programs on an interdenominational and national level, as noted in Advance Reports pp. 133-135.

14. General Synod in connection with the emphasis on urbanization within the United Church of Christ requests the churches to consider the interdenominational emphasis for 1963-64 on "Christians in a Rapidly Changing Economy" as an integral part of the urban emphasis.

15. General Synod notes the difficulty faced by the CCSA, due to financial limitations, in fulfilling the expectations of churches, and requests the Budget Committee in the next budget allocations to provide funds commensurate with the responsibilities and needs in this field.

(Editing to be added)

(#2217)

GENERAL SYNOD ACTION FOR RACIAL JUSTICE NOW

WHEREAS, the racial crisis in this summer of 1963 is a sign of God's action in the history of the United States, the Church must now become radically committed at particular times and places to the struggle of our fellowman:

to get the best job for which he is qualified and not be told, "Come back later"; to work at the top jobs and not just those in the lowest-paid categories;

to establish fair employment practices guaranteed by law on the federal and all other levels of government, since discrimination in employment robs a man of daily bread for himself and his family;

to expose the cant and hypocrisy which keep him down even among those supposed to be his friends, whether they be churches, labor unions, management or political organizations; to live where he pleases without paying the double-standard dollar; to get the best schooling possible even if desegregation upsets educational traditions;

to gain acceptance as a person of worth who may marry whomever he loves and whoever loves him;

to secure public accommodations freely and without insult;

to exercise his God-given rights to protest injustice without suffering the intolerable penalties that we regularly read of in the newspapers.

to gain a larger share in the ownership and use of capital; to receive equal protection under the law and equal justice in the courts;

to obtain crash programs of special assistance in such critical areas as health, education, welfare, citizenship, housing, and employment, enabling victims of racial discrimination to achieve equality-in-fact;

to push for all that is due here and now without heeding those who counsel patience, moderation, and gradualism; to register, vote, and run for office without fear of retaliation, either overt or subtle;

THEREFORE, the General Synod, in session in Denver, Colorado, seeking to bring the light of the Christian gospel to bear on the present crisis in race relations confronting our country and the world and thankfully recalling the long established positions of the Congregational Christian Churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Church and now the United Church of Christ in the field of relations between the races, on July 5, 1963 takes the following actions:

OVER

1. The General Synod calls upon the members of the United Church of Christ to uproot intolerance, bigotry, and prejudice within our own lives and to replace them with good will and the determination to strike down immediately the barriers which divide men on account of race. The General Synod calls upon all members to make it plain to all the people with whom we live and work that the Church and the members thereof stand for brotherhood.

2. The General Synod believes that the United Church of Christ must free itself of segregation.

(a) To this end, and understanding that the decision must be made for itself by each local congregation, the General Synod urges the churches to declare officially and publicly that their fellowship is open to all who qualify for membership without any restrictions as to race, class, or ethnic background. The General Synod also urges the churches to declare officially and publicly a policy of calling pastors and employing church staff members without any restrictions as to race, class or ethnic background. When these actions are taken, the General Synod askes that a report be made to the Secretary of the Church.

(b) The General Synod urges the conferences and the associations of the United Church of Christ to become fully integrated "with utmost dispatch."

(c) The General Synod promises to utilize to the full the contribution that its Negro members and other racial and minority groups can make to the life and work of the United Church, giving these persons their share of leadership opportunities and responsibilities.

(d) The General Synod calls upon institutions related to the Church to desegregate forthwith.

3. The General Synod proposes to mobilize the manpower and means of the Church for racial justice.

(a) To this end, the General Synod requests the President of the Church, after consultation, to appoint a committee consisting of eleven non-national-staff persons, including in its membership both white and Negro persons who are trusted throughout the Church and have competence in the field of race relations. The life of this Committee shall extend until the next meeting of the General Synod.

(b) The General Synod votes to give to that committee the power to decide how the resources of the Church contributed for this purpose will be used in the effort to secure racial equality and social justice both at home and abroad.

(c) The General Synod accepts the offer of the Council for Christian Social Action and the Division of the Church Extension of the Board for Homeland Ministries to provide the services of Dr. S. Garry Oniki; approves Dr. Oniki's appointment as Executive Coordinator of this effort; and suggests that the work and program of this committee normally be implemented by committing it to one of the existing agencies so that money can be conserved for actual program needs. In other cases, the committee would be authorized to borrow on a temporary basis experienced staff from the Instrumentalities.

(d) The program which this committee shall project could include but need not be limited to:

a. Mobilizing the whole membership of the Church, to join where possible with our Protestant, Roman Catholic and Jewish brethren, on a community basis, to meet the need of the situation on the local level;

b. Providing of bail bonds for those who are arrested as they demand social justice;

c. Providing legal defense for such persons;

d. Providing economic aid to persons who lose their jobs because of their participation in activities in behalf of racial equality;

e. Providing financial aid for institutions whose support is threatened by those who oppose an "open policy" of service;

f. Mobilizing the United Church of Christ, its individual members, congregations, associations and conferences to press for the adoption of legislation to guarantee civil rights;

g. Supporting and commending those church members who successfully begin the integration of their own immediate neighborhoods;

h. Extending the program of voter registration;

i. Urging Christians to give all possible assistance to small businesses in making the transition to non-segregation;

j. Providing other emergency or long-term help, the need for which only the future will reveal.

OVER

NOTE: All this work, where at all possible shall be undertaken in cooperation with the National Council of Churches, State and Local Councils of Churches, the National Conference on Religion and Race, and other interreligious and community groups.

4. (a) The General Synod challenges the people of the United Church of Christ to bring an emergency special offering of funds to cover the cost of this program. The General Synod votes that the first of these offerings will be received this fall. The setting of the date for the second offering is left to the Executive Council.

(b) The General Synod commits the responsibility for raising these funds to each congregation and to each member of the Church under the direction of the Stewardship Council.

(c) The General Synod also authorizes the officers of the Church to borrow against these offerings to be received to the extent of $100,000. in order to begin the work immediately.

(d) The General Synod votes to receive an offering at the coming Sunday night ecumenical service here at the General Synod as the beginning of this fund, and suggests that congregations and individuals that wish to add to this fund before next fall will be able to do this by sending their contributions to the Treasurer of the United Church of Christ, 297 Park Avenue South, New York 10010, New York.

5. The General Synod calls upon the members of the United Church of Christ to pray that justice and good will shall prevail and then to work in order to make the fulfillment of that prayer possible.

(#2216)

Religion

SBV

CATHOLIC INTERRACIAL COUNCIL

RE-2-5417 233 Broadway, NYC

NEWS SERVICE

The following news story was sent out this week by the National Catholic Welfare Conference News Service to all Catholic papers and Magazines).

RECEIVED
JUL 1 1963

EFFORT TO WIN RIGHTS LEGISLATION
'IMPORTANT FIGHT' CATHOLIC LEADER SAYS AFTER WHITE HOUSE MEETING

WASHINGTON, June 24--A Catholic civil rights leader, one of nearly 30 who met with President Kennedy and other top administration figures on the current racial crisis, summed up the meeting's tone in these words:

"We are in a very important fight and we must exert ourselves to the utmost."

This evaluation was given by George K. Hunton, one of the founders of the New York Catholic Interracial Council and currently a consultant to the Council, after he and 28 other civil rights leaders met (June 22) at the White House with the President, Vice President Lyndon Johnston, and Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy.

The nearly two-hour meeting was one of a series President Kennedy has been holding with national leaders to discuss the racial crisis and rally support for his civil rights program. It was held only hours before he was to leave on his European visit.

Hunton said the President in his remarks to the civil rights leaders "left an impression that the administration is doing everything it possibly can to secure enactment of the whole package" of civil rights legislation it backs. The President asked for help in getting his legislative program through Congress.

The administration's civil rights package contains legislation designed to end racial discrimination in education, public accommodations, employment and voting.

Hunton said there was an "air of hopefulness" during the White House meeting regarding the chances for congressional action on the civil rights package.

"The picture is brighter than it ever has been for civil rights legislation," he said.

But, he added, all those at the meeting recognized that there is a "tough fight" ahead and room for "no complacency, no letup."

Among the leaders attending the meeting were the Rev. Martin Luther King, head of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference; editor Ralph McGill of Atlanta, Ga.; A. Philip Randolph, president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters; United Auto Workers president Walter Reuther; and Roy Wilkins, executive director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Catholic leaders there, beside Hunton, were Father John F. Cronin, assistant director of the Social Action Department, National Catholic Welfare Conference; and Mathew Ahmann, executive director of the National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice.

Vice President Johnson and Atty. Gen. Kennedy also spoke during the two-hour gathering, as did several of the civil rights leaders, Hunton said. He said Johnson and Kennedy both urged the leaders to work to get backing for the administration rights package.

Hunton described the meeting as "very earnest and dedicated." He expressed the belief that the administration civil rights program had the "universal approval" of those attending.

He said the administration civil rights package would be "good for the country," and added: "Negroes are primarily benefited, but what is at stake is the prestige of democracy and the social and economic well being of all Americans."

Religion

Religious Freedom and Public Affairs
NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIANS AND JEWS
43 West 57 Street New York 19, N. Y.

THE SUNDAY CLOSING ISSUE IN MINNESOTA

A report authorized and approved by the Department of Christian Social Relations of the Minnesota Council of Churches

The legislation of Sunday closing laws and Sabbatarian exemption within such laws are issues that have challenged citizens across the country, frequently pitting one religious community against another. The issues, however, are complex, raising questions of Constitutionality, religious freedom, public welfare and interreligious understanding.

It is necessary, therefore, for citizens to be aware of the best arguments on all sides, and to be exposed to the many-faceted aspects of the question. In this report a council of churches makes such an effort to help its constituencies understand the issue as objectively as possible. Needless to say, advocates of either side will have more to add.

The project, Religious Freedom and Public Affairs, believes it constructive to reprint this report: to demonstrate how one state council of churches sought to explore an admittedly complex problem; and to provide some background material for other communities facing decision on such an issue.

Arthur Gilbert

Staff Consultant

Project, Religious Freedom and Public Affairs

The project Religious Freedom and Public Affairs is designed to raise the general level of public understanding and discussion on issues of public concern about which religious groups differ. The main objectives of this project are: to analyze the practical and theoretical problems involving political action and religious freedom; to effectuate a greater understanding of the significance of those religious commitments that affect public policy; and to lessen needless conflict created by different religious approaches to social problems.

THE SUNDAY CLOSING ISSUE IN MINNESOTA

I. INTRODUCTION

It is anticipated that the 1963 Minnesota legislature will deal with some type of Sunday closing legislation in order to bring current Sunday business practices within the state into a pattern of uniformity.

Events of the past year, including recent Supreme Court decisions, local ordinances in the Twin Cities area, and the economic and social pressures exerted by the burgeoning of suburban discount stores, have high-lighted this issue across the country and in Minnesota.

Legislative action on Sunday opening will obviously depend upon the temper of the people as regards the issues. Interestingly, the issues cut across political party lines, economic groupings, and religious affiliations.

The following report is presented, as impartially as possible, in order that church and community leaders in our state may have readily available pertinent data on an issue at hand. Its purpose might be called "Forethink," since it is designed to anticipate concern rather than to reflect upon a problem after the issue has been temporarily settled.

II. A SUMMARY HISTORY

Sunday laws are often called "blue laws." The origin of this term is not known. According to one theory, it dates from the 1780's and derives from the fact that the lawbooks of Connecticut, including its Sunday restrictions, were bound in blue.

The historian Abram Lewis has written:

> "All Sunday legislation is the product of pagan Rome. The Saxon laws were the product of Middle Age legislation of the Holy Roman Empire. The English laws were the expansion of the Saxon, and the American are the transcript of the English."

The Emperor Constantine appears to have set up the first compulsory Sunday law. In 321 A.D., he decreed that "all judges and city people and the craftsmen shall rest upon the venerable Day of the Sun." Constantine, also, simultaneously proclaimed the first Sunday-law exemption when he decreed that even though it was Sunday, "Country people may freely attend to the cultivation of the fields, because it frequently happens that no other days are better adapted for planting the grain in the furrows or the vines in the trenches."

The first Sunday law in America, known as the Virginia Law, was passed in 1610, just three years after Virginia was colonized by Captain John Smith.

The Constitution of the United States recognizes the uniqueness of Sunday in Article 1 (Sec. 7, paragraph 2) describing it as a day of rest for the President and, by implication, for the people.

As early as 1782, the Massachusetts Sunday Law, which had an unmistakable religious origin, experienced a change in its Preamble with the addition of the words,

> "Whereas the observance of the Lord's Day is highly promotive of the welfare of the community, by affording necessary season for relaxation from labor and cares of business, for moral reflections and conversations on the duties and the frequent errors of human conduct..."

In 1885, the United States Supreme Court concluded that Sunday laws were welfare measures, stating:

> "Laws setting aside Sunday as a day of rest are not upheld from any right of the government to legislate for the promotion of religious observance, but from its right to protect all persons from the physical and moral debasement which comes from uninterrupted labor. Such laws have always been deemed beneficent and merciful laws, especially to the poor and dependent, to the laborers in our factories and workshops, and in the heated rooms in our cities, and their validity has been sustained by the highest courts of the States."

Sunday statutes fall generally into two main categories--those that restrict labor and those that require the halting of commercial activity through the closing of stores and places of entertainment. Most such laws date back at least 100 years and many had their origin in pre-Revolutionary days.

An analysis of state Sunday laws, as reported by Richard Cohen, "Sunday in the Sixties," shows that only 13 states have no provision which would restrain either labor or the sale of merchandise on Sunday. The remaining 37 states restrict commerce on Sunday although most allow "works of charity or necessity" and permit the sale of specific types of goods presumed important for health or comfort--medicines, tobacco, newspapers, gasoline, etc.

Mr. Cohen also indicates that 31 of these states restrict work or labor on Sunday. In 21 states, exemptions are granted to persons who observe another day as the Sabbath, although eight of these states require that the permitted Sunday activity "not disturb others." Moreover, these exemptions in Massachusetts, New York and elsewhere have been interpreted by the courts as not including retail selling.

Punishment for violating Sunday laws may range from a $1 fine in Nebraska to the penalties in Texas' 1961 law which call for a $100 fine for the first offense and a $500 fine or six months in jail, or both, for subsequent offenses.

III. THE 1961 U.S. SUPREME COURT DECISIONS

When the U.S. Supreme Court heard four cases in December, 1960 on the constitutionality of Sunday laws, it marked the first time in this century that the Court had even agreed to accept such a case for argument.

On May 29, 1961, the Court handed down decisions in four cases upholding the validity of the compulsory Sunday closing laws in Maryland, Massachusetts and Pennsylvania. Two of the cases (McGowan v. Maryland and Two Guys from Harrison-Allentown, Inc. v. McGinley) concerned owners of highway discount department stores which were open for business seven days a week. The other two involved Orthodox Jewish owners of a kosher supermarket in Springfield, Mass. (Gallagher v. Crown Kosher Supermarket) and small retail stores in Philadelphia (Braunfeld v. Brown).

The statutes were attacked on three principal grounds: (1) that Sunday laws violate the constitutional prohibition against establishment of religion; (2) that they violate the constitutional protection of religious liberty; and (3) that they deny the equal protection of the laws in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment.

In all four cases the prevailing opinions were written by Chief Justice Warren. In meeting the attack based upon the principle of separation of church and state he said that if the present purpose and effect of a Sunday law is to use the State's coercive power to aid religion it would be unconstitutional. There was no question, he said, that historically these Sunday laws were enacted during colonial times as religious laws whose purpose was to insure the observance of the Christian Sabbath as a religious obligation. However, he held, the religious origin of these statutes did not require that they be held invalid today if, in fact, the religious purpose was no longer in effect. The laws before the court were felt to be social welfare laws whose purpose was to create a day of benefit to all. Justice Douglas was the only dissenter to this conclusion.

The Court conceded that Sabbath observers had a right to assert that compulsory Sunday closing laws were a violation of their religious freedom, since the operation of such laws imposed upon them an economic hardship, but, nevertheless, six of the nine justices held that the statutes were constitutional.

The freedom to hold religious beliefs and opinions, the Chief Justice said, is absolute. However, he continued, what was involved in the present cases is not freedom to hold religious beliefs or opinions but freedom to act, and such freedom, even when motivated by religious convictions, is not totally free from legislative restrictions. The restriction on religious freedom is merely indirect and consequential and the Court should not strike down what it found to be a law for the general welfare of the population merely because of this indirect burden on the exercise of religion.

The third ground upon which the Sunday law was challenged in all the cases was that the crazy-quilt pattern of exclusions, exceptions and exemptions in the various statutes bears no semblance of reason and, being arbitrary, constituted denial of due process and of the equal protection of the laws (and, therefore, in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment).

All of the Justices, with the exception of Justice Douglas, considered this challenge and rejected it. The majority opinion, here, reflects the almost unbroken practice of the Supreme Court since the Roosevelt Court reform in 1937, not to interfere with state social welfare legislation on the ground of deprivation of property without due process of law unless there is no conceivable rational basis for it. Once the Court determined that Sunday laws are not religious laws but social welfare laws, it was almost inevitable that it would not interfere with the legislature's discretion on which practices should be prohibited and which permitted in these laws. The court found that the legislative distinctions were not arbitrary.

Justices Brennan and Stewart dissented only in the two Sabbatarian cases, and then only on the ground that the statutes unconstitutionally infringed upon the religious liberty of the Sabbatarians. Acknowledging that the Sunday laws were in fact social welfare statutes, they contended nevertheless that they unnecessarily infringed upon the constitutional rights of persons who observe a day other than Sunday as their day of rest.

IV. MINNESOTA DEVELOPMENTS

The development of Sunday closing laws is not new in the cities or the state of Minnesota.

In Minneapolis, there is an ordinance that prohibits the operation of commercial pool and billiard parlors, which was adopted in 1877. Another Minneapolis ordinance requires the suspension of Sunday business at the city's public market. And still another prohibition was approved in 1957 permitting automobile dealers to provide only emergency garage service.

The state law prohibits on Sunday "all trades, manufacturers, and mechanical employments, except works of necessity performed in an orderly manner so as not to interfere with the repose and religious liberty of the community; all public selling or offering for sale of property, and all other labor except works of necessity and charity are prohibited on the Sabbath."

Naturally, the state statute includes more than the above. It, for example, originally permitted only the sport of baseball on Sunday and that when played "in a quiet and orderly manner." The bill was amended to clear the way for the Minnesota Vikings.

The current problem of Sunday openings in Minnesota began in 1959 with opening of new discount stores by GEM and Atlantic Mills, out-of-state corporations.

An article in the Minneapolis Star of Dec. 19, 1961, by Gwen Jones, staff writer, highlights some of the problems which were facing city or village councils in the Twin Cities area in late 1961 and early 1962. Among the points she made are the following: (1) Since there was no statewide regulation, with any force, the city and village councils endeavored to establish some sort of a uniform ordinance which could at least serve as a "stop-gap" measure until such a time as the legislature in 1963 might consider a statewide regulation; (2) "The ordinances are aimed...at the discount houses which have sprung up in the suburbs in the last few years, and which often stay open on Sundays."

In addition to the many other problems, attorneys for the St. Paul City Council and Hennepin County were concerned to avoid conflicts with the Federal Supreme Court. One basic question appears to have been related to whether the allowing of businesses which were closed on Saturdays to open on Sundays might not interject religion into the issue and thus jeopardize the constitutionality of the ordinances. It has been stated that this was a strong factor in deliberations of the St. Paul City Council which passed a Sunday Closing Ordinance, effective Feb. 4, 1962, which contained no provision for alternate Saturday closing.

Nor did the Sunday closing ordinance, vetoed by Mayor Naftalin of Minneapolis, have a Saturday exemption. When the Minneapolis City Council overrode Mayor Naftalin's veto, however, on Feb. 23, 1962 it adopted an amendment to permit stores closed on Saturday to be open on Sunday. Mayor Naftalin allowed the Saturday option amendment to become law without his signature. The Minneapolis Sunday closing ordinances went into effect March 4, 1962.

V. ARGUMENTS FOR SUNDAY CLOSING LEGISLATION

1. Needed to protect the individual from exploitation -

The need and propriety of such laws are underscored by the memorable reasoning of Justice Mitchell of the Minnesota State Supreme Court in State versus Pettit:

> "The legislation proceeds upon the theory...that the physical, intellectual and moral welfare of mankind requires a periodical day of rest from labor and, as some particular day must be fixed, the one most naturally selected is that which is regarded as sacred by the greatest number of citizens...as this causes the least interference with business or existing customs...all men are not in fact independent and at liberty to work when they choose. Labor is in a great degree dependent upon capital and unless the exercise of power which capital affords is restrained, those who are obliged to labor will not possess the freedom for rest which they would otherwise exercise. The object of the law is not so much to protect those who can rest at pleasure as to afford rest to those who need it, and who from conditions of society, could not otherwise obtain it. Moreover, if the law was not obligatory upon all, and those who desired to do so were permitted to engage in their usual vocation on Sunday, others engaged in the same kind of labor or business might, against their wishes, be compelled, by the laws of competition in business to do likewise."

Dr. A. Reuben Gornitzka, senior pastor of Central Lutheran Church, Minneapolis, underscores evils of Sunday commercialization:

> "The additional problems that will be created in terms of the division of homes, the separation of the family, and the breakdown of a pattern of life which has been common to our society for all of our years cannot but make a very real difference to the total welfare of our community."

2. Necessary to promote the general welfare of society -

These points were made by the special committee on the Church and State in the May 1962 report on "Relations between Church and State" to the 174th General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church in America:

> "The United States Supreme Court has ruled that Sunday closing laws of three states primarily protect social and humanitarian, rather than ecclesiastical, pursuits and therefore do not violate the Federal Constitution... The church itself bears sole and vital responsibility for securing from its members a voluntary observance of the Lord's Day. The church should not seek...the coercive power of the state in order to facilitate Christians' observance of the Lord's Day."

In an article in the Catholic magazine, America, in 1959, a leading Catholic legal authority on church-state issues, Father Robert Drinan, S.J., dean of the Boston College Law School, made the following points:

> "The Catholic community seems to feel that the pressure to modify legislation is another application of the secularistic concept that the government may not encourage religion or promote public morality. There is, moreover, the fear among Catholics and many other opponents of concessions to Sabbatarians that frightful competitive practices and Sunday 'bargain days' may tend further to dispel that sense of quiet reverence which law and society have always attached to Sunday."

3. Can prevent damage to the business community -

In an amicus curiae brief presented to the U.S. Supreme Court, the National Retail Merchants Association stated:

> "Obviously retail stores now open on Sunday enjoy a temporary advantage over stores which remain closed on that day. If Sunday closing statutes are set aside, however, competition in the retail industry will force most other retail stores to open on Sunday. But the sales volume of each store will return to normal, and the initial advantage of the present Sunday operators will disappear. The significant fact is that there will be no increase in the volume of sales by reason of the additional shopping day, but there will be additional overhead expense, particularly by reason of increased payroll expense."

One Minnesota business leader said:

> "Sunday openings do not add to greater total sales volume in the area. You merely divide the pie into seven parts rather than six."

Some leaders also hold that if stores open in a concentrated area such as department stores, banks, parking lots, and other related services, this would run up extra costs for additional personnel and taxes for additional police and clean-up crews. This would inevitably be reflected in higher prices to the consumer.

Small stores would especially suffer from seven day openings. If small store operators must open on Sunday to meet their larger competitor on that day, many would find it impossible to stagger supervisory staff as the larger competitor can. This means that they would need to work seven days a week, an intolerable burden on the small independent businessman.

4. Assists in protecting standards of organized labor -

Labor officials claim that Sunday openings encourage the securing of extra work through "moonlighting" i.e. workers holding down more than a 40-hour per week job. This is detrimental to the health and safety of the worker and cuts down on the number of available jobs. Such extra work is also harmful to the worker's family, labor leaders argue, because of a lack of opportunity to carry out responsibilities as a spouse or parent.

One local labor leader said:

> "Our fear is that if we permit Sunday operation to continue, our town will be turned into a jungle with a dog-eat-dog philosophy. If stores are to be kept open seven days, the seven-day work week may be spread to organized labor, and we certainly do not want that to happen."

Many labor leaders and merchants also say that Sunday openings force employees to work unwillingly on Sunday. They claim that as more stores open on Sunday, employee relations will deteriorate as an increasing number of people are put to work on that day. Employee surveys indicate that the large "rank and file" of retail employees do not want to work on Sunday.

VI. ARGUMENTS AGAINST SUNDAY CLOSING

1. Penalizes those adhering to a different day of rest -

A substantial block of Jewish opinion is expressed by the amicus curiae brief prepared for the Supreme Court test of Sunday laws by the American Jewish Congress. The brief reads in part:

> "Enforcement of compulsory Sunday observance laws against "Sabbatarians" constitutes, in our view, a serious infringement of their civil, religious and economic rights and imposes a heavy burden upon their adherence to their religious beliefs. However, our concern extends beyond the interests of the particular parties to this litigation....It is our position that the principle of religious liberty is impaired if any person is penalized for adhering to his religious beliefs, or for not adhering to any religious belief, so long as he does not interfere with the rights of others or endanger the public peace or security."

2. Interference with individual freedom -

Mayor Naftalin did not object to the City Council ordinance for religious reasons, but rather for reasons of freedom. He said:

> "I cannot escape the conclusion that the proposed ordinance is an unwarranted interference with the personal freedom of our citizens, that it has the effect of discriminating against individuals who observe a day other than Sunday as their Sabbath, and that it seeks to impose a law by pattern of social and economic behavior that should be shaped not by government but by the free choices and the voluntary associations of the people themselves."

3. Hampers the complete freedom of economic forces -

Opponents hold that Sunday laws are an unwarranted governmental interference with the liberties of some merchants and with the liberties of the public to shop when and where it chooses. The point is further made that such statutes are based upon a combination of religious preferences and the preferences of a particular group of merchandisers to be free of unwelcome competition -- both improper bases for general legislation.

The Suburban Merchants Association of New Jersey insisted to Business Week that the Sunday closing issue was an economic one which had nothing to do either with the sensibilities of the religious majority or the way people have gotten used to working, worshipping, or spending their time on Sunday. One discounter told the magazine: "We stay open on Sundays because that's when people want to shop." This latter statement is one which is frequently emphasized by discount stores. Many hold that the American system of free enterprise requires that all political curbs upon our economic life be eliminated.

4. Sunday openings provide needed employment opportunities -

In answer to the charge that Sunday openings force employees to work unwillingly on Sunday, some discounters reply that recruiting is not a problem and that many Sunday workers are part-timers working their way through school or persons who need extra cash. Sunday openings, therefore, help to reduce unemployment.

VII. SATURDAY OPTION COMMENTS

A "Saturday option" provision in a Sunday closing law would allow a business to open Sunday if it closed Saturday. This would eliminate the difficulties of which Sabbatarians complain. Many feel that this would be a loophole through which some merchants would take advantage of the lack of competition on Sunday to open on that day. Others feel that the experience of states, which have enacted options only for religious observors, has not shown this to be a loophole and that such a Saturday option provision may be carefully drafted to avoid any undermining of Sunday closing. In his comments in the Appendix to this report Professor Jesse Choper believes that such an option provision would be constitutional.

VIII. CONCLUSIONS

The existing Minnesota laws on Sunday closing are outmoded and should be revised at the 1963 session of the legislature. Such legislation is especially needed in view of the present widespread differences practiced frequently by adjoining communities.

Because of strongly-held and conflicting opinions on these laws, widespread serious and temperate public discussion is needed. Understanding is especially urgent if the community wishes to control the changes in its pattern of life as new forms of retail trade press for heavy Sunday shopping.

We call upon Minnesota church and community leaders to urge their legislators to adopt and pass an effective Sunday Closing Law which would provide a Saturday option for those persons who abstain from work on that day because of religious convictions. We believe a common day marked by the cessation of work for the whole community contributes greatly to the welfare of the individual and the family, as well as the total health of our society. It is becoming increasingly clear that such a day in the week is more urgently needed as our society becomes highly mechanized and industrialized. Governments properly serve men by controlling impersonal economic forces which work against man's best interests.

As American citizens we are concerned about the rights of our minorities, and we feel that their rights are adequately protected by the Saturday option. In this respect, we believe that such legislation will contribute to the total well-being, not only to the majority of our citizens, but to the minorities as well. It is our considered judgment that Sunday closing legislation, should provide for a Saturday option (for those who hold to a Saturday day of rest), and this would help to protect the rights of our citizen minorities. Such legislation should be carefully drafted so as to exempt only religious observers and not provide a loophole for others.

With these principles in mind, we urge our legislators to responsibly frame the kind of a law which will bring the greatest benefits to the total community.

Finally, we believe that the conclusions of our study lay a very special responsibility upon Minnesota's religious, educational and business leaders concerning Sunday buying. If our society is to benefit from a less-commercialized day of rest, should not the churches, schools, advertisers and mass communications media of our state be responsible for educating our citizens at every age-level on the need to confine their purchases to the six business days of the week so that commercial transactions on a day of rest may be reduced to the minimum necessities for life and health? In our opinion this is a mandatory obligation if Sunday is to be truly a day of renewal for our citizens.

IX. APPENDIX

Comments on constitutionality of Sunday Closing Laws by Professor Jesse Choper, University of Minnesota

1. Sunday Option Opinion -

If the Minnesota legislature sees fit to fashion an exemption for Sabbatarians on the ground that they should be relieved from the burdens of this particular legislation, it would seem to me that this is clearly not contrary to the Federal Constitution, despite statements from some people otherwise. The U.S. Supreme Court struggled with the question as to whether or not the Sunday closing laws were constitutional as applied to Sabbatarians. The Court held that failure on the state's part to exempt these people is not unconstitutional. But the Court clearly indicated that as a matter of legislative wisdom if the State were to make an exemption for Sabbatarians this would not be contrary to the Constitution.

2. Constitutionality as Relates to Due Process -

In regard to the general constitutionality of Sunday closing laws, it is necessary to consider both the federal and the state constitutions. The first general point as far as both constitutions are concerned, is whether or not the legislation violates due process or equal protection of the laws. The U.S. Supreme Court has clearly held that so long as it is determined that the purpose and effect of the legislation is not religious but rather is cultural and is intended to provide a day of rest for all persons, then no violation of due process occurred. (McGowan case - the U.S. Supreme Court. The Minnesota Supreme Court seems to have held likewise in the case, State vs. Petit, 1898).

So far as the equal protection clause is concerned, the charge made has been that the various exemptions fashioned by the Legislature were arbitrary and without any rational basis, and therefore the entire Statute is unconstitutional.

The Supreme Court of the United States has given legislatures wide discretion in fashioning exemptions from the application of certain legislation. It found in the crazy-quilt statutes of Maryland, Pennsylvania and Massachusetts that had been before it, that all of the exemptions were based on some rational basis and therefor did not violate equal protection of the laws.

The Minnesota Supreme Court would seem to follow the same course as indicated by the decision in State vs. Petit.

3. Constitutionality as Relates to Religious Freedom -

The more important considerations involve religious freedom. One charge made against the Sunday closing laws in the U.S. Supreme Court was that they violated the provision of the Constitution which forbids states from passing a law respecting an establishment of religion.

The court here held that Sunday closing laws, although perhaps originally of a religious nature, were currently secular laws; and that despite the fact that they gave some aid to religion, this aid was incidental to the major purposes of the legislation which was cultural - that is, to provide a day of rest for all citizens.

The Minnesota Supreme Court seems to agree with this proposition in a series of cases over the years.

The other religious liberty contention is that the Sunday closing laws, when applied to people whose religious convictions demand that they refrain from work on Saturday, might constitutionally infringe on their religious liberty.

The U.S. Supreme Court rejected this contention on the grounds that the statute did not make unlawful any practice demanded by the sabbatarian religions, nor did they make unlawful the holding of any particular religious beliefs.

Rather the statute simply made the practice of religion more expensive and the Court held that a state legislature could find that despite this indirect infringement on religious exercise, the alternative courses available were so unsatisfactory that the state would be permitted to say that everyone must close his business on Sunday.

The Minnesota Supreme Court, State vs. Weiss, (1906), appears to take the same tack.

Again, I would like to make it clear that neither the Supreme Court of the United States nor the Minnesota Supreme Court has at any time indicated that if the legislature saw fit to exempt Sabbatarians, this would in any way be unconstitutional.

WHAT IS THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIANS AND JEWS?

NCCJ is a civic organization engaged in a nation-wide program of intergroup education. It enlists Protestants, Catholics and Jews who without compromise of conscience or of their distinctive and important religious differences work together to build better relationships among men of all religions, races and nationalities. Its operation is civic and social although, obviously, the roots of the brotherhood which it seeks to build are in the moral law and in religious faith.

10¢ per copy

Religion

PAV

NCCJ

what is the national conference
of christians and jews?

NCCJ

...was founded in 1928 by Charles Evans Hughes, Newton D. Baker, S. Parkes Cadman, Roger W. Straus, Carlton J. H. Hayes and other distinguished Americans.

It is a civic organization of religiously motivated people, seeking through education and discussion to promote civic cooperation and mutual understanding among men of good will of all religious and ethnic groups without compromise of religious beliefs.

Its purpose is positive: to approach more closely the national ideal of building "one nation, under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

It seeks the resolution of community problems by bringing to bear on them the moral insights shared by all the major religious groups and all persons of good will who make up our pluralistic society.

NCCJ's program is educational and follows a multiple approach at various levels to the intergroup situation in the community. It reaches millions of Americans annually by conducting programs with and through existing institutions and organizations of society.

It is not an "interfaith" movement. It does not aim at any sort of amalgamation of religious bodies or a least common denominator of doctrine. It does not engage in common worship. It seeks in all its work to guard against the dangers of religious indifferentism.

It is neither a propaganda organization nor a pressure group. It does not lobby, it does not pass resolutions "viewing with alarm." It is not an "action group" in the conventional sense. But the education it seeks to promote is itself a profoundly important form of action if it brings about a change of heart.

NCCJ provides a means for men and women of good will of differing religions to work together on common civic concerns.

THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIANS AND JEWS NOW STARTS ITS 35TH YEAR OF INCREASING PROGRAM TO BUILD BETTER HUMAN RELATIONS. WITH A BUDGET OF APPROXIMATELY THREE MILLION DOLLARS—A DEDICATED STAFF WORKING OUT OF NATIONAL HEADQUARTERS AND 65 REGIONAL OFFICES—WE SHALL CONTINUE TO WORK TOWARD THE GOAL OF BRINGING MUTUAL UNDERSTANDING INTO OUR NATIONAL LIFE.

Earl B. Schwulst

NATIONAL SPECIAL GIFTS CHAIRMAN

The National Conference of Christians and Jews has for nearly 35 years been a leading factor in promoting understanding and good will among our people, whatever their religion or race or national background. Upon this harmony and good will rests, in large measure, the eminent position occupied by our country among the nations of the world. I am honored and happy to serve as National Special Gifts Chairman for the 1963 Campaign and to do everything I can to further the good work of the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

I trust that the leaders of business and industry throughout the country will join in making the 1963 Campaign a resounding success.

Earl B. Schwulst
Chairman of the Board
The Bowery Savings Bank

major NCCJ program development areas and significant programs

We must help our children grow into emotional maturity so they do not use prejudice and hostility as a crutch for their own personality inadequacies.

NCCJ conducts "rearing children of good will" institutes, varied to meet local community needs, but focused upon the important role of parents in teaching children attitudes suited to democratic living.

The dissemination of accurate and objectively reported news about Catholics, Protestants, Eastern Orthodox and Jews helps to break down religious isolationism and prejudice.

The Religious News Service of the National Conference furnishes 450 newspapers, magazines and church publications and more than 200 radio and TV stations with photos, special features and daily dispatches on religious news.

To achieve the maximum impact in education, we must help train teachers and community leaders to acquire new understandings and skills in religious, racial and ethnic relations.

Since 1941 NCCJ has cooperated with leading colleges and universities in all parts of the country in a summer workshop program. In a university setting teachers and community leaders spend two to six weeks together, sharing, exchanging and learning practical ways of teaching good human relations.

Today's young people are tomorrow's leaders and America's future may very well depend upon the moral and spiritual values they acquire.

NCCJ is increasingly emphasizing its program for youth leaders. Camp conferences and institutes for high school youth provide opportunities to discuss issues of deep concern to young people.

It is evident that there can be no positive education for good human relations where peace and order are in jeopardy or where minority groups are victims of discrimination.

NCCJ's program in police-community relations includes an annual week-long national institute at Michigan State University, divisional police institutes and human relations programs for local police officers.

Opportunities for labor and management to meet and talk to one another about common human relations problems in non-crisis situations provide greater areas of understanding.

NCCJ institutes involving labor, management and community leaders help to create an understanding of mutual responsibility in crucial human relations problems.

In matters of interreligious relations the important consideration is not that agreement be reached but that lines of communication be kept open for a frank exchange of ideas and viewpoints.

A unique function of NCCJ through its program of dialogue is its role as a conferring agency, bringing together people of different religious affiliations for a friendly and frank exchange of viewpoints.

The development of sound informational materials on basic human relations problems expands knowledge and understanding.

NCCJ's extensive publication program produces intergroup relations materials for schools and colleges, churches and synagogues, civic agencies and the media of mass communications.

BROTHERHOOD WEEK, sponsored by the National Conference of Christians and Jews, has been observed since 1934. It is a time of renewal and resolution to sustain Brotherhood throughout the year.

NCCJ LEADERSHIP

Co-Chairmen

ROBERT D. MURPHY, President, Corning Glass International

LEWIS L. STRAUSS, Former U.S. Secretary of Commerce

CARROL M. SHANKS, Financial Consultant and Civic Leader

President LEWIS WEBSTER JONES

THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIANS AND JEWS is wholly supported by voluntary contributions from individuals, corporations, foundations, fraternal organizations and religious groups. These contributions make possible a network of 65 regional offices and their year-round programming for better human relations.

With its already established and proven experience in promoting understanding among all people, its educational program geared to reach people in all walks of life, NCCJ is uniquely qualified to meet the challenge of building a better democracy.

With your help and your contributions we can build toward the national ideal of one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

NCCJ

THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIANS AND JEWS

Co-Chairmen

CARROL M. SHANKS ROBERT D. MURPHY LEWIS L. STRAUSS

President

LEWIS WEBSTER JONES

ALBUQUERQUE, N. M.
8500 Rio Grande Blvd., N.W.

ASHEVILLE, N. C.
910 Southeastern Bldg.
Greensboro, N. C.

ATLANTA 3, GA.
1144 Bank of Georgia Bldg.

BALTIMORE 2, MD.
514 Keyser Bldg.

BEAUMONT, TEX.
P.O. Box 2465

BIRMINGHAM 3, ALA.
927-8 Comer Bldg.

BOSTON 8, MASS.
73 Tremont Street

BRONX 51, N. Y.
529 Courtlandt Ave.

BROOKLYN 1, N. Y.
105 Court Street

BUFFALO 2, N. Y.
Suite 36
Hotel Statler-Hilton

CHARLOTTE 2, N. C.
121 E. 3rd Street

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.
3323 Windsor Court

CHICAGO 1, ILL.
203 No. Wabash Ave.

CINCINNATI 2, O.
313 Keith Bldg.

CLEVELAND 14, O.
304 Investment Ins. Bldg.
E. 6th St. & Rockwell Ave.

DALLAS 1, TEX.
1028 Dallas Athletic Club Bldg.
1805 Elm Street

DENVER 2, COLO.
307 Denver Natl. Bldg.
821-17th Street

DES MOINES 9, IOWA
707 Empire Bldg.

DETROIT 2, MICH.
150 W. Boston Blvd.

DULUTH 2, MINN.
313 Bradley Bldg.
10 East Superior St.

EL PASO, TEX.
614 E. Yandell Blvd.

FORT WORTH 2, TEX.
214 Danciger Bldg.
Fifth & Throckmorton

GREENSBORO, N. C.
910 Southeastern Bldg.

HARTFORD 3, CONN.
983 Main Street

HOUSTON 2, TEX.
1109 Scanlan Bldg.

INDIANAPOLIS 4, IND.
108 E. Washington St.
Room 1501

JAMAICA 33, N. Y.
92-32 Union Hall St.

KANSAS CITY, MO.
916 Walnut St.

KNOXVILLE, TENN.
P.O. Box 685

LAS VEGAS, NEV.
United Fund Bldg.
1622 South A Street

LOS ANGELES 5, CALIF.
Suite 202
3335 Wilshire Blvd.

LOUISVILLE 2, KY.
501 Republic Bldg.

MEMPHIS 3, TENN.
414-15 Com. Title Bldg.

MIAMI 32, FLA.
305 Calumet Bldg.
10 N.E. Third Ave.

MILWAUKEE 2, WISC.
759 N. Milwaukee St.
Room 419

MINNEAPOLIS 2, MINN.
520 National Bldg.

NEWARK 2, N. J.
790 Broad Street

NEW ORLEANS 12, LA.
610 International Bldg.
611 Gravier St.

NEW YORK 19, N. Y.
43 West 57th St.

NORFOLK, VA.
269 Boush St.

OKLA. CITY 2, OKLA.
310 Com. Exch. Bldg.

OMAHA 2, NEB.
848 Insurance Bldg.

PHILA. 7, PA.
1211 Chestnut St.

PHOENIX 4, ARIZ.
624 Luhrs Bldg.

PITTSBURGH 22, PA.
1307 Keenan Bldg.

PORTLAND 5, ORE.
729 S.W. Alder St.

PROVIDENCE 6, R. I.
92 Benevolent Street

RICHMOND 30, VA.
203 Westwood Bldg.
2317 Westwood Ave.

SAN ANTONIO 5, TEX.
632 Three A Life Bldg.
118 Broadway

SAN FRANCISCO 3, CALIF.
Suite 815
Central Tower
703 Market Street

SEATTLE 1, WASH.
701 Seaboard Bldg.

SOUTH BEND 1, IND.
128 Franklin Place

ST. LOUIS 1, MO.
1615 Chemical Bldg.

TUCSON, ARIZ.
2819 E. Beverly Drive

TULSA 3, OKLA.
515 S. Denver

UPPER NEW YORK STATE
43 West 57th St.
New York 19, N. Y.

WASHINGTON 5, D. C.
735 Southern Bldg.
1425 H St., N.W.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y.
175 Main Street

WICHITA 2, KAN.
257 No. B'way.
Suite 104

WICHITA FALLS, TEX.
718 10th St.

WILKES-BARRE, PA.
28 Rose St.
Forty Fort, Pa.

WILLIAMSPORT, PA.
R.D. #2
Montoursville, Pa.

WILMINGTON, DEL.
1011 Washington St.

Canadian Council of Christians and Jews
506-508 Ryrie Bldg., 229 Yonge St., Toronto, Canada

ORDER BLANK

Date _____

National Conference on Religion and Race
150 Fifth Avenue (Corner 20th Street) - Room 632
New York, New York, 10011
Telephone: (212) AL 5-7575-6

_____
Name (Please Print)

_____
Name of Organization

SPECIAL INSTRUCTIONS: _____

_____
Street Address

_____

_____
City & State

Please send me:

	No. Of Copies	Unit Cost	Total
Appeal to Consciente of American People - Attractive printed folder: First copy FREE but please enclose 5¢ stamp for mailing; 2-49 copies - postage prepaid - 5¢ each; 50-199, 3¢ each; 200 or more, 2½ ¢ each.	____	____	____
Catalogue of Resources - Single copy $1; 5-49 at 75¢ each; 50 copies or more at 65¢ each.	____	____	____
Press Coverage Booklet - 100 pages News & Photos - Single copy $1; 5-49 at 75¢ each; 50 copies or more at 65¢ each.	____	____	____
Religion's Role in Racial Crisis - 1-49 copies, 65¢ each; 50 or more 40¢ each.	____	____	____
Conference Recommendations - Single copies 15¢ each; 20-99 copies 10¢ each; 100 or more 7½ ¢ each.	____	____	____
Book: "Race: Challenge to Religion" - Paperback book $1.50 each; 25 or more at $1.40 each - shipping prepaid.	____	____	____
"Letter From Birmingham City Jail" by Martin Luther King, Jr. (15 page pamphlet) - 1-99 copies 10¢ each; 100-999 copies 8¢ each; 1,000 or more copies at 6¢ each.	____	____	____
The Dialogue - Reporting on the National Conference on Religion and Race follow-up. (Publication of N.C.C.J.) By Dr. Claud D. Nelson - 15¢ each.	____	____	____
Newsletter - 10 copies per year - Current events of what is happening across the country - $3.00 per year.	____	____	____
		TOTAL	$ ____

Order will be sent upon receipt of check or money order for the total sum.
Please make check payable to: National Conference on Religion and Race.

Religion

RELIGIOUS PRACTICES IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS

A Discussion by: Rabbi Joseph Klein, Editor, C.C.A.R. Journal

Mr. Victor Bovee, Editor, Unitarian Universalist Register Leader

Mr. Arthur Gilbert, N.C.C.J., Moderator

Prepared for radio transcription, March 7, 1963, as part of the Religious Editors Institute of the Project, Religious Freedom and Public Affairs
National Conference of Christians and Jews
43 West 57th Street, New York, N.Y.

RELIGIOUS PRACTICES IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Introduction:

The National Conference of Christians and Jews has inaugurated a new program entitled, Religious Freedom and Public Affairs. This project will bring together on a national and regional level, priests, ministers and rabbis across the country for the purpose of discussing those issues in the public order about which religious groups differ. Complex and knotty questions such as public funds for the church school, religious practices in the public school, the distribution of birth control devices and Sunday closing laws are on the agenda.

Recently the project, Religious Freedom and Public Affairs, called together thirty five editors of Catholic, Jewish and Protestant publications. For the first time these editors of church and synagogue magazines and newspapers confronted each other in frank and honest discussion. Participating in this symposium held during the Editors' Institute are: Rabbi Joseph Klein, Editor of the C.C.A.R. Journal, and Mr. Victor Bovee, Editor of the Unitarian Universalist Register Leader and Rabbi Arthur Gilbert of the N.C.C.J. The topic for discussion: "Religious Practices in the Public Schools."

This is an edited transcription of their remarks.

Arthur Gilbert: If my memory stands me correctly, Mr. Bovee, Unitarian parents were involved in the litigation that brought to the Supreme Court the case that led to the famous prayer decision where the Supreme Court ruled that a state may not compose or sanction a prayer for children in the public school. Unitarian parents are also involved in the case now pending before the Supreme Court dealing with devotional Bible reading exercises in Pennsylvania public schools. What is this concern of Unitarians for these religious practices in the public schools? Why are they engaged in litigation at this time?

Victor Bovee: It will help to know that the Unitarian-Universalist Association requires of its members no adherence to any particular theological doctrine or precept. As a result a Unitarian or a Universalist may be a Christian, a theist, a humanist; he may be an agnostic or he may be by his own profession an atheist. He is still welcome within the Fellowship. Because of this wide range of diversity - and it is a wider range than in any other denomination - Unitarians and Universalists are greatly concerned that no religious practice be imposed upon any of their members; or particularly, in these cases, upon the children of members who wish to teach their own religious values.

Arthur Gilbert: Are you suggesting that these Unitarian parents have been engaged in such litigation as individuals but that the church itself, as church, has not been actively involved in pressing this cause?

Victor Bovee: This is partly correct, at least, and in these particular cases it is correct. These actions were brought by individual Unitarians and in some of the cases in conjunction with people of other faiths; but they were not instituted by the Unitarian-Universalist Association, or by any Unitarian-Universalist agency.

Arthur Gilbert: In contrast, Rabbi Klein, I believe the Reform Jewish movement of which you are a leader has actually involved itself in testimony in Congressional hearings and as a "friend of the court" in the recent suit dealing with Bible reading in the public schools and in the prayer case. What accounts for this seemingly paradoxical position on the part of the religious Jewish community to oppose prayer and Bible reading in the public schools of the United States?

Rabbi Klein: Well, first we ought to point out that the Jewish community, the religious Jewish community, that is, believes very strongly in prayer. The Jewish prayer book is a very lengthy one, as you well know, and we do not minimize prayer and worship, nor do we regard it as something unimportant. The fact of the matter is that we try in every way possible in all our groups to encourage prayer not only in the synagogue, but in the home as well. However, we believe very ardently also, in the First Amendment to the Constitution which makes it very clear that the state may make no law which established religion in any form or which abridges religious freedom. We believe that when prayer is imposed upon children in a public school classroom it is denial of their religious freedom. It, in effect, becomes an establishment of religion in the classroom. In most instances, the kind of prayer that is recited in the classroom is sectarian in character, as for example, "The Lord's Prayer" which is distinctly in its context a Christian prayer. Similarly, the Bible Reading ordinances do not always specify what kind of Bible reading it must be; and passages may be selected from the Bible which are not in accord with the feelings of parents of the Jewish faith.

Arthur Gilbert: Would Jewish parents accept those religious practices, however, that are non-sectarian or that do not violate Jewish conscience? If a prayer were a non-sectarian prayer or the Bible reading taken from the Jewish Publication Society version of the Bible and only from the Old Testament, would Jewish religious leadership still oppose such practices in the school?

Rabbi Klein: There are some Jews who would favor this, but they represent a minority. I believe that the majority of Jews take the position that there should be no religious practice of any kind in the classroom for the simple reason that the State would have to legislate such religious practice into being and it would definitely establish, even if only in a partial sense, religion in the public school or in the classroom. The general feeling in the Jewish community is that there should be a complete wall of separation between Church and State. The State should not meddle in the affairs of the Church. The Church should not involve itself in the affairs of the State.

Arthur Gilbert: Mr. Bovee, Rabbi Klein has indicated that his constituency would consider it a violation of their religious freedom were the state to impose prayer or Bible reading or other religious exercises upon their children. You, too, have indicated that Unitarian parents are opposed to such an imposition of religious exercises in which they cannot participate in full conscience. Yet both Rabbi Klein and you represent religious groups that are in a minority in this country. How would you respond to a person who questions the right of this minority to infringe upon the freedom of the overwhelming majority to maintain customs and traditions that have been part of the long heritage of this country,i.e., the acknowledgement of the existence of this nation "under God," the role of the Bible as an important symbol and the use of prayer as a means of sanctifying important occasions in the national life of this country? How would you answer a person who questions whether or not under these judicial rulings a minority is not seeking to impose its will on the majority?

Mr. Bovee: If there is anything clear from a study of the Constitution and of the Constitutional Convention which created it, it is that certain areas of our lives, should not be determined by majority rule. These appear in the Bill of Rights and among them is the First Amendment to which Rabbi Klein referred. In other words, the inclusion of the First Amendment and the ban upon the establishment of religion by government fiat was an effort to set aside this issue of religious freedom as something that should not be determined by majority rule, something that should not be imposed by a majority upon a minority.

Arthur Gilbert: This evidently was the point of view of one of the Justices of the Supreme Court during the course of the recent hearings with regard to the Bible reading case. He asked the attorneys for the state whether they would be willing to accept a situation where in each community the majority could decide which prayers would be recited. He pointed to the fact that in Hawaii Buddhists are of a considerable size. Might it not be conceivable, he asked, that all Christian children would have to engage in a prayer in the name of Buddha? Of course when the issue is posed in this fashion it gives us pause. It helps us to understand that we cannot so freely by majority rule decide what prayers or what religious exercises all individuals must participate in as a mark of their citizenship.

I think Rabbi Klein and Mr. Bovee that you are on good historical ground when you indicate that minorities use litigation as a means of attaining an adjudication of their rights. In the long course of American history this has been the case. At one time, little more than 100 years ago, for example, Catholics brought to the courts of the United States similar cases dealing with Bible reading and Protestant prayer in the public schools. Some 20 years ago Jehovah Witnesses brought to the Supreme Court cases dealing with their right to abstain from the Pledge of Allegiance to the flag of the U.S. on religious grounds. Now it would appear that Unitarians and members of the Ethical Culture community and Jews have been involved in litigation over these religious practices in the public school.

Could you perhaps add a word explaining why litigation has been resorted to by your communities? Does it reflect the fact that you have been unsuccessful in efforts at dialogue or education or accomodation to achieve satisfaction of your rights?

Rabbi Klein: Generally, when one finds that a state has enacted a law that makes prayer or Bible reading compulsory, he can presume that such action has been taken through the influence and the pressure of religious groups. A state legislature does not enact a law of this type unless there is pressure put on it to do so. Minority groups, under these circumstances, have very little voice in determining what the policy of the state will be. But feeling very strongly that the Bill of Rights in the Constitution was meant primarily to protect minority groups they have resorted to litigation before the courts; and in most instances, the courts have sustained their point of view, indicating that this was the original intent in the minds of the framers of the Constitution. I am not afraid that our society will become a "Godless" society merely because prayers are not included in the public schools. As a matter of fact I think that religion becomes weakened when it uses the State as a crutch, and tries to get the state to help it carry out a program that really belongs to the church and the home. I believe that our country will benefit greatly when religious institutions do not rely upon our states to help them carry out their religious programs.

Mr. Bovee: I would like to add one thing to what Rabbi Klein has said. It should be made quite clear that Unitarians and Universalists do not oppose prayer as such, nor do they oppose Bible reading as such. They practice these things, in fact, in their own churches and in their own homes. The essential element here is the determination by the state of what an individual's religious practices ought be. In the public school system, where our children are a captive audience of the state, we do not believe that we can permit the government to determine those religious exercises.

Arthur Gilbert: Do you not believe, Rabbi Klein, that there is some danger that if any reference to God or use of prayer is removed from the public school we will create a public school - by virtue of the absence of religion - that will, in effect, teach our children that God is of no meaning or importance in life? Is there not some danger that in removing God from the public school we permit a form of secular humanism to enter into the vacuum; and that this is a competing religion that ought give religious individuals some concern?

Rabbi Klein: No, I'm not worried about that at all. This really gives me no concern. Again, I say that it is the business of the home and the church and synagogue to teach religious concepts and to make God meaningful in the life of the child. The word God itself becomes a meaningless term unless there is some understanding given to the child as to what is meant by God. Catholic, Protestant and Jewish interpretations of God differ even within their own respective groups. There are broad differences in theological belief. To try to give to children a God concept within the public school without any explanation makes of the concept something meaningless. I have a feeling in my own mind that because religion becomes so limited when dealt with by the public school that we actually create a situation wherein the school achieves disrespect for religious concepts rather than an enhancement of them.

Arthur Gilbert: Thank you, Rabbi Klein, and Victor Bovee. Both of you are representatives of religious communities. By your discussion, you have indicated that there are men of religion for whom God is important who will, nevertheless, for the reasons you have suggested, oppose religious practices in the public school. It is evident, of course, that there are Catholics and Protestants who will differ sharply with the views presented by Rabbi Klein and Mr. Bovee. It is the conviction of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, however, that such issues need be aired and that religious leaders holding these opposing points of view have an obligation to sit together and to discuss their points of view in order to better understand each other. This is the purpose of the Project and for such reason were these editors called together.

10-13-58
Resist. Grps. Misc.
1963

High Court's 'Arrogance' Is Viewed By Northerner

•

A letter to the President

By CARLETON PUTNAM

Carleton Putnam, who wrote the following to President Eisenhower, is a member of the famous New England Putnam family, a native of New York City, a graduate of Princeton and Columbia, founder and president of Chicago and Southern Airlines (1933-1948), and is on the board of Delta Airlines. He recently published a widely-praised biography of Theodore Roosevelt.

70979

Washington, D. C.
Oct. 13, 1958

The Hon. Dwight D. Eisenhower
President of the United States
The White House
Washington 25, D. C.
My dear Mr. President:

A few days ago I was reading over Justice Frankfurter's opinion in the recent Little Rock case. Three sentences in it tempt me to write you this letter.

I am a Northerner, but I have spent a large part of my life as a business executive in the South. I have a law degree, but I am now engaged in historical writing.

From this observation post I risk the presumption of a comment.

The sentences I wish to examine are these: "Local customs, however hardened by time, are not decreed in heaven. Habits and feelings they engender may be counteracted and moderated. Experience attests that such local habits and feelings will yield, gradually though this be, to law and education."

* * *

IT IS MY PERSONAL CONVICTION that the local customs in this case were "hardened by time" for a very good reason, and that while they may not, as Frankfurter says, have been decreed in heaven, they come closer to it than the current view of the Supreme Court.

I was particularly puzzled by Frankfurter's remark that "the Constitution is not the formulation of the merely personal views of the members of this court."

Five minutes before the court's desegregation decision, the Constitution meant one thing; five minutes later, it meant something else. Only one thing intervened, namely, an expression of the personal views of the members of the court.

* * *

IT IS NOT my purpose to dispute the point with which the greater part of Frankfurter's opinion is concerned. The law must be obeyed. But I think the original desegregation decision was wrong, that it ought to be reversed, and that meanwhile every legal means should be found, not to disobey it, but to avoid it. Failing this, the situation should be corrected by constitutional amendment.

* * *

I CANNOT AGREE that this is a matter involving "a few states" as Frankfurter suggests. The picture in reality is of a court, by one sudden edict, forcing upon the entire South a view, and a way of life, with which the great majority of the population are in complete disagreement.

Although not from the legal, in fact from the practical, standpoint the North, which does not have the problem, is presuming to tell the South, which does have the problem, what to do.

To me there is a frightening arrogance in this performance. Neither the North, nor the court, has any holy mandate inherent in the trend of the times or the progress of liberalism to reform society in the South.

In the matter of schools, rights to equal education are inseparably bound up with rights to freedom of association and, in the South at least, may require that both be considered simultaneously. (In using the word "association" here I mean the right to associate with whom you please, and the right not to associate with whom you please.)

In any case the crux of this issue would seem obvious: Social status has to be earned.

Personally I feel only affection for the Negro. But there are facts that have to be faced. Any man with two eyes in his head can observe a Negro settlement in the Congo, can study the pure-blooded African in his native habitat as he exists when left on his own resources, can compare this settlement with London or Paris, and can draw his own conclusions regarding relative levels of character and intelligence—or that combination of character and intelligence which is civilization.

Finally he can inquire as to the number of pure-blooded blacks who have made contributions to great literature or engineering or medicine or philosophy or abstract science.

We were all in caves or trees originally. The progress which the pure-blooded black has made when left to himself, with a minimum of white help or hindrance, genetically or otherwise, can be measured today in the Congo.

Lord Bryce, a distinguished impartial foreign observer, presented the situation accurately in his American Commonwealth when he wrote in 1880:

> "History is a record of the progress toward civilization of races originally barbarous. But that progress has in all cases been slow and gradual . . . Utterly dissimilar is the case of the African Negro, caught up in and whirled along with the swift movement of the American democracy. In it we have a singular juxtaposition of the most primitive and the most recent, the most rudimentary and the most highly developed, types of culture . . . A body of savages is violently carried across the ocean and set to work as slaves on the plantations of masters who are three or four thousands years in advance of them in mental capacity and moral force . . . Suddenly, even more suddenly than they were torn from Africa, they find themselves, not only free, but made full citizens and active members of the most popular gov- ernment the world has seen, treated as fit to bear an equal part in ruling, not only themselves, but also their recent masters."

One does not telescope three or four thousand years into the 70 years since Bryce wrote.

* * *

I WOULD EMPHATICALLY support improvement of education in Negro schools, if and where it is inferior.

Equality of opportunity and equality before the law, when not strained to cover other situations, are acceptable ideals because they provide the chance to earn and to progress—and consequently should be enforced by legal fiat as far as is humanly possible.

Throughout this controversy there has been frequent mention of the equality of man as a broad social objective. No proposition in recent years has been characterized by more loose thinking. Few of us would care to enter a poetry contest with a top-ranking poet. And few would care to play chess with the champion.

* * *

PIN DOWN THE MAN who uses the word "equality," and at once the evasions and qualifications begin. As I recall, you, yourself, in a recent statement used some phrase to the effect that men were "equal in the sight of God."

I would be interested to know where in the Bible you get your authority for this conception. There is doubtless authority in Scripture for the concept of potential equality in the sight of God—after earning that status, and with various further qualifications—but where is the authority for the sort of ipso facto equality suggested by your context? The whole idea contradicts the basic tenet of the Christian and Jewish religions that status is earned through righteousness and is not an automatic matter.

* * *

FRANKFURTER closes his opinion with a quotation from Abraham Lincoln, to whom the Negro owes more than to any other man. I, too, would like to quote from Lincoln. At Charleston, Ill., in September, 1858, in a debate with Douglas, Lincoln said:

"I am not, nor ever have been in favor of bringing about in any way the social and political equality of the white and black races; I am not nor ever have been in favor of making voters or jurors of Negroes nor qualifying them to hold office . . . I will say in addition to this that there is a physical difference between the white and black races which I believe will ever forbid the two races living together on terms of social and political equality. And in as much as they cannot so live, while they do remain together, there must be the position of superior and inferior, and I as much as any other man am in favor of having the superior position assigned to the white race."

The extent to which Lincoln would have modified these views today, or may have modified them before his death, is a moot question, but it is clear on its face that he would not have been in sympathy with the Supreme Court's position on desegregation.

* * *

PERHAPS the most discouraging spectacle is the spectacle of Northern newspapers dwelling with pleasure upon the predicament of the Southern parent who is forced to choose between desegregation and no school at all for his child.

It does not seem to occur to the papers that this is the cruelest sort of blackmail; that the North is virtually putting a pistol at the head of the Southern parent in a gesture which every Northerner must contemplate with shame.

Indeed, there now seems little doubt that the court's recent decision has set back the cause of the Negro in the South by a generation.

He may force his way into white schools, but will not force his way into white hearts nor earn the respect he seeks.

What evolution was slowly and wisely achieving, revolution has now arrested, and the trail of bitterness will lead far.

Sincerely yours,
CARLETON PUTNAM

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION

WRITE TO THE

EDUCATIONAL FUND OF THE

CITIZENS' COUNCILS

GREENWOOD, MISS.

READ AND PASS ON

WE NEED YOUR HELP

We hope you can make a contribution to the Educational Fund which will be used to

(1) Publish and distribute nationwide factual literature presenting the case for states' rights and racial integrity.

(2) Initiate a movement to enter the national propaganda media such as the national press services, television, radio, national publications and the motion picture industry.

Our auditors believe contributions will be deductible from your income tax. Every effort will be made to get this tax-free status, and we believe these efforts will be successful.

3-16-59

Resist Grp. Misc
1963

Second Putnam Letter Cuts Root of Integration Fallacy

A Letter To THE ATTORNEY GENERAL
of
THE UNITED STATES

By CARLETON PUTNAM

Carleton Putnam is a member of the famous New England Putnam family, a native of New York City, a graduate of Princeton and Columbia, founder and president of Chicago and Southern Airlines (1933-1948), and is on the board of Delta Airlines. He recently published a widely-praised biography of Theodore Roosevelt.

71444

March 16, 1959

The Honorable William P. Rogers
Attorney General of the United States Department of Justice
Washington 25, D. C.

My dear Mr. Attorney General:

Following my correspondence with your Department in December, I have had a chance to review your briefs in the school desegregation cases and also to scan, as carefully as time permitted, the nine relevant volumes of the Supreme Court's Records and Briefs. I hesitate to impose further upon your kindness, but my survey has left one question in my mind upon which the record does not appear to touch, and which you may be able to answer.

I turn to you for the reason that, as a non-adversary party to these proceedings, I understand you to have represented the people of the United States. Since a majority of the population of the South are obviously against integration, and since the Gallup Poll for September 24, 1958, indicates that 58% of the white population of the North would not put their children in schools where more than half the enrollment is Negro, it becomes a close question whether the decision of the Supreme Court in these cases was not in fact contrary to the wishes of a national majority. While I recognize that this would in no way affect the validity of the decision, it would seem to have placed a peculiar responsibility upon you.

The matter which I find curious is the omission in your briefs of any challenge to the authorities cited by the Court in Footnote 11 to their opinion of May 17, 1954. I assume there must have been some indication, in argument or elsewhere, that these authorities were to be used. They appear, in large measure, to form the foundation of the decision. They reflect a point of view rooted in what I may call modern equalitarian anthropology — a school which holds that all races are currently equal in their capacity for culture, and that existing inequalities of status are due solely to inequalities of opportunity. While the briefs for the State of Virginia touch upon the qualifications of some of the individual psychologists who testified in the lower courts, they contain no examination of the underlying anthropological theory. It seems to me that such an examination should have been made. I have a science degree, I have read with some diligence in the field of anthropology and I have discussed the subject with competent anthropologists. It is my considered opinion that two generations of Americans have been victimized by a psuedo-scientific hoax in this field, that this hoax is part of an equalitarian propaganda typical of the left-wing overdrift of our times, and that it will not stand an informed judicial test. I do not believe that ever before has science been more warped by a self-serving few to the deception and injury of so many. On this subject there may be disagreement. But it is clear to me the Court should have been invited to examine the question.

Allow me to give my reasons for this opinion. The Court says in Footnote 11 "see generally Myrdal, An American Dilemma," and I start with this book. I need hardly dwell upon the highly socialistic bias of its foreign author, and the startling remarks with which his text is peppered, such as his comment that the American Constitution "is in many respects impractical and ill-suited for modern conditions," that the Constitutional Convention of 1787 "was nearly a plot against the common people" and that in the conflict between liberty and equality in the United States, "equality is slowly winning." A foreign socialist could not, perhaps, have realized that Jefferson's statement "all men are created equal" was a corruption from the Virginia Declaration of Rights, where the original wording read "all men are created equally free," nor that if equality (in any sense other than equality of opportunity and equality before the law) is defeating liberty in the United States, then everything America has stood for is in jeopardy, but certainly it was essential that these matters be called to the Court's attention in evaluating Myrdal's book.

I hasten, however, to the basic hypothesis underlying Myrdal's 1400 pages. On pages 90-91 he introduces the doctrines of Franz Boas, a foreign-born Columbia University professor who arrived in the United States in 1886, who was himself a member of a racial minority group, and who may be called the father of equalitarian anthropology in America. From these pages forward, Myrdal's Dilemma is founded upon the philosophy of Boas and his disciples. Thereafter, one constantly finds in Myrdal such sentences as these:

> "The last two or three decades have seen a veritable revolution in scientific thought on the racial characteristics of the Negro. . . . By inventing and applying ingenious specialized research methods, the popular race dogma (that races are not by nature equal in their capacity for culture) is being victoriously pursued into every corner and effectively exposed as fallacious or at least unsubstantiated. . . . It is now becoming difficult for even popular writers to express other views than the ones of racial equalitarianism and still retain intellectual respect."

If you have not already read him, I invite you to a thorough and impartial study of Boas. I am confident you will find his views wholly unconvincing, his doctrines more "unsubstantiated" than those he attacks, and his approach so saturated with wishful thinking as to be pathetic. In even the most superficial analysis of the subject, Boas should have been challenged and his more obvious errors exposed. Boas, for example, may have been convinced that the average African's improvident indifference to "tomorrow" is just a healthy "optimism", but I dare say the proverbial reasonable man on a jury would think of it less charitably.

If the deceptions of the Boas school were unconscious, they were nevertheless serious. People, for instance, were induced to believe that because early anthropologists put emphasis on brain pan size in their studies of race, and brain pan size was later proved to be an invalid criterion, this automatically made all races equal. No one took the time to point out that not only is brain pan size not a final test of intelligence, but that, even if it were, equal brain size would not prove equal capacity for civilization. The character-intelligence index — the combination of intelligence with all the qualities that go under the name of character, including especially the willingness to resist rather than to appease evil — forms the only possible index of the capacity for civilization as Western Europeans know it, and there is no test for this index save in observing the native culture in which it results. Such observation does not sustain the doctrine of equality.

Indeed, the entire foundation of the Boas theory rests on sand. It is based on the assumption that present day cultural differences between the Negro and other races are due, not to any natural limitations, but to isolation and historical accident. This theme has been taken up again and again by later anthropologists, such as Kluckhohn of Harvard, and repeated as established scientific fact. I may illustrate the argument by comparing the condition of the white tribes of Northern Europe just before the fall of Rome with the Negro tribes in the Congo. Both were primitive and barbaric, both were isolated from civilization. With the conquest of Rome by the white barbarians, the northern tribes were brought in contact with the ancient Greco-Roman civilization and gradually absorbed its culture. The Negro, on the other hand, lacked such a contact and therefore remained in statu quo.

This was Boas' historical accident, and his explanation of the Negro's present level of civilization in Africa. Boas had various additional points and refinements of his thesis, such as the advantage the white barbarians enjoyed in contiguity of habitat and the more moderate differences in modes of manufacture in earlier times, which made it easier for backward peoples in those days to compete commercially with more advanced cultures than was the case in later centuries when our white civilization invaded Africa, but these arguments hang on the first point. In other words, had the Negroes shown the enterprise and initiative of the white barbarians, the Negroes themselves would have established a contiguity of habitat and had the advantage of more moderate differences in modes of manufacture.

As far as isolation is concerned, it hardly seems necessary to point out that the Alps did not keep the white barbarians out of Italy, and that the Nile Valley was open to the Negroes into Egypt. One observer, recently returned from an intensive tour of Africa and himself apparently a racial equalitarian, nevertheless feels compelled to include these sentences in his report:

> "Why, when in China, India, Mesopotamia and on the Mediterranean coasts and islands, men isolated almost completely from one another, during some 5,000 years independently developed writing and metal tools, invented compasses, built temples and bridges, formulated philosophies, wrote books and poems — why, then, did similar progress not occur in Africa?
>
> "I posed the question to many Africans. Their answer: the desert, the heat, disease, isolation — and always these words: 'For centuries our most vigorous young men were taken off as slaves.'

"The answer falls short. China has a desert; India's climate is as hot and as unhealthy; Mesopotamia indeed is hotter — and was surrounded by deserts. As for the slave trade, why were the Africans not making slaves of the Portuguese and the Arabs?"

This report, prepared by the assistant to the publisher of "Time" magazine, goes on to seek justification for the equalitarian viewpoint in the modern intelligence test and the modern performance of the exceptional Negro, answers which fall as far short as the others. The field of the intelligence test, like the field of Boas' anthropology, is filled with wishful thinking, with comparisons of the better Negroes and the poorer whites, with studies of mulattoes whose successes are largely proportionate to the admixture of white genes, and with similar avoidance of the essential point, namely, that in matters of race either the average of one must be compared with the average of the other, or the best of one must be compared with the best of the other.

If we are to compare averages, there is probably no better laboratory than the rural area around Chatham, Ontario, Canada. Chatham is a town at the northern end of the pre-Civil War "underground railroad" where a community of the descendants of escaped slaves has existed for 100 years. The social and economic situation of Negroes and whites in the rural area around Chatham is approximately equal. The schools have always been integrated, yet the tests of Negroes in these rural schools show them, after 100 years, to be as far below the whites in the same schools as the Negroes in the schools of the South are below the whites in the schools of the South. Dr. H. A. Tanser, now Superintendent of Schools at Chatham, published a study of this matter in 1939. The study is never mentioned by the modern school of equalitarian anthropology, but you will find it in the Library of Congress. Did your Department give it consideration?

In this connection, you are perhaps aware that Dr. Audrey M. Shuey, Chairman of the Department of Psychology at Randolph-Macon Woman's College, published a report in 1958 surveying and summarizing the results of 40 years of intelligence tests involving whites and Negroes. Dr. Shuey took her B. A. at the University of Illinois, her M. A. at Wellesley, and her Ph. D. at Columbia. Her book contains a foreword by Dr. Henry E. Garrett who was formerly president of the American Psychological Association, the Eastern Psychological Association, the New York State Association of Applied Psychology and the Psychomatic Society. In his foreword, Dr. Garrett says:

> "Dr. Shuey finds that at several age levels and under a variety of conditions, Negroes regularly score below whites. There is, to be sure, an overlapping of scores, a number of Negroes scoring above the white medians. This overlap means that many individual Negroes achieve high scores on the tests. But the mean differences persist. Dr. Shuey concludes that the regularity and consistency of the results strongly imply a racial basis for these differences. I believe that the weight of evidence supports her conclusion."

Dr. Shuey states that "the remarkable consistency of test results . . . all point to the presence of some native differences between Negroes and whites determined by intelligence tests", and she adds the significant comment: "The tendency for the IQ's of colored children to become progressively lower with increase in age has been reported by a number of investigators who tested Negro children. . . . One is confronted with the probability of a continuance during adolescence of what seems to be a widening gap between the races." I recognize that Dr. Shuey's report was not extant at the time of the Brown decision, but a large part of her material was available, and in my opinion should have been submitted to the Court. I repeat that I do not consider the intelligence test decisive, as I believe character to be more important than intelligence, but in answer to those who use the intelligence test to support theories of racial equality, surely Tanser's and Shuey's material belonged in the record.

If, on the other hand, we compare the best with the best, the discrepancies are even clearer. I had occasion to ask Kluckhohn a question with respect to a statement in his Mirror for Man at page 126. This statement reads: "It is true that the total richness of Negro civilizations is at least quantitatively less impressive than that of Western or Chinese civilization." (Emphasis mine.) I asked Kluckhohn if he would mind defining in what respects he found it qualitatively as impressive. I told him I was curious as to one poem equal to Milton's Paradise Lost, one history equal to Gibbon's Decline and Fall, one novel equal to Dicken's David Copperfield, one playwright equal to Shakespeare, one philosopher equal to Aristotle, one medical discovery equal to Salk's polio vaccine, one military leader equal to Napoleon, one inventor equal to Edison, one physicist equal to Einstein, one pioneer equal to Columbus, one statesman equal to Lincoln, one composer equal to Beethoven, one painter equal to Rembrandt. I have received no reply, but Kluckhohn's "at least quantitatively" seems to me typical of the deceptive words used by our modern equalitarian anthropology. The Court should not have been left in the dark on this tendency. Although they do not specifically cite Kluckhohn, he is one of the leaders of the modern school on which Myrdal rests his case.

I have found that a favorite method used by Boas and Kluckhohn for throwing dust in the eyes of the public is to create an impression that there is really no such thing as race. Although Kluckhohn begins the third paragraph of the fifth chapter of his Mirror for Man with the sentence "There are undoubtedly human races," he nevertheless entitles this chapter "Race: A Modern Myth." His thesis is that culture, not race, is what makes human beings what they are. Yet nowhere is the obvious fact examined that culture is absorbed, refined and advanced in proportion to racial capacity. There are, of course, certain modifying variables, among the chief of which are climate and economic conditions. The white culture of New England differs from the white culture of the Deep South, but not as much as the white culture of Southern Florida differs from the black culture of Haiti, where the climate is approximately the same. That is to say, the effect of the variables is clearly less decisive than the fundamental difference in race.

Undoubtedly an individual or group, taken out of the cultural environment of their own race and brought up in that of another, will sometimes absorb some features of the culture of the new environment, but in such instances they become parasites upon the culture of the second race. They are carried up, or carried down, as the case may be, by the overwhelming impact of the environment of the second race. Their own capacity to contribute to, and to sustain, a culture can only be judged by the performance of their own race in its native habitat. And if that capacity is low, then too many of them, too freely integrated, must inevitably in the long run lower the culture of the second race.

There have, not unnaturally, been situations in which a race has captured the spark of culture in one habitat but not in another. In the case of the fall of the Roman Empire, the barbarians were, broadly speaking, members of the same race as the conquered. Here we find two branches of the white race, one of which had produced a culture while the other had not, and here the Boas theory of historical accident is tenable. Similarity of tinder permitted passage of the spark. It was still the white race that absorbed, and eventually carried forward, the Roman culture.

The essential question in this whole controversy is whether the Negro, given every conceivable help regardless of cost to the whites, is capable of full adaptation to our white civilization within a matter of a few generations, or whether the record indicates such adaptation cannot be expected save in terms of many hundreds, if not thousands, of years, and that complete integration of these races, especially in the heavy black belts of the South, can result only in a parasitic deterioration of white culture, with or without genocide. I am certain neither you nor the Court, nor any significant number of Northerners would knowingly shackle upon their racial brothers in the South against their will a system which would produce either of the latter results. The sin of Cain would pale by comparison.

Yet to my mind it seems obvious that all the facts, and a preponderance of theory, are against Myrdal and his authorities. I would go so far as to say that in the last fifty years anthropology has been drafted to serve the demi-Goddess of Equalitarianism instead of the Goddess of Truth, and the modern school in this field has a stern judgment to face, both at the bar of American public opinion and at the hands of two generations of youth whose thinking has been corrupted by it. One does not build a healthy society on error. One faces the truth, and deals with it as best one can.

I pass now from Myrdal, and the sources upon which his more general assumptions rest, to the remaining authorities cited in Footnote 11. All of these deal primarily with the adverse psychological effect of segregation upon Negroes and only secondarily with its alleged adverse effect upon white children. Nowhere is any study cited of a third question, namely, of the quite possible adverse effect of integration upon whites in schools with large percentages of Negroes. Was any such study made and presented to the Court?

The third question was well put by William Polk in his book Southern Accent: "If the Negro is entitled to lift himself up by enforced association with the white man, why should not the white man be entitled to prevent himself from being pulled down by enforced association with the Negro?" This question seems particularly important in view of the patent partiality of the authorities cited in favor of integration. The majority of these appear either to belong to Negro or other minority groups, or to have prepared their studies under the auspices of such groups. To expect these groups to present impartial reports on the subject of racial discrimination is like expecting a saloon keeper to prepare an impartial study on prohibition or a meat packer to pass an unbiased judgment on the Humane Slaughter Bill. Their point of view is important and deserves consideration. Many of them are brilliant and consecrated men. But to permit them to provide the overwhelming preponderance of the evidence is manifestly not justice. If this is compounded by an absence of any consideration of the damaging effect of integration upon white children, it becomes doubly serious. While the brief for the State of Virginia touches upon the subject, it seems to me that the people of the United States, whom you represented, had a particular interest in seeing it more fully developed. I would appreciate your directing me to such a study, if one was made, and also your providing me with some explanation as to why the evidence on damage to the Negro was from such partisan sources.

Any American worthy of the name feels an obligation of kindness and justice toward his fellow man. He is willing to give every individual his chance, whatever his race, but in those circumstances where a race must be dealt with as a race, he realizes that the level of the average must be controlling, and that the relatively minor handicap upon the superior individual of the segregated race, if it be a handicap at all, must be accepted until the average has reached the point where the desire for association is mutual.

This leads me to my final query, I will be frank to say that I was startled at the uncritical manner in which the Supreme Court was allowed to accept one phrase in the language of the lower court, to-wit: "A sense of inferiority (produced by segregation) affects the motivation of a child to learn." Did neither you nor counsel for any of the appellees take occasion to point out that if a child is by nature inferior, enforced association with his superiors will increase his realization of his inferiority, while if he is by nature not inferior, any implication of inferiority in segregation, if such there be, will only serve as a spur to greater effort? Throughout history,, challenges of this sort, acting upon individuals, groups and races of natural capacity, have proved a whip to achievement, times without number. The point was one of the legal hinges on which the case turned. In fact without it the decision falls apart, for there is no other even remotely arguable excuse why separate facilities cannot be made equal within any possible stretch of the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment. Consequently, I would have thought it imperative that you raise it.

Sincerely yours,

/s/ Carleton Putnam

cc: The President
The Members of the Supreme Court

The first Putnam letter has reached a circulation of over six million in Northern newspapers as a result of public contributions to run it as an advertisement. If you would like to see this second letter achieve the same wide readership in the North please send your contribution to:

Putnam Letter Committee
317 North 29th Street
Birmingham 3, Alabama

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION

WRITE TO THE

EDUCATIONAL FUND OF THE

CITIZENS' COUNCILS

GREENWOOD, MISS.

READ AND PASS ON

WE NEED YOUR HELP

We hope you can make a contribution to the Educational Fund which will be used to

(1) Publish and distribute nationwide factual literature presenting the case for states' rights and racial integrity.

(2) Initiate a movement to enter the national propaganda media such as the national press services, television, radio, national publications and the motion picture industry.

Our auditors believe contributions will be deductible from your income tax. Every effort will be made to get this tax-free status, and we believe these efforts will be successful.

Resist Grp. Misc
1959

ECONOMIC COUNCIL LETTER

DISTRIBUTED BY States' Rights Council of Georgia, Inc.
William - Oliver Building
Atlanta 3, Georgia

June 1, 1959 1930—1959 Letter No. 456

The Senator Didn't Want The Evidence

ON May 13 Merwin K. Hart, President of the National Economic Council, by request of Senator Talmadge appeared before a subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee in support of Senator Talmadge's Senate Joint Resolution 32, a proposed constitutional amendment which would vest sole control of public schools in the States. Senator Kefauver of Tennessee presided. Mr. Hart's statement follows:

THE National Economic Council strongly supports S.J. Res. 32, and urges this Committee to report it to the Senate, and hopes it will be adopted by the necessary two-thirds in both Houses of Congress.

Only a few years ago it would have seemed strange, indeed, if any Member of either House had thought it necessary to introduce such a Resolution as this. For, during roughly a century and a half of our national history, all Americans believed that under the wording and spirit of the Constitution, the control of education was exclusively a matter for the States and localities. It was assumed that Article X of the Bill of Rights, which reads as follows, meant just what it said:

> "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively or to the people."

Certainly any power over education was never delegated to the Federal Government by the Constitution, nor prohibited by the Constitution to the States. Education is in its very essence a State and local affair.

BUT while the American people apparently were taking for granted that their liberties would always be with them, cunning socialist and communist mischief-makers from other lands had infiltrated this country and, by the aid of certain of our intellectuals and many of our educational institutions, had undertaken to put their ideas into effect.

Unquestionably, these alien-minded individuals, with their American converts, were responsible for the integration decision of the Supreme Court of May 17, 1954. That decision did not even pretend to be on legal and Constitutional grounds. One of the authorities most relied on was the Swedish socialist, Gunnar Myrdal, who, after a brief stay in this country, attacked the Constitution of the United States as "nearly a conspiracy against the common people." There is little doubt that the integration decision was an important part of the campaign of the Soviet leaders to conquer the world, especially the United States.

One Israel Cohen, a leading communist in England in 1912, wrote a book entitled "A Racial Program for the Twentieth Century." In that book he set forth the communist policy. The following extract from this book was included on page 7633 of the Record as printed daily (page 8559 of Vol. 103, Part 7 of the bound volumes) of the Congressional Record for June 7, 1957:

> "We must realize that our party's most powerful weapon is racial tension. By propounding into the consciousness of the dark races that for centuries they have been oppressed by the whites, we can mould them to the program of the Communist Party.
> "In America, we will aim for subtle victory. While inflaming the Negro minority against the whites, we will endeavour to instil in the whites a guilt complex for their exploitation of the Negroes. We will aid the Negroes to rise in prominence in every walk of life, in the professions and in the world of sports and entertainment.
> "With this prestige the Negro will be able to intermarry with the whites and begin a process which will deliver America to our cause."

Since the integration Supreme Court decision of 1954, the Supreme Court, having assumed legislative power—if not the power to amend the Constitution itself—has extended its anti-segregation policy to many other fields, including playgrounds, swimming pools, transportation, and so forth. But we, of course, are concerned here only with education.

Thus it would appear that communism is the author of the scheme underlying the integration decision whereby the Federal government is taking away the control of our schools from the States and localities. An English communist appears to have contributed the idea and a Swedish socialist was, as it were, an important consultant.

Alien infiltration is the cause of the evil which the Talmadge Resolution seeks to cure.

THERE are several reasons why the Talmadge Resolution should be adopted.

1. Because, with respect to the schools, it would completely undo the communist grab for power by way of the Supreme Court through the assumption of control over our schools. For so long as our schools remain independent, and under State and local control, the ambitions of the communists for conquest of the United States will have a considerable setback.

Copyright 1959, National Economic Council, Inc.

2. Conditions vary in different parts of the country. From the American standpoint, though not from the communist nor socialist standpoint, what is taught in one section of the country would not necessarily be taught in the same way in another part of the country. Education is tied up in the minds of American citizens with the very heart of their liberties. If they lose control of their education, they will lose control of their children. And part of the very lifeblood of successful Americans has been that, by and large, the children have had the benefit of parental care and discipline and the parents have had the general control over the schools in which their children are taught.

3. Concentration in the Federal government of control over any public activity always costs more than when it is handled locally. As the powers and duties of government increase arithmetically, the cost of them, and the number of personnel required tend to increase almost geometrically.

4. If this new rule established by the Supreme Court in 1954, by which the Court has undertaken to assume control of the schools, is to continue in effect, it will be just one more concentration of power in the Federal government—one more Federal control. Furthermore it will be just so much support for the current movement toward world government through "world law." The State Department has said that there is now no difference between local and national issues.

The backers of "world law" and world government, believe we should assign to the World Court and the United Nations the right to decide which questions are domestic and which international.

The Senate, in all probability, would never have ratified the Charter of the United Nations had it not been for Section 7 of Article II of the Charter, which says that:

> "Nothing contained in the present Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any State. . . ."

Yet it is Section 7 of Article II that the world government people and the "world law" people wish to reverse.

If we Americans are to keep our liberties, we must preserve the distinction between local and national issues, and between national and international issues. For if we don't we will be helping along the movement to establish a "world law," under which all our liberties are certain to disappear.

Hence, S.J. Res. 32 is of vital importance, not only because of the single subject with which it deals, namely education; but because, if passed, it will be notice to the Administration and the Supreme Court, as well as to other governments, that the people of the United States intend to remain free.

Naturally, every communist- and socialist-infiltrated organization in the United States—and that includes most of the means of communication: press, radio and TV—will oppose this Resolution.

But in our opinion, this Committee has not had a more important measure before it in a long time. [End]

The New York Times of May 14, contained the following account of the Hearing:

U. S. PRESS CALLED RED-INFILTRATED

Merwin Hart Makes Charge at a Senate Hearing—Kefauver Disagrees

WASHINGTON, May 13 (AP) — Senator Estes Kefauver, chairman of a Senate Judiciary subcommittee, challenged today a witness' assertion that the country's press, radio and television were Communist-infiltrated.

Mr. Kefauver, Democrat of Tennessee, said he found the assertion "repulsive."

The witness was Merwin K. Hart of New York, president of the National Economic Council. He testified in support of a proposed constitutional amendment that would specify that the states have exclusive control of their schools.

Mr. Hart said the proposal would serve notice that the people of the United States intended to remain free. He went on:

"Naturally, every Communist and Socialist-infiltrated organization in the United States—and that includes most of the means of communication: press, radio and TV—will oppose this resolution."

Kefauver Dissents

Senator Kefauver asked Mr. Hart if he had really intended to suggest that the press, radio and television were Communist-infiltrated. Mr. Hart said yes.

"I want to register my dissent," Senator Kefauver said.

Mr. Hart then declared that of the 1,200 daily newspapers in the nation only about thirty were "independent" and the rest were Communist-infiltrated.

At another point, Mr. Hart said that the newspapers had sought to say that the Supreme Court decision banning school segregation was the law of the land when it was merely the law of the case. He mentioned The New York Times and the Washington Post and Times Herald.

Mr. Kefauver asked Mr. Hart if he were suggesting that The The New York Times and The Washington Post were Communist-infiltrated.

"Yes," Mr. Hart replied, "I think they are Communist-infiltrated."

"I'm sorry to hear you make the statement," Mr. Kefauver said. "It is repulsive to me. These papers are trying to do a good job in the public interest. I want no more testimony of this nature."

Both papers said they had no comment to make on Mr. Hart's testimony.

N. Y. Times, May 14, 1959

As a matter of fact, when Senator Kefauver said he found Mr. Hart's assertion about the communist infiltration into this country's means of communication "incredible," and "repulsive," Mr. Hart asked permission to be allowed three days in which to file a bill of particulars to support his statement. Senator Kefauver refused. He didn't want the record cluttered up with the facts.

We give below some of the evidence that might have been included in such a bill of particulars:

In early January 1956 a subcommittee of the Senate Internal Security Committee, under the chairmanship of Senator Eastland of Mississippi, held three days of Hearings in Washington to investigate infiltration in the New York City press corps. The Chicago Daily Tribune of January 5, 1956 in an article by Willard Edwards reported in part:

> "A Senate exploration of subversive influences in the New York City press corps today brought admissions of past Communist Party membership from two newspaper men. Four others refused to answer questions about communist connections, pleading possible self-incrimination.
>
> "The six witnesses summoned by the Senate Internal Security subcommittee included three employed by The New York Times. The others, employed in past periods by the Times, are working for the New York Post and the National Guardian, a leftist weekly."

AN editorial in the New York Daily News of January 10, 1956, said in part:

"The New York Times turned out to have had 14 present or past employes who had had communist leanings. Most of these clammed up on Fifth Amendment or other grounds.

"The News was found to have one employe who refused to answer questions regarding communist connections, and was promptly fired.

"Midway in the Hearings, the Times published an editorial saying it felt Eastland was persecuting the paper for having attacked him on various occasions; that his probe menaced the freedom of the press; and that no Congressional committee could dictate Times' editorial or hiring policies."

ONE of the men who testified at these January Hearings was James Glaser. An editorial in the New York Journal American of January 6, 1956, said in part:

"On Wednesday last, one James Glaser testified before the Eastland Committee.

"Glaser had resigned from The New York Times in 1934, to become Managing Editor until 1936 of the Daily Worker, the official organ of both the Communist party (USA) and the Communist International.

"Glaser testified that he wrote a pamphlet entitled, 'Hearst—Labor's No. One Enemy,' as part of his job. He did so, he testified, on orders from Gerhart Eisler, who was Moscow's top agent at Red headquarters in New York. Eisler, who is now an official in Communist East Germany, was really the head of the communist conspiratorial activities in this country."

JOHN O'DONNELL, the internationally known columnist of the New York Daily News, in his column of January 9, 1956, wrote in part as follows:

"The first lesson to be drawn from these opening three days of public hearings before Senator James O. Eastland's Internal Security Subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee is the sharp distinction between the reaction of the New York Daily News and the New York Mirror, which promptly fired editorial employes who refused to answer questions regarding their personal communist activities on New York newspapers and the identity of their Commie 'cell' co-conspirators, and the jittery pomposity of the pious New York Times which editorially started to repair hastily the embarrassing split in the seat of their striped journalistic trousers, even before all The New York Times' evidence had been put into the record."

THE well known independent writer, Joseph P. Kamp, published in 1954 a pamphlet entitled "How The New York Times Betrayed its Readers on 'McCarthyism'." Mr. Kamp, who has been fighting communism since 1920, and who is one of the greatest authorities in the country on the subject, was jailed for four months some years ago because he refused to disclose the names of certain of his supporters. We have yet to find anything Mr. Kamp has written that is inaccurate. We give below certain quotations from the pamphlet:

"The public press has a public trust. Having been granted access to the public eye and mind it is obligated to truthful and balanced news reporting and editorial commentary. It is this public trust which The New York Times has betrayed.

"At its masthead The New York Times flies the legend: 'All the News That's Fit to Print.' With respect to Senator Joe McCarthy, however, it only prints whatever fits. That is, whatever fits the vendetta which The Times has waged against the Wisconsin legislator since his debut on the national scene as an anti-communist.

"The Times has pursued Joe McCarthy with a hysteria of invective far out-doing the statesman whom it falsely brands as master of the smear. This is a familiar communist technique, whether The Times knows it or not. At the Nuremberg trial, Soviet judges and prosecutors had no scruples in demanding the death penalty for persons accused of the very crimes which the Reds themselves, at the same moment, were perpetrating nearby in captured German prison camps."

Mr. Kamp describes Mr. Arthur H. Sulzberger as:

"A befuddled 'Liberal' . . . 'occupied' as thoroughly as if he had been Hungary or Rumania—by his own journal's Red fifth column . . . a communist cell that supplied the Red Daily Worker with a managing editor and which was so large that it had its own official newspaper, which it had the effrontery to call The New Times."

Mr. Kamp further said:

"In blasting the anti-communism film 'My Son John,' Bosley Crowther, drama section editor [of The New York Times] referred scornfully to 'the Legionnaire's stubborn bigotry,' likened him to a Nazi and, with a sneer, called him a 'ranting, song-singing patriot.' "

Mr. Kamp also said:

"In another piece entitled 'Facing a Real Dilemma,' April 13, 1952, he [Bosley Crowther] slaps at the American Legion, the Catholic War Veterans and the Committee on Un-American Activities for being critical of communists and communist influence in Hollywood, because, he writes, 'the likelihood of even a few subversives—real subversives—in the studios is remote.'

"Yet, within a few months, the Committee on Un-American Activities began hearing a hundred witnesses who had been part of the communist apparatus in the film colony."

AN editorial in the New York Daily News of January 10, 1956, referring to the three-day Hearings by the Eastland Committee in Washington, said in part:

"It is common knowledge that the Kremlin strives without cease to worm its agents into all communications systems of the non-communist nations. The object is to turn those countries' newspapers, magazines, movies, and radio and television setups into hypodermic needles for injection of communist poison into people's minds.

"A Congressional investigation of this criminal conspiracy as we see it, is aimed at preserving all Americans' freedoms."

Professional Bigot

YET Senator Kefauver found Mr. Hart's assertion that most of the press was communist-infiltrated "repulsive." It is easy to see why he refused to let Mr. Hart file a bill of particulars.

The Council has been flooded with telephone calls and letters from both members and non-members, some from Senator Kefauver's home State of Tennessee, commending Mr. Hart's stand before the Kefauver Committee.

Correction

The Council Letter for May 15 was erroneously numbered 454, the same as the Letter of May 1, instead of 455.

Persons ordering additional copies of either Letter should take care to give the date.

Miss A. Margaret Schmid

On June 10, 1959, Miss Schmid will have been 50 years in the employ of Merwin K. Hart, and since 1930, of the National Economic Council. For some years a Vice President of the Council, she is in charge of the Utica office.

Miss Schmid participated in the organization of the Economic Council in 1930. She has been a faithful and dedicated staff member and official.

She has been active in civic groups, notably the Zonta Club of Utica, N. Y., of which she is a Past President.

We salute Miss Schmid on this 50th anniversary of her active life and wish her many more useful years.

A distinguished lawyer in the Middle West, who is also a member of the National Economic Council, has just returned from an extended trip to Australia. He makes these comments to us:

"You hear of Australia as being a socialistic country. Actually, in many respects they have not nearly gone to the extent that we have, especially tax-wise. The taxes are much more reasonable; the standards of living are high; the wage rates are approximately one-third of those in this country; the country is underpopulated—they have only ten million people in a continent the size of the United States, and half of those live in four cities. It does have tremendous potentialities—Americans are very popular—MacArthur is regarded as a national hero, and one Australian told me that Churchill would not dare to come to Australia. As a matter of fact, I felt much more at home in Australia than I have in any English speaking country I have been in, and that includes Canada. I was tremendously impressed with the country. I saw considerable of it, and that not from a hotel window. I was out in the rural districts, and in Brisbane, Melbourne, Sydney and Adelaide. Actually, their political situation is just about the same as ours. As in this country between the Democrats and the Republicans, so in Australia there is little difference between the Liberals and the Labor Party. They are, however, very industrially minded, and there is tremendous competition to build Australia and populate it.

"I was asked to give several talks while in Australia, and I stressed the fact that that country was in a pioneer stage and would develop in the event they had sense enough to permit free enterprise; permit young people to retain the fruits of their efforts, and cut out all this nonsense about social security, short workweeks, etc.

"Of course, as you know, Australia is another illustration of where this country has been priced out of the market. It is impossible for American goods to compete with goods from the U.K. and other European countries, or those produced in Australia (which are comparatively few). We are rapidly getting in the same shape as France, and I notice now that labor's idea of protecting American industry and employees is a tariff barrier, similar to the procedure used in France which, of course, was a terrific economic failure. We are going the same road and, frankly, while I think you are doing a wonderful piece of work I do not think that there is any possibility of stemming this tide. The American people will have to learn the hard way."

This Council Letter may be quoted in whole or part provided due credit is given to the National Economic Council, Inc., Empire State Building, New York 1, N. Y., and quotation is specified to be from Economic Council Letter 456, June 1, 1959.

NATIONAL ECONOMIC COUNCIL, INC., established in 1930, is a non-profit, non-partisan membership corporation organized under New York State law. It publishes the semi-monthly ECONOMIC COUNCIL LETTER and occasional ECONOMIC COUNCIL PAPERS.

OFFICERS: President, Merwin K. Hart. Executive Vice President, Constance G. Dall. Vice Presidents: Lt. Gen. P. A. del Valle, U.S. M.C., retired, Vice Adm. C. S. Freeman, U.S.N., retired, Earl Harding, George S. Montgomery, Jr., Dr. Elwood Rowsey, A. Margaret Schmid, Ora A. Taylor; Secretary, McKay Twombly; Assistant Secretary, Sibylla Schilling; Treasurer, Baird Parks; Director of Research, Norman Dodd.

Subscription $10 a year, $6 for six months, $3.50 for three months. Special rate for student or teacher $5 a year.
Air Mail Subscription (domestic) $12.00 a year, Air Mail (foreign) $15.00 a year.

EXTRA COPIES of this Council Letter 15c each (8 for $1), $9 per 100, $50 per 1,000.

Special prices will be quoted for larger quantities. Please add 3% sales tax for deliveries in Greater New York and 4% shipping charges on quantities of 100 or more.

National Economic Council, Inc., Empire State Building, New York 1, N. Y.

903 First National Bank Bldg., Utica 2, N. Y.

PERMISSION TO REPRODUCE AND DISTRIBUTE THE FOREGOING LETTER FOR EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES WAS GIVEN THE STATES' RIGHTS COUNCIL OF GEORGIA, INC., BY THE NATIONAL ECONOMIC COUNCIL, INC.

Sh ✓ Picket this at churches at up on streets at time

Sh

Resist. Grps Misc.

COMMITTEE FOR SEGREGATION
P. O. Box 1062

News Release August 19, 1963

Race-mixing is Communistic and contrary to the laws and covenants of God!

The Holy Bible has countless passages showing that God from the beginning of the creation of man separated the races, established the boundaries of the nations, and forbade intermingling or intermarriage between the races.

There is nothing in the Bible to support these ministers that state it is un-Christian not to race-mix. These false prophets, knowing that the Bible condemns this action, have made and are continuing every effort to rewrite the Bible to their own false teachings. A great number of these pied-pipers have refuted the Word of God as outlined in the Holy Scriptures. Beware of these people! They are preaching the false gospel!

Read the Bible yourself and verify the foregoing statements. Some of the passages from the Holy Bible, King James edition, showing that God established segregation and forbade race-mixing are as follows:

Genesis: 11, 20-21; 24-25: God created all living creatures and plants and commanded that they bring forth after their kind.

Interracial marriages caused the flood. Genesis 6: 1-7: that the sons of God saw the daughters of men that they were fair and they took them wives of all that they chose, and Jehovah saw that the wickedness of man was great.

Origin and separation of races: Genesis 9: After the flood, Noah's sons, Shem, Ham and Japheth fathered three racial groups which migrated to different continents " - - and by these were the nations divided after the flood."

Negro made the Servant Race by Divine decree.

Genesis 9: 24-27 (Upon on Ham's wrong doing) "-- cursed be Canaan (Ham's son) a servant of servants shall he be unto his brethren."

Separation by languages: Genesis 11: 1-9. "God confoundeth the tongues at the town of Babel and separated the people into separate nations.

Mixed Races incompatible: Genesis 12-25: Abraham's Egyptian handmaiden Hager gave birth to Ishmael; Sarah, his wife, a pure-blood woman gave birth to Isaac. The boys of different lineage were incompatible. God had Abraham send Hager away with Ishmael to form a separate people (Arab), without inheritance with Abraham's seed.

Racial purity sought for God's Covenant People: Genesis: 24; 3-4: Wife for Isaac "thou shalt not take a wife unto my son of the daughter of the Canaanites (black), among whom I dwell; but thou shalt go unto my country and to my kindred and take a wife unto my son."

Genesis 28: 2: Wife for Jacob - "Arise, go to -- the house of Bethuel, thy mother's father, and take thee a wife from thence of the daughters of Laban."

Separate and Different People's Predetermined: Genesis 25: 23: "Two nations are in thy womb (Esau and Jacob), and two manner of people shall be separated from thy bowels."

Mixing of Strain Forbidden: Leviticus 19: 19: " - - thou shalt not let thy cattle gender with a diverse kind; thou shalt not sow thy field with mingled seed."

Deuteronomy 22; 9-11: "-- thou shalt not plow with an ox and an ass together --"

This is another way of God's directing that man should keep his strain pure, and not to interbreed with other races.

Marry Only Your Own People: Numbers 36: 5-12: "This is the thing, which Jehovah doth command concerning the daughters of Zelophehad, saying, "Let them be married to whom they think best; only unto the family of the tribe of their father shall they be married --"

Pedigrees of Families Decreed: Numbers 1: 18: "And they assembled all the congregation together on the first day of the second month, and they declared their pedigrees after their families by the house of their fathers."

Leviticus 21: 14: "A widow, or a divorced woman, is profane, is an harlot, these shall he not take, but he shall take a virgin of his own people to wife."

Intermarriage Forbidden: Deuteronomy 7: 13; "Neither shalt thou make marriage with them (Canaanites) --" Joshua 23: 12-13; "If ye -- cleave unto -- these nations -- and make marriage -- God will no more drive out any of these nations from before you

Ezra 10: 2: "--We have trespassed against God, and have taken strange wives."

Ezra 6:21, chs. 9-16: Nehemiah 10: 28, 30; 13: 23-30: Ezra and Nehemiah settled the race problem of their day by segregation and severe punishment for mixing.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

Intermarriage Weakens Nations. Ezra 9:12 "--give not your daughtera unto their sons, neither take their daughters unto your sons -- that ye may be strong."

Negro's Characteristics Unchangeable. Jeremiah 13:23; "Can the Ethiopian change his skin or the leopard his spots?"

God created man and the several races and intended them to remain as He had decreed.

Separation by Geographical Bounds. Acts: 17; 26: "And God hath made of one blood all nations of men -- and hath determined -- the bounds of their habitations". This means each nation was of one race as shown in earlier quotations and that God had established the boundaries of each nation.

Separation. II Corinthians 6: 14-17; "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers -- wherefore come ye out from among them and be ye separate."

Brotherhood Defined. Mark 3: 33-35; "Whosoever shall do the Will of God, the same is my brother." John 1; 12; "But as many as receive Him, to them gave He power to become sons of God, even to them that believe on His name; which were born not of - flesh - but born again of God." (See Roman 8:10). Scriptural brotherhood is a mystical union of born-again believers. Universal fatherhood of God and brotherhood of man, as you can see here, is not scriptural.

One in Christ is via the Cross. Galatians 3:26-38: "there is neither Jew nor Greek -- bond nor free -- male nor female -- for ye are all one in Christ Jesus." This refers to spiritual unity of these that believe upon Jesus Christ and God and who confess Jesus Christ as their Saviour; they thus become brothers in Christ spiritually, but not of the flesh.

These are the laws and covenants of God, and God had this to say about the keeping of his covenants:

Leviticus 18: 2-5; "-- Mine ordinances shall ye do, and my statutes shall ye keep to walk therein, I am Jehovah Your God!"

Do not be misled by these false prophets who preach that race-mixing is Christian. As you can see from the foregoing excerpts from the Bible, race-mixing is disobeying God.

It is because the Bible reflects the social gospel of these equalitarians, socialist and communists that they are attempting to rewrite the Bible and refute the Word of God therein.

Do not be duped! Read and abide by the Holy Bible, King James edition, not the revised Bible which was written not by men of God, but rather His enemies. You either believe every word of the Holy Scriptures or you believe none at all. Man cannot select portions of the Bible to believe and other portions to refute; to do so is doing the work of the Devil.

Obey God's ordinances! Do not race-mix or support those that do. Do not buy or eat with those that insist upon denying God by race-mixing.

Remember God made the white man, and God made the negro, but man, not God, made the mulattoe.

Show this to your friends. For additional copies, write P. O. Box 1062, Atlanta.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

ESTABLISHED 1936

South

The News Magazine of DIXIE

DECEMBER 10, 1962
VOL. 27, NO. 25

Drop The Sham

WE ARE STRONGLY in favor of able educators running our educational systems. We are not in favor of professional educators sitting in the role of judges on cases deriving strictly from political considerations.

Such is the case of the University of Mississippi, target of a federal political attack. Members of Southern Association of Colleges and Schools saw fit to place Ole Miss on "trial" on a charge of political interference. They finally decreed tenuous relief from threat of disaccrediation but left the club of professional ouster handy.

What strikes this journal as wholly incongruous in this affair has been succinctly expressed by Alabama Gov.-elect George Wallace, who observed, "Educators are quick to intimidate and threaten. . . . Yet educators themselves do not hesitate in the least to lobby and bring political pressure to bear on legislative bodies when it comes to demanding more taxes. It's a case of the tail wagging the dog."

We would not challenge for a moment the absolute need for certain common educational standards which lay a foundation for free interchange of facilities between fellow schools. There has been no question raised of Ole Miss' continued adherence to fixed standards of professional quality. Until that unlikely day arrives, educators should educate and not attempt to adjudicate.

Back With The Wind

IT IS WITH MORE than just casual interest we read that Atlanta's board of aldermen will be asked to name that city's new $3 million incinerator for Mayor Emeritus William B. Hartsfield. This historic event may well have been officially recorded in the folklore of the history-filled Georgia capital city ere we go to press.

We can think of no more fitting tribute to Mayor Emeritus Hartsfield's peculiar brand of politics than his civic memorial be a garbage facility. On a clear day, when the wind is just right, thousands of Atlantans who did not exactly share his approach to certain issues may well be reminded of the changes he helped create during his record-breaking tenure. They may be reminded too, that they really haven't lost a mayor but have gained an incinerator.

We are willing to stand corrected, but insofar as we know no other high official or ex-official of a major American city has reaped the same two honors bestowed upon Mayor Emeritus Hartsfield.

While still in office admirers named an ape at the zoo "Willie B."

It's Up To Congress

POLITICAL EXPEDIENCY once more has overruled rights, reason and law. In issuing his so-called "executive order" on housing President Kennedy has flown directly in the face of the expressed wishes of Congress which repeatedly has refused to make itself a party to an invasion of individual privacy.

The fact that the President hesitated for almost two years to sign such an "order," and only then acting after a critical national election was behind, is proof enough he seriously questioned the wisdom of arbitrary action.

There's danger enough to the rights of individual citizens on the face of the clearly unconstitutional order alone. But underlying this latest usurpation of presidential power is the very real threat that, if permitted to stand without effective challenge, it can be twisted in other directions by executive whim.

The President long since has clearly demonstrated that he is wholly subject to minority pressures and highly vocal groups. He has exerted unprecedented economic blackmail against business. He has traded his endorsement of labor bossism's push for more power for votes. He has blackjacked an American state with armed force and taken half-loaf action against foreign threats.

There's simply no question the recent executive encroachment will result in a heavy blow at the building industry – and employment. All reliable samplings indicate the damage may be greater than originally expected. Certainly it will be much more severe than the President's casual "temporary adjustment" forecast. Sensible builders – North or South – aren't disposed to mix sound business with precarious theory. They haven't in the past. They won't now.

This journal has expressed its opposition repeatedly to government invading the fields of private enterprise. We shall shed no tears if the entire housing industry is turned back to its private function. The recent housing order is the surest way to accomplish just that.

As a matter of constitutional principle, however, it's up to Congress to put a brake on executive audaciousness. Under existing circumstances the President has intruded his toe into too many private front doors. It's time for a firm understanding of the separation of powers between the executive and legislative branches. It's time to bruise some toes.

SOUTH, the News Magazine of Dixie, is published every other Monday at Auburn, Alabama by Alabama News Magazine, Inc., Hubert Baughn, editor-publisher; V. D. Butler, secretary-treasurer; John Chadwick, associate editor; Clyde Cruse, assistant editor; Earl Tucker, contributing editor; Farmer Seale, advertising director. Address all correspondence to editorial and business offices, 504 Massey Building, Birmingham 3, Alabama. Second class mail privileges authorized at Auburn, Alabama. Subscription: one year, $4; six months, $2.50; two years, $7. Add 3% Alabama sales tax on all Alabama subscriptions. Dan Hollis, copy editor; E. Fort Ward and John Kemph, production managers. Circulation directors: E. C. Robinson, Mrs. Carrie Bayles. SOUTH's publishers are not responsible for the return of any unsolicited manuscripts, photographs or material not expressly ordered.
(POSTMASTER—ON ALL UNDELIVERABLE COPIES RETURN FORM 3579 TO 504 MASSEY BUILDING, BIRMINGHAM 3, ALA.)

PA ✓ (see page 2) 2-12-63
SB
LWD ✓ - file

These are the Guilty

~~Anti Red~~
Resistance Mgr.
Misc.

Address

Delivered by

CARLETON PUTNAM

Before the

WASHINGTON PUTNAM LETTERS CLUB

February 12, 1963

Printed and Distributed as a Public Service

by the

NATIONAL PUTNAM LETTERS COMMITTEE

On Lincoln's birthday the Putnam Letters Club of Washington, D.C., an affiliate of the National Putnam Letters Committee, sponsored a dinner for its members and guests in the grand ballroom of the Willard Hotel. Clifford Newell, president of the club, presided.

In spite of adverse weather conditions throughout the Virginia-Maryland area, the ballroom was crowded to overflowing and many late arrivals were forced to eat in adjoining rooms.

After the presentation of the colors and an invocation by the Chaplain of the United States Senate, Mr. Putnam addressed the gathering.

NATIONAL PUTNAM LETTERS COMMITTEE
P. O. Box 3518, Grand Central Station
New York 17, New York
MARK H. GERMAN, Director

These are the Guilty

Address

Delivered by

Carleton Putnam

Before the

Washington Putnam Letters Club

February 12, 1963

Mr. Chairman, Mr. German, distinguished guests, ladies and gentlemen:

Let me begin by acknowledging a debt—a debt of gratitude and appreciation to Clifford Newell and Mark German for arranging this impressive meeting tonight. An attendance of over 600 is more than any of us expected, especially in the face of an ice storm in Maryland and Virginia. I'm proud and grateful to your committee for inviting me to speak here, and I'm proud and grateful to you for coming.

It's true that about two years ago I wrote a short book—hardly more than a monograph—called Race and Reason which has caused some controversy. A few attacks have even been made on it. Therefore, every now and then, friends of mine, here and there, have been good enough to give me a platform—like this one tonight—from which to answer those attacks.

So far it hasn't been an overwhelming task. I won't say that I expected a somewhat higher caliber of opposition, for that might be discourteous to our opponents. But there are only a few loose ends to clean up this evening, and then, ladies and gentlemen, I propose to launch an attack of my own. If I were a lay preacher I would take as my text the sixteenth chapter of Paul's epistle to the Romans: "Now I beseech you, brethren, mark those who cause divisions and offenses in opposition to the doctrine which you have learned. . . . For such persons . . . by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple."

I propose to suggest to you tonight, in this world of rising racial tensions, just who they are who have caused divisions and—however sincere their motives and beliefs—have deceived the hearts of the simple. And in view of the fact that the last time I made a speech one of the press services complained because I referred to a certain individual "whom I did not name", tonight I intend to name names—not all, indeed, because large organizations are involved—but enough to satisfy the press. And I intend to say to you, and to them: these are the guilty.

But first let's go back to where it all began. I suppose nobody in this room doubts that the crusade for racial integration and the claim that races are all alike has its roots in the same soil in which most of the left-wing movements of our time originated. The socialism of Saint-Simon in France, of Marx in England and Germany, of Lenin in Russia, the Fabian Society of Bernard Shaw and the Webbs in England, all were, at least in part, an attempt to meet a horrifying problem among those who worked primarily with their muscles and their hands. They all had one valid common denominator among their objectives—improving the condition of the poor.

I will go so far as to say that many of us here, facing the situation that reformers found in England in the eighteen fifties and sixties, would have thought and felt exactly as they did. Here is the death notice in the London papers of Mary Anne Walkley, 20 years old, who in June of 1863 after sewing in a dressmaking establishment an average day of 16½ hours—during the season often 30 hours at a stretch—simply died of overwork. The doctor's words at the inquest were: "Mary Anne Walkley died from long hours of work in an overcrowded room . . ." Because she could not stop for Death, Death kindly stopped for her.

As for the food the poor ate, their bread was bought mostly from what were called the undersellers and was adulterated with alum, soap, pearl ashes, chalk and Derbyshire stone-dust. Here is a description taken from official reports concerning conditions in the baking trade: "He [the poor man] had to eat daily in his bread a certain quantity of human perspiration mixed with the discharge of abscesses, cobwebs, dead black-beetles, and putrid German yeast, without counting alum and sand." Of course, many of the poor simply starved. It wasn't until well along in the next century that the government stopped publishing statistics of deaths from starvation in London for lack of casualties.

Forgive this repetition of what will be to many of you an old story, but it seemed wise to refresh our recollections concerning the origin of today's left-wing ideologies. In those times and in those conditions were born all sorts of emotional attitudes and intellectual concepts, as well as practical schemes. Some of them succeeded and some of them did not, but progress was certainly made. The radical of 1963 inherits a legacy which we must understand. A year or so ago a reporter for Time magazine interviewed me on the race question and it wasn't until our talk was practically over that I finally managed to make him give me his view on the subject. He was from the South and he was an integrationist. As he spoke, tears welled up in his eyes. But I could tell from what he said that those tears didn't have their source in the Negro problem, which he hadn't really thought through. They were part of the old legacy. They went back much further than Mary Anne Walkley.

There is no reason to doubt the humanitarian purpose of many of the welfare movements of those earlier days or to question their considerable accomplishments. Much poverty has been relieved. The problem now is to keep the floor under misery and failure without slapping a ceiling on everybody else—and to winnow out the large company of those who use the cry of humanity and brotherly love as an excuse for creating legal ways to break the Eighth Commandment. But that is a topic for a different forum from ours tonight.

I want to touch on only one aspect of that problem which leads us directly into our own field. Implicit in much left-wing theory and rhetoric, because it seemed to make existing conditions all the more reprehensible and in need of correction, was the doctrine of the equality of man. Few socialists ever took the doctrine seriously in practice, I doubt if the Fabians ever took it seriously in theory, but we have all heard the slogans of the French revolution and the Declaration of Independence.

I shan't go over again here what the evidence clearly shows regarding Jefferson's meaning—both as to the word "men" and as to the word "equal" in the phrase "all men are created equal"—nor need I repeat Hamilton's recognition that liberty and equality are mutually exclusive. It is obvious the founding fathers had no illusions about the equality of men in any sense except in equal rights to justice, and the Negro was not included even in that. But in America as the years went on, helped by the controversial Franz Boas, the notion of a Utopian social, economic and even biological equality persisted as a sort of demagogic fetish until things reached the point where the Swedish socialist Myrdal actually dared to write in his American Dilemma that in the conflict between liberty and equality in the United States "equality is slowly winning", and Handlin, the Harvard professor, could bring himself to declare: "There is no evidence of any inborn differences of temperament, personality, character, or intelligence among races."

This last remark lands us finally in the middle of our subject with a splash. For the benefit of the press I give the full name, Oscar Handlin, Professor of History at Harvard University, and while again I do not impugn his motives or sincerity, I assert that in my opinion Handlin's declaration is one of the most groundless and dangerously misleading statements to be found in print today.

Let us quickly review the evidence. All that we need is contained in that short, concise little book, The Biology of the Race Problem, which I shall cite hereafter simply as the George Report. In spite of the example of the equalitarians, a thousand pages are not required to come to the point on this subject.

If you will consult Section IV of the George Report you will note the findings of Bean, Connolly and Vint on the differences in frequencies of occurrence of certain features of White and Negro brains. The importance of these differences is plainly set out in quotations and citations from and to Penfield, Halstead, Brodmann and Herrick. I repeat: you will find it all in the space of ten pages in Section IV. If you want more data, I can refer you to the leading article in the Mankind Quarterly, Vol. 2, No. 4, which amplifies and still further documents Dr. George's material. The differences in question are physical and hereditary. That they account for differences in temperament, behavior and intelligence between the two races is beyond doubt. That these differences make the amalgamation of the races undesirable is just as clear. All the other sections of the George Report confirm these facts.

There isn't time enough tonight to discuss the full report. But I will call your attention to something on which Dr. George does not touch: In 1940 the illegitimacy rate for Negroes throughout the United States was eight and a half times the rate for Whites. Nineteen years later, nineteen years in which Americans have struggled hard to raise Negro standards, the rate is ten times that for Whites. In other words, as their environment has been improved, their performance has gone down. Taking the single state of Virginia in the twenty years between 1938 and 1958, the White illegitimacy rate declined slightly from 2.6 to 2.3 per cent. In this same period which witnessed astonishing gains in Negro education, Negro housing, Negro income and Negro job opportunities, the rate of Negro illegitimacy increased from 19.5 to 22.9 per cent. This is difficult to explain if the Negro's limitations are due solely to his environment.

Speaking of explanations, it's going to be still more difficult for the professors to evade Bean, Connolly and Vint. They've already begun to say: "Oh, but the samplings aren't adequate." [These samplings varied from 30 brains in some cases to 165 in others.] Well, I have a question to ask these professors and all those who criticize the George Report on this most vital point. If you don't like the samplings of Bean, Connolly and Vint, why have you never produced anything better? You have most of the money, you have the captive foundations—they have hundreds of millions—and there are plenty of other sources anxious to help you. Yet to the best of my knowledge you haven't even tried to assemble any contrary evidence. Don't tell us that you can't be bothered or that this isn't important. This is the most important point in the whole controversy. Either the Negro's limitations are innate or they're not, and this evidence settles the matter. So I ask again, why have you never even tried to produce any other samplings?

The answer is simple. You haven't tried because you don't dare. You know well enough what the results would be, provided you had an objective study and included a Dr. George or two on the panel. I suggest that you now make such a study—a series of any size you like of average West African Negro brains, because there you get the least diluted essence of the Negro, against a series of average White brains—the study to be jointly run by scientists on both sides of the question. Meanwhile we have Bean, Connolly and Vint, Penfield, Halstead, Brodmann and Herrick. I dislike being rude to amiable Harvard professors but I must say to Oscar Handlin (and I'm going to say it to several others this evening): the time has come to put up or shut up. Either answer Bean, Connolly and Vint or explain to the public why you can't.

While I'm on the subject of the George Report I have another suggestion to offer. The press quotes George F. Carter, a professor of geography at Johns Hopkins University, as having said about this report: "The arguments they put up in that booklet are Swiss cheese—full of holes." It so happens that early last fall a mutual acquaintance communicated to me Carter's complaints about the George Report—this acquaintance listed fifty of them, acting as a sort of agent for Carter. I considered these fifty points carefully, and then I submitted them to Dr. George. Thereafter they were submitted to scholars in New York. All of this occurred before the Putnam Committee undertook the distribution of the report, and it was unanimously decided that, apart from three or four points about which some shadow of argument might be made but which did not bear on any essentials, the fifty points were without any substance whatsoever.

There was one item which Carter considered to be a quotation out of context and which we corrected with an erratum sheet. Jerry Doolittle of the Washington Post made much out of this correction in the Post for December 9. So I have a question to ask Doolittle: Assuming Carter is right in his statement that differing climates had identical effects in the way they "sharpened the wits" of all mankind, can either you or Carter honestly believe that the climate of the tropics and the climate of northern Europe over tens of thousands of years had identical effects on the development of those special qualities of the civilized forebrain, namely, foresight and long-range planning? Carter's dwelling on one aspect of molding does not exclude the existence of other aspects. If Doolittle thinks it does, he had better consult someone else besides a geographer. He will find experts on that subject in other sections of the George Report.

But let me come to Carter's fifty points and give you two examples: On page 27 of his report, Dr. George cites the work of Bean which was published in 1906. On this Carter remarks: "Reference from Bean is nearly sixty years old. Haven't there been any developments or thoughts in this long period?" If Carter had read the Report with any attention he would have found that Connolly's work was published in 1950 and Penfield's in 1957. This brings Bean right up to date. But are we in some sort of competition here on dates? Does its date make Newton's law of gravitation invalid?

Secondly on page 68 Dr. George writes: "If there were more Negroes with talents for civilization, we would have no race problem or it would be a very different one." To which Carter remarks: "Again nonsense. Boston had a race problem with the Irish. Many people have a Jewish race problem even though these races have talents for civilization". Well, ladies and gentlemen, is not this what Dr. George has already just said? He has just said, "or it would be a very different one." And that is precisely what the Irish and Jewish problems were, "very different ones".

I leave you to judge where the nonsense lies in these two examples, and I invite Carter to publish in the newspapers all of his fifty criticisms of the George Report, just as he has seen fit to publish his Swiss cheese. I have a science degree but I am not a professional scientist and I do not debate with professsional scientists. However, I dare say scientists can be found who will answer Carter—also in the press. I simply suggest to Carter that he prepare better criticisms than the ones our mutual acquaintance submitted to me, unless he wants to lose the game by a score of fifty to nothing. And I warn him that before he can walk with Alice in the Wonderland of unbridled environmentalism he must first get by the narrow gate of Bean, Connolly, Vint and Penfield. I could have sat next to Caruso for dinner every night for a lifetime and never sung as Caruso sang. No amount of cultural contact, no amount of integration would have made the slightest difference, except that if I had tried to sing with Caruso I would have spoiled the opera. And what is true of the vocal chords is true of the frontal lobes.

Out at the University of Chicago, there is another professor who thinks he can brush Dr. George aside. For the benefit of the press, let me name him, Manning Nash, Associate Professor of Anthropology. Nash had begun by attacking Race and Reason in a long article in Current Anthropology last June which was answered by me in a few short sentences on Bean, Connolly and Vint which I put in a letter I sent to Sol Tax, editor of the magazine. Thereupon Nash wrote me saying he doubted if my letter would ever be published so he was going to answer me right off privately. He proceeded to ignore all the substantive issues by calling Dr. George, who is considerably above him in academic status, "unscientific", and then he urged me to read the Constitution of the United States, the Declaration of Independence and the Articles of Confederation so that I might learn something about the legal equality of all human beings.

To Nash I answered: "Regarding your paragraph on the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution, you appear never really to have read Race and Reason, or much American history. Jefferson, who wrote the Declaration, refutes you on page 62, lines 4-8, of Race and Reason; Lincoln refutes you on pages 8-9. It so happens that Lincoln was a lawyer and you are not. Until the aberration of the 1954 Supreme Court decision no competent lawyer supposed that there was any 'legal' right on the part of the federal government to force Negroes into White schools. And that Court reached its decision on sociological and pseudo-scientific rather than legal grounds."

But to get back to the George Report, when this report was first issued there appeared in many newspapers throughout the South, by some sort of spontaneous combustion, an answer from a man named Charles C. Perkins, Chairman of the Department of Psychology at Emory University in Atlanta. Perkins was very patronizing, very sure that no even moderately reputable psychologist would come up with findings such as the report contained, quite forgetting Dr. Garrett, for fifteen years head of the Department of Psychology at Columbia and a past president of the American Psychological Association. Perkins then went on to remark that while there "just aren't many facts that allow positive conclusions" and while he didn't want even his rebuttal evidence to be taken too seriously, nevertheless "Alpha examinations given World War I soldiers indicated the average northern Negro was smarter than the average southern White man."

It is difficult to understand Perkins' willingness to use this material even with apologies. This is the well known and long discredited Klineburg Twist, and for the benefit of the press I am referring to Otto Klineburg, Professor of Psychology at Columbia University. What Klineburg did in this case was to take the four Southern states where the White averages were lowest and compare them with the four Northern states where the Negro averages were highest. If we take the Whites in the same Northern states as the Negroes, these Whites scored far above the Negroes. It's an old equalitarian trick to compare the best of one group with the worst of another and, of course, such a procedure has no validity whatever. If you take an above-average Negro and give him a lot of advantages he will do better than a below-average White man who has had very few. Wherever you have overlapping statistical distributions, the top of one will always exceed the bottom of the other. This is not the problem under discussion. The thing we are interested in is what the average Negro will do when compared with the average White man under like conditions. Anyone interested in the latter question will find decisive answers in the George Report. This is the only issue, and it is the issue Perkins is clouding and confusing. I urge you in dealing with these people to keep them to the point. Their specialty is irrelevance.

I might say that I think the championship in this respect goes this year to a man up at the University of Connecticut. I refer to one Donald C. Simmons who is listed as a member of the Department of Sociology and Anthropology. It would hardly seem proper to take your time with this 36-year old assistant professor were it not for the fact that The New Republic magazine has seen fit on two separate occasions to publish his attacks which now include both Race and Reason and the George Report.

My first brush with Simmons occurred last summer when The New Republic printed a review by him of Race and Reason in which he accused me of quoting scientists out of context. When I asked him for one example he was able to give none. Perhaps he was basing his criticism on hearsay from an article by Howard Margolis of Science magazine. Margolis made the same accusation, and when asked to provide an example gave my quotation from Kluckhohn on page 51 of Race and Reason. I answered this accusation in a letter which Science published. I also answered it in a speech in New Orleans a year ago. I have heard nothing from Margolis since. And I doubt if I hear any more on this subject from Simmons either.

Simmons' most recent effort appeared in The New Republic for January 5 and is of a somewhat more specific nature. He begins by referring to the George Report and the measurement of intelligence by brain size. Simmons mentions a group of male Negro brains which he says were found to weigh more than a certain group of female White brains. You will remember that on page 61 of the George Report there is a footnote which reads in part as follows: "The essential point here is that, other things being equal, [such as sulcification and microscopic structure of the cortex] and considering higher animals in general perspective the larger the brain relative to body size, the greater the intelligence." Note the phrase "relative to body size". Among other factors, the average body size of women is notably smaller than that of men. Thus their brain size would be expected to be smaller without lessening of intelligence. Apparently we have another case here of a man who hasn't read with any attention what he's attacking.

Next Simmons dances the Klineburg Twist, about which no more need be said, and then he gives us a quotation from the Society for the Psychological Study of Social Issues which reads as follows: ". . . the more comparable the background of White and Negro groups, the less the difference in intelligence." However, if you will turn to the American Psychologist magazine for May of 1962 you will find that Dr. Garrett answered that statement by showing that there have been six studies on the subject and all of them contradict the Society for the Psychological Study of Social Issues.

Our Connecticut friend then moves on to comment about some experiments in Baltimore purporting to show that no difference can be found between White and Negro infants up to 40 weeks, and that differences thereafter must be due to socio-economic factors. But the lower centers of the brain and nervous system, in human beings and in animals, are the ones which mature first; the higher centers mature last. Therefore similarity of performance in the early stages of life signifies nothing as to adult potentiality.

Finally Simmons remarks on what he calls the racist accusation that the Negro never invented an alphabet and points out that many other races didn't either. But if he will read the Biology of the Race Problem he will see that George makes no such accusation. George says that the Negro never invented a system of writing. It is true that alphabets are rare. Systems of writing are not. The Negro never invented either. I shan't weary you further with Simmons. My only comment must be one of surprise at the acceptance of this sort of material for the second time by The New Republic.

Well, we've had a look at Harvard, Columbia, Johns Hopkins, Chicago, Emory and the University of Connecticut. Let's return to Harvard for a moment, the university where the FBI had to arrest Zborowski, a research associate in the Department of Anthropology. I do not mention this in any criticism of the department at Harvard. It might have happened anywhere. I cite it as an example of how important the communists consider it to be to corrupt the minds of our young people in this field.

The New York Times on December 9, 1962, ran a review of Dr. Carleton Coon's book, The Origin of Races. This review was written by Professor William W. Howells, Chairman of the Department of Anthropology at Harvard. Up until the last two paragraphs Howells sticks to his subject and I have no comments to make. However, in the last two paragraphs he launches a thinly veiled attack upon my pamphlet, Evolution and Race: New Evidence. He opens the first of these paragraphs with the remark that certain parts of Coon's book have been "pounced on with delight by the present cohort of racists". This opening gambit is the usual introduction used by these people in order to arouse anger rather than reason in their readers. If a man acknowledges the facts of race, he's a racist. I suppose if he acknowledges the facts of sex he's a sexist.

But I move on. Howells next says that even if Coon is correct, it is not possible to use his hypothesis to measure modern racial differences. Let's think about that for a moment. If Coon is correct, the Caucasian race passed the threshold of evolutionary development in brain structure from Homo erectus to Homo sapiens 200,000 years ahead of the Negro. This matter of brain structure is biological, inherent, hereditary. Evolution is a continuing process. If one race has a head start of 200,000 years over another, does Howells mean to suggest that this head start has no significance—does he see no possible relation between it and the differences found by Bean, Connolly and Vint in White and Negro brains, or the results of intelligence tests, or the figures on crime and illegitimacy, or the level of civilization in Haiti, or the stability of governments in the Congo? Nobody is trying to take a pair of calipers and declare what is the exact measure of difference in the two races today. But I will tell Howells it makes enough difference to the Southern mother when she puts her girls in school.

This amiable Harvard professor, furthermore, is not above playing a guessing game in these final paragraphs. At one place he refers to a passage from page ix of the introduction to Coon's book which reads as follows: "It is a fair inference . . . that the subspecies which crossed the evolutionary threshold into the category of Homo Sapiens the earliest have evolved the most and that the obvious correlation between the length of time a subspecies has been in the sapiens state and the levels of civilization attained by some of its populations may be related phenomena." On this passage Howells makes the comment in parenthesis: "Those who are so tickled with page ix of the introduction might try continuing to page 661."

Of course the average reader of Howells' review will not have at hand a copy of The Origin of Races and hence will not be able to evaluate the parenthesis because he will have no access to page 661. Does Howells intend to leave the implication of some contradiction? Page 661 deals both with selection and with the tendency to eventual resegregation of genetic characters in racial interbreeding. I wonder if Howells supposes this to be compensation to Southern society which, after many generations of chaos, might look forward to such an eventuality. Thereafter the chaos would start all over again.

And while we're jumping about from page to page I might call Howells' attention to page 336. I shan't keep you in the dark about what is on that page. Here Coon refers to "the great variability of twentieth century human beings, in evolutionary grades [emphasis mine] as well as in racial lines". Coon calls these differences important. He also says that from the perspective of life as a whole, they are slight. Obviously if you run the gamut from the amoeba to man they are slight. But what a whale of a difference a few brain cells make! You can find that discussed in the George Report at page 34.

Finally our amiable Harvard professor sums up his view of my pamphlet in this extraordinarily penetrating remark: "Anyhow I see no way of using such arguments [the 200,000 year evolutionary lag] to disprove the Constitution of the United States." Would anyone in the audience care to tell me where the Constitution mentions the integration of schools? If we look at the Fourteenth Amendment, do we see any reference to schools? Ladies and gentlemen, I would like to share with you a not very well kept secret. The people who put the integration of schools into the Constitution were Howells and his kind, the equalitarian anthropologists and sociologists who misled the Supreme Court and the American people with their mess of half-truths and slanted evidence.

I say now to Howells and all his crowd: You have not only misled the Supreme Court and the American people, you have fooled the Negro about himself. You have poisoned his mind with expectations that cannot be realized and inflamed him with an arrogance that has no justification. You have set him against the White man. You have made him think he has a grudge against the White race when the truth is he owes the White race a greater debt than he can ever repay. Offer a few Negroes one-way tickets to Africa, where they can enjoy the culture of their own race, and see how many takers you get.

I tell you without fear of contradiction that the American people are as kindly a people as any in the world, that nowhere else in the world would Negroes in such numbers have found a better haven. Yet James Baldwin and these much publicized "angry black men" writing books and long articles for the New Yorker magazine damn the White American. Baldwin writes pityingly about his ancestor who was dragged to America in chains. But I say to Baldwin that if his ancestor had not been brought here in chains, he would have died a far more terrible death as a slave in Africa. Baldwin is lucky to be here.

And I say to Leopold Stokowski that I revere him as a musician but when he appears on David Susskind's "Open End" TV program and declares that the White man owes the Negro an apology he is guilty of a groundless and inflammatory statement on a subject about which he is incorrectly informed. He is encouraging the Negro to violence and revenge against a race to which the Negro owes an infinite debt.

In this matter Susskind and Stokowski and other public figures across the nation run blindly with the pack. Yet standing here tonight it is not primarily these that I indict, nor The New Republic nor even the Supreme Court. Least of all is it the average Negro. I indict the men who have fooled and goaded the Negro—the men who have made it necessary for the rest of us to point out truths which the Negro might otherwise have been spared the telling. I indict the Howells, the Nashes, the Perkins, the Carters, the Klinebergs, the Handlins, the Herskovitses, the Simmonses, and the Sol Taxes who have spawned our racial tension here and abroad.

And I indict their associations. These men indeed run in packs. They have provided the basis for this whole house of cards that is starting to fall around their heads. If White settlers are being dispossessed and murdered in Kenya, if nuns are being raped in the Congo, if White men and girls are being slugged on the streets of our Northern cities, if the Supreme Court has to warn its employees about going home at night, look to the source. "Mark those who cause divisions and offenses . . . and deceive the hearts of the simple."

Here I would like to incorporate by reference what I said a year ago in New Orleans (in "The Road to Reversal") about my exchange of correspondence with the president of the American Anthropological Association, Sherwood Washburn. Then I would like to ask: Have I now given you enough cases to demonstrate the utter lack of facts on the equalitarian side of this controversy and the poverty of their arguments? Out of all these universities and the resolutions of these associations not one iota of evidence or one shred of argument has come that cannot be exploded in thirty seconds. It is all as stale and empty as the notion that the sun revolves around the earth.

Have I also provided enough illustrations of the way these scientists operate? Because, if not, I could go on. I could mention the fact that on one occasion when a certain scientific association was about to pass a resolution condemning Race and Reason there was a pause in the proceedings. And someone asked for a show of hands on how many had read the book. In a room full of people how many do you suppose had read it? Three. And yet they were about to pass, and did pass, a resolution damning something they'd never read. Does that episode need any further comment from me?

Listen to what the man who was for fifteen years head of the Department of Psychology at Columbia University (he was a member of the faculty for thirty years) has to say about these political resolutions by scientists. I quote you Henry Garrett in a letter to me last October:

"I knew Franz Boas personally. I was able to observe the influence of Boas as founder of the science of anthropology in America and to evaluate the extent to which Boas' socialistic ideology dominated his thinking and permeated the teaching of his disciples, first at Columbia and later at other universities fed from the Boas cult. I was also able to observe the increasing degree of control exercised by this cult over students and younger professors until fear of loss of jobs or status became common in the field of anthropology unless conformity to the racial equality dogma was maintained.

"I will go so far as to assert that the supporters of the equality dogma in science in America today fall into three classes—those who are intimidated, those who are driven by left-wing political motives and those who are honest but mistaken humanitarians. I can testify from repeated personal observation to the intimidation and to the pall of suppression which has fallen upon the academic world in the area of which I speak. It encompasses not only anthropology but certain other related sciences. In the light of this situation the resolutions are not surprising."

Dr. Robert Gayre has told me that not since the days of Galileo has science seen anything like it. When Simmons reviewed Race and Reason, he asked if I were looking for an "apostate" anthropologist. You know what that word means. An apostate is one who departs from a dogma. Here, in other words, is one of the younger generation who doesn't even realize his self-betrayal —who has never learned that science is a matter of research and facts, not dogma.

In the face of this grotesque state of affairs I'd like to ask the Kennedy brothers a question. Next to population control, the race problem is undoubtedly the most urgent in the world today; it is basic to everything else, even to the cold war. Do you, or do you not, consider it desirable that you inform yourselves on both sides of this matter? All your lives you have been listening to political propaganda masquerading under the name of science. It would take you less than an hour to read Section IV of the George Report and the article in the Mankind Quarterly, less than an hour to talk to Dr. George or Dr. Garrett. Have you done either?

The decision of the Supreme Court does not relieve you from studying the subject. You've seen what that decision has done to the nation. You are not President and Attorney General solely for the Negro population or the Northern or Western radicals. You also happen to be serving millions of people who believe the decision was viciously wrong and who know more about the matter firsthand than you'll ever know. Why have you never given a hearing to the scientists on their side? Are you afraid of losing some votes? Are you afraid of the Catholic Church? I have been told that this is the case, but I refuse to believe it. Any man who buys a vote by doing the wrong thing, or the ignorant thing, in a job like yours is on the skids of history, and you're smart enough to know it. And as for the Supreme Court, it would switch fast enough if you discovered the truth and went out and told it on the mountain. The American majority would respond with a roar and these minority-group arguments would vanish like last year's snow.

Stop and think for a minute. You have the record of the centuries and of today in Africa, you have the facts in certain countries of South America and you have them in Haiti. In the United States you have crime records and you have illegitimacy records. You also have forty years of intelligence tests. All these point in one direction, namely, that the Negro has created his history and environment (not vice versa) and will create it again wherever he's allowed to. Next you have the microscopic studies of Vint, the morphology of Bean, Connolly, Halstead and Penfield, and the recent evidence presented by Dr. Coon, president of the American Association of Physical Anthropologists. You have pages of other evidence in the George Report. Finally you know the background of the equalitarian school, you know who started it and the political and social views of most of its leaders. All of this points in one direction.

For each of the above items some far-fetched excuse might be conceived. Any one of them might possibly be debated. But consider them all together.

Let me suggest a parallel. You are walking along a hotel corridor and as you pass a bedroom door you hear loud, angry voices. Then you hear one of the voices say, "Take that, you dirty dog!" and you hear two shots and the sound of a body falling. So you open the door and you find one man standing with a smoking gun in his hand, looking down at another man with two bullets in his heart.

After some personal risk and minor injuries you manage to capture the man with the gun and, at the trial, the following facts develop. The dead man was shortly to have married his childhood sweetheart and was said by several witnesses to have been joyful over this, having courted her long and earnestly. Further it appears that the dead man, the week before, had inherited a million dollars, after taxes, from an uncle he had never seen. The accused, on the other hand, according to reliable testimony, had coveted the dead man's sweetheart and had been repulsed by her. In fact, he had several times sworn he would kill the deceased. The gun is found to have been the property of the accused.

The defense pleads that the death is a suicide. The point is made that the dead man might just conceivably have changed his mind about his fiancée and have become depressed at the thought of marriage. As for the million dollars, after taxes, this might not have been enough to compensate for the death of the uncle he had never seen. Regarding the remark, "Take that, you dirty dog!", this may have been the deceased talking to himself. Upon your telling the court that you knew the voice of the dead man with whom you had been associated for many years and that the voice was not his, the defense replies that the deceased was only 30 years old and his voice may have been changing.

Concerning the gun, which turns out to be a Smith and Wesson, the defense proposes that this might just possibly have been stolen by the deceased from the accused because, although the deceased had a Colt of his own in the bottom of his suitcase, he preferred suicide with a Smith and Wesson. Finally, in regard to the threats of the accused, these might by a remote chance have been unrelated to the shooting and due instead to cultural deprivation on the part of the accused.

On the basis of this evidence, the Court takes the case away from the jury and directs a verdict in favor of the accused. Although the accused has threatened to kill two other men in the community, his gun is returned to him and he is complimented and set free. The newspapers are loud in their praise of this verdict. A few weeks later you read in one of them that the other men who were threatened have indeed died under mysterious circumstances thought by the staff writer for this paper to be suicide. On the following Sunday you turn on your TV and you see and hear certain prominent men apologize to the accused for the inconvenience the community has caused him. In the press that same Sunday appear editorials bitterly attacking the prosecuting attorney in the case. Clearly the whole tragedy, according to these papers, was a matter of cultural deprivation on the part of the dead man. As a matter of fact, you read in the news section that the prosecuting attorney has lost his job and is on relief.

At this point you might be forgiven if you put down your paper with a sigh, particularly after hearing on the radio that counsel for the defense was a fraternity brother of the judge.

A man with a weak, confused mind might perhaps be persuaded that some one or two of the following things were true, namely, that the deceased was depressed at the thought of marrying his childhood sweetheart, or that he could not bear the loss of the uncle he had never seen in spite of the million dollars after taxes, or that he preferred to steal a Smith and Wesson rather than kill himself with his own Colt, or that his voice was changing at the age of 30, or that the threats against him were due solely to cultural deprivation—but a man who could believe all these things ought to be in a mental institution.

By the same token, anybody who can believe that the Negro's limitations are solely environmental in the face of African history, and of Haitian history, and of U. S. crime records, and of U. S. illegitimacy records, and of forty years of intelligence tests, and of the microscopic studies of Vint, and of the morphology of Bean, Connolly, Penfield and Halstead, and of the latest synthesis of Carleton Coon, and of the other evidence in the George Report, and of the unmasking of the infiltration of the life sciences by political dogma —any person, I say, who can believe the Negro is the product of his history and environment (instead of vice versa) in the face of all those facts may not belong in a mental institution, but I dread the thought of his teaching any child of mine.

I must warn you that on the equalitarian side of this controversy there is great cleverness and great evasiveness. Do not let yourself be distracted from the point. There is just one issue, and I will put it in this way: In one group you have masses of brains which, on the average, are at a certain evolutionary level. In a separate group you have other masses of brains which, on the average, are at a different evolutionary level. Is it wise to adopt public policies which will encourage the biological mixing of those two groups of brains?

You must not be confused by the mulatto red herring, or the overlap red herring, or the religious red herring, or the legal red herring or the civil rights red herring, or the red herring of American democracy. These matters are all of the greatest importance but they have nothing to do with the fundamental issue. If the mixing is wrong, then public policies leading toward it cannot be Christian, they cannot be American, they cannot be civil rights—and they ought not to be legal.

Cleaning up the situation is going to require inspection of the evidence by intelligent public leaders, it is going to require listening to both sides and studying both sides. It is going to require going down to the end of the road on each item—statement and answer, rejoinder and surrejoinder, rebuttal and surrebuttal, until neither side has anything left to say. But I assure the President and the Attorney General: if you will investigate this matter and hear both sides impartially and to a conclusion, there is no doubt what that conclusion will be. You ought to have done it long ago. Eisenhower ought to have done it in 1954.

With particular reference to the Supreme Court, do you realize that most of the material we've been discussing tonight never was put before it? The whole record in the school cases is a scientific travesty. What is needed now—and has been needed since 1954—is executive leadership in channeling a new case based on new evidence up to the Court. I suggest to the President and the Attorney General that, having satisfied themselves as to the facts, they throw their weight behind getting a new case heard, instead of blindly talking about their duty to enforce a judicial decision which is a nightmare scientifically, legally and morally.

Let me add one last remark about my hotel drama. Any similarity between that episode and the groups in our racial controversy is purely a coincidence. Actually and in all seriousness I intend no parallel whatever between the Negro and the accused. I leave you to judge how I feel about counsel for the defense and the other characters in the story.

The time has come for me to draw these comments to a close. Today we have celebrated the birthday of a great man. He was not only an American hero. He was beloved throughout the world. He was a devout Christian, a man of wide compassion and sensitive tenderness. We know what he thought and said about the Negro and I shan't quote him on that subject again. We know that in 1858 he made it clear that he did not favor in any way the social or political equality of the White and Black races. We also know that in 1864, when his days were nearly done, he wrote a letter to the governor of Louisiana "barely suggesting" his hope that some "very intelligent" Negroes might be admitted to the franchise—of course under the control, and at the discretion, of the states. Surely with this we may agree.

However, I think we may be equally sure that Lincoln would have had nothing but contempt for these latter-day reconstructionists sitting here in Washington and elsewhere who at bayonet point would force the Negro into schools and other social situations with White children against the wishes of their parents. He would have had nothing but contempt for a welfare agency which farms out helpless White orphans to a Negro foster home. He would not have blamed the Negro for this. If ever there was a leader who would have cleansed the temple with a lash on the backs of the real culprits, Lincoln was the man.

But Lincoln was kind. I think he would have liked Dr. Garrett's way of expressing the difference between the White and Negro races. Dr. Garrett prefers to speak less of inferiority than of racial immaturity, and I have changed this slightly so that I speak now of racial youth. Indeed I have tried to make it clear wherever I have used the word inferiority that I am referring solely to limitations in adaptability to our specific Western culture. But watch the scientists and the equalitarian press—they will always drag out the phrase "Negro inferiority charged" and put it in headlines when they attack us. Like the word racist, it is a badge of their demagoguery.

Lincoln was kind, too, in his attitude toward the South. Had he lived he would have bound up the South's wounds as well as the North's. There would have been no Reconstruction Period. And although the Fourteenth Amendment was passed after Lincoln's death, I will go so far as to say that if he could see the manner in which that Amendment is being abused today, and hurled against the South, he would turn in his grave.

So tonight I am not going to end this talk with a quotation from Lincoln about the Negro. I am going to end it with a different quotation from Lincoln which I recommend to the meditations of the two anthropological associations, and of the Supreme Court and of John F. Kennedy and of Dwight Eisenhower: "You can fool all of the people some of the time, and some of the people all of the time, but you can't fool all of the people all of the time."

I might add that you can't fool nature any of the time. Genetic racial differences in intelligence, character and behavior are the basic reality of life. As Dr. Coon has said, there is great variability in the evolutionary status of human populations all over the earth. This is the fundamental fact in the world today. National or international policy built on any other foundation is a house built on sand.

Copies of this address, "These are the Guilty" may be obtained at the following prices:

1 to 2 copies - free
3 to 99 copies - 18¢ each
100 or more copies - 15¢ each

Copies of Dr. W. C. George's
"The Biology Of The Race Problem" are available as follows:

1 to 9 copies - 50¢ each
10 to 99 copies - 40¢ each
100 or more copies - 35¢ each

NATIONAL PUTNAM LETTERS COMMITTEE
P. O. Box 3518, Grand Central Station
New York City 17, New York

Resist. Imp. Misc. VJV
Eliza Paschall
PA
SB

COMMITTEE FOR SEGREGATION
P. O. Box 1062

NEWS RELEASE

September 5, 1963

The marriage of Charlayne Hunter, a Negress, and Walter Stovall, a white man, both recent students at the University of Georgia was recently announced.

This inter-racial marriage is the result of integration in the schools, where they first met, and the integrated theatres and restaurants in Atlanta, where they courted.

This mixed marriage was in violation of God's covenants and statutes, but is gloated over by the Devil and the communists.

How many people have sold their soul for pieces of silver. Walter Stovall apparently did, as it has been reliably reported that he was paid $300.00 by one of the so-called civil rights organizations for each and every time he was seen in public with this Negress. How much was he paid to marry her? And it is also reliably reported that Walter is not the only student at Georgia that had after dark romance with Charlayne. There were several others. Your son or daughter may also end up marrying a Negro if this race-mixing continues. Don't forget this is the ultimate goal as advocated by the communists, the NAACP and other "civil righters." Is this what you want?

What would be your reaction if your son or daughter announced that he or she had married a Negro? This can happen if you continue to support by patronizing racially-mixed restaurants and theatres. This places the Negroes and whites on common ground, nurturing familiarity, which will eventually break down the color barriers, resulting in amalgamation of the races. This the communists are counting on. You can prevent this betrayal of your sons and daughters by staying out of integrated restaurants and theatres!

There are still a number of people who do not believe that the Davis and Davis Bros. Cafeterias serve Negroes. Some have been surprised to see Negroes served in these places, even though they had been warned by the pickets' signs to the effect that Negroes were served.

Negroes eat practically everyday at the Davis Cafeteria on Marietta St. at Forsyth, The Town House, a Davis Cafeteria located on Forsyth St. up from the Dinkler Hotel also serve Negroes quite often. Among these customers here they can count Martin Lucifer King. The Davis Cafeteria at Pryor and Houston Sts. has served Negroes, as has the Davis Cafeteria on Peachtree St. next to the Atlanta Gas Light Co. These places are all owned by Ted Davis.

"Tubby" Davis, owner of Davis Bros. Cafeterias has a sign in a good many of his eateries stating:

"Davis Cafeteria
Is not integrated and Never has been"

This notice is posted in his West End location on Lee St., yet Negroes have been served on several occasions.

This sign is also posted in the Davis Bros. Cafeteria on W. Peachtree across from the Biltmore Hotel, yet Mr. Davis in an article in the August 15 edition of the "Northside News" admitted to integrating this restaurant and the one on Luckie St.

If Mr. Davis has changed his policy on race-mixing, and wishes to return to segregation, then he should post a sign stating:

"Davis Bros. Cafeterias are not integrated and will not be."

But until he sees fit to do this, we will be forced to continue to picket in order t warn the unwary, and you should continue to refuse to eat there. Have your friends and business associates to also stop eating at Davis' and Davis Bros. Cafeterias until they return to a policy of segregation. So, you might have to inconvenience yourself by going to a restaurant a little further away -- isn't this better than having your son or daughter ending up as Walter Stovall, marrying a Negro!

Stay true to God and Country - stay out of integrated restaurants, theatres and hotels!

Resistance Groups - Misc.

COMMITTEE FOR SEGREGATION distributed in front of Lebs 7/26/63

P. O. Box 1062
Atlanta, Ga. 30301

July 24, 196

This constant and quite often violent agitation for integration is quite definitely backed by the communists and socialists. They are dedicated to a classless society, and this classless society can not be attained until there is complete and total integration to the point of intermarriage (amalgamation).

The integration of all public accomadations are merely steps toward the final goal of amalgamation of the races resulting in a nation of mulattoes.

Integrating the restaurants is another move forward toward this satonic goal.

Integration of the schools was the first step toward this end. This was followed by integrating public transportation, rest rooms, public parks, golf courses, public libraries, theatres, swimming pools, housing, hotels, integration of work forces resulting in the displacement of white people in favor of negroes is fast being pushed. The integration of barber shops and beauty salons will probably be next.

William Z. Foster, former national chairman of the communist party of the United States of America, in his book "Toward a Soviet America" had the following to say about integration:

"The party lays the utmost stress upon its demands for the negroes. It demands full economic, political and social equality for them; it fights to eliminate the entire system of discrimination to which negroes are subjected in industry, in the distribution of unemployment relief, in segregated dwelling districts, in hotels and restaurants, in trade unions, in the courts, in political activities:"

"Communist action is based upon the slogan of "Class Against Class:"

"The communist party, alone of all the political parties, fights for the liberation of the negro --"

"In a Soviet system, the negro will have the most complete equality - economically, politically, socially. The doors to every occupation, to every social activity will be wide open for him. He will have ample land confiscated from the great white landlords." Editors Note - It is quite clear that the Democratic Party at the behest of John F. Kennedy and brother Bobby and other ultra-liberals have adopted the principles of the foregoing.

"The American Soviet will, of course, abolish all restrictions upon racial intermarriage."

" --Contact between these two races, bred of modern industrialization, is just as irresistibly breaking down these racial differences and bringing about racial amalgamation."

The communist party is working hard to have repealed all laws forbidding miscegenation (intermarriage).

The N.A.A.C.P. has as one of their objectives the repeal of all laws forbidding miscegenation.

The United Church of Christ held a youth forum at Clark College here in Atlanta in June. According to an article in the June 24, 1963 edition of the Atlanta Journal "Rev." Archie Hargraves of New York spoke to this group and stated: "Marriage without reference to color represents the major breakthrough to the integration problems of the nation."

The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity" of which one "Rev." John B. Morris, a long time member of the N.A.A.C.P. and who has seen the inside of numerous jails, is executive director, distributed a pamphlet stating that commingling between the races had a tendency to cause familiarity. They too would like to see amalgamation of the races.

Interbreeding of the races is the objective! Is this what you want? Do you want your son or daughter, grandson, granddaughter or sisters to marry a negro?

If you do not, then you must do your part in stopping this satonic push for integration now!

Do not eat at any of the restaurants appearing on the attached black list:

Editors Note - It is not implied in any manner that any of these restaurant owners are communists or a conscious part of their conspiracy. Quite to the contrary, they are good Americans misled and/or pushed to this satonic deed.

There are plenty of other restaurants available that have remained segregated, just look for them. Eat at any restaurant not appearing on this black list. If there is not one convenient - then pack your lunch from home.

Do not eat at any of the following restaurants:

Herren's - 24 Luckie St. NW (A ringleader for race-mixing and bragged about it.)

S&W Cafeteria - 189 Peachtree Street

Davis Brothers - all locations

Davis Fine Food - all locations

Johnny Reb - all locations

Polly Davis -- see Miami Buffet

Miami Buffet in Atlantan Hotel; Peachtree Road; Buckhead on East Paces Ferry [illegible] Harvest House, Lenox Square, owned by F. W. Woolworth Company.

Dale's Cellar - 400 W. Peachtree

The Farm - 3820 Roswell Road

Colonel Sanders Fried Chicken (owned by Davis) - all locations -

Caruso's Italian Restaurants - 1893 Piedmont Avenue; 2496 Stewart Avenue -

Golden Palm - Americano Motel (braggs about it).

Seven Steers - Roswell Road (Buckhead) Peachtree

Stauffer's - Merchandise Mart

Top of The Mart - see Stauffer's

Shoney's Big Boy Drive-In - Brookhaven on Peachtree Road (already integrated); College Park.

Howard Johnson Motor Lodges and Restaurants, all Atlanta locations and all others except South Georgia that do not belong to Howard Johnson Company but are franchised.

Yohannan's - Lenox Square (a leader for integration).

John Escoe's - Peachtree Road

Mammy's Shanty - Peachtree Road

Sprayberry's Cafeteria - 888 Peachtree Street

Camellia Garden - Peachtree Road (says he has segrated; let's see).

Remember - integration is not God's will, but the Communist's way - when you eat at any of these integrated places, you are helping the Communists.

12/13/63 Resist. Grp. Misc.

bespeak those of the constituents whom I have the honor to represent.

Mr. Speaker, my people would be well satisfied if fate placed the Presidency in the hands of the gentleman from Massachusetts, JOHN McCORMACK. There is no finer American. There has been no greater Speaker.

Mr. KYL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. KYL. I have asked the gentleman from Massachusetts to yield to me at this time simply to say that I thank the gentleman most sincerely for his comments on the floor this afternoon. I think these comments have been well said and needed to be said.

Mr. O'BRIEN of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLAND. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'BRIEN of New York. May I say that a lot of the downgrading of the distinguished Speaker is a part of the downgrading of the entire House of Representatives. The Speaker of this House is chosen by ballot of the majority of the House of Representatives, representing the entire United States. So, when they criticize the Speaker as the end result of our choice it represents another expression of their contempt of us as Congressmen as a group.

Mr. BOLAND. I appreciate the comments of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JOELSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLAND. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. JOELSON. I would like to congratulate the gentleman and express my own high regard for the Speaker and the great service which he has rendered to this House and to the Nation.

Mr. BOLAND. I thank the gentleman from New Jersey.

SITUATION IN HOLMES COUNTY, MISS.

(Mrs. GREEN of Oregon asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. GREEN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, there has recently been called to my attention a situation in Holmes County, Miss. I have known of the situation for some time. I have withheld comment in hopes that at a local level the matter would be remedied. However, the situation has not been remedied. And so in the belief, Mr. Speaker, that our freedoms are indestructible and that an infringement on freedom in one State, if unrepaired, extensively affects freedom in other States, I now have decided to bring the matter to the attention of the House.

I have made an effort to obtain supporting opinion for the situation as outlined to me. As a result, I believe to my satisfaction that the facts as presented to me are correct.

Mr. Speaker, once again the liberties we cherish are being imperiled. This time, the victim of community persecution is a white woman editor of two weekly newspapers. She is Hazel Brannon Smith, recipient of several awards for fine journalism, who edits the Durant News and the Lexington Advertiser in Mississippi.

Since 1954, a concerted effort, led by the White Citizens' Council of the county, has been carried on with the objective of preventing Mrs. Smith from carrying out her professional responsibility of reporting the news in her community with fairness, in truth, and without fear or favor. This is a constitutionally guaranteed right, as we all know. Editors during the life of our Nation have encountered repression and violence in their efforts to print the news. It began in the very early days of our history, notably with Peter Zenger. It might be useful for those among us, who continually hasten to point out that they are Jeffersonian Democrats, that it was Thomas Jefferson who, when asked what his choice would be between free government and free newspapers, chose free newspapers.

The sad and despicable story goes back to the year 1954 when Holmes County became the first county in which a White Citizens Council was established in Mississippi. Mrs. Smith's Lexington newspaper carried an account of an unjustified shooting of a Negro by a sheriff. The sheriff sued for libel. A verdict, returned against Mrs. Smith in lower court, was thrown out by the State high court. The most recent case of legal harassment is a $100,000 libel suit filed by two Lexington policemen growing out of a fatal shooting of a 38-year-old Negro war veteran in June of this year. The suit is still pending.

In between these two episodes other accounts of wrongdoing have been published in the Smith newspapers.

In payment, a cross has been burned on Mrs. Smith's lawn. Other acts of social ostracism have been carried on. The White Citizens' Council, unable to silence a courageous editor, has helped finance a rival newspaper. This newspaper, now in its fifth year, has successfully outbid the Smith newspaper on contracts to print legal proceedings of Lexington and the county governments. The normal cost of such a contract, I am told, is about $60 a month. The White Citizens-backed paper bid 1 cent for 2 years. Thus the Smith newspapers have successfully been deprived of a most lucrative source of revenue. Efforts have been made to persuade subscribers and advertisers to shun the Smith newspapers. Mrs. Smith by valiant effort and bone-cutting economy in business and personal finances has managed to keep her newspapers afloat.

In recent years, while this harassment has been carried on, Mrs. Smith has won the Herrick Award of the National Editorial Association for "editorial writing, embracing the highest type of American principles and ideas." The Mississippi Press Association commended her at its convention in 1957. Theta Sigma Phi, national women's journalism honorary society, in 1958, presented her its valued Matrix Table.

My able and distinguished colleague, Senator NEUBERGER, on December 12 on page A7565 of the RECORD has inserted an article on the situation. And she quotes from Mrs. Smith's own column that appears regularly in the Lexington Advertiser and Durant News:

> Suppression of news and trying to control what newspapers print never works. No newspaper worth a cent would let anyone tell it what to print—and those who toady to their advertisers to such an extent that they have lost their souls will one day lose their advertisers too—for after awhile they won't have any readers. The public is entitled to read the news and judge issues for itself on the basis of truthful, honest reporting.

Any city room of a large metropolitan daily would be proud, I would hope, to frame and hang that paragraph on its wall.

A member of my staff has talked with a great leading editor of the South about this matter, Mr. Speaker. The editor said it is "most disgraceful. I have had things done to me for my views but what has been done here and to a woman is atrocious."

I would like to quote, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion from a letter of Mrs. Smith's.

> The climate of fear, hate and suspicion that we have been living in now for 9 long years has come full circle and claimed the life at the top—that is, President Kennedy. Mississippi has had this fanaticism ever since 1954 when the Citizens' Councils were organized. Ours is based mostly on race, while that of Dallas seems more political. But it is all part of the same kind of madness—and what we have been fighting here for so terribly long.

A native Southerner, newspaper owner in her community 27 years and an editor of recognized ability, Mrs. Smith is being badgered and coerced and punished for printing the news. Do members of the community deny what the articles state? No, Mrs. Smith says: "They just do not want them printed."

The long shadow of oppression has cast its shadow across still another community. Oxford and Jackson and Birmingham and Americus and Danville and, now, Lexington, Miss.

The winds of intolerance, unless abated, blow, Mr. Speaker, without regard for State boundaries. We are all affected; we are all involved. The bell tolls for us all in this situation.

ADDRESS BEFORE U.S. INTER-AMERICAN COUNCIL

(Mr. SELDEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. SELDEN. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, December 9, 1963, I had the privilege of addressing the members of the U.S. Inter-American Council in New York City. The membership of this council is composed of executives of more than a hundred U.S. firms doing business in the Latin American area.

Those who are familiar with the Charter of Punta del Este know that the success of the Alliance for Progress depends to a large degree on an increasing amount of private investment in the Latin American countries. Therefore, private investors' reluctance to plunge into the turbulent economic waters which exist in many of the nations south of the Rio Grande is one cause of the difficulties the Alliance is now encountering.

In the text of my address, which follows, I have made an effort to point out the need to strengthen the free world's position against the increasing Communist offensive in Latin America and the role private enterprise must play in this undertaking.

ADDRESS OF CONGRESSMAN ARMISTEAD SELDEN, U.S. INTER-AMERICAN COUNCIL, NEW YORK CITY, DECEMBER 9, 1963

I welcome this opportunity to speak to a group concerned about the future of United States policy in Latin America. As chairman of the House Inter-American Affairs Subcommittee, I am painfully aware that too few of our citizens appreciate that area's importance to our own Nation's security and prosperity.

In his recent article in the New York Times magazine, Mr. Adolf Berle points out that our foreign policy planners traditionally have given Latin America only secondary consideration in our overall global strategy. As a result, the people of the United States have tended to take our hemisphere's solidarity for granted.

However, one segment of our population that has recognized the need to give increased attention to the problems of Latin America is the U.S. business community. If trade follows the flag, it must also be said that understanding follows trade.

This country's businessmen were giving priority attention to Central and South America when most of our Government policymakers were yet myopic to the region's importance. Now that events have led to a new recognition of this country's hemispheric responsibilities, the experience and specialized knowledge of U.S. businessmen in Latin America can be an invaluable policymaking asset—if only our policymakers will put it to use.

Recently, I returned from the Inter-American Conference at São Paulo, where I participated as a member of the four-man U.S. congressional delegation. Anyone who is familiar with the Charter of Punta del Este knows that the success of the Alliance for Progress depends to a large extent on an increasing amount of private investment in Latin American countries. At São Paulo, it was obvious to most observers that the Alliance has run into serious difficulties. To a large extent, this trouble is the result of private investors' reluctance to plunge into the turbulent economic waters which exist in most Latin American nations today.

During the past 2 years, U.S. private investment in the region has totaled an estimated $350 to $400 million. The overall rate of outside private investment in the area, from other countries as well as our own, is far below expectations. Undoubtedly, continued political instability has caused a considerable retrenchment in private business plans for the area.

In this regard, a large measure of blame for the Alliance's failure to encourage new investment must lie with certain irresponsible Latin American political leaders. This is not intended as a blanket indictment, of course, since many of the region's political leaders have demonstrated a high degree of responsibility in carrying out their part of the Alliance program. But the schizophrenic policies of some have done incalulable harm to their countries' economies.

You cannot invite business investment into your country one day and threaten to confiscate it the next without undermining the basic element of economic growth—confidence in the stability of the system. The time is long overdue for these irresponsibles to face up to their national and hemispheric obligations. And it is also time for this country to stop pampering these leaders in Latin America who fail to meet those obligations to their people and to the inter-American system.

This country has committed over $2 billion to the nations of Latin America during the past 2 years. Yet, such gains as have been made during this period are at best treadmill advances. We have had to run hard in an effort to even keep pace with the region's expanding needs. As you know, not the least of our problems in the area is that its 2.9 percent annual population increase represents the highest growth rate in the world.

Nevertheless, though the Alliance is having its troubles, we are by no means at the end of our lifeline in Latin America. To be sure, after decades of investing time, study and billions of dollars into other areas of the world, we have only begun our effort to help raise the standard of living in our own hemisphere.

The $2 billion we have thus far put into Latin America under the Alliance program is far less than the amounts we have spent on subsidizing the economies of nations like Yugoslavia, Indonesia, India, and Cambodia. Certainly the United States, which has continued to pour aid money into a country such as Tito's Communist Yugoslavia for 15 years can demonstrate a degree of patience with our own hemisphere's political and economic problems.

As Dr. Figueres recently indicated in a letter to the Times, we have only begun to understand the nature of our problem in Latin America. And, if the area's economy is relatively primitive, its economic problems are proportionately complex. Dr. Figueres supports this view in discussing one important aspect of our difficulties—Brazil's economic dependence on the price of coffee. I quote in part from his letter:

"President Getulio Vargas wanted 90 cents for a pound of coffee. This was not out of proportion to what the poor countries pay for a jet ticket or an international telegram. I (that is, Dr. Figueres) participated in studies that showed that 50 to 60 cents for the different grades were minimum levels needed for the development of the coffee countries. Today's price is 37 cents under the World Coffee Agreement. This is the stabilization of hunger."

I have no way of knowing at what level coffee prices should be. I do know that Latin American economic experts regard 37 cents as much too low. I now also that, prior to 1949, coffee prices had been so ruinously low that millions upon millions of trees were chopped down and coffee, itself, was used to fire locomotives in Brazil. Yet, when coffee prices finally recovered in the early 1950's, our Government to the amazement and consternation of Latin Americans began an inquiry to determine the reasons for the "high" price of the commodity.

And certainly, to the extent that reduced coffee prices contribute to Brazil's economic problems, the U.S. housewife who today pays 37 cents for a pound of coffee beans might well find her children and grandchildren paying a prohibitive price in hemispheric freedom and security.

But the price of coffee is only one cause for Brazil's economic decline. I would remind Dr. Figueres that if we have not always taken the long view of Brazilian problems, there is no ignoring the fact that Brazil's leaders themselves have been guilty of monumental shortsightedness and irresponsibility in the handling of their nation's fiscal and economic affairs.

Regardless of how much assistance outsiders provide, Brazilians can only solve their domestic problems by (1) reversing the irresponsible monetary policies they have pursued for the past decade; and (2) intensifying their efforts at crop diversification as an answer to coffee overproduction. Yet, as Dr. Figueres pointed out, the depression in Latin America's coffee-producing industry is a leading cause of economic and political instability in the area.

All this is by way of pointing up our failure to come to grips with the economic ills of Latin America in the same way that we tackled Europe's problem following World War II. Our Marshall plan for Europe was a bold and imaginative program, aimed at blocking the spread of communism on that continent. We did much the same thing in other parts of the world. For example, in Japan, we rebuilt the economy of a defeated enemy. Even today our Government adheres to trade policies aimed at protecting and promoting the economic stability of Japan—though many of these policies have a drastic effect on our own domestic industries competing with Japanese industry.

Yet, in the case of our closest continental neighbor—Latin America—we have attempted only to buy time by giving the patient monetary blood transfusions on a crisis-to-crisis schedule.

Perhaps Latin America's mistake was in fighting on the right side during World War II. Had the coffee-producing countries of Latin America ended that war as defeated enemies of this country, the possibility is excellent that Dr. Vargas would have attained his 90 cents a pound, or whatever was needed to maintain his economy.

Let me make this point clear: I am against subsidizing foreign industries and interests at the expense of the U.S. taxpayer and consumer. But just as the Marshall plan proved a necessary exception to this principle, we must face up to the need for exceptional action if the alien menace of communism is to be stopped in our own hemisphere.

That strong, bold action can thwart Communist plans for the Americas is borne out by last week's elections in Venezuela. Yet, the success of democratic forces in Venezuela will delay—not halt—the Communist subversive timetable in Latin America. Nor should our gratification concerning the Venezuelan election outcome lead us to gloss over—even temporarily—the very serious long-range problems pointed up at São Paulo.

In an effort to offset the tendency of Latin Americans to blame the lack of success of the Alliance for Progress on the United States, our Government agreed last month at São Paulo to the creation of an Inter-American Committee for the Alliance for Progress (CIAT) as a central agency to coordinate all Latin American requests for Alliance loans.

While a committee of this nature may or may not be helpful as far as placing more of the burdens for decisions on the Latins themselves, the future success of the Alliance will not depend on the creation of such a committee.

The Alliance for Progress—or any other U.S.-supported program for Latin America—can only be successful if:

First, the nations of Latin America live up to the self-help commitments made by them at Punta del Este in August of 1960.

Just as we in this country must—if necessary—be prepared for additional sacrifices to halt communism in our hemisphere, so must our Latin American neighbors come to recognize that economic stability begins at home. It cannot be imported—it must be locally produced.

LWD ✓
PS ✓
PW ✓
~~SB~~
MLK
S B ✓

Tabernacle Baptist Church

1223 GWINNETT STREET
AUGUSTA, GEORGIA

C.S. HAMILTON, MINISTER
RESIDENCE 1224 GWINNETT STREET
RESIDENCE PHONE PA 4-3340

CHURCH PHONE
PARK 4-1230

OFFICERS

MISS ELIZA JOHNSON
SECRETARY

HORNSBY DRAYTON
TREASURER

H.R. SCOTT
CHAIRMAN, FINANCE COMMITTEE

W.H. LAMBACH
CHAIRMAN, BOARD OF TRUSTEES

L.P. BOHLER
CLERK

LEO McNATT
CHAIRMAN, BOARD OF DEACONS

Resist. Bap. Misc.

December 19, 1963

Mr. Vernon Jordan
Southern Regional Council

Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Vernon,

Enclosed is one of the scandal sheets circulating in our community.

Merry Xmas,

Hamp

National Putnam Letters Committee

P. O. BOX 3518, GRAND CENTRAL STATION
NEW YORK 17, N. Y.

MUrray Hill 8-9367

RALPH E. GOODALL
SECRETARY-TREASURER

MARK H. GERMAN
EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

Dear Friend:

We want to impress upon you the importance of the enclosed invitation. It is being mailed to our entire mailing list in the hope that even some of those located in distant points may be moved to attend.

To those of you in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, the Virginias and Carolinas we make an earnest appeal that you join in an outpouring that will leave no doubt as to the purpose and growing strength of this movement.

A special significance is attached to the selection of Washington and the historic Willard Hotel as the meeting place and February 12th as the date. At each plate of the dinner will be an exhibit that will supply a dramatic explanation of why our Washington hosts chose Lincoln's birthday.

Most of you who will get this letter have received a copy of Mr. Putnam's speech "This is the Problem", which was delivered at the $25.00 per plate dinner on RACE AND REASON DAY in Jackson, Mississippi and also his address entitled "The Road to Reversal" to the Attorney General's Conference for District Attorneys of the State of Louisiana. Now he moves North. Through this dinner the Washington Club supplies him with a platform in the nation's capital. Depend upon it, that in his address "These are the Guilty", he will take full advantage of the opportunity it affords.

One final word. Through Mr. Putnam's RACE AND REASON and his speeches you are familiar with the high standard he sets. In the person of Mr. Newell, the ladies and gentlemen on his dinner committee and the distinguished guests who will be at the speaker's table, you have assurance that this brilliant event will be conducted on the same high plane.

Mr. Putnam will do his part. Let us do ours with a response that will do honor to him and ourselves.

Sincerely,

Mark H. German

JOSEPH D. MALLOY
SECRETARY

CLIFFORD H. NEWELL
PRESIDENT

JOHN H. CONNAUGHTON
TREASURER

Recd Typ Mail

LWD ✓
PA ✓ SB ✓

Washington Putnam Letters Club

POST OFFICE BOX 12066
WASHINGTON 5, D.C.

TELEPHONE RE 7-1545

DINNER COMMITTEE
DEAN M. ADEN
MRS. ROSE BENNETT ANDERSON
MRS. JOHN BACHELLOR
MRS. DU RIE BATTLE
DONALD S. BALDWIN
DR. GEORGE F. BOGAN
MRS. CLARA BOYER
MAJOR ERNEST W. BROWN
WALTER BURDETTE
R. ARCHIE BURGESS
TRACY COLEMAN
COL. FRANK H. COLLINS
MRS. MARK H. CORNELL
A. GRAY DAWSON
CHARLES J. DIENELT
PHILIP DOLAN
EDWARD DUCKETT
CALDWELL DUGAN
HARRY FINE
HENRY FEBREY
MRS. MARGARET FISCHER
MRS. HERMANN FRAZIER
MAJ. GEN. U. S. GRANT, III
MRS. BRUCE GUNNELL
COL. ALDEN B. HECKLEN
MARK HEDRICK
ERNEST HENRY
JOHN H. HISER
MRS. ERNEST W. HOWARD
JAMES I. HUMPHREY
ELLSWORTH JENNISON
GEORGE E. JUDD
A. J. KESSINGER
MRS. EDWARD KIBBEY
G. M. KOOKOOGEY
HARRY LEIBRAND
CHARLES LUECK
CURTIS MARTIN
GEORGE MATTINGLY
JAMES H. MC MULLEN
JOSEPH V. MORAN
FRED L. MORGAN
MISS KATHLEEN NOEL
WILLIAM K. NORWOOD
MRS. F. L. R. OPIE
COL. WILLIAM H. PRESS
EDWARD A.REAMER
HAROLD REMINES
COMDR. ROBERT ROBINSON
J. BENJAMIN SIMMONS
MRS. CLYDE SIMS
JAMES E. SMITH
WILLIAM J. SMITH
PETER SNYDER
EARL SPIKER
LESTER H. STEINEM
WILLIAM STEWART
BENJAMIN SULLIVAN
JOHN L. C. SULLIVAN
MRS. BRAXTON H. TABB, JR.
GILBERT VINCENT
JOSEPH VIRES
WILLIAM WARD
MRS. ESTELLE WERNER
MARTIN WIEGAND
MRS. HARVEY W. WILEY
HENRY WILLIARD

Dear Friend:

There has been a persistent demand on the part of many people in this area who have read Carleton Putnam's great book "RACE AND REASON: A Yankee View" for our club to arrange a Washington meeting to be addressed by Mr. Putnam.

We are happy to announce that we are sponsoring a Lincoln Day Dinner to be held in the Grand Ballroom of the historic Willard Hotel, February 12, 1963 at seven o'clock P.M. We will have Mr. Putnam as our guest speaker. There will also be provided a very appropriate and interesting program for the occasion. Tickets are $6.50 per person.

We cordially invite you to attend. A large response is assured, and we suggest that you immediately mail your order for tickets and your check in the enclosed return envelope.

The title of Mr. Putnam's address will be "These are the Guilty."

Sincerely

Clifford H. Newell

P. S. The Willard extends the following special rates to those desiring to stop at the hotel:

Single ----	$10.50
Double ----	16.00
Twin ----	17.00
Triple ----	20.00

BRISTOL VIRGINIA-TENNESSEAN
THURSDAY, AUGUST 8, 1963

LWDL
PA
SBV

The Racial Crisis: A Continuing Study

By AL KUETTNER
United Press International

A major report will be released this week-end dealing with the psychiatric aspects of the desegregation of Southern schools.

Like most such studies, its findings will be controversial — accepted as scientific data by some, discarded by others.

The report will be published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League. This adds to its controversial aspects because both have been active in pro-integration efforts.

The study was produced by Dr. Robert M. Coles, a Boston psychiatrist, now resident in Atlanta. He spent two years gathering the clinical material.

Studied Many Cases

He spent many hours with Negro school children having their first experience in integrated situations, with pre-school Negro youngsters, with teachers and with white parents and pupils who were both for and against desegregation.

Coles, discussing the project in an interview prior to release of his report, said the conclusion of his study was that Negroes can make their way in integrated schools without psychological stress on their own lives or ill effects on the lives of white pupils.

During his racial study, Coles said he often visited the homes of Negroes, playing on the floor with their young children as a means of gaining their confidence. It was in such situations, he said, that he learned Negroes develop knowledge of racial differences at a very early age.

Children Learn Early

"At four and five years of age, these children know the score," Coles said. "I have been in homes where children of this age have white and colored dolls. They talk about what the dolls are going to be when they grow up. They will place the white dolls in a white society and they grow up to have fine homes and marriages. The Negro dolls become maids and hold menial positions in society.

"I would ask them 'why' and they would tell me, 'that's the way it is in the world'."

Although they now are going through a revolutionary transition, Negroes still are bound by many barriers that are the cumulative process of "300 years of subservience," Coles said. Therein lies one of the biggest problems in the current era of transition.

Atl. Jour. 8/8/63 L.W.D. S.D.B.

Integration Not Harmful, Psychiatrist's Study to Show

Ed. South

By AL KUETTNER
United Press International

A major report will be released this weekend dealing with the psychiatric aspects of the desegregation of Southern schools.

Like most such studies, its findings will be controversial — accepted as scientific data by some, discarded by others.

The report will be published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League. This adds to its controversial aspects because both have been active in pro-integration efforts.

The study was produced by Dr. Robert M. Coles, a Boston psychiatrist, now resident in Atlanta. He spent two years gathering the clinical material.

He spent many hours with Negro school children having their first experience in integrated situations, with pre-school Negro youngsters, with teachers and with white parents and pupils who were both for and against desegregation.

Coles, discussing the project in an interview prior to release of his report, said the conclusion of his study was that Negroes can make their way in integrated schools without psychological stress on their own lives or ill effects on the lives of white pupils.

During his racial study, Coles said he often visited the homes of Negroes, playing on the floor with their young children as a means of gaining their confidence. It was in such situations, he said, that he learned Negroes develop knowledge of racial differences at a very early age.

"At four and five years of age, these children know the score," Coles said. "I have been in homes where children of this age have white and colored dolls. They talk about what the dolls are going to be when they grow up. They will place the white dolls in a white society and they grow up to have fine homes and marriages. The Negro dolls become maids and hold menial positions in society.

"I would ask them 'why' and they would tell me, 'that's the way it is in the world'."

Although they now are going through a revolutionary transition, Negroes still are bound by many barriers that are the cumulative process of "300 years of subservience," Coles said. Therein lies one of the biggest problems in the current era of transition.

BRISTOL, VA.
VIRGINIA-TENNESSEAN
D. 8 583

AUG 8 1963

The Racial Crisis: A Continuing Study

By AL KUETTNER
United Press International

A major report will be released this week-end dealing with the psychiatric aspects of the desegregation of Southern schools.

Like most such studies, its findings will be controversial — accepted as scientific data by some, discarded by others.

The report will be published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League. This adds to its controversial aspects because both have been active in pro-integration efforts.

The study was produced by Dr. Robert M. Coles, a Boston psychiatrist, now resident in Atlanta. He spent two years gathering the clinical material.

Studied Many Cases

He spent many hours with Negro school children having their first experience in integrated situations, with pre-school Negro youngsters, with teachers and with white parents and pupils who were both for and against desegregation.

Coles, discussing the project in an interview prior to release of his report, said the conclusion of his study was that Negroes can make their way in integrated schools without psychological stress on their own lives or ill effects on the lives of white pupils.

During his racial study, Coles said he often visited the homes of Negroes, playing on the floor with their young children as a means of gaining their confidence. It was in such situations, he said, that he learned Negroes develop knowledge of racial differences at a very early age.

Children Learn Early

"At four and five years of age, these children know the score," Coles said. "I have been in homes where children of this age have white and colored dolls. They talk about what the dolls are going to be when they grow up. They will place the white dolls in a white society and they grow up to have fine homes and marriages. The Negro dolls become maids and hold menial positions in society.

"I would ask them 'why' and they would tell me, 'that's the way it is in the world'."

Although they now are going through a revolutionary transition, Negroes still are bound by many barriers that are the cumulative process of "300 years of subservience," Coles said. Therein lies one of the biggest problems in the current era of transition.

RICHMOND, CALIF.
INDEPENDENT
D. 32,314

AUG 8 1963

Psychiatric Report on Integration Coming Soon

By AL KUETTNER

A major report will be released this week-end dealing with the psychiatric aspects of the desegregation of Southern schools.

Like most such studies, its findings will be controversial — accepted as scientific data by some, discarded by others.

The report will be published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League. This adds to its controversial aspects because both have been active in pro-integration efforts.

The study was produced by Dr. Robert M. Coles, a Boston psychiatrist, now resident in Atlanta. He spent two years gathering the clinical material.

He spent many hours with Negro school children having their first experience in integrated situations, with pre-school Negro youngsters, with teachers and with white parents and pupils who were both for and against desegregation.

Coles, discussing the project in an interview prior to release of his report, said the conclusion of his study was that Negroes can make their way in integrated schools without psychological stress on their own lives or ill effects on the lives of white pupils.

During his racial study, Coles said he often visited the homes of Negroes, playing on the floor with their young children as a means of gaining their confidence. It was in such situations, he said, that he learned Negroes develop knowledge of racial differences at a very early age.

"At four and five years of age, these children know the score," Coles said. "I have been in homes where children of this age have white and colored dolls. They talk about what the dolls are going to be when they grow up. They will place the white dolls in a white society and they grow up to have fine homes and marriages. The Negro dolls become maids and hold menial positions in society.

"I would ask them 'why' and they would tell me, "that's the way it is in the world'."

Although they now are going through a revolutionary transition, Negroes still are bound by many barriers that are the cumulative process of "300 years of subservience," Coles said. Therein lies one of the biggest problems in the current era of transition.

The Raleigh Times
RALEIGH, N. C.
D. 23,437

AUG 8 1963

Will Be Controversial

Psychiatric Reports On Mixing Expected

EDITORS' NOTE: The behind-the-scenes stories concerning the racial crisis in the United States are explored by United Press International's veteran Atlanta writer.

By AL KEUTTNER
United Press International

A major report will be released this week-end dealing with the psychiatric aspects of the desegregation of Southern schools.

Like most such studies, its findings will be controversial — accepted as scientific data by some, discarded by others.

The report will be published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League. This adds to its controversial aspects because both have been active in pro-integration efforts.

The study was produced by Dr. Robert M. Coles, a Boston psychiatrist, now resident in Atlanta. He spent two years gathering the clinical material.

He spent many hours with Negro school children having their first experience in integrated situations, with pre-school Negro youngsters, with teachers and with white parents and pupils who were both for and against desegregation.

Coles, discussing the project in an interview prior to release of his report, said the conclusion of his study was that Negroes can make their way in integrated schools without psychological stress on their own lives or ill effects on the lives of white pupils.

During his racial study, Coles said he often visited the homes of Negroes, playing on the floor with their young children as a means of gaining their confidence. It was in such situations, he said, that he learned Negroes develop knowledge of racial differences at a very early age.

Children Learn Early

"At four and five years of age, these children know the score," Coles said. "I have been in homes where children of this age have white and colored dolls. They talk about what the dolls are going to be when they grow up. They will place the white dolls in a white society and they grow up to have fine homes and marriages. The Negro dolls become maids and hold menial positions in society.

"I would ask them 'why' and they would tell me, 'that's the way it is in the world'."

Although they now are going through a revolutionary transition, Negroes still are bound by many barriers that are the cumulative process of "300 years of subservience," Coles said. Therein lies one of the biggest problems in the current era of transition.

The Atlanta Journal
"COVERS DIXIE LIKE THE DEW"
D. 259,003

AUG 8 1963

Integration Not Harmful, Psychiatrist's Study to Show

By AL KUETTNER
United Press International

A major report will be released this weekend dealing with the psychiatric aspects of the desegregation of Southern schools.

Like most such studies, its findings will be controversial — accepted as scientific data by some, discarded by others.

The report will be published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League. This adds to its controversial aspects because both have been active in pro-integration efforts.

The study was produced by Dr. Robert M. Coles, a Boston psychiatrist, now resident in Atlanta. He spent two years gathering the clinical material.

He spent many hours with Negro school children having their first experience in integrated situations, with pre-school Negro youngsters, with teachers and with white parents and pupils who were both for and against desegregation.

Coles, discussing the project in an interview prior to release of his report, said the conclusion of his study was that Negroes can make their way in integrated schools without psychological stress on their own lives or ill effects on the lives of white pupils.

During his racial study, Coles said he often visited the homes of Negroes, playing on the floor with their young children as a means of gaining their confidence. It was in such situations, he said, that he learned Negroes develop knowledge of racial differences at a very early age.

"At four and five years of age, these children know the score," Coles said. "I have been in homes where children of this age have white and colored dolls. They talk about what the dolls are going to be when they grow up. They will place the white dolls in a white society and they grow up to have fine homes and marriages. The Negro dolls become maids and hold menial positions in society.

"I would ask them 'why' and they would tell me, 'that's the way it is in the world'."

Although they now are going through a revolutionary transition, Negroes still are bound by many barriers that are the cumulative process of "300 years of subservience," Coles said. Therein lies one of the biggest problems in the current era of transition.

WEST PALM BEACH, FLA
PALM BEACH TIMES
D. 27 928

AUG 8 1963

Report To Show Psychiatric Side Of Desegregation

By AL KUETTNER
United Press International

A major report will be released this week-end dealing with the psychiatric aspects of the desegregation of Southern schools.

Like most such studies, its findings will be controversial — accepted as sienitific data by some, discarded by others.

The report will be published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League. This adds to its controversial aspects because both have been active in pro-integration efforts.

The study was produced by Dr. Robert M. Coles, A Boston psychiatrist, now resident in Atlanta. He spent two years gahering the clincal material.

He spent many hours with Negro school children having their first experiene in integrated situations, with pre-school Negro youngsters, with teachers and with white parents and pupils who were both for and against desegregation.

Coles, discussing the project in an interview prior to release of his report, said the conclusion of his study was that Negroes can make their way in integrated schools without psychological stress on their own lives or ill effects on the lives of white pupils.

During his racial study, Coles said he often visited the homes of Negroes, playing on the floor with their young children as a means of gaining their confidence. It was in such situations, he said that he learned Negroes develop knowledge of racial differences at a very early age.

"At four and five years of age, these children know the score," Coles said. "I have been in homes where children of this age have white and colored dolls. They talk about what the dolls are going to be when they grow up. They will place the white dolls in a white society and they grow up to have fine homes and marriages. The Negro dolls become maids and hold menial positions in society.

"I would ask them 'why' and they woutd tell me, 'that's the way it is in the world'."

Although they now are going through a revolutionary transition, Negroes still are bound by many barriers that are the cumulative process of "300 years of subservience," Coles said. Therein lies one of the biggest problems in the current era of transition.

The Huntsville Times
HUNTSVILLE, ALA.
D. 36,506 S. 35,139

AUG 1 2 1963

Integration Said Easier in Elementary Grades

Mixed Students Change Attitudes

ATLANTA (AP)— Some segregationist students change their ideas about Negro classmates after going to school with them for a year, say two biracial agencies.

★ ★ ★

And Negro children attending white schools find their roles stressing but not incapacitating, said the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith in the second of a series of studies.

The second report, released Saturday, analyzed psychiatric effects of desegregation on six and seven year old pupils in New Orleans and 16 and 17 year old high school students in Atlanta.

★ ★ ★

Additional studies were made in integrated schools in Charlotte, Asheville and Burnsville, N.C.; Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tenn.; and Little Rock, Ark.

The report said the study showed:

—Desegregation is easier in elementary schools than in high schools.

—Where desegregation is accompanied by disorder, most children of both races seem able to learn without physical or emotional injury.

—White children in desegregated Southern classrooms suffer no medical or psychiatric damage or breakdown in ability to work, study and get along with friends.

—Pressure on Negro children in desegregated schools varies only in degree from those which have always faced them in their daily lives.

Dr. Robert Coles of Atlanta who conducted the second study said teachers in segregated schools tend to put professional responsibility ahead of personal feelings.

★ ★ ★

The earlier study analyzed methods used in some resistant Southern states where desegregation was limited to less than half of one per cent of Negroes.

TAUNTON, MASS.
GAZETTE
D. 12,652

AUG 8 1963

Dixie School Report Due On Weekend

Psychiatric Aspect Of Desegregation

By AL KUETTNER
United Press International

A major report will be released this week-end dealing with th psychiatric aspects of the desegregation of Southern schools.

Like most such studies, its findings will be controversial — accepted as scientific data by some, discarded by others.

The report will be published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League. This adds to its controversial aspects because both have been active in pro-integration efforts.

The study was produced by Dr. Robert M. Coles, a Boston psychiatrist, now resident in Atlanta. He spent two years gathering the clinical material.

Studied Many Cases

He spent many hours with Negro school children having their first experience in integrated situations, with pre-school Negro youngsters, with teachers and with white parents and pupil who were both for and against desegregation.

Coles, discussing the project in an interview prior to release of his report, said the conclusion of his study was that Negroes can make their way in integrated schools without psychological stress on their own lives or ill effects on the lives of white pupils.

During his racial study, Coles said he often visited the homes of Negroes, playing on the floor with their young children as a means of gaining their confidence. It was in such situations, he said, that he learned Negroes develop knowledge of racial differences at a very early age.

Children Learn Early

"At four and five years of age, these children know the score," Coles said. "I have been in homes where children of this age have white and colored dolls. They talk about what the dolls are going to be when they grow up. They will place the white dolls in a white society and they grow up to have fine homes and marriages. The Negro dolls become maids and hold menial positions in society.

"I would ask them 'why' and they would tell me, 'that's the way it is in the world'."

Although they now are going through a revolutionary transition, Negroes still are bound by many barriers that are the cumulative process of "300 years of subservience," Coles said. Therein lies one of the biggest problems in the current era of transition.

PENSACOLA, FLA.
NEWS
D. 35,255

AUG 8 1963

Desegregation Aspects

South's Schools Report Scheduled

By AL KUETTNER
United Press International

A major report will be released this weekend dealing with the psychiatric aspects of the desegregation of Southern schools.

Like most such studies, its findings will be controversial — accepted as scientific data by some, discarded by others.

The report will be published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League. This adds to its controversial aspects because both have been active in pro-integration efforts.

The study was produced by Dr. Robert M. Coles, a Boston psychiatrist, now resident in Atlanta. He spent two years gathering the clinical material.

He spent many hours with Negro school children having their first experience in integrated situations, with pre-school Negro youngsters, with teachers and with white parents and pupils who were both for and against desegregation.

Coles, discussing the project in an interview prior to release of his report, said the conclusion of his study was that Negroes can make their way in integrated schools without psychological stress on their own lives or ill effects on the lives of white pupils.

During his racial study, Coles said he often visited the homes of Negroes, playing on the floor with their young children as a means of gaining their confidence. It was in such situations, he said, that he learned Negroes develop knowledge of racial differences at a very early age.

Children Learn Early

"At four and five years of age, these children know the score," Coles said. "I have been in homes where children of this age have white and colored dolls. They talk about what the dolls are going to be when they grow up. They will place the white dolls in a white society and they grow up to have fine homes and marriages. The Negro dolls become maids and hold menial positions in society.

"I would ask them 'why' and they would tell me, 'that's the way it is in the world'."

Although they now are going through a revolutionary transition, Negroes still are bound by many barriers that are the cumulative process of "300 years of subservience," Coles said.

LAWTON, OKLA.
CONSTITUTION
D. 15,694

AUG 8 1963

Pre-School-Age Negroes Know Score

By AL KUETTNER
United Press International

A major report will be released this week-end dealing with the psychiatric aspects of the desegregation of Southern schools.

Like most such studies, its findings will be controversial — accepted as scientific data by some, discarded by others.

The report will be published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League. This adds to its controversial aspects because both have been active in pro-integration efforts.

The study was produced by Dr. Robert M. Coles, a Boston psychiatrist, now resident in Atlanta. He spent two years gathering the clinical material.

He spent many hours with Negro school children having their first experience in integrated situations, with pre-school Negro youngsters, with teachers and with white parents and pupils who were both for and against desegregation.

Coles, discussing the project in an interview prior to release of his report, said the conclusion of his study was that Negroes can make their way in integrated schools without psychological stress on their own lives or il stress on their own lives or ill effects on the lives of white pupils.

During his racial study, Coles said he often visited the homes of Negroes, playing on the floor with their young children as a means of gaining their confidence. It was in such situations, he said, that he learned Negroes develop knowledge of racial differences at a very early age.

"At four and five years of age, these children know the score," Coles said. "I have been in hom

Score On Segregated World, Study Reveals psychological wn lives or il

n lives or ill
es of white pu-

al study, Coles ited the homes
g on the floor children as a g their confisuch situations, earned Negroes of racial dif-
y early age.
e years of age,
ow the score,"
been in homes

where children of this age have white and colored dolls. They talk about what the dolls are going to be when they grow up. They will place the white dolls in a white society and they grow up to have fine homes and marriages. The Negro dolls become maids and hold menial positions in society.

"I would ask them 'why' and they would tell me, 'that's the way it is in the world'."

Although they now are going through a revolutionary transition, Negroes still are bound by many barriers that are the cumulative process of "300 years of subservience," Coles said. Therein lies one of the biggest problems in the current era of transition.

DURANT, OKLA.
DEMOCRAT
D 6,682 S. 6,682

AUG 8 1963

Psychiatric Aspects Of Racial Strife Studied

(A Continuing Study of Developments on the Racial Front)

By AL KUETTNER
United Press International

A major report will be released this week-end dealing with the psychiatric aspects of the desegregation of Southern schools.

Like most such studies, its findings will be controversial — accepted as scientific data by some, discarded by others.

The report will be published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League. This adds to its controversial aspects because both have been active in pro-integration efforts.

The study was produced by Dr. Robert M. Coles, a Boston psychiatrist, now resident in Atlanta. He spent two years gathering the clinical material.

Studied Many Cases

He spent many hours with Negro school children having their first experience in integrated situations, with pre-school Negro youngsters, with teachers and with white parents and pupils who were both for and against desegregation.

Coles, discussing the project in an interview prior to release of his report, said the conclusion of his study was that Negroes can make their way in integrated schools without psychological stress on their own lives or ill effects on the lives of white pupils.

During his racial study, Coles said he often visited the homes of Negroes, playing on the floor with their young children as a means of gaining their confidence. It was in such situations, he said, that he learned Negroes develop knowledge of racial differences at a very early age.

Children Learn Early

"At four and five years of age, these children know the score," Coles said. "I have been in homes where children of this age have white and colored dolls. They talk about what the dolls are going to be when they grow up. They will place the white dolls in a white society and they grow up to have fine homes and marriages. The Negro dolls become maids and hold menial positions in society.

"I would ask them 'why' and they would tell me, 'that's the way it is in the world'."

Although they now are going through a revolutionary transition, Negroes still are bound by many barriers that are the cumulative process of "300 years of subservience," Coles said. Therein lies one of the biggest problems in the current era of transition.

NYACK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-NEWS
D: 19,790

AUG 8 1963

Study of School Desegregation Was From Psychological Angle

By AL KUETTNER
United Press International

A major report will be released this week-end dealing with the psychiatric aspects of the desegregation of Southern schools.

Like most such studies, its findings will be controversial — accepted as scientific data by some, discarded by others.

The report will be published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League. This adds to its controversial aspects because both have been active in pro-integration efforts.

The study was produced by Dr. Robert M. Coles, a Boston psychiatrist, now resident in Atlanta. He spent two years gathering the clinical material.

Studied Many Cases

He spent many hours with Negro school children having their first experience in integrated situations, with pre-school Negro youngsters, with teachers and with white parents and pupils who were both for and against desegregation,

Coles, discussing the project in an interview prior to release of his report, said the conclusion of his study was that Negroes can make their way in integrated schools without psychological stress on their own lives or ill effects on the lives of white pupils.

During his racial study, Coles said he often visited the homes of Negroes, playing on the floor with their young children as a means of gaining their confidence. It was in such situations, he said, that he learned Negroes develop knowledge of racial differences at a very early age.

"At four and five years of age, these children know the score," Coles said. "I have been in homes where children of this age have white and colored dolls. They talk about what the dolls are going to be when they grow up. They will place the white dolls in a white society and they grow up to have fine homes and marriages. The Negro dolls become maids and hold menial positions in society.

"I would ask them 'why' and they would tell me, 'that's the way it is in the world'."

Although they now are going through a revolutionary transition, Negroes still are bound by many barriers that are the cumulative process of "300 years of subservience," Coles said. Therein lies one of the biggest problems in the current era of transition.

The Fayetteville Observer
NONE FINER IN CAROLINA
D. 30,559 S. 27,461

AUG 8 1963

Report Set On Mix In South

By AL KUETTNER
United Press International

A major report will be released this week-end dealing with the psychiatric aspects of the desegregation of Southern schools.

Like most such studies, its findings will be controversial — accepted as scientific data by some, discarded by others.

The report will be published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League. This adds to its controversial aspects because both have been active in pro-integration efforts.

The study was produced by Dr. Robert M. Coles, a Boston psychiatrist, now resident in Atlanta. He spent two years gathering the clinical material.

He spent many hours with Negro school children having their first experience in integrated situations, with pre-school Negro youngsters, with teachers and with white parents and pupils who were both for and against desegregation.

Coles, discussing the project in an interview prior to release of his report, said the conclusion of his study was that Negroes can make their way in integrated schools without psychological stress on their own lives or ill effects on the lives of white pupils.

During his racial study, Coles said he often visited the homes of Negroes, playing on the floor with their young children as a means of gaining their confidence. It was in such situations, he said, that he learned Negroes develop knowledge of racial differences at a very early age.

"At four and five years of age, these children know the score," Coles said. "I have been in homes where children of this age have white and colored dolls. They talk about what the dolls are going to be when they grow up. They will place the white dolls in a white society and they grow up to have fine homes and marriages. The Negro dolls become maids and hold menial positions in society.

"I would ask them 'why' and they would tell me, 'that's the way it is in the world'."

Although they now are going through a revolutionary transition, Negroes still are bound by many barriers that are the cumulative process of "300 years of subservience," Coles said. Therein lies one of the biggest problems in the current era of transition.

CHARLESTON, S.C.
POST
D. 35,948

AUG 8 1963

Psychiatrist To Report On School Integration

By AL KUETTNER
United Press International

A major report will be released this week-end dealing with the psychiatric aspects of the desegregation of Southern schools.

Like most such studies, its findings will be controversial — accepted as scientific data by some, discarded by others.

The report will be published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League. This adds to its controversial aspects because both have been active in pro-integration efforts.

The study was produced by Dr. Robert M. Coles, a Boston psychiatrist, now resident in Atlanta. He spent two years gathering the clinical material.

STUDIED MANY CASES

He spent many hours with Negro school children having their first experience in integrated situations, with pre-school Negro youngsters, with teachers and with white parents and pupils who were both for and against desegregation.

Coles, discussing the project in an interview prior to release of his report, said the conclusion of his study was that Negroes can make their way in integrated schools without psychological stress on their own lives or ill effects on the lives of white pupils.

During his racial study, Coles said he often visited the homes of Negroes, playing on the floor with their young children as a means of gaining their confidence. It was in such situations, he said, that he learned Negroes develop knowledge of racial differences at a very early age.

CHILDREN LEARN EARLY

"At four and five years of age, these children know the score," Coles said. "I have been in homes where children of this age have white and colored dolls. They talk about what the dolls are going to be when they grow up. They will place the white dolls in a white society and they grow up to have fine homes and marriages. The Negro dolls become maids and hold menial positions in society.

"I would ask them 'why' and they would tell me, 'that's the way it is in the world'."

Although they now are going through a revolutionary transition, Negroes still are bound by many barriers that are the cumulative process of "300 years of subservience," Coles said. Therein lies one of the biggest problems in the current era of transition.

WOODBURY, N.J.
TIMES
D. 15,620

AUG 8 1963

RACIAL FRONT

What It Means

by Al Kuettner

United Press International

A major report will be released this weekend dealing with the psychiatric aspects of the desegregation of southern schools.

Like most such studies, its findings will be controversial —accepted as scientific data by some, discarded by others.

The report will be published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League. This adds to its controversial aspects because both have been active in pro-integration efforts.

The study was produced by Dr. Robert M. Coles, a Boston psychiatrist, now resident in Atlanta. He spent two years gathering the clinical material.

He spent many hours with Negro school children having their first experience in integrated situations, with preschool Negro youngsters, with teachers and with white parents and pupils who were both for and against desegregation.

Coles, discussing the project in an interview prior to release of his report, said the conclusion of his study was that Negroes can make their way in integrated schools without psychological stress on their own lives or ill effects on the lives of white pupils.

During his racial study, Coles said he often visited the homes of Negroes, playing on the floor with their young children as a means of gaining their confidence. It was in such situations, he said, that he learned Negroes develop knowledge of racial differences at a very early age.

Children Learn Early

"At four and five years of age, these children know the score," Coles said. "I have been in homes where children of this age have white and colored dolls. They talk about what the dolls are going to be when they grow up. They will place the white dolls in a white society and they grow up to have fine homes and marriages. The Negro dolls become maids and hold menial positions in society.

"I would ask them 'why' and they would tell me, 'that's' the way it is in the world.' "

Although they now are going through a revolutionary transition, Negroes still are bound by many barriers that are the cumulative process of "300 years of subservience," Coles said. Therein lies one of the biggest problems in the current era of transition.

BROCKTON, MASS.
ENTERPRISE & TIMES
D. 45,777

AUG 8 1963

PRODUCED BY HUB DOCTOR

Report Due on Psychiatric Aspects of Desegregation

By AL KUETTNER

United Press International

A major report will be released this week-end dealing with the psychiatric aspects of the desegregation of Southern schools.

Like most such studies, its findings will be controversial — accepted as scientific data by some, discarded by others.

The report will be published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League. This adds to its controversial aspects because both have been active in pro-integration efforts.

The study was produced by Dr. Robert M. Coles, a Boston psychiatrist, now resident in Atlanta. He spent two years gathering the clinical material.

Studied Many Cases

He spent many hours with Negro school children having their first experience in integrated situations, with pre-school Negro youngsters, with teachers and with white parents and pupils who were both for and against desegregation.

Coles, discussing the project in an interview prior to release of his report, said the conclusion of his study was that Negroes can make their way in integrated schools without psychological stress on their own lives or ill effects on the lives of white pupils.

During his racial study, Coles said he often visited the homes of Negroes, playing on the floor with their young children as a means of gaining their confidence. It was in such situations, he said, that he learned Negroes develop knowledge of racial differences at a very early age.

Children Learn Early

"At four and five years of age, these children know the score," Coles said. "I have been in homes where children of this age have white and colored dolls. They talk about what the dolls are going to be when they grow up. They will place the white dolls in a white society and they grow up to have fine homes and marriages. The Negro dolls become maids and hold menial positions in society.

"I would ask them 'why' and they would tell me, 'that's the way it is in the world'."

Although they now are going through a revolutionary transition, Negroes still are bound by many barriers that are the cumulative process of "300 years of subservience," Coles said. Therein lies one of the biggest problems in the current era of transition.

WATERTOWN, WIS.
TIMES
D. 7,548

AUG 8 1963

Negroes Can Be Integrated With No Stress on Them or Any Ill Effects on Whites

(This is another of a series of articles by Al Kuettner, United Press International writer, on the continuing study of developments on the racial front.)

A major report will be released this week-end dealing with the psychiatric aspects of the desegregation of Southern schools.

Like most such studies, its findings will be controversial — accepted as scientific data by some, discarded by others.

The report will be published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League. This adds to its controversial aspects because both have been active in pro-integration efforts.

The study was produced by Dr. Robert M. Coles, a Boston psychiatrist, now resident in Atlanta. He spent two years gathering the clinical material.

Studied Many Cases

He spent many hours with Negro school children having their first experience in integrated situations, with pre-school Negro youngsters, with teachers and with white parents and pupils who were both for and against desegregation.

Coles, discussing the project in an interview prior to release of his report, said the conclusion of his study was that Negroes can make their way in integrated schools without psychological stress on their own lives or ill effects on the lives of white pupils.

During his racial study, Coles said he often visited the homes of Negroes, playing on the floor with their young children as a means of gaining their confidence. It was in such situations, he said, that he learned Negroes develop knowledge of racial differences at a very early age.

Children Learn Early

"At four and five years of age, these children know the score," Coles said. "I have been in homes where children of this age have white and colored dolls. They talk about what the dolls are going to be when they grow up. They will place the white dolls in a white society and they grow up to have fine homes and marriages. The Negro dolls become maids and hold menial positions in society.

"I would ask them 'why' and they would tell me, 'that's the way it is in the world'."

Although they now are going through a revolutionary transition, Negroes still are bound by many barriers that are the cumulative process of "300 years of subservience," Coles said. Therein lies one of the biggest problems in the current era of transition.

CHICAGO, ILL.
LAW BULLETIN
D: 7,385

AUG 8 1963

On the Racial Front

Here's Preview of Psychiatric Study of Southern Integration

By AL KUETTNER
United Press International

A major report will be released this week-end dealing with the psychiatric aspects of the desegregation of Southern schools.

Like most such studies, its findings will be controversial — accepted as scientific data by some, discarded by others.

The report will be published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League. This adds to its controversial aspects because both have been active in pro-integration efforts.

The study was produced by Dr. Robert M. Coles, a Boston psychiatrist, now resident in Atlanta. He spent two years gathering the clinical material.

He spent many hours with Negro school children having their first experience in integrated situations, with pre-school Negro youngsters, with teachers and with white parents and pupils who were both for and against desegregation.

Coles, discussing the project in an interview prior to release of his report, said the conclusion of his study was that Negroes can make their way in integrated schools without psychological stress on their own lives or ill effects on the lives of white pupils.

During his racial study, Coles said he often visited the homes of Negroes, playing on the floor with their young children as a means of gaining their confidence. It was in such situations, he said, that he learned Negroes develop knowledge of racial differences at a very early age.

"At four and five years of age, these children know the score," Coles said. "I have been in homes where children of this age have white and colored dolls. They talk about what the dolls are going to be when they grow up. They will place the white dolls in a white society and they grow up to have fine homes and marriages. The Negro dolls become maids and hold menial positions in society.

"I would ask them 'why' and they would tell me, 'that's the way it is in the world'."

Although they now are going through a revolutionary transition, Negroes still are bound by many barriers that are the cumulative process of "300 years of subservience," Coles said. Therein lies one of the biggest problems in the current era of transition.

—Law Bulletin—

PARAGOULD, ARK.
PRESS
D. 4,540

AUG 9 1963

Major report to be released

Psychiatrist eyes integration

By AL KUETTNER

A major report will be released this week-end dealing with the psychiatric aspects of the desegregation of Southern schools.

Like most such studies, its findings will be controversial — accepted as scientific data by some, discarded by others.

The report wil be published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League. This adds to its controversial aspects because both have been active in pro-integration efforts.

The study was produced by Dr. Robert M. Coles, a Boston psychiatrist, now resident in Atlanta. He spent two years gathering the clinical material.

Studied Many Cases

He spent many hours with Negro school children having their first experience in integrated situations, with pre-school Negro youngsters, with teachers and with white parents and pupils who were both for and against desegregation.

Coles, discussing the project in an interview prior to release of his report, said the conclusion of his study was that Negroes can make their way in integrated schools without psychological stress on their own lives or ill effects on the lives of white pupils

During his racial study, Coles said he often visited the homes of Negroes, playing on the floor with their young children as a means of gaining their confidence. It was in such situations, he said, that he learned Negroes develop knowledge of racial differences at a very early age.

"At four and five years of age, these children know the score," Coles said. "I have been in homes where children of this age have white and colored dolls. They talk about what the dolls are going to be when they grow up. They will place the white dolls in a white society and they grow up to have fine homes and marriages. The Negro dolls become maids and hold menial positions in society.

"I would ask them 'why' and they would tell me, 'that's the way it is in the world'."

Although they now are going through a revolutionary transition, Negroes still are bound by many barriers that are the cumulative process of "300 years of subservience," Coles said. Therein lies one of the biggest problems in the current era of transition.

ONEIDA, N.Y.
DISPATCH
D. 7,873

AUG 8 1963

Integration Psychiatric Study Finished

By AL KUETTNER
United Press International

A major report will be released this week-end dealing with the psychiatric aspects of the desegregation of Southern schools.

Like most such studies, its findings will be controversial — accepted as scientific data by some, discarded by others.

The report will be published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League. This adds to its controversial aspects because both have been active in pro-integration efforts.

The study was produced by Dr. Robert M. Coles, a Boston psychiatrist, now resident in Atlanta. He spent two years gathering the clinical material.

Studied Many Cases

He spent many hours with Negro school children having their first experience in integrated situations, with pre-school Negro youngsters, with teachers and with white parents and pupils who were both for and against desegregation.

Coles, discussing the project in an interview prior to release of his report, said the conclusion of his study was that Negroes can make their way in integrated schools without psychological stress on their own lives or ill efects on the lives of white pupils.

During his racial study, Coles said he often visited the homes of Negroes, playing on the floor with their young children as a means of gaining their confidence. It was in such situations, he said, that he learned Negroes develop knowledge of racial differences at a very early age.

Children Learn Early

"At four and five years of age, these children know the score," Coles said. "I have been in homes where children of this age have white and colored dolls. They talk about what the dolls are going to be when they grow up. They will place the white dolls in a white society and they grow up to have fine homes and marriages. The Negro dolls become maids and hold menial positions in society.

"I would ask them 'why' and they would tell me, 'that's the way it is in the world'."

Although they now are going through a revolutionary transition, Negroes still are bound by many barriers that are the cumulative process of "300 years of subservience," Coles said. Therein lies one of the biggest problems in the current era of transition.

LAKEWOOD, N.J.
TIMES
D. 4,223

AUG 9 1963

Psychiatric Aspects On Bias Due In Report

By AL KUETTNER
United Press International

A major report will be released this week-end dealing with the psychiatric aspects of the desegregation of Southern schools.

Like most such studies, its findings will be controversial — accepted as scientific data by some, discarded by others.

The report will be published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League. This adds to its controversial aspects because both have been active in pro-integration efforts.

The study was produced by Dr. Robert M. Coles, a Boston psychiatrist, now resident in Atlanta. He spent two years gathering the clinical material.

Studied Many Cases

He spent many hours with Negro school children having their first experience in integrated situations, with pre-school Negro youngsters, with teachers and with white parents and pupils who were both for and against desegregation.

Coles, discussing the project in an interview prior to release of his report, said the conclusion of his study was that Negroes can make their way in integrated schools without psychological stress on their own lives or ill effects on the lives of white pupils.

During his racial study, Coles said he often visited the homes of Negroes, playing on the floor with their young children as a means of gaining their confidence. It was in such situations, he said, that he learned Negroes develop knowledge of racial differences at a very early age.

Children Learn Early

"At four and five years of age, these children know the score," Coles said. "I have been in homes where children of this age have white and colored dolls. They talk about what the dolls are going to be when they grow up. They will place the white dolls in a white society and they grow up to have fine homes and marriages. The Negro dolls become maids and hold menial positions in society.

"I would ask them 'why' and they would tell me, 'that's the way it is in the world'."

Although they now are going through a revolutionary transition, Negroes still are bound by many barriers that are the cumulative process of "300 years of subservience," Coles said. Therein lies one of the biggest problems in the current era of transition.

LATROBE, PA.
BULLETIN
D. 10,087

AUG 9 1963

Segregation Study Deals In Psychiatric Aspects

What It Means
(A Continuing Study of Developments on the Racial Front)

By AL KUETTNER
United Press International

A major report will be released this weekend dealing with the psychiatric aspects of the desegregation of Southern schools.

Like most such studies, its findings will be controversial — accepted as scientific data by some, discarded by others.

The report will be published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League. This adds to its controversial aspects because both have been active in pro-integration efforts.

The study was produced by Dr. Robert M. Coles, a Boston psychiatrist, now resident in Atlanta. He spent two years gathering the clinical material.

Studied Many Cases

He spent many hours with Negro school children having their first experience in integrated situations, with pre-school Negro youngsters, with teachers and with white parents and pupils who were both for and against desegregation.

Coles, discussing the project in an interview prior to release of his report, said the conclusion of his study was that Negroes can make their way in integrated schools without psychological stress on their own lives or ill effects on the lives of white pupils.

During his racial study, Coles said he often visited the homes of Negroes, playing on the floor with their young children as a means of gaining their confidence. It was in such situations, he said, that he learned Negroes develop knowledge of racial differences at a very early age.

Children Learn Early

"At four and five years of age, these children know the score," Coles said. "I have been in homes where children of this age have white and colored dolls. They talk about what the dolls are going to be when they grow up. They will place the white dolls in a white society and they grow up to have fine homes and marriages. The Negro dolls become maids and hold menial positions in society.

"I would ask them 'why' and they would tell me, 'that's the way it is in the world'."

Although they now are going through a revolutionary transition, Negroes still are bound by many barriers that are the cumulative process of "300 years of subservience," Coles said. Therein lies one of the bigest problems in the current era of transition.

LAS VEGAS, NEV.
SUN
D. 25,983 S. 25,694

AUG 9 1963

Controversial Report Defines Negro Role

By AL KUETTNER

A major report will be released this weekend dealing with the psychiatric aspects of the desegregation of southern schools.

Like most such studies, its findings will be controversial—accepted as scientific data by some, discarded by others.

The report will be published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League. This adds to its controversial aspects because both have been active in pro-integration efforts.

The study was produced by Dr. Robert M. Coles, a Boston psychiatrist, now resident in Atlanta. He spent two years gathering the clinical material.

He spent many hours with Negro school children having their first experiences in integrated situations, with preschool Negro youngsters, with teachers and with white parents and pupils who were both for and against desegregation.

Coles, discussing the project in an interview prior to release of his report, said the conclusion of his study was that Negroes can make their way in integrated schools without psychological stress on their own lives or ill effects on the lives of white pupils.

Coles said he became interested in the desegregation issue while in the Air Force as head of a psychiatric hospital in Biloxi, Miss. His previous psychiatric experience had centered in studying stresses on the lives of children with such incapacitating ailments as polio. His next project will be a study of emotional stress on migrant farm workers.

After his discharge from the Air Force, Coles said he sought a foundation grant to pursue a lengthy study of children caught up in the racial transition. It was awarded through the two organizations who are releasing his report.

During his racial study, Coles said he often visited the homes of Negroes, playing on the floor with their young children as a means of gaining their confidence. It was in such situations, he said, that he learned Negroes develop knowledge of racial differences at a very early age.

"I would ask them 'Why' and they would tell me, 'That's the way it is in the world.' "

Although they now are going through a revolutionary transition, Negroes still are bound by many barriers that are the cumulative process of "300 years of subservience," Coles said. Therein lies one of the biggest problems in the current era of transition.

CLOVIS, N.M.
NEWS-JOURNAL
D. 8,549 S. 8,853

AUG 9 1963

Major Psychiatric Report Expected On Segregation

United Press International

A major report will be released this week-end dealing with the psychiatric aspects of the desegregation of Southern schools.

Like most such studies, its findings will be controversial — accepted as scientific data by some, discarded by others.

The report will be published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League. This adds to its controversial aspects because both have been active in pro-integration efforts.

The study was produced by Dr. Robert M. Coles, a Boston psychiatrist, now resident in Atlanta. He spent two years gathering the clinical material.

Studied Many Cases

He spent many hours with Negro school children having their first experience in integrated situations, with pre-school Negro youngsters, with teachers and with white parents and pupils who were both for and against desegregation.

Coles, discussing the project in an interview prior to release of his report, said the conclusion of his study was that Negroes can make their way in integrated schools without psychological stress on their own lives or ill effects on the lives of white pupils.

During his racial study, Coles said he often visited the homes of Negroes, playing on the floor with their young children as a means of gaining their confidence. It was in such situations, he said, that he learned Negroes develop knowledge of racial differences at a very early age.

Children Learn Early

"At four and five years of age, these children know the score," Coles said. "I have been in homes where children of this age have white and colored dolls. They talk about what the dolls are going to be when they grow up. They will place the white dolls in a white society and they grow up to have fine homes and marriages. The Negro dolls become maids and hold menial positions in society.

"I would ask them 'why' and they would tell me, 'that's the way it is in the world'."

NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD
D. 31,006

AUG 9 1963

Findings Are Controversial:

Psychiatry of Integration Subject of Major Report

By AL KUETTNER
United Press International

A major report will be released this week-end dealing with the psychiatric aspects of the desegregation of Southern schools.

Like most such studies, its findings will be controversial — accepted as scientific data by some, discarded by others.

The report will be published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League. This adds to its controversial aspects because both have been active in pro-integration efforts.

The study was produced by Dr. Robert M. Coles, a Boston psychiatrist, now resident in Atlanta. He spent two years gathering the clinical material.

Studied Many Cases

He spent many hours with Negro school children having their first experience in integrated situations, with pre-school Negro youngsters, with teachers and with white parents and pupils who were both for and against desegregation.

Coles, discussing the project in an interview prior to release of his report, said the conclusion of his study was that Negroes can make their way in integrated schools without psychological stress on their own lives or ill effects on the lives of white pupils.

During his racial study, Coles said he often visited the homes of Negroes, playing on the floor with their young children as a means of gaining their confidence. It was in such situations, he said, that he learned Negroes develop knowledge of racial differences at a very early age.

Children Learn Early

"At four and five years of age, these children know the score," Coles said. "I have been in homes where children of this age have white and colored dolls. They talk about what the dolls are going to be when they grow up. They will place the white dolls in a white society and they grow up to have fine homes and marriages. The Negro dolls become maids and hold menial positions in society.

"I would ask them 'why' and they would tell me, 'that's the way it is in the world'."

Although they now are going through a revolutionary transition, Negroes still are bound by many barriers that are the cumulative process of "300 years of subservience," Coles said. Therein lies one of the biggest problems in the current era of transition.

GREENVILLE, S.C.
NEWS
D. 82,430 S. 86,866

AUG 9 1963

Major Study On Psychiatric Effects Of I

By AL KUETTNER
United Press International

A major report will be released this week-end dealing with th psychiatric aspects of the deseg regation of Southern schools.

Like most studies, its findings will be controversial — accepted as scientific data by some, liscarded by others.

The report will be published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League. This adds to its controversial aspects because both have been active in pro-integration efforts.

The study was produced by Dr. Robert M. Coles, a Boston psychiatrist, now resident in Atlanta. He spent two years gathering the clinical material.

He spent many hours with Negro school children having their first experience in integrated situations, with pre-school Negro youngsters, with teachers and with White parents and pupils who were both for and against desegregation.

Coles, discussing the project in an interview prior to release of his report, said the conclusion of his study was that Negroes can make their way in integrated schools without psychological stress on their own lives or ill

s Of Integration On Negroes To Be Released

n for and against ing the project in rior to release of the conclusion of that Negroes can ay in integrated o u t psychological own lives or ill effects on the loves of White pupils.

During his racial study, Coles said he often visited the homes of Negroes, playing on the floor with their young children as a means of gaining their confidence. It was in such situations, he said, that he learned Negroes develop knowledge of racial differences at a very early age.

"At four and five years of age, these children know the score," Coles said. "I have been in homes where children of this age have White and Colored dolls. They talk about what the dolls are going to be when they grow up. They will place the White dolls in a White society and they grow up to have fine homes and marriages. The Negro dolls become maids and hold menial positions in society.

"I would ask them 'why' and they would tell me, 'that's the way it is in the world'."

Although they now are going through a revolutionary transition, Negroes still are bound by many barriers that are the cumulative process of "300 years of subservience," Coles said. Therein lies one of the biggest problems in the current era of transition.

CLARKSDALE, MISS.
PRESS REGISTER
D. 5,290

AUG 9 1963

Report Released

Psychiatrist Made Study Of Integration's Effect

By AL KUETTNER
United Press International

A major report will be released this week-end dealing with the psychiatric aspects of the desegregation of Southern schools.

Like most such studies, its findings will be controversial — accepted as scientific data by some, discarded by others.

The report will be published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League. This adds to its controversial aspects because both have been active in pro-integration efforts.

The study was produced by Dr. Robert M. Coles, a Boston psychiatrist, now resident in Atlanta. He spent two years gathering the clinical material.

Studied Many Cases

He spent many hours with Negro school children having their first experience in integrated situations, with pre-school Negro youngsters, with teachers and with white parents and pupils who were both for and against desegregation.

Coles, discussing the project in an interview prior to release of his report, said the conclusion of his study was that Negroes can make their way in integrated schools without psychological stress on thei rown lives or ill effects on the lives of white pupils.

During his racial study, Coles said he often visited the homes of Negroes, playing on the floor with their young children as a means of gaining their confidence. It was in such situations, he said, that he learned Negroes develop knowledge of racial differences at a very early age.

Children Learn Early

"At four and five years of age these children know the score," Coles said. "I have been in homes where children of this age have white and colored dolls. They talk about what the dolls are going to be when they grow up. They will place the white dolls in a white society and they grow up to have fine homes and marriages. The Negro dolls become maids and hold menial positions in society.

"I would ask them 'why' and they would tell me. 'that's the way it is in the world'."

Although they now are going through a revolutionary transition, Negroes still are bound by many barriers that are the cumulative process of "300 years of subservience," Coles said. Therein lies one of the biggest problems in the current era of transition.

CHARLOTTE, N.C.
POST
W. 10,540 (N)

AUG 10 1963

Study of Desegregated School Is Successful

Even when school desegregation is accompanied by community disorder, "young children of both races seem able to learn without any physical or emotional inju0ry or collapse, given. . . initial good health and a functioning school system."

This is one of the findings of the first psychiatric study of the effects of desegregation on participating Negro and white students in the South.

The study, which has been in process for two years, was conducted by Dr. Robert Coles, a psychiatrist of Atlanta, Ga. A summary report, titled The Desegregation of Southern Schools: A Psychiatric Study, was published today by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B5rith.

The study deals primarily with six and seven year old elementary school students in New Orleans and 16 and 17 year old high school students in Atlanta. Supplementary evaluations were also made in desegregated schools in Charlote, Asheville, and Burnsville, North Carolina; Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tennessee; and Little Rock, Arkansas.

Among the findings are these:

—Some "segregationist" children change their attitudes toward Negro children after attending school with them fo ra year.

—Negro children fin dattendance in white schools "stressful but not incapacitating."

—White children in desegregated southern schools suffer no "medical or psychiatric damage" and no "breakdown in ability to work, study and get along with friends."

—Children of both races continue their studies "without impairment."

—From an academic viewpoint, desegregation is easier in elementary grade schools.

The study found pressures on Negro children in desegregated schools varied "only in degree" from those which had always faced them in their daily lives. It added that while it was hard for a Negro child to enter an all-white school, the change offered "hopes and opportunities for work, for assertion of self, which contrast with other moments that may have seemed to them not only hard but also futile and less fulfilling."

Dr. Coles attributed changed attitudes in some white children to "getting to know a particular Negro child," and "thinking about the problem because they were part of a desegregated school." He quoted a white Atlanta high school senior:

"I've really changed a lot of my ideas. You can't help but have respect for them, the way they've gone through the year so well. They're nice kids, that's hildren of both races con- their studies "without im- ent."

rom an academic view- desegregation is easier in ntary grade schools.

study found pressures on children in desegregated s varied "only in degree" those which had always them in their daily lives. led that while it was hard Negro child to enter an all- school, the change offered s and opportunities for for assertion of self, which st with other moments that have seemed to them not ard but also futile and less ng."

Coles attributed changed es in some white children tting to know a particular child," and "thinking the problem because they part of a desegregated " He quoted a white At- high school senior:

e really changed a lot of leas. You can't help but respect for them, the way e gone through the year so They're nice kids, that's what you find out aftr a while. They speak well, and are more intelligent than a lot of my friends. . . ."

In discussing how Negro and white students got along in the same school, Dr. Coles said younger children played and worked together more readily than older ones. He found the reactions of high school students were determined not only by their racial attitudes, but by the norma l teen-age struggles of growing up. Personal knowledge of Negroes, however, did overcome old ideas of suspicion, distrust, contempt, and disdain held by some white adolescents.

Both Negro and white students continued to learn successfully. Dr. Coles pointed out, however, that although the majority of younger Negro students managed well, older ones sometimes had to overcome "the burden of their former years" in schools "often far from comparable to the white ones." Despite some learning difficulties among Negro students who initiated desegregation in their high school years, the psychiatrist found very few academic problems "insurmountable." He asserted, however, that there were "less fixed disparities of educational achievement" in earlier grades than in higher ones.

According to the study, racial and personal feelings among teachers in desegregated schools tended to give way "to professional responsibilities and obligations," and few criticisms of teachers were heard from white or Negro children. Professional integrity "transcended private feelings about race," Dr. Coles observed. He went on to say that children and teachers whose feelings are "exceptionally strong about desegregation" are "a special and rather small group."

"Our studies show that many people oppose desegregation, but also oppose the closing of the schools, mob behavior, or insulting or assaulting a fellow student, regardless of skin color. The particularly enraged person, be he teacher or student, is relatively rare among millions of Southerners," the psychiatrist said.

The study is the second in a series to be issue dby the Anti-Defamation Leageu and the Southern Regional Council on problems of desegregation. The first, Token Desegregation and Beyond, by J. Kenneth Morland, professor of sociology at Randolph-Macon Woman's College in Virginia, was published last month. Lt analyzed "devices" used by "resistant" states in the South which had limited desegregation to less than half of one per cent of Negroes in all school districts, and contrasted these efforts with those of six "compliant" states which had moved 51.1% of Negro pupils to non-racial schools "creatively and successfully."

Copies of both studies are available from the national offices of the Anti-Defamation League, 515 Madison Avenue, New York 22, New York, or from the Southern Regional Council, Inc., 5 Forsyth Street, N. W., Atlanta, Georgia.

In Desegregated Schools

Atl. World 8/11/63
Ed. South

STUDY FINDS CHILDREN LEARN WITHOUT INJURY

Even when school desegregation is accompanied by community disorder, "young children of both races seem able to learn without any physical or emotional injury or collapse, given .... initial good health and a functioning school system."

This is one of the findings of the first psychiatric study of the effects of desegregation on participating Negro and white students in the South.

The study, which has been in process for two years ,was conducted by Dr. Robert Coles, a psychiatrist of Atlanta, Ga. A summary report, titled The Desegregation of Southern Schools: A Psychiatric Study, was published today by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

The study deals primarily with six and seven year old elementary school students in New Orleans and 16 and 17 year old high school students in Atlanta. Suplementary evaluations were also made in desegregated schools in Charlotte, Asheville, and Burnsville, North Carolina; Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tennessee; and Little Rock, Arkansas.

FINDINGS LISTED

Among the findings are these:

—Some "segregationist" children change their attitudes toward Negro children after attending school with them for a year.

—Negro children find attendance in white schools "stressful but not incapacitating."

—White children in desegregated southern schools suffer no "medical or psychiatric damage" and no "breakdown in ability to work, study and get along with friends."

—Children of both races continue their studies "without impairment."

—From an academic viewpoint, desegregation is easier in elementary grade schools.

(Continued on Page 4, Col. 1)

STUDY FINDS CHILDREN

(Continued from Page One)

The study found pressures on Negro children in desegregated schools varied "only in degree" from those which had always faced them in their daily lives. It added that while it was hard for a Negro child to enter an all-white school, the change offered "hope and opportunities for work, for assertion of self, which contrast with other moments that may have seemed to them not only hard but also futile and less fulfilling."

Dr. Coles attributed changed attitudes in some white children to "getting to know a particular Negro child," and "thinking about the problem because they were part of a desegregated school." He quoted a white Atlanta high school senior:

"I've really changed a lot of my ideas. You can't help but have respect for them, the way they have gone through the year so well. They're nice kids, that's what you find out after a while. They speak well ,and are more intelligent than a lot of my friends...."

In discussing how Negro and white students got along in the same school, Dr. Coles said younger children layed and worked together more readily than older ones. He found the reactions of high school students were determined not only by their racial attitudes, but by the normal teen-age struggles of growing up. Personal knowledge of Negroes, however, did overcome old ideas of suspicion, distrust, contempt, and disdain held by some white adolescents.

LEARN SUCCESSFULLY

Both Negro and white students continued to learn successfully. Dr. Coles pointed out, however, that although the majority of younger Negro students managed well, older ones sometimes had to overcome "the burden of their former years" in schools "often far from comparable to the white ones." Despite some learning difficulties among

STUDENTS UNIMPAIRED

Study Scotches Integration 'Hurt'

Atl. J+C 8/11/63

Ed. South

By WALTER RUGABER

A psychiatric study on the impact of Southern school desegregation, set for publication Sunday, reports that children of both races continue their studies "without impairment."

Dr. Robert Coles, an Atlanta child psychiatrist, wrote the report after an intensive, two-year study of school integration in Atlanta and New Orleans.

His optimistic findings were readied for publication by the Atlanta-based Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

Despite a variety of fears and anxieties, Dr. Coles found, Negro children find their assignment to desegregated schools a stressful but not incapacitating experience."

THE STUDY, among other things, was an illustration of the basic resilience and versatility of children. Even when there is disorder, the report found, students seem to come out generally unscathed.

Picturing life in the desegregated classroom, Dr. Coles said "Negro children get their satisfactions from simple survival, from survival with good performance, and from signs of welcome and friendship which may come their way."

"During the year the white child may slowly begin to recognize the Negro child and speak with him, or steadfastly avoid him. All of the white children whom we saw who favored desegregation were nevertheless inhibited in their words and deeds. . . ."

CITING an Atlanta experience, Dr. Coles said "the best situation" for both the white and Negro students was in schools located neither in low income sections nor in the more wealthy areas of the city.

It was rather "in a school in a middle class region which drew upon a more diverse religious and ethnic population, and which had high standards of teaching corresponding to the high ambitions of the parents for their children."

Dr. Coles said that from the teaching standpoint it was "obviously better" to begin the school desegregation process in the earlier grades when "ideologies are foreign" to the students.

"SEEDS of later attitudes are in them, make no mistake about that. But they will not flower until later, when the child thinks and hesitates more, is more responsive to the laws of society. . . ."

Moreover, the psychiatrist declared, the younger Negro student does not have to overcome "the burden" of his former years in schools which are "often far from comparable to the white ones."

Dr. Coles observed that the Negro children are at least partially insulated in that "they have learned from their earliest years techniques and methods of dealing with their position in society and its consequences for them. . . ."

SOMETIMES a white "segregationist" student will gradually shift his attitude toward his Negro classmates. Dr. Coles presented this exerpt from an interview he conducted with an unnamed Atlanta youngster:

"I've really changed a lot of my ideas. You can't help having respect for them, the way they've gone through the year so well. . . . They speak well, and are more intelligent than a lot of my friends. You have to understand how we've grown up.

"They were slaves to us, I mean even after the Civil War. . . . I was taught to expect them to do anything I wanted at home . . . and then we're told they're supposed to go to school with us . . . My daddy nearly died. . . .

"I SNEERED a few times the first few weeks, but I just couldn't keep it up, and I felt kind of bad and sorry for them. I used to get nervous when I'd see them eating alone. I wondered how I'd have felt if I was in their shoes. . . .

"Next thing I knew I was quiet when some of my friends were calling them all the old names. . . . I felt that I never again would look at them the way I did last September and before. . . . I can't really describe any time or episode . . . it was just a kind of gradual feeling."

Dr. Coles also reported that in other instances white students maintained their strong dislike of Negroes. He said one student he had interviewed grew even more set in his attitude.

The psychiatrist observed that some of the Negro students were happy to return the feeling. He quoted a Negro boy as saying that the whites "cause trouble whenever they can, and they're the ones who are dirty." The boy added:

"They're like savages, that's what whites are like, savages."

DESPITE these feelings and problems, students in desegregated schools continued the learning process. The older Negro children had some academic difficulties, but very few were found to be insurmountable.

"We have yet to hear a Southern teacher complain of any drop in intellectual or moral climate in a desegregated room or school," Dr. Coles wrote.

The report was the second published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League on desegregation problems. The first, issued last month, concerned "token" integration of Southern schools.

DR. COLES' study was said to be the first psychiatric investigation of school desegregation. In addition to the students themselves, Dr. Coles interviewed their parents and school officials.

Although the major evaluations were in Atlanta and New Orleans on a regular basis over the two years, supplementary studies were conducted in Charlotte, Asheville and Burnsville, N.C.; Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tenn.; and Little Rock, Ark.

ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH
D. 347,672 S. 564,337

AUG 1 1 1963

Desegregation Found Easier In Grade Than High Schools

ATLANTA, Ga., Aug. 10 (AP) —School desegregation is easier in elementary grade schools than in high schools, two biracial agencies reported today.

Even where desegregation is accompanied by disorder, children of both races appear able to learn without physical or emotional injury, if they are in good health and have a functioning school system.

These findings were made by the Southern Regional Council, and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith in the second of a series of studies that have been under way for two years.

Today's report dealt with the first psychiatric study of the effects of desegregation on pupils. The early study, entitled "Token Desegregation and Beyond," analyzed methods used in some resistant Southern states where integration was limited to less than half of 1 per cent of Negroes. The study contrasted token efforts with those of six states where more than 50 per cent of the Negro pupils were transferred to nonracial schools.

The psychiatric study dealt primarily with 6- and 7-year-old pupils in New Orleans and 16- and 17-year-old high school pupils in Atlanta. Supplementary evaluations were made in desegregated schools in Charlotte, Asheville and Burnsville, N.C., Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tenn., and Little Rock, Ark.

Today's report showed:

Some segregationist children change their attitude toward Negro children after attending school with them for a year.

Negro children find attendance in white schools distressing but not incapacitating.

White children in desegregated Southern schools suffer no medical or psychiatric damage and no breakdown in ability to work, study and get along with friends.

Pressure on Negro children in desegregated schools varied only in degree from those which had always faced them in their daily lives.

Dr. Robert Coles of Atlanta, who conducted the psychiatric study, said that changed attitudes in some white children were noted when they got to know a particular Negro child. He quoted a white Atlanta high school senior:

"I've really changed a lot of my ideas. You can't help but have respect for them, the way they've gone through the year so well. They're nice kids, that's what you find out after a while. They speak well, and are more intelligent than a lot of my friends."

Coles said that racial and personal feelings among teachers in desegregated schools tended to give way to professional responsibilities and obligations and there were few criticisms of teachers by either white or Negro children.

"Our studies show," he said, "that many people oppose desegregation but also oppose the closing of schools, mob behavior or insulting or assaulting a fellow student, regardless of skin color. The particularly enraged person, be he teacher or student, is relatively rare among millions of southerners."

Dallas Times Herald
D. 195,987 S. 206,275

AUG 1 1 1963

Integration Easier In Grade Schools

ATLANTA (AP)—School desegregation is easier in elementary grade schools than in high schools, two biracial agencies reported Saturday.

And where desegregation is accompanied by disorder, children of both races seem able to learn without physical or emotional injury, if they are in good health and have a functioning school system.

These findings were made by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith in the second of a series of studies that have been under way for two years.

Saturday's report dealt with the first psychiatric study of the effects of desegregation on pupils. The early study, entitled "Token Desegregation and Beyond," analyzed methods used in some resistant Southern states where integration was limited to less than half of one per cent of Negroes. The study contrasted token efforts with those of six states where more than 50 per cent of the Negro pupils were shifted to nonracial schools.

The psychiatric study dealt primarily with six and seven year old pupils in New Orleans and 16 and 17 year old high school pupils in Atlanta. Supplementary evaluations were made in desegregated schools in Charlotte, Asheville and Burnsville, N.C., Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tenn., and Little Rock, Ark.

The report said the psychiatric study showed:

Some segregationist children change their attitude toward Negro children after attending school with them for a year.

Negro children find attendance in white schools stressing but not incapacitating.

White children in desegregated Southern schools suffer no medical or psychiatric damage and no breakdown in ability to work, study and get along with friends.

Pressure on Negro children in desegregated schools varied only in degree from those which had always faced them in their daily lives.

Dr. Robert Coles of Atlanta, who conducted the psychiatric study, said changed attitudes in some white children were noted when they got to know a particular Negro child. He quoted a white Atlanta High School senior:

"Ive really changed a lot of my ideas. You can't help but have respect for them, the way they've gone through the year so well. They're nice kids, that's what you find out after a while. They speak well and are more intelligent than a lot of my friends."

Coles said racial and personal feelings among teachers in desegregated schools tended to give way to professional responsibilities and obligations and there were few criticisms of teachers by either white or Negro children.

"Our studies show," he added, "that many people oppose desegregation but also oppose the closing of schools, mob behavior or insulting or assaulting a fellow student, regardless of skin color. The particularly enraged person, be he teacher or student, is relatively rare among millions of Southerners."

Times-Picayune
NEW ORLEANS, LA,
D. 193,514 S. 302,677

AUG 1 1 1963

Desegregation Is Studied Here

Very Young Found to Make Change Easier

ATLANTA (AP)—School desegregation is easier in elementary grade schools than in high schools, two biracial agencies reported Saturday.

And where desegregation is accompanied by disorder, children of both races seem able to learn without physical or emotional injury, if they are in good health and have a functioning school system.

These findings were made by the Southern Regional Council, and the Anti-Defamation League of B'Nai B'Rith in the second of a series of studies that have been under way for two years.

Saturday's report dealt with the first psychiatric study of the effects of desegregation on pupils. The early study, entitled "Token Desegregation and Beyond," analyzed methods used in some resistant Southern states where integration was limited to less than half of one per cent of Negroes. The study contrasted token efforts with those of six complaint states where more than 50 per cent of the Negro pupils were shifted to non-racial schools.

NEW ORLEANS IN STUDY

The psychiatric study dealt primarily with six and seven year-old pupils in New Orleans and 16 and 17-year-old high school pupils in Atlanta. Supplementary evaluations were made in desegregated schools in Charlotte, Asheville and Burnsville, N. C.; Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tenn., and Little Rock, Ark.

The report said the psychiatric study showed:

Some segregationist children change their attitudes toward Negro children after attending school with them for a year.

Negro children find attendance in white schools stressing but not incapacitating.

White children in desegregated Southern schools suffer no medical or psychiatric damage and no breakdown in ability to work, study and get along with friends.

Pressure on Negro children in desegregated schools varied only in degree from those which had always faced them in their daily lives.

SAYS ATTIUTDE CHANGES

Dr. Robert Coles, of Atlanta, who conducted the psychiatric study, said changed attitudes in some white children were noted when they got to know a particular Negro child. He quoted a white Atlanta high school senior:

"I've really changed a lot of my ideas. You can't help but have respect for them, the way they've gone through the year so well. They're nice kids, that's what you find out after a while. They speak well, and are more intelligent than a lot of my friends."

Coles said racial and personal feelings among teachers in desegregated schools tended to give way to professional responsibilities and obligations and there were few criticisms of teachers by either whiite or Negro children.

"Our studies show," he added, "that many people oppose desegregation but also oppose the closing of schools, mob behavior or insulting or assaulting a fellow student, regardless of skin color. The particularly enraged person, be he teacher or student, is relatively rare among millions of Southerners."

CHICAGO
SUN - TIMES
CHICAGO, ILL.
D. 543,420 S. 651,327

AUG 1 1 1963

How Southern Pupils React To Integration Pressures

By Terry Ferrer
N.Y. Herald Tribune Special

NEW YORK—For Martha, it was a year of complete silence and isolation, except for an occasional insult of word or deed. Her senior year in high school was a day-to-day torture, and when the last one came around at last, Martha felt she had no friends at all.

Martha was a Negro girl in a newly desegregated high school in Atlanta, and yet, on that last day, 15 white boys and girls came up and asked to autograph her yearbook. Martha was afraid: Perhaps it was just another way to hurt and attack her.

But one boy wrote: "Martha, I cannot tell you how much I admire your courage and determination. After you finished that little talk in English (class), in my eyes you are 'nine feet tall.'"

And a girl wrote: "I only hope you will forgive those of us who have been mean and ugly."

And yet another: "Dear Martha . . . I'm sorry not to have been able to get to know you better, but this is just the way it turned out . . . I guess that you can understand why I haven't become better acquainted with you. But I personally think that I have missed a great opportunity."

Until the last minute, neither Negro nor white knew what they would say or do when integration came. All that year of 1961-62, Martha and the eight other Negro students initially assigned to white Atlanta schools had been having psychiatric interviews. So had many of the white students, who reported their conflicting feelings of friendliness and fear and guilt and curiosity.

Not even the psychiatrist, Dr. Robert Coles of Atlanta, knew how that school year would end for Martha.

Now Dr. Coles has put together a fascinating report of two years of research on how participating Negro and white children react to the pressures of desegregation.

"The Desegregation of Southern Schools: A Psychiatric Study" is the first to approach the explosive issue from the pupils' psychiatric point of view. The study was published by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith and the Southern Regional Council, nonprofit, nonpolitical, biracial research and educational organizations.

Dr. Coles also studied the four little Negro girls who broke the first-grade color line in New Orleans in 1960, and then seven others who followed in 1961. He also interviewed white children there, their parents, teachers and school officials. By personal trips, he compared his findings with those on children and adults of both races in Charlotte, Asheville and Burnsville, N.C.; Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tenn., and Little Rock, Ark.

Dr. Coles, a child psychiatrist, found that even with the most extreme pressure, such as in New Orleans, "young children of both races seem able to learn without any physical or emotional injury or collapse, given reasonable, initial good health and a functioning school system."

Coles concludes that it is obviously better to start desegregation in the lowest grades. "Young children of the two races," he says, "play together and work together even though they have heard many remarks at home which might discourage this. A game means more to a child than an idea at this age."

COLUMBUS, GA.
LEDGER-ENQUIRER
SUN. 50,748

AUG 1 1 1963

Study Looks At Mixing In Schools

ATLANTA (AP) — School desegregation is easier in elementary grade schools than in high schools, two biracial agencies reported yesterday.

And where desegregation is accompanied by disorder, children of both races seem able to learn without physical or emotional injury, if they are in good health and have a functioning school system.

These findings were made by the Southern Regional Council, and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith in the second of a series of studies that have been under way for two years.

Psychiatric Study

The report dealt with the first psychiatric study of the effects of desegregation on pupils. The early study, entitled "Token Desegrgation and Beyond," analyzed methods used in some resistant Southern states where integration was limited to less than half of one per cent of Negroes. That study contrasted token efforts with those of six complaint states where more than 50 per cent of the Negro pupils were shifted to non-racial schools.

The psychiatric study dealt primarily with six and seven year old pupils in New Orleans and 16 and 17 year old high school pupils in Atlanta. Supplementary evaluations were made in desegregated schools in Charlotte, Asheville and Burnsville, N.C.; Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tenn., and Little Rock, Ark.

The report said the psychiatric study showed:

Some segregationist children change their attitudes toward Negro children after attending school with them for a year.

Negro children find attendance in white schools stressful but not incapacitating.

White children in desegregated Southern schools suffer no medical or psychiatric damage and no breakdown in ability to work, study and get along with friends.

Pressure on Negro children in desegregated schools varied only in degree from those which had always faced them in their daily lives.

San Francisco Chronicle
THE VOICE OF THE WEST
D. 300,065 S. 330,671

AUG 14 1963

Effect of Integration On Pupils

Atlanta, Ga.

Some segregationist students change their ideas about Negro classmates after going to school with them for a year, say two biracial agencies.

And Negro children attending white schools find their roles stressing but not incapacitating, said the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League of Bnai Brith in the second of a series of studies.

The second report analyzed psychiatric effects of desegregation on 6- and 7-year-old pupils in New Orleans and 16- and 17-year-old high school students in Atlanta.

The report said the study showed:

- Desegregation is easier in elementary schools than in high schools.
- Where desegregation is accompanied by disorder, most children of both races seem able to learn without physical or emotional injury.
- White children in desegregated Southern classrooms suffer no medical or psychiatric damage or breakdown in ability to work, study and get along with friends.
- Pressure on Negro children in desegregated schools varies only in degree from those which have always faced them in their daily lives.

Dr. Robert Coles of Atlanta, who conducted the second study, said teachers in integrated schools tend to put professional responsibility ahead of personal feelings.

Associated Press

The New York Times
D. 680,265 S. 1,306,418
AUG 11 1963

Psychiatrist Finds Integration Eased by Start in Early Grades

Younger Southern children of both races seem to experience less trouble when pioneering in school desegregation than do their teen-aged brothers and sisters, a child psychiatrist's report said yesterday.

The report, by Dr. Robert Coles, thus agrees with some school administrators and race relations observers who favor initial desegregation of the earlier grades over the "reverse stair-step" method employed in some Southern school systems.

Dr. Coles based his conclusions on a two-year investigation, which was carried out primarily in Atlanta and New Orleans.

He also found that the learning process had not been dulled by desegregation; that teachers had demonstrated an ability to set aside their personal feelings about race; and that there was little "passionate dislike" of Negro students on the part of their new white classmates.

The 33-year-old psychiatrist, a native of Boston, presented his findings in a 25-page booklet titled "The Desegregation of Southern Schools: A Psychiatric Study." It was published yesterday by the Southern Regional Council, an Atlanta-based organization that specializes in research on race relations, and by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

Finds Learning Unimpaired

Dr. Coles found that "even with external stress such as in New Orleans, young children of both races seem able to learn without any physical or emotional injury or collapse, given reasonable, initial good health and a functioning school system."

His research emphasized, he said, "what we already know about human development, that at 5 children are governed by needs of the moment: to play, to sing, or shout." He continued:

"They most certainly understand many of the meanings of skin color, because they hear the words and commands of their parents; but, except in rare cases, tensions and ideologies of the adult world will not undo what is, after all, their 'childhood.'

"In the first grades children are influenced by constant surges of energy, prompting action, curiosity, exploration of mind and body alike. Ideologies are foreign to them.

"Seeds of later attitudes are in them, make no mistake about that. But they will not flower until later, when the child thinks and hesitates more, is more responsive to the laws of society than the young child."

Differences Cited

The high school student's situation is different, he said.

"By 14 so very much has happened," wrote Dr. Coles, "and in those last few years of school there is little time or inclination, given the nature of adolescence, for easy reversals of long standing and accruing assets and liabilities."

The question of whether school desegregation should start in the upper or lower grades has been a controversial one in some Southern communities. Several cities in Tennessee as well as New Orleans and Dallas, were among those starting desegregation in the lower grades.

Desegregation was initiated at the high school level in Atlanta, Little Rock, Norfolk, and several North Carolina cities.

Dr. Coles said he found in interviews with school teachers in both Atlanta and New Orleans "a deep sense of professional integrity, of identity as teachers which transcended their private feelings about race."

He also found a growing awareness, in children of both races, of individual differences.

"A firmly segregationist boy cannot but notice the difference between two Negro classmates," he wrote. "A Negro girl no longer sees, as she put it, 'just white,' but many separate individuals."

Dr. Coles used frequent personal contacts, tape recordings and crayons and drawing paper—a conventional technique of child psychiatry—in searching for the personal feelings of the children in Atlanta and New Orleans.

The author is a graduate of Harvard University. He spent his psychiatric residency in the Harvard Medical School teaching hospitals, and he obtained his M. D. degree at Columbia University, College of Physicians and Surgeons.

NEW YORK Herald Tribune
D. 359,813 S. 428,011

AUG 11 1963

Integrated Class: Sneers to Cheers

By Terry Ferrer
Education Editor

For Martha, it was a year of complete silence and isolation, except for an occasional insult of word or deed. Her senior year in high school was a day-to-day torture, and when the last one came around at last, Martha felt she had no friends at all.

Martha was a Negro girl in a newly desegregated high school in Atlanta, Ga. And yet, on that last day, 15 white boys and girls came up and asked to autograph her yearbook. Martha was afraid: Perhaps it was just another way to hurt and attack her.

But one boy wrote: "Martha, I cannot tell you how much I admire your courage and determination. After you finished that little talk in English (class), in my eyes you were 'nine feet tall'."

And a girl wrote: "I only hope you will forgive those of us who have been mean and ugly."

And yet another: "Dear Martha . . . I'm sorry not to have been able to get to know you better, but that is just the way it turned out . . . I guess that you can understand why I haven't become better acquainted with you. But I personally think that I have missed a great opportunity."

Until the last minute, neither Negro nor white knew what they would say or do. All that year of 1961-62, Martha and the eight other Negro students initially assigned to white Atlanta schools had been having psychiatric interviews. So had many of the white students, who reported their conflicting feelings of friendliness and fear and guilt and curiosity.

Not even the psychiatrist, Dr. Robert Coles of Atlanta, knew how that school year would end for Martha.

Now Dr. Coles has put together a fascinating report of two years of research on how participating Negro and white children react to the pressures of desegregation. "The Desegregation of Southern Schools: A Psychiatric Study" is the first to approach the explosive issue from the pupils' psychiatric point of view. The study is published today by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith and the Southern Regional Council, a non-profit, non-political, bi-racial research and educational organization.

Dr. Coles also studied the four little Negro girls who broke the first-grade color line in New Orleans, La., in 1960, and the seven others who followed in 1961. He also interviewed white children there, their parents, teachers and school officials. Via personal trips, he compared his findings with those on children and adults of both races in Charlotte, Asheville and Burnsville, N. C.; Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tenn.; and Little Rock, Ark.

Dr. Coles, a child psychiatrist, found that even with the most extreme pressure, such as in New Orleans, "young children of both races seem able to learn without any physical or emotional injury or collapse, given reasonable, initial good health and a functioning school system."

The white first graders who each day in the 1960-61 school year had to run a screaming gantlet of white housewives to enter the freshly desegregated William Frantz Elementary School in New Orleans often urged their parents to take them to school. They loved the excitement and attention.

Associated Press

Back in 1960, white mothers shouted and jeered as a white Methodist minister took his daughter, left, to an integrated school in New Orleans.

In 1961, Dr. Coles points out, "one of the white children who returned to the almost totally boycotted Frantz school told a little colored girl that she would not play with her because her mother had forbidden this, and then, a few minutes later, did just that."

Dr. Coles concludes that it is obviously better to start desegregation in the first grades. "Young children of the two races," he says, "play together and work together even though they have heard many remarks at home which might discourage this. A game means more to a child than an idea at this age."

By the time pupils of both races are in high school, much has happened to the adolescent attitudes and there is little time or inclination to change long-standing ideas and practices.

Can children change the Southern segregation pattern of centuries? Dr. Coles says yes, in many cases, because the children themselves change, even after a year in a classroom where they live and work with Negroes every day. Others, of course, remain hidebound segregationists. However, "those children and teachers whose feelings are exceptionally strong about desegregation, are, really, a special, and rather small group," Dr. Coles concludes. Most teachers, he found, clung to professional responsibilities and obligations to teach all children, whatever their personal feelings about black or white might be.

And consider what this boy, an Atlanta high-school senior, told Dr. Coles in a taped interview toward the end of 1962—the first year of desegregation:

"I've really changed a lot of my ideas. You can't help having respect for them, the way they've gone through the year so well. They're nice kids, that's what you find out after a while. They speak well, and are a lot more intelligent than a lot of my friends. You have to understand how we've grown up. They were slaves to us, I mean even after the Civil War . . . they belonged in the kitchen or fixing your socks. . . .

"I sneered a few times the first few weeks, but I just couldn't keep it up, and I felt kind of bad and sorry for them. I used to get nervous when I'd see them eating alone. I wondered how I'd have felt if I were in their shoes . . . next thing I knew I was quiet when some of my friends were calling them all the old names. . . . I felt that I never again would look at them the way I did last September and before. . . . I can't really describe any time or episode . . . no, it was just kind of a gradual feeling. . . ."

Arkansas Gazette SRC
8-11-63

Study Shows Pupils Able To Withstand School Crises

Ed. South

White and Negro children attending newly desegregated schools seem able to avoid serious emotional or academic troubles, even during a time of community disorder, according to a psychiatric study released yesterday.

The two-year study was concerned principally with high school children in Atlanta and elementary children in New Orleans, and partially with students in six other Southern cities, including Little Rock.

It was made by Dr. Robert Coles, an Atlanta child psychiatrist, who gave a fuller report of his findings at the annual meeting of the American Psychiatric Association in May at St. Louis.

The stress of bad treatment caused loss of appetite, nervousness, stomach ache and other problems for the Negro children but they often responded with even more determined efforts to succeed academically. They are less vulnerable to stress in a sense, the report says, since the Negro learns early in life to contend with the pressure of his social position.

Younger Negro and white children got along easier socially, because they did not yet think with the prejudices and in the stereotypes of their leaders, the report says.

The young Negro children seemed likely to have an easier time academically, too. The older ones had spent years in Negro schools, where hopes for the future were dim and there was thus less motivation for serious study.

A Negro student was quoted: "We just don't work as hard in our schools as the whites do * * * Maybe we don't believe it pays off * * * Isn't it tough to get a job even if you do have the best degrees and you're Negro?"

3 White Groups

The white children studied fell into three groups, in regard to their attitudes toward the Negroes: Those who approved of desegregation, those who didn't particularly care or were mildly annoyed, and those who were strongly segregationist.

None of the white children suffered any medical or psychiatric damage, the report says.

Some white children who wanted to be friendly toward the Negroes held back for fear of social disapproval. Some of the segregationist children changed their attitudes about the Negroes, while others maintained or even increased their dislike.

One boy who came from a strongly segregationist family told an interviewer:

"I've really changed a lot of my ideas. You can't help having respect for them, the way they've gone through the year so well. They're nice kids, that's what you find out after a while. They speak well and are more intelligent than a lot of my friends. You have to understand how we've grown up * * * (when desegregation came) my daddy nearly died. Mom told him he'd get a stroke if he didn't stop it * * * I sneered a few times the first weeks, but I just couldn't keep it up, and I felt kind of bad and sorry for them. I used to get nervous when I'd see them eating alone. I wondered how I'd have felt if I were in their shoes * * * next thing I knew I was quiet when some of my friends were calling them all the old names * * * I felt that I never again would look at them the way I did last September and before * * *."

Both Change

Changes occurred in both white and Negro children when they began to see each other as individuals with separate manners and minds, instead of just members of a group, the report says. "It takes a high order of mental disability for such basic observations to be prevented," Dr. Coles wrote.

Teachers also felt the strain of desegregation but most of them apparently placed professional duties before private feelings, the report said.

Little Rock is mentioned only briefly. An unnamed teacher is quoted as saying that the children continued to learn during the city's desegregation crisis.

In Arkansas 2 Days

Little Rock School Superintendent Floyd W. Parsons said yesterday that he knew nothing of Dr. Coles' report or of any work that he might have done at Little Rock. A friend of Coles' at Little Rock said that he was in town for two days last year.

The interviews with the Atlanta and New Orleans children were made weekly for two years.

The report is entitled "The Desegregation of Southern Schools: A Psychiatric Study." It is being distributed by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

LUD, VS, PA, ST

Ed. South

Study Analyzes Effects Of School Integration

By Susanna McBee
Staff Reporter

The story of the South's school desegregation can be told in terms of the little white girl in New Orleans who informed her Negro classmate she would not play with the Negro because her mother had forbidden her to.

But then, a few minutes later, she disobeyed her mother.

It can be told in terms of the teacher who realized she had accepted integration only after she raised her voice at a Negro girl as she would have at any white student.

It can be told in terms of the strongly segregationist white boy who decided to better his grades after several Negroes entered his class because "I couldn't let them beat us out."

To those whites and Negroes who have lived through the initial difficulties of newly desegregated schools, the event is more than a political struggle or a social phenomenon; it is a series of individual experiences.

Some of these experiences and a few conclusions are recorded in a 25-page pamphlet, "The Desegregation of Southern Schools: A Psychiatric Study," by Dr. Robert Coles, a child psychiatrist of Atlanta.

The report, based on Dr. Coles' two-year study mainly in Atlanta and New Orleans, was published yesterday by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

Dr. Coles also did research in Charlotte, Asheville and Burnsville, N. C.; Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tenn., and Little Rock, Ark.

Stress Noted

He concluded that medically and psychologically, Negro students found their admission to white schools "stressful but not incapacitating."

Also, he said, none of the white children suffered medical or psychiatric damage from integration. "Regardless of their views they have all continued in school and graduated or been promoted."

Dr. Coles added, "Even the strongly segregationist children we have followed for two years have continued their studies without impairment."

Academically, it is better to start desegregation in the first grades because attitudes in younger children are more flexible and educational disparities are fewer in the lower grades, he said.

The key question, however, was, "Do changes occur among the attitudes of the white and Negro children as they go to school together?" Dr. Coles indicated the answer is yet, but he added cautiously that "time renders any judgment dangerous indeed."

Ideas Gave Way

He did find that "old ideas of suspicion and distrust, contempt and disdain, give way to personal knowledge."

That happened in the case of a Negro girl in Atlanta who had gone through a year of "continued silence, isolation, occasional insult of word and even deed in a white high school.

On the last day of school she was approached by more than 15 classmates who asked her if they could autograph her yearbook.

"She was afraid . . . because she felt that it might be a means of attack and insult rather than an expression of good will," Dr. Coles said.

But she offered her book, and here were some of the comments:

"Martha, I have admired your courage in your great decision. I'm sure you've been subjected to much unpleasantness, but you've met it in a most gracious way."

"Dear Martha . . . I know that since I, too, am a new senior I have had my troubles. I only hope that you will forgive those of us who have been mean and ugly . . ."

"Dear Martha, . . . I'm sorry not to have been able to get to know you better, but that is just the way it turned out . . . I guess that you can understand why I haven't become better acquainted with you. But I personally think that I have missed a great opportunity."

Some Didn't Change

Not all children, however, changed their views. Three of the white children studied retained their strong dislike of Negroes, and one Negro boy was quoted as saying of white students:

"I hate them, all of them, and when I can help it, I try to stay clear of them. They cause trouble whenever they can, and they're the ones who are dirty . . . I'm here to claim this school because it's as much ours as theirs."

Like their students, teachers had varying views about desegregation, but many shared the view of one teacher who said, "I didn't like it, but I also couldn't walk out on my job. That would be unthinkable."

The moral of Dr. Coles' report seems to be that both races have survived and made progress in integrated schools. Apparently, the "particularly enraged" person does not nuture his rage over integration, or at least the one who does is rare. "Too long have those who are committed to many customs and traditions besides racial ones allowed this one problem to dominate all others," the psychiatrist observed.

As with war, concentration camps, and pestilence, "life gathers itself together, often makes needed changes and goes on," he said.

The Boston Sunday Advertiser
SUN. 448,810

AUG 1 1 1963

B'nai B'rith League Bares Racial Study

A two-year study of resegregation of Negro and white students in the South was released yesterday by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

Dr. Robert Coles, an Atlanta, Ga., psychiatrist, found that white children in desegregated southern schools suffer no medical or psychiatric damage and no breakdown in ability to work, study and get along with friends. This was only one of several major findings.

The report was released in New ngland by Sol Kolack, ADL regional director, and Morton R. Godine of Brookline, chairman of the New England Regional ADL Board.

The Courier-Journal
LOUISVILLE, KY.
D. 220,140 S. 324,549

AUG 1 1 1963

Younger Children Are Found A

From AP and NYT Dispatches

New York, Aug. 10—Younger Southern children of both races seem to experience less trouble when pioneering in school desegregation than do their teen-age brothers and sisters, a child psychiatrist's report said Saturday.

The report, by Dr. Robert Coles, 33, thus agrees with some school administrators and race-relations observers who favor initial desegregation of the earlier grades over the "reverse stair-step" method employed in some Southern school systems.

He also reported that the learning process has not been dulled by desegregation, that teachers have demonstrated an ability to set aside their personal feelings about race, and that there is little "passionate dislike" of Negro students on the part of their new white classmates.

The psychiatrist, a native of Boston, presented his findings in a 25-page booklet titled "The Desegregation of Southern Schools: A Psychiatric Study."

It was published Saturday by the Southern Regional Council, an Atlanta-based organization which specializes in race-relations research, and by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

The two-year study dealt primarily with 6- and 7-year-old pupils in New Orleans and 16- and 17-year-old high school pupils in Atlanta. Supplementary evaulations were made in desegregated schools in Charlotte, Asheville, and Burnsville, N. C., Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tenn., and Little Rock, Ark.

Coles found that "even with external stress such as in New Orleans, young children of both races seem able to learn without any physical or emotional injury or collapse, given reasonable, initial good health and a functioning school system."

His research emphasized, he said, "what we already know about human development, that at 5, children are governed

d Adjusting Better To Integration and Oak ttle Rock,

even with n as in children able to hysical or collapse, itial good ing school

asized, he ady know ment, that governed

by needs of the moment: to play, to sing, or shout.

"They most certainly understand many of the meanings of skin color, because they hear the words and commands of their parents; but, except in rare cases, tensions and ideologies of the adult world will not undo what is, after all, their 'childhood.'

"In the first grades children are influenced by constant surges of energy, prompting action, curiosity, exploration of mind and body alike. Ideologies are foreign to them.

"Seeds of later attitudes are in them, make no mistake about that. But they will not flower until later, when the child thinks and hesitates more, is more responsive to the laws of society than the young child."

The high-school child's situation is different, he said.

"By 14 so very much has happened," wrote Dr. Coles, "and in those last few years of school there is little time or inclination, given the nature of adolescence, for easy reversals of long-standing and accruing assets and liabilities."

Coles said changed attitudes in some white children were noted when they got to know a particular Negro child. He quoted a white Atlanta high-school senior:

"I've really changed a lot of my ideas. You can't help but have respect for them, the way they've gone through the year so well. They're nice kids, that's what you find out after a while. They speak well, and are more intelligent than a lot of my friends."

The question of early vs. late school desegregation has been a controversial one in some Southern communities.

Several cities in Tennessee initiated school desegregation in the lower grades, along with New Orleans and Dallas, among other places. Desegregation was initiated at the high-school level in Atlanta, Little Rock, Norfolk, and several North Carolina cities.

Arkansas Gazette.
LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
D. 92,176 S. 105,024

AUG 1 1 1963

Study Shows Pupils Able To Withstand School Crises

White and Negro children attending newly desegregated schools seem able to avoid serious emotional or academic troubles, even during a time of community disorder, according to a psychiatric study released yesterday.

The two-year study was concerned principally with high school children in Atlanta and elementary children in New Orleans, and partially with students in six other Southern cities, including Little Rock.

It was made by Dr. Robert Coles, an Atlanta child psychiatrist, who gave a fuller report of his findings at the annual meeting of the American Psychiatric Association in May at St. Louis.

The stress of bad treatment caused loss of appetite, nervousness, stomach ache and other problems for the Negro children but they often responded with even more determined efforts to succeed academically. They are less vulnerable to stress in a sense, the report says, since the Negro learns early in life to contend with the pressure of his social position.

Younger Negro and white children got along easier socially, because they did not yet think with the prejudices and in the stereotypes of their leaders, the report says.

The young Negro children seemed likely to have an easier time academically, too. The older ones had spent years in Negro schools, where hopes for the future were dim and there was thus less motivation for serious study.

A Negro student was quoted: "We just don't work as hard in our schools as the whites do * * * Maybe we don't believe it pays off * * * Isn't it tough to get a job even if you do have the best degrees and you're Negro?"

3 White Groups

The white children studied fell into three groups, in regard to their attitudes toward the Negroes: Those who approved of desegregation, those who didn't particularly care or were mildly annoyed, and those who were strongly segregationist.

None of the white children suffered any medical or psychiatric damage, the report says.

Some white children who wanted to be friendly toward the Negroes held back for fear of social disapproval. Some of the segregationist children changed their attitudes about the Negroes, while others maintained or even increased their dislike.

One boy who came from a strongly segregationist family told an interviewer:

"I've really changed a lot of my ideas. You can't help having respect for them, the way they've gone through the year so well. They're nice kids, that's what you find out after a while. They speak well and are more intelligent than a lot of my friends. You have to understand how we've grown up * * * (when desegregation came) my daddy nearly died. Mom told him he'd get a stroke if he didn't stop it * * * I sneered a few times the first weeks, but I just couldn't keep it up, and I felt kind of bad and sorry for them. I used to get nervous when I'd see them eating alone. I wondered how I'd have felt if I were in their shoes * * * next thing I knew I was quiet when some of my friends were calling them all the old names * * * I felt that I never again would look at them the way I did last September and before * * * ."

Both Change

Changes occurred in both white and Negro children when they began to see each other as individuals with separate manners and minds, instead of just members of a group, the report says. "It takes a high order of mental disability for such basic observations to be prevented," Dr. Coles wrote.

Teachers also felt the strain of desegregation but most of them apparently placed professional duties before private feelings, the report said.

Little Rock is mentioned only briefly. An unnamed teacher is quoted as saying that the children continued to learn during the city's desegregation crisis.

In Arkansas 2 Days

Little Rock School Superintendent Floyd W. Parsons said yesterday that he knew nothing of Dr. Coles' report or of any work that he might have done at Little Rock. A friend of Coles' at Little Rock said that he was in town for two days last year.

The interviews with the Atlanta and New Orleans children were made weekly for two years.

The report is entitled "The Desegregation of Southern Schools: A Psychiatric Study." It is being distributed by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

PINE BLUFF, ARK.
COMMERCIAL
D, 19,914 S, 20,295

AUG 1 1 1963

Psychiatrist Cites 2-Year Study

Pupils Learn in Integration

Special to The Commercial

ATLANTA—White and Negro students in desegregated schools seem able to learn all right even when the desegregation is accompanied by community disorder, a psychiatrist says.

Dr. Robert Coles of Atlanta said he learned this in a two-year study of the effects of desegregation on white and Negro students. The study was sponsored by the Southern Regional Council, an integrationist group of Negroes and whites, and the Antidefemation League of B'nai B'rith, a Jewish group. The two groups said yesterday in a press release that Coles was the first psychiatric study of the effects of desegregation on the students involved.

The study deals primarily with six and seven-year-old pupils in New Orleans and 16 and 17-year-old students in Atlanta. Some investigations also were made in the desegregated schools of Carlotte, Asheville and Burnsville, all in North Carolina, in Clinton and Oak Ridge, both in Tennessee, and at Little Rock.

Attitudes Change

Among the findings:

—Some "segregationist" children change their attitudes toward Negro children after attending school with them for a year.

—Negro children find attendance in white schools "stressful but not incapacitating."

—White children in desegregated Southern schools suffer no "medical or psychiatric damage" and no "breakdown in ability to work, study and get along with friends."

—Children of both races continue their studies "without impairment."

—From an academic viewpoint, desegregation is easier in elementary grade schools.

Only in Degree

The study found that pressures on Negro childdren in desgregated schools varied "only in degree" from those they had always faced. It added that while it was hard for a Negro child to enter an all-white school, the change offered "hopes and opportunities for work, for assertion of self, which contrast with other moments that may have seemed to them not only hard but also futile and less fulfilling."

Coles attributed changed attitudes in some white children to "getting to know a particular Negro child," and "thinking about the problem because they were part of a desegregated school."

He quoted a white Atlanta high school senior:

"I've really changed a lot of my ideas. You can't help but have respect for them, the way they've gone through the year so well. They're nice kids, that's what you find out after a while. They speak well, and are more intelligent than a lot of my friends . . . ."

More Readily

Coles said younger Negro and white children played and worked together more readily than older ones.

He found that the reactions of high school students were determined not only by their racial attitudes, but by the normal teenage struggles of growing up.

Personal knowledge of Negroes, however, did overcome old ideas of suspicion, district, contempt, and disdain held by some white adolescents, he said.

Both Negro and white students continued to learn successfully. Coles said, however, that although the majority of younger Negro students managed well, older ones sometimes had to overcome "the burden of their former years" in schools "often far from comparable to the white ones." Despite some learning difficulties among Negro students who initiated desegregation in their high school years, the psychiatrist said he found very few academic problems "insurmontable." He asserted, however, that there were "less fixed disparities of educational achievement" in earlier grades than in higher ones.

Few Criticisms

According to the study, racial and personal feelings among teachers in desegregated schools tended to give way "to professional responsibilities and obligations," and few criticisms of teachers were heard from white or Negro children.

Professional integrity "transcended private feelings about race," Coles said. Children and teachers whose feelings are "exceptionally strong about desegregation" are "a special and rather small group," he added.

"Our studies show that many people oppose desegregation, but also oppose the closing of the schools, mob behavior, or insulting or assaulting a fellow student, regardless of skin color. The particularly enraged person, be he teacher or student, is relatively rare among millions of Southerners," the psychiatrist said.

The study is the second in a series to be issued by the Anti-Defamation League and the Southern Regional Council on problems of desegregation. The first was Token Desegregation and Beyond, by J. Kenneth Morland, professor of sociology at Randolph-Macon Woman's College in Virginia. It was published last month.

The Atlanta Journal
AND
THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION
SUN. 504,755

AUG 1 1 1963

STUDENTS UNIMPAIRED

Study Scotches Integration 'Hurt'

By WALTER RUGABER

A psychiatric study on the impact of Southern school desegregation, set for publication Sunday, reports that children of both races continue their studies "without impairment."

Dr. Robert Coles, an Atlanta child psychiatrist, wrote the report after an intensive, two-year study of school integration in Atlanta and New Orleans.

His optimistic findings were readied for publication by the Atlanta-based Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

Despite a variety of fears and anxieties, Dr. Coles found, Negro children find their assignment to desegregated schools a stressful but not incapacitating experience."

THE STUDY, among other things, was an illustration of the basic resilience and versatility of children. Even when there is disorder, the report found, students seem to come out generally unscathed.

Picturing life in the desegregated classroom, Dr. Coles said "Negro children get their satisfactions from simple survival, from survival with good performance, and from signs of welcome and friendship which may come their way."

"During the year the white child may slowly begin to recognize the Negro child and speak with him, or steadfastly avoid him. All of the white children whom we saw who favored desegregation were nevertheless inhibited in their words and deeds. . . ."

CITING an Atlanta experience, Dr. Coles said "the best situation" for both the white and Negro students was in schools located neither in low income sections nor in the more wealthy areas of the city.

It was rather "in a school in a middle class region which drew upon a more diverse religious and ethnic population, and which had high standards of teaching corresponding to the high ambitions of the parents for their children."

Dr. Coles said that from the teaching standpoint it was "obviously better" to begin the school desegregation process in the earlier grades when "ideologies are foreign" to the students.

"SEEDS of later attitudes are in them, make no mistake about that. But they will not flower until later, when the child thinks and hesitates more, is more responsive to the laws of society. . . ."

Moreover, the psychiatrist declared, the younger Negro student does not have to overcome "the burden" of his former years in schools which are "often far from comparable to the white ones."

Dr. Coles observed that the Negro children are at least partially insulated in that "they have learned from their earliest years techniques and methods of dealing with their position in society and its consequences for them. . . ."

SOMETIMES a white "segregationist" student will gradually shift his attitude toward his Negro classmates. Dr. Coles presented this exerpt from an interview he conducted with an unnamed Atlanta youngster:

"I've really changed a lot of my ideas. You can't help having respect for them, the way they've gone through the year so well. . . . They speak well, and are more intelligent than a lot of my friends. You have to understand how we've grown up.

"They were slaves to us, I mean even after the Civil War. . . . I was taught to expect them to do anything I wanted at home . . . and then we're told they're supposed to go to school with us . . . My daddy nearly died. . . .

"I SNEERED a few times the first few weeks, but I just couldn't keep it up, and I felt kind of bad and sorry for them. I used to get nervous when I'd see them eating alone. I wondered how I'd have felt if I was in their shoes. . . .

"Next thing I knew I was quiet when some of my friends were calling them all the old names. . . . I felt that I never again would look at them the way I did last September and before. . . . I can't really describe any time or episode . . . it was just a kind of gradual feeling."

Dr. Coles also reported that in other instances white students maintained their strong dislike of Negroes. He said one student he had interviewed grew even more set in his attitude.

The psychiatrist observed that some of the Negro students were happy to return the feeling. He quoted a Negro boy as saying that the whites "cause trouble whenever they can, and they're the ones who are dirty." The boy added:

"They're like savages, that's what whites are like, savages."

DESPITE these feelings and problems, students in desegregated schools continued the learning process. The older Negro children had some academic difficulties, but very few were found to be insurmountable.

"We have yet to hear a Southern teacher complain of any drop in intellectual or moral climate in a desegregated room or school," Dr. Coles wrote.

The report was the second published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League on desegregation problems. The first, issued last month, concerned "token" integration of Southern schools.

DR. COLES' study was said to be the first psychiatric investigation of school desegregation. In addition to the students themselves, Dr. Coles interviewed their parents and school officials.

Although the major evaluations were in Atlanta and New Orleans on a regular basis over the two years, supplementary studies were conducted in Charlotte, Asheville and Burnsville, N.C.; Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tenn.; and Little Rock, Ark.

SAVANNAH, GA.
NEWS
D. 55,202 S. 60,313

AUG 11 1963

Lower Grades Easier

Integration Report Made

ATLANTA (AP) — School desegregation is easier in elementary grade schools than in high schools, two biracial agencies reported Saturday.

And where desegregation is accompanied by disorder, children of both races seem able to learn without physical or emotional injury, if they are in good health and have a functioning school system.

These findings were made by the Southern Regional Council, and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith in the second of a series of studies that have been under way for two years.

The report dealt with the first psychiatric study of the effects of desegregation on pupils. The early study, entitled "Token Desegregation and Beyond," analyzed methods used in some resistant Southern states where integration was limited to less than half of one per cent of Negroes.

That study contrasted token efforts with those of six compliant states where more than 50 per cent of the Negro pupils were shifted to non-racial schools.

The psychiatric study dealt primarily with six and seven year old pupils in New Orleans and 16 and 17 year old high school pupils in Atlanta. Supplementary evaluations were made in desegregated schools in Charlotte, Asheville and Burnsville, N.C.; Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tenn., and Little Rock, Ark.

The report said the psychiatric study showed:

Some segregationist children change their attitudes toward Negro children after attending school with them for a year.

Negro children find attendance in white schools stressful but not incapacitating.

White children in desegregated Southern schools suffer no medical or psychiatric damage and no breakdown in ability to work, study and get along with friends.

Pressure on Negro children in desegregated schools varied only in degree from those which had always faced them in their daily lives.

Dr. Robert Coles, of Atlanta, who conducted the psychiatric study, said changed attitudes in some white children were noted when they got to know a particular Negro child. He quoted a white Atlanta high school senior:

"I've really changed a lot of my ideas. You can't help but have respect for them, the way they've gone through the year so well. They're nice kids, that's what you find out after a while. They speak well, and are more intelligent than a lot of my friends."

Coles said racial and personal feelings among teachers in desegregated schools tended to give way to professional responsibilities and obligations and there were few criticisms of teachers by either white or Negro children.

The New Haven Register
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
D. 97,672 S. 105,605

AUG 11 1963

Finds Southern Pupils Attitudes Changed

Report Shows Study Unimpaired By School Desegregation

ATLANTA, Ga. — Even when school desegregation is accompanied by community disorder, "young children of both races seem able to learn without any physical or emotional injury or collapse, given . . . initial good health and a functioning school system."

This is one of the findings of the first psychiatric study of the effects of desegregation on participating Negro and white students in the South.

The study — in process two years — was conducted by Dr. Robert Coles, a psychiatrist of Atlanta. A summary report, titled "The Desegregation of Southern Schools: A Psychiatric Study," was published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith today.

The study deals primarily with six and seven-year-old elementary school students in New Orleans and 16 and 17-year-old high school students in Atlanta. Supplementary evaluations were also made in desegregated schools in Charlotte, Asheville and Burnsville, N. C.; Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tenn.; and Little Rock, Ark.

Among the major findings are these:

1. Some "segregationist" children change thier attitudes toward Negro children after attending school with them for a year.

2. Negro children find attendance in white schools "stressful but not incapacitating."

3. White children in desegregated southern schools suffer no "medical or psychiatric damage" and no "breakdown in ability to work, study and get along with friends."

4. Children of both races continue their studies "without impairment."

5. From an academic viewpoint, desegregation is easier in elementary grade schools.

Dr. Coles attributed changed attitudes in some white children to "getting to know a particular Negro child," and "thinking about the problem because they were part of a desegregated school."

In discussing how well Negro and white students got along in the same school, Dr. Coles said younger children played and worked together more readily than older ones. He found the activities of high school students were determined not only by their racial attitudes but by the normal struggles of growing up which characterize teenagers.

Personal knowledge of Negroes, however, did overcome old ideas of suspicion, distrust, contempt and disdain in some white students, the psychiatrist said.

The study found pressures on Negro children in desegregated schools varied "only in degree" from those which had always faced them in their daily lives.

Both Negro and white students continued to learn successfully. Dr. Coles pointed out, however, that although the majority of younger Negro students managed well, older ones sometimes had to overcome "the burden of their former years" in schools "often far from comparable to the white ones."

Teachers Changed

According to the study, conflicting racial feelings among teachers in desegregated schools tended to give way "to professional responsibilities and obligations" and few criticisms of teachers were heard from white or Negro children.

"Our studies show that many people oppose desegregation, but also oppose the closing of the schools, mob behavior, or insulting or assaulting a fellow student, regardless of skin color. The particularly enraged person, be he teacher or student, is relatively rare among millions of southerners," the psychiatrist said.

NYT Ed. South 8/11/63

Psychiatrist Finds Integration Eased by Start in Early Grades

Younger Southern children of both races seem to experience less trouble when pioneering in school desegregation than do their teen-aged brothers and sisters, a child psychiatrist's report said yesterday.

The report, by Dr. Robert Coles, thus agrees with some school administrators and race relations observers who favor initial desegregation of the earlier grades over the "reverse stair-step" method employed in some Southern school systems.

Dr. Coles based his conclusions on a two-year investigation, which was carried out primarily in Atlanta and New Orleans.

He also found that the learning process had not been dulled by desegregation; that teachers had demonstrated an ability to set aside their personal feelings about race; and that there was little "passionate dislike" of Negro students on the part of their new white classmates.

The 33-year-old psychiatrist, a native of Boston, presented his findings in a 25-page booklet titled "The Desegregation of Southern Schools: A Psychiatric Study." It was published yesterday by the Southern Regional Council, an Atlanta-based organization that specializes in research on race relations, and by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

Finds Learning Unimpaired

Dr. Coles found that "even with external stress such as in New Orleans, young children of both races seem able to learn without any physical or emotional injury or collapse, given reasonable, initial good health and a functioning school system."

His research emphasized, he said, "what we already know about human development, that at 5 children are governed by needs of the moment: to play, to sing, or shout." He continued:

"They most certainly understand many of the meanings of skin color, because they hear the words and commands of their parents; but, except in rare cases, tensions and ideologies of the adult world will not undo what is, after all, their 'childhood.'

"In the first grades children are influenced by constant surges of energy, prompting action, curiosity, exploration of mind and body alike. Ideologies are foreign to them.

"Seeds of later attitudes are in them, make no mistake about that. But they will not flower until later, when the child thinks and hesitates more, is more responsive to the laws of society than the young child."

Differences Cited

The high school student's situation is different, he said.

"By 14 so very much has happened," wrote Dr. Coles, "and in those last few years of school there is little time or inclination, given the nature of adolescence, for easy reversals of long standing and accruing assets and liabilities."

The question of whether school desegregation should start in the upper or lower grades has been a controversial one in some Southern communities. Several cities in Tennessee as well as New Orleans and Dallas, were among those starting desegregation in the lower grades.

Desegregation was initiated at the high school level in Atlanta, Little Rock, Norfolk, and several North Carolina cities.

Dr. Coles said he found in interviews with school teachers in both Atlanta and New Orleans "a deep sense of professional integrity, of identity as teachers which transcended their private feelings about race."

He also found a growing awareness, in children of both races, of individual differences.

"A firmly segregationist boy cannot but notice the difference between two Negro classmates," he wrote. "A Negro girl no longer sees, as she put it, 'just white,' but many separate individuals."

Dr. Coles used frequent personal contacts, tape recordings and crayons and drawing paper —a conventional technique of child psychiatry—in searching for the personal feelings of the children in Atlanta and New Orleans.

The author is a graduate of Harvard University. He spent his psychiatric residency in the Harvard Medical School teaching hospitals, and he obtained his M. D. degree at Columbia University, College of Physicians and Surgeons.

BEAUMONT, TEXAS
ENTERPRISE
D. 64,576 S. 74,544

PAGE ONE
CERTIFIED

AUG 11 1963

Stair-Step School Integration Best Report Indicates

(C) 1963 NEW YORK TIMES NEWS SERVICE

NEW YORK, Aug. 10—Younger Southern children of both races seem to experience less trouble when pioneering in school desegregation than do their teenaged brothers and sisters, a child psychiatrist's report said Saturday. The report, by Dr. Robert Coles, thus agrees with some school administrators and race relations observers who favor initial desegregation of the earlier grades over the "reverse stair-step" method employed in some Southern school systems.

Dr. Coles based his conclusions on a two-year investigation which was carried out primarily in Atlanta and New Orleans. He also reported that the learning process has not been dulled by desegregation; that teachers have demonstrated an ability to set aside their personal feelings about race; and, that there is little "passionate dislike" of Negro students on the part of their new white classmates.

Psychiatric Study

The 33-year-old psychiatrist, a native ot Boston, presented his findings in a 25-page booklet titled "The Desegregation of Southern Schools: A Psychiatric Study." It was published Saturday by the Southern Regional Council, an Atlanta-based organization which specializes in race relations research, and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

Dr. Coles found that "even with external stress such as in New Orleans, young children of both races seem able to learn without any physical or emotional injury or collapse, given reasonable, initial good health and a functioning school system."

Prompting Action

"In the first grades children are influenced by constant surges of energy, prompting action, curiosity, exploration of mind and body alike. Ideologies are foreign to them.

"Seeds of later attitudes are in them, make no mistake about that. But they will not flower until, when the child thinks and heistates more, is more responsive to the laws of society than the young child."

(Turn to page 2A, column seven)

STAIR-STEP SCHOOL

(Continued from page one)

Different Situation

The high school child's situation is different, he said. "By 14 so very much has happened," writes Dr. Coles, "and in those last few years of school there is little time or inclination, given the nature of adolescence, for easy reversals of long-standing and-accruing assets and liabilities."

The question of early versus late school desegregation has been a controversial one in some Southern communities. Several cities in Tennessee initiated school desegregation in the lower grades, along with New Orleans and Dallas, among other places.

High School Level

Desegregation was initiated at the high school level in Atlanta, Little Rock, Norfolk, and several North Carolina cities.

Dr. Coles said he found in interviews with school teachers in both Atlanta and New Orleans "a deep sense of professional integrity, of identity as teachers which transcended their private feelings about race."

MORNING ADVOCATE
BATON ROUGE, LA.
D. 45,681 S. 66,530

AUG 1 2 1963

Study Shows Integration Of Schools Not Harmful To Learning of Children

ATLANTA, Ga. — A psychiatric study made public Saturday claims that even when school desegregation is accompanied by community disorder, young children of both races seem able to learn without any physical or emotional injury or collapse, given initial good health and a functioning school system.

This is one of the findings of the first psychiatric study of the effects of desegregation on participating Negro and white pupils in the South.

In the process for two years, the study was conducted by Dr. Robert Coles, a psychiatrist of Atlanta, Ga. A summary report, "The Desegregation of Southern Schools: A Psychiatric Study," has been published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

New Orleans Pupils Studied

The study deals primarily with six and seven year old elementary school students in New Orleans and 16 and 17 year old high school students in Atlanta. Supplementary evaluations were also made in desegregated schools in Charlotte, Asheville, and Burnsville, N. C.; Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tenn.; and Little Rock, Ark.

Among the findings are these:

Some "segregationist" children change their attitudes toward Negro children after attending school with them for a year.

Negro children find attendance in white schools "stressful but not incapacitating."

White children in desegregated southern schools suffer no "medical or psychiatric damage" and no "breakdown in ability to work, study and get along with friends."

Children of both races continue their studies "without impairment."

From an academic viewpoint, educational achievement" in earlier grades than in higher ones.

Teachers Observed

According to the study, racial and personal feelings among teachers in desegregated schools tended to give way "to professional responsibilites and obligations," and few criticisms of teachers were heard from white or Negro children. Professional integrity "transcended private feelings about race," Dr. Coles observed. He went on to say that children and teachers whose feelings are "exceptionally strong about desegregation" are "a special and rather small group."

"Our studies show that many people oppose desegregation, but also oppose the closing of the schools, mob behavior, or insulting or assaulting a fellow student, regardless of skin color. The particularly enraged person, be he teacher or student, is relatively rare among millions of Southerners," the psychiatrist said.

The study is the second in a series to be issued by the Anti-Defamation League and the Southern Regional Council on problems of desegregation. The first, "Token Desegregation and Beyond," by J. Kenneth Morland, professor of sociology at Randolph-Macon Woman's college in Virginia, was published last month. It analyzed "devices" used by "resistant" states in the South which had limited desegregation to less than half of one per cent of Negroes in all school districts, and contrasted these efforts with those of six "compliant" states which had moved 51.1 per cent of Negro pupils to non-racial schools "creatively and successfully."

Among the [illegible]

Some "segregationist" children change their attitudes toward Negro children after attending school with them for a year.

Negro children find attendance in white schools "stressful but not incapacitating."

White children in desegregated southern schools suffer no "medical or psychiatric damage" and no "breakdown in ability to work, study and get along with friends."

Children of both races continue their studies "without impairment."

From an academic viewpoint, desegregation is easie in elementary grade schools.

Pressure Varied

The study found pressures on Negro children in desegregated schools varied "only in degree" from those which had always faced them in their daily lives. It added that while it was hard for a Negro child to enter an all-white school, the change offered "hopes and opportunities for work, for assertion of self, which contrast with other moments that may have seemed to them not only hard but also futile and less fulfilling."

Dr. Coles attributed changed attitudes in some white children to "getting to know a particular Negro child," and "thinking about the problem because they were part of a desegregated school." He quoted a white Atlanta high school senior:

"I've really changed a lot of my ideas. You can't help but have respect for them, the way they've gone through the year so well. They're nice kids, that's what you find out after a while. They speak well, and are more intelligent than a lot of my friends . . ."

In discussing how Negro and white students got along in the same school, Dr. Coles said younger children played and worked together more readily than older ones. He found the reactions of high school students were determined not only by their racial attitudes, but by the normal teen-age struggles of growing up. Personal knowledge of Negroes, however, did overcome old ideas of suspicion, distrust, contempt and disdain held by some white adolescents.

Both Negro and white students continued to learn successfully. Dr. Coles pointed out, however, that although the majority of younger Negro students managed well, older ones sometimes had to overcome "the burden of their former years" in schools "often far from comparable to the white ones." Despite some learning difficulties among Negro students who initiated desegregation in their high school years, the psychiatrist found very few academic problems "insurmountable." He asserted, however, that there were "less fixed disparities of Virginia, was published [illegible] month. It analyzed "devices" used by "resistant" states in the South which had limited desegregation to less than half of one per cent of Negroes in all school districts, and contrasted these efforts with those of six "compliant" states which had moved 51.1 per cent of Negro pupils to non-racial schools "creatively and successfully."

STATE TIMES
BATON ROUGE, LA.
D. 34,571

AUG 1 2 1963

Second Report Is Released on School Mixing

ATLANTA (AP) — Some segregationist students change their ideas about Negro classmates after going to school with them for a year, say two biracial agencies.

And Negro children attending white schools find their roles stressing but not incapacitating, said the Southern Regional Council and the anti-defamation league of B'Nai B'Rith in the second of a series of studies.

The second report, released Saturday, analyzed psychiatric effects of desegregation on six and seven year old pupils in New Orleans and 16 and 17-year old high school students in Atlanta.

Additional studies were being made in integrated schools in Charlotte, Asheville and Burnsville, N C.; Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tenn.; and Little Rock, Ark.

The report said the study showed:

—Desegregation is easier in elementary schools than in high schools.

—Where desegregation is accompanied by disorder, most children of both races seem able to learn without physical or emotional injury.

—White children in desegregated southern classrooms suffer no medical or psychiatric damage or breakdown in ability to work, study and get along with friends.

—Pressure on Negro children in desegregated schools varies only in degree from those which have always faced them in their daily lives.

Dr. Robert Coles of Atlanta, who conducted the second study, said teachers in integrated schools tend to put professional responsibility ahead of personal feelings.

The earlier study analyzed methods used in some resistant southern states where desegregation was limited to less than half of one per cent of Negroes.

THE CHARLOTTE NEWS
CHARLOTTE, N. C.
D. 62,581

AUG 1 2 1963

MIXED CLASSES STUDY

'No Psychiatric Damage'

By ALEX COFFIN
News Staff Writer

Youngsters of both races in a desegregated school situation "seem able to learn without physical or emotional injury or collapse, given initial good health and a functional school system," a study released today shows.

The two-year study deals primarily with six and seven-year-old elementary pupils in New Orleans and 16 and 17-year-olds in Atlanta.

Supplementary evaluations also were made in desegregated schools in Charlotte, Asheville and Burnsville, Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tenn., and Little Rock, Ark.

* * *

THE STUDY was conducted by Dr. Robert Coles, an Atlanta psychiatrist, and published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

Among the major findings are:

—Some "segregationist" children change their attitudes toward Negro children after attending school with them for a year.

—Negro children find attendance in white schools "stressful but not incapacitating."

—White children in desegregated southern schools suffer no "medical or psychiatric damage" and no "breakdown in ability to work, study and get along with friends."

—Children of both races continue their studies "without impairment."

—From an academic viewpoint, desegragation is easier in elementary schools.

Dr. Coles attributed changed attitudes in some white children to "getting to know a particular Negro child," and "thinking about the problem because they were part of a desegregated school."

He gave the following excerpt from a statement made by a white Atlanta high school senior as an example:

"I've really changed a lot of my ideas. You can't help but have respect for them, the way they've gone through the year so well. They're nice kids, that's what you find out after a while. They speak well, and are more intelligent than a lot of my friends . . ."

In discussing how well Negro and white students got along in the same school, Dr. Coles said younger children played and worked together more readily than older ones.

He found the activities of high school students were determined not only by their racial attitudes but by the normal struggles of growing up which characterize teen-agers.

Personal knowledge of Negroes, however, did overcome old ideas of suspicion, distrust, contempt and disdain in some white students, the psychiatrist said.

DURHAM, N.C.
HERALD
D. 35,032 S. 41,626

AUG 12 1963

Study Discloses Elementary Grades Integrated Easier

ATLANTA (AP)—School desegregation is easier in elementary grade schools than in high schools, two biracial agencies reported Sunday.

And where desegregation is accompanied by disorder, children of both races seem able to learn without physical or emotional injury, if they are in good health and have a functioning school system.

These findings were made by the Southern Regional Council, and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith in the second of a series of studies that have been under way for two years.

The new report dealt with the first psychiatric study of the effects of desegregation on pupils. The early study, entitled "Token Desegregation and Beyond," analyzed methods used in some resistant southern states where integration was limited to less than half of one per cent of Negroes. The study contrasted token efforts with those of six compliant states where more than 50 per cent of the Negro pupils were shifted to non-racial schools.

The psychiatric study dealt primarily with six and seven year old pupils in New Orleans and 16 and 17 year old high school pupils in Atlanta. Supplementary evaluations were made in desegregated schools in Charlotte, Asheville and Burnsville, N. C.; Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tenn., and Little Rock, Ark.

The report said the psychiatric study showed:

Some segregationist children change their attitudes toward Negro children after attending school with them for a year.

Negro children find attendance in white schools stressing but not incapacitating.

White children in desegregated southern schools suffer no medical or psychiatric damage and no breakdown in ability to work, study and get along with friends.

Pressure on Negro children in desegregated schools varied only in degree from those which had always faced them in their daily lives.

GULFPORT, MISS.
HERALD
D. 29,964

AUG 12 1963

Report Made By Agency On School Mixing

ATLANTA (AP)—Some segregationist students change their ideas about Negro classmates after going to school with them for a year, say two biracial agencies.

And Negro children attending white schools find their roles stressing but not incapacitating, said the Southern Regional Council and the anti-defamation league of B'Nai B'Rith in the second of a series of studies.

The second report, released Saturday, analyzed psychiatric effects of desegregation on six and seven year old pupils in New Orleans and 16 and 17-year old high school students in Atlanta.

Additional studies were being made in integrated schools in Charlotte, Asheville and Burnsville, N C.; Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tenn.; and Little Rock, Ark.

The report said the study showed:

—Desegregation is easier in elementary schools than in high schools.

—Where desegregation is accompanied by disorder, most children of both races seem able to learn without physical or emotional injury.

—White children in desegregated southern classrooms suffer no medical or psychiatric damage or breakdown in ability to work, study and get along with friends.

—Pressure on Negro children in desegregated schools varies only in degree from those which have always faced them in their daily lives.

Dr. Robert Coles of Atlanta who conducted the second study said teachers in integrated schools tend to put professional responsibility ahead of personal feelings.

The earlier study analyzed methods used in some resistant southern states where desegregation was limited to less than half of one per cent of Negroes.

MACON, GA.
NEWS
D, 23,004

AUG 12 1963

Study Reveals Some Segregationists Change Ideas With School Integration

ATLANTA, [P] — Some segregationist students change their ideas about Negro classmates after going to school with them for a year, say two biracial agencies.

And Negro children attending white schools find their roles stressing but not incapacitating, said the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith in the second of a series of studies.

The second report, released over the weekend, analyzed psychiatric effects of desegregation on six and seven-year-old pupils in New Orleans and 16 and 17 year old high school students in Atlanta.

Additional studies were made in integrated schools in Charlotte, Asheville and Burnsville, N. C.; Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tenn.; and Little Rock, Ark.

The report said the study showed:

—Desegregation is easier in elementary schools than in high schools.

—Where desegregation is accompanied by disorder, most children of both races seem able to learin without physical or emotional injury.

—White children in desegregated Southern classrooms suffer no medical or psychiatric damage or breakdown in ability to work, study and get along with friends.

—Pressure on Negro children in desegregated schools varies only in degree from those which have always faced them in their daily lives.

Dr. Robert Coles of Atlanta who conducted the second study said teachers in segregated schools tend to put professional responsibility ahead of personal feelings.

THOMASVILLE, GA.
TIMES-ENTERPRISE
D. 6,183

AUG 12 1963

Two Biracial Agencies Issue Mixing Report

ATLANTA (AP)— Some segregationist students change their ideas about Negro classmates after going to school with them for a year, say two biracial agencies.

And Negro children attending white schools find their roles stressing but not incapacitating, said the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith in the second of a series of studies.

The second report, released Saturday, analyzed psychiatric effects of desegregation on six and seven year old pupils in New Orleans and 16 and 17 year old high school students in Atlanta.

Additional studies were made in integrated schools in Charlotte, Asheville and Burnsville, N.C.; Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tenn.; and Little Rock, Ark.

The report said the study showed:

—Desegregation is easier in elementary schools than in high schools.

—Where desegregation is accompanied by disorder, most children of both races seem able to learn without physical or emotional injury.

—White children in desegregated Southern classrooms suffer no medical or psychiatric damage or breakdown in ability to work, study and get along with friends.

—Pressure on Negro children in desegregated schools varies only in degree from those which have always faced them in their daily lives.

Dr. Robert Coles of Atlanta who conducted the second study said teachers in segregated schools tend to put professional responsibility ahead of personal feelings.

The earlier study analyzed methods used in some resistant Southern states where desegregation was limited to less than half of one per cent of Negroes.

ANADARKO, OKLA.
NEWS
D. 4,020 S. 4,020

AUG 12 1963

Segregation Study To Be Controversial

United Press International

A major report will be released this week-end dealing with the psychiatric aspects of the desegregation of Southern schools.

Like most such studies, its findings will be controversial — accepted as scientific data by some, discarded by others.

The report will be published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League. This adds to its controversial aspects because both have been active in pro-integration efforts.

The study was produced by Dr. Robert M. Coles, a Boston psychiatrist, now resident in Atlanta. He spent two years gathering the clinical material.

Studied Many Cases

He spent many hours with Negro school children having their first experience in integrated situations, with pre-school Negro youngsters, with teachers and with white parents and pupils who were both for and against desegregation.

Coles, discussing the project in an interview prior to release of his report, said the conclusion of his study was that Negroes can make their way in integrated schools without psychological stress on their own lives or ill effects on the lives of white pupils.

During his racial study, Coles said he often visited the homes of Negroes, playing on the floor with their young children as a means of gaining their confidence. It was in such situations, he said, that he learned Negroes develop knowledge of racial differences at a very early age.

Children Learn Early

"At four and five years of age, these children know the score," Coles said. "I have been in homes where children of this age have white and colored dolls. They talk about what the dolls are going to be when they grow up. They will place the white dolls in a white society and they grow up to have fine homes and marriages. The Negro dolls become maids and hold menial positions in society.

"I would ask them 'why' and they would tell me, 'that's the way it is in the world'."

Although they now are going through a revolutionary transition, Negroes still are bound by many barriers that are the cumulative process of "300 years of subservience," Coles said. Therein lies one of the biggest problems in the current era of transition.

MILWAUKEE JOURNAL
D. 373,657 S. 561,118

AUG 12 1963

Integration of Young Called Easier

© New York Times News Service

New York, N. Y. — Younger southern children of both races seem to experience less trouble when pioneering in school desegregation than do their teen age brothers and sisters, a child psychiatrist's report says.

The report, by Dr. Robert Coles of Boston, thus agrees with those who favor initial desegregation of the earlier grades over the "reverse stair-step" method employed in some southern schools.

Dr. Coles based his conclusions on a two year investigation which was carried out primarily in Atlanta and New Orleans.

Needs of Moment

He also reported that the learning process had not been dulled by desegregation; that teachers had demonstrated an ability to set aside their personal feelings about race; and, that there is little "passionate dislike" of Negro students on the part of their white classmates.

Dr. Coles said his research emphasized: "What we already know about human development, that at 5, children are governed by needs of the moment: To play, to sing, or shout.

"They most certainly understand many of the meanings of skin color, because they hear the words and commands of their parents; but, except in rare cases, tensions and ideologies of the adult world will not undo what is, after all, their childhood.

"Seeds of later attitudes are in them. . . . But they will not flower until later, when the child thinks and hesitates more, is more responsive to the laws of society than the young child."

High School Different

The high school student's situation is different, Dr. Coles said. "By 14 so very much has happened, and in those last few years of school there is little time or inclination, given the nature of adolescence, for easy reversals of long standing and accruing assets and liabilities," he wrote.

The question of early versus late school desegregation has been a controversial one in some southern communities. Several cities in Tennesee initiated school desegregation in the lower grades, along with New Orleans and Dallas.

Desegregation was initiated at the high school level in Atlanta, Little Rock, Norfolk and several North Carolina cities.

Dr. Coles' report was published by the Southern Regional council, an Atlanta based organization which specializes in race relations research and by the Antidefamation league of B'nai B'rith.

TUSACLOOSA, ALA.
NEWS
D. 19,637 S. 18,914

AUG 12 1963

Study Says Integration Doesn't Hurt Students

ATLANTA (AP) — Some segregationist students change their ideas about Negro classmates after going to school with them for a year, say two biracial agencies.

And Negro children attending white schools find their roles stressing but not incapacitating, said the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith in the second of a series of studies.

The second report, released Saturday, analyzed psychiatric effects of desegregation on six and seven year old pupils in New Orleans and 16 and 17 year old high school students in Atlanta.

Additional studies were made in integrated schools in Charlotte, Asheville and Burnsville, N. C.; Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tenn.; and Little Rock, Ark.

The report said the study showed:

—Desegregation is easier in elementary schools than in high schools.

—Where desegregation is accompanied by disorder, most children of both races seem able to learn without physical or emotional injury.

—White children in desegregated Southern classrooms suffer no medical or psychiatric damage or breakdown in ability to work, study and get along with friends.

—Pressure on Negro children in desegregated schools varies only in degree from those which have always faced them in their daily lives.

Dr. Robert Coles of Atlanta who conducted the second study said teachers in segregated schools tend to put professional responsibility ahead of personal feelings.

The earlier study analyzed methods used in some resistant Southern states where desegregation was limited to less than half of one per cent of Negroes.

GREENSBORO, N.C.
RECORD
D. 31,743

AUG 12 1963

Integration Study Shows Students Change Minds

ATLANTA, Aug. 12 (UPI) — Some segregationist students change their ideas about Negro classmates after going to school with them for a year, say two biracial agencies.

And Negro children attending white schools find their roles stressing but not incapacitating, said the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith in the second of a series of studies.

The second report, released Saturday, analyzed psychiatric effects of desegregation on six and seven-year-old pupils in New Orleans and 16 and 17-year-old high school students in Atlanta.

Additional studies were being made in integrated schools in Charlotte, Asheville and Burnsville, N. C.; Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tenn.; and Little Rock, Ark.

The report said the study showed:

—Desegregation is easier in elementary schools than in high schools.

—Where desegregation is accompanied by disorder, most children of both races seem able to learn without physical or emotional injury.

—White children in desegregated Southern classrooms suffer no medical or psychiatric damage or breakdown in ability to work, study and get along with friends.

—Pressure on Negro children in desegregated schools varies only in degree from those which have always faced them in their daily lives.

Dr. Robert Coles of Atlanta, who conducted the second study, said teachers in integrated schools tend to put professional responsibility ahead of personal feelings.

The earlier study analyzed methods used in some resistant Southern states where desegregation was limited to less than half of 1 per cent of Negroes.

MURFREESBORO, TENN.
NEWS JOURNAL
D. 3,000

AUG 12 1963

New School Study In South To Be Released

By AL KUETTNER
United Press International

A major report will be released this week-end dealing with the psychiatric aspects of the desegregation of Southern schools.

Like most such studies, its findings will be controversial — accepted as scientific data by some, discarded by others.

The report will be published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League. This adds to its controversial aspects because both have been active in pro-integration efforts.

The study was produced by Dr. Robert M. Coles, a Boston psychiatrist, now a resient in Atlanta. He spent two years gathering the clinical material.

Studied Many Cases

He spent many hours with Negro school children having their first experience in integrated situations, with pre-school Negro youngsters, with teachers and with white parents and pupils who were both for and against desegregation.

Coles, discussing the project in an interview prior to release of his report, said the conclusion of his study was that Negroes can make their way in integrated schools without psychological stress on their own lives or ill effects on the lives of white pupils.

During his racial study, Coles said he often visited the homes of Negroes, playing on the floor with their young children as a means of gaining their confidence. It was in such situations, he said, that he learned Negroes develop knowledge of racial differences at a very early age.

Children Learn Early

"At four and five years of age, these children know the score," Coles said. "I have been in homes where children of this age have white and colored dolls. They talk about what the dolls are going to be when they grow up. They will place the white dolls in a white society and they grow up to have fine homes and marriages. The Negro dolls become maids and hold menial positions in society.

"I would ask them 'why' and they would tell me, 'that's the way it is in the world'."

Although they now are going through a revolutionary transition, Negroes still are bound by many barriers that are the cumulative process of "300 years of subservience," Coles said. Therein lies one of the biggest problems in the current era of transition.

San Francisco Chronicle
THE VOICE OF THE WEST
D. 300,065 S. 330,671

AUG 13 1963

Study of School Integration

Atlanta

School desegregation is easier in elementary grade schools than in high schools, two biracial agencies reported yesterday.

Attitudes in younger children are more flexible and educational disparities are fewer in the lower grades.

And where desegregation is accompanied by disorder, children of both races seem able to learn without physical or emotional injury, if they are in good health.

These findings were made by the Southern Regional Council, and the Anti-Defamation League of Bnai Brith in the second of a series of studies that have been under way for two years.

The psychiatric study showed:

primarily with 6- and 7-year-old pupils in New Orleans and 16- and 17-year-old high school pupils in Atlanta. Supplementary evaluations were made in desegregated schools in Charlotte, Asheville and Burnsville, N. C., Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tenn., and Little Rock, Ark.

The psychriatric study showed:

Some segregationist children change their attitude toward Negro children after attending school with them for a year.

Negro children find attendance in white schools stressing but not incapacitating.

Pressure on Negro children in desegregaated schools varied only in degree from those which had always faced them in their daily lives.

Dr. Robert Coles of Atlanta, who conducted the psychiatric study, said racial and personal feelings among teachers in desegregated schools tended to give way to professional responsibilities and obligations and there were few criticisms of teachers by either white or Negro children.

Coles added:

"The particularly enraged person, be he teacher or student, is relatively rare among millions of southerners."

Associated Press

ATHENS, TENN.
POST-ATHENIAN
D. 5,086

AUG 13 1963

Integration Effect Told In Report

ATLANTA (AP) —Some segregationist students change their ideas about Negro classmates after going to school with them for a year, say two biraccial agencies.

And Negro children attending white schools find their roles stressing but not incapacitating, said the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'Nai B'Rith in the second of a series of studies.

The second report, released Saturday, analyzed psychiatric effects of desegregation on six and seven year old pupils in New Orleans and 16 and 17-year old high school students in Atlanta.

Additional studies were being made in integrated schools in Charlotte, Asheville and Burnsville, N.C.; Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tenn.; and Little Rock.

UNION CITY, IND.
TIMES-GAZETTE
D. 2,87

AUG 14 1963

What It Means

(A Continuing Study of Developments on the Racial Front)
By AL KUETTNER
United Press International

A major report will be released this week-end dealing with the psychiatric aspects of the desegregation of Southern schools.

Like most such studies, its findings will be controversial — accepted as scientific data by some, discarded by others.

The report will be published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League. This adds to its controversial aspects because both have been active in pro-integration efforts.

The study was produced by Dr. Robert M. Coles, a Boston psychiatrist, now resident in Atlanta. He spent two years gathering the clinical material.

Studied Many Cases

He spent many hours with Negro school children having their first experience in integrated situations, with pre-school Negro youngsters, with teachers and with white parents and pupils who were both for and against desegregation.

Coles, discussing the project in an interview prior to release of his report, said the conclusion of his study was that Negroes can make their way in integrated schools without psychological stress on their own lives or ill effects on the lives of white pupils.

During his racial study, Coles said he often visited the homes of Negroes, playing on the floor with their young children as a means of gaining their confidence. It was in such situations, he said, that he learned Negroes develop knowledge of racial differences at a very early age.

Children Learn Early

"At four and five years of age, these children know the score," Coles said. "I have been in homes where children of this age have white and colored dolls. They talk about what the dolls are going to be when they grow up. They will place the white dolls in a white society and they grow up to have fine homes and marriages. The Negro dolls become maids and hold menial positions in society.

"I would ask them 'why' and they would tell me, 'that's the way it is in the world'."

Although they now are going through a revolutionary transition, Negroes still are bound by many barriers that are the cumulative process of "300 years of subservience," Coles said. Therein lies one of the biggest problems in the current era of transition.

GREENWOOD, S.C.
INDEX-JOURNAL
D. 10,098

AUG 14 1963

Report Is Given On Second Study Of Integration

ATLANTA (AP) — Negro children attending white schools find their roles stressing but not incapacitating, says two bi-racial agencies.

And some segregationist students changed their ideas about Negro classmates after going to school with them for a year, said the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'Nai B'Rith in the second of a series of studies.

The second report, analyzed psychiatric effects of desegregation on six and seven-year-old pupils in New Orleans and 16 and 17-year-old high school students in Atlanta.

Additional studies were being made in integrated schools in Charlotte, Asheville and Burns

Des Moines Tribune
D. 123,464
AUG 1 6 1963

Young Children Less Troubled by Desegregation
"Able to Learn Together Without Physical or Emotional Injury"

Desegregation Easiest At First-Grade Level

(See Editorial in Column at Left)

(From New York Times and Associated Press)

NEW YORK, N. Y. — Younger Southern children of both races seem to experience less trouble when pioneering in school desegregation than do their teen-aged brothers and sisters, a child psychiatrist has reported.

Dr. Robert Coles thus agrees with some school administrators and race relations observers who favor initial desegregation of the earlier grades over the "reverse stair-step" method employed in some Southern school systems.

Dr. Coles based his conclusions on a two-year investigation which was carried out primarily in Atlanta and New Orleans. He also reported that the learning process has not been dulled by desegregation; that teachers have demonstrated an ability to set aside their personal feelings about race; and, that there is little "passionate dislike" of Negro students on the part of their new white classmates.

Negroes Survive Added Stress

These findings are in a booklet titled "The Desegregation of Southern Schools: A Psychiatric Study." It was published by the Southern Regional Council, an Atlanta-based organization which specializes in race relations research, and by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

The report said the psychiatric study showed:

Some segregationist children change their attitudes toward Negro children after attending school with them for a year.

Negro children find attendance in white schools stressing but not incapacitating.

White children in desegregated Southern schools suffer no medical or psychiatric damage and no breakdown in ability to work, study and get along with friends.

Pressure on Negro children in desegregated schools varied only in degree from those which had always faced them in their daily lives.

No Injury To Either Race

Dr. Coles found that "even with external stress such as in New Orleans, young children of both races seem able to learn without any physical or emotional injury or collapse, given reasonable, initial good health and a functioning school system."

His research emphasized, he said, "what we already know about human development, that at five, children are governed by needs of the moment: to play, to sing, or shout.

"They most certainly understand many of the meanings of skin color, because they hear the words and commands of their parents; but, except in rare cases, tensions and ideologies of the adult world will not undo what is, after all, their 'childhood.'

"In the first grades children are influenced by constant surges of energy, prompting action, curiosity, exploration of mind and body alike. Ideologies are foreign to them.

Different In High School

"Seeds of later attitudes are in them, make no mistake about that. But they will not flower until later, when the child thinks and hesitates more, is more responsive to the laws of society than the young child."

The high school child's situation is different, Dr. Coles said. "By 14 so very much has happened, and in those last few years of school there is little time or inclination, given the nature of adolescence, for easy reversals of long-standing and accruing assets and liabilities."

The question of early versus late school desegregation has been a controversial one in some Southern communities. Several cities in Tennessee initiated school desegregation in the lower grades, along with New Orleans and Dallas, among other places.

Youths Change Attitudes, Too

Desegregation was initiated at the high school level in Atlanta, Little Rock, Norfolk, and several North Carolina cities.

Nonetheless, even at the high-school level, Dr. Coles found many white students typified by an Atlanta youth who said:

"I've really changed a lot of my ideas. You can't help but have respect for [the Negroes], the way they've gone through the year so well. They're nice kids, that's what you find out after a while. They speak well, and are more intelligent than a lot of my friends."

Dr. Coles said he found in interviews with school teachers in both Atlanta and New Orleans "a deep sense of professional integrity, of identity as teachers which transcended their private feelings about race."

Time Aug. 16, 1963

INTEGRATION

Ed. South

What Happens to the Kids?

On his record, Psychiatrist Robert Coles, 33, should be tending bothered Brahmins on Boston's Beacon Street. A graduate of Milton Academy and Harvard (magna), Coles got his M.D. at Columbia and trained at proper Boston hospitals, from Children's to McLean to Massachusetts General. He even married a Hallowell—a word that some Boston tots think is part of the Lord's Prayer: "Hallowell be thy name."

Instead, Coles has been off tackling one of the great questions of U.S. education: How, in detail, does desegregation affect children? He may now be the nation's leading expert on the subject. As gifted with words as he is with feelings, Coles last week issued an eloquent report under the auspices of the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

PSYCHIATRIST COLES AT WORK
Youngness is the key to success.

Sharing the Strain. In the tense summer of 1961, Coles moved to Atlanta, where ten Negro children were girding themselves to "integrate" four white high schools. Bomb rumors spread; abusive phone calls gave the kids bad dreams. With foundation money, Coles and his wife set up a unique "practice"—fulltime sharing of the kids' trials and triumphs over the next two years.

Every week Coles tape-recorded interviews with each of the Negroes and a dozen of their white classmates, half of them from intensely segregationist families. By 1962, his "patients" included 40 more integrated Negro students and additional whites, plus numerous teachers and parents. Once a month, he similarly interviewed 19 grade-school children in New Orleans including the four Negroes who went through desegregation riots there in 1960. Along the way, he scoured other integration hot spots from Little Rock to Clinton, Tenn.

Paroled to America. Coles found that youngness is the key to successful desegregation. Much as he was moved by one small Negro girl's drawing of herself in New Orleans as "a lonely blackbird, cautiously winging her way toward the school," he observed that the youngest children show the least strain. In New Orleans, white six-year-olds gravely promised their parents to avoid Negro children—and then happily skipped rope with them as soon as they got to school. Equally important, the world of school shut out adult rioters; all they did was create more school spirit. "Frantz School will survive," sang the kids in New Orleans, and it did.

Atlanta's teen-agers had a lot tougher time. Though untouched by violence, they had to unlearn old fears amid "normal" adolescent strains. One Negro boy worriedly studied karate before entering a white school; another dreamed of himself in Little Rock, holding off whites with a machine gun. Yet integration spurred many to sudden pride and progress. Instead of "always watching and peeking around," as one boy put it, "I feel as if I've been let out of jail and into America."

A Horrible Thought. For white students, the experience was equally profound. Some felt actual physical revulsion when near a Negro, "like dirt being rubbed on you." But this emotion was often overruled by the horror that all adolescents feel toward the thought of social ostracism. "I've really changed a lot of my ideas," one white boy said of the Negroes. "You can't help having respect for them, the way they've gone through the year so well."

One white problem was telling "them" so out loud—a battle between guilt and conformity. Perhaps sensing this, one bright white teacher suddenly called on a Negro girl named Martha to state her problems in class. When she did so in no uncertain manner, Coles found whites "relieved by this firmness." At year's end Martha was astonished to find her yearbook filled with glowing words. Sample: "I only hope that you will forgive those of us who have been mean and ugly." And: "Martha, I cannot tell you how much I admire your courage and determination."

A Decade More. Though wary of generalizations, Coles believes that children of both races study as hard as ever in newly integrated schools. Negroes drive to catch up, whites to stay on top or improve. Says Coles: "We have yet to hear a Southern teacher complain of any drop in intellectual or moral climate in a desegregated room or school."

All this, Reporter Coles believes, shows how racial myths can in practice be legislated out of existence to the general improvement of education. The law is still a great teacher.

DETROIT, MICH.
JEWISH NEWS
W. 15,200

AUG 16 1963

ADL Study Teaches Youth Desegregation

Even when school desegregation is accompanied by community disorder, "young children of both races seem able to learn without any physical or emotional injury or collapse, given . . . initial good health and a functioning school system."

This is one of the findings of the first psychiatric study of the effects of desegregation on participating Negro and white students in the South.

The study, which has been in process for two years, was conducted by Dr. Robert Coles, a psychiatrist of Atlanta, Ga. A summary report, titled "The Desegregation of Southern Schools: A Psychiatric Study," was published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League of Bnai Brith. It deals primarily with six and seven year old elementary school students in New Orleans and sixteen and seventeen year old high school students in Atlanta. Supplementary evaluations were also made in desegregated schools in Charlotte, Asheville and Burnsville, North Carolina; Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tennessee; and Little Rock, Arkansas.

Among the major findings are:

Some "segregationist" children change their attitude toward Negro children after attending school with them for a year.

Negro children find attendance in white schools "stressful but not incapacitating."

White children in desegregated southern schools suffer no "medical or psychiatric damage" and no "breakdown in ability to work, study and get along with friends."

Children of both races continue their studies "without impairment."

From an academic viewpoint, desegregation is easier in elementary grade schools.

Dr. Coles attributed changed attitudes in some white children to "getting to know a particular Negro child," and "thinking about the problem because they were part of a desegregated school."

BOSTON, MASS.
CITIZEN
W. 15,000

AUG 16 1963

Psychiatric Study Of Desegregated Schools

Even when school desegregation is accompanied by community disorder, "young children of both races seem able to learn without any physical or emotional injury or collapse, given . . . initial good health and a functioning school system."

This is one of the findings of the first psychiatric study of the effects of desegregation on participating Negro and white students in the South.

The study, which has been in process for two years, was conducted by Dr. Robert Coles, a psychiatrist of Atlanta, Ga. A summary report, titled The Desegregation of Southern Schools: A Psychiatric Study, was published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith today. It was released in New England by Sol Kolack, ADL Regional Director, and Morton R. Godine of Brookline, Mass., Chairman of the New England Regional ADL Board.

The study deals primarily with six and seven year old elementary school students in New Orleans and sixteen and seventeen year old high school students in Atlanta. Supplementary evaluations were also made in desegregated schools in Charlotte, Asheville and Burnsville, North Carolina; Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tennessee; and Little Rock, Arkansas.

Among the major findings are these:

—Some "segregationist" children change their attitudes toward Negro children after attending school with them for a year.

—Negro children find attendance in white schools "stressful but not incapacitating."

—White children in desegregated southern schools suffer no "medical or psychiatric damage" and no "breakdown in ability to work, study and get along with friends." . . Children of both races continue their studies "without impairment."

—From an academic viewpoint, desegregation is easier in elementary grade schools.

Dr. Coles attributed changed attitudes in some white children to "getting to know a particular Negro child," and "thinking about the problem because they were part of a desegregated school." He gave the following excerpt from a statement made by a white Atlanta high school senior as an example:

"I've really changed a lot of my ideas. You can't help but have respect for them, the way they've gone through the year so well. They're nice kids, that's what you find out after a while. They speak well, and are more intelligent far from comparable to the white ones." Despite some learning difficulties among Negro students who initiated desegregation in their high school years, the psychiatrist found very few academic problems "insurmountable." He asserted that given "reasonable, initial good health and a functioning school system," children of both races showed ability to learn, but that there were "less fixed disparities of educational achievement" in earlier grades than in higher ones.

According to the study, conflicting racial feelings among teachers in desegregated schools tended to give way "to professional responsibilities and obligations" and few criticism of teachers were heard from white or Negro children. Professional integrity "transcended private feelings about race," Dr. Coles declared. He went on to say that children and teachers whose feelings are "exceptionally strong about desegregaion" are "a special and rather small group."

"Our studies show that many people oppose desegregation, but also oppose the closing of the schools, mob behavior, or insulting or assaulting a fellow student, regardless of skin color. The particularly enraged person, be he teacher or student, is relatively rare among millions of southerners," the psychiatrist said.

The study is the second in a series to be issued jointly by the Anti-Defamation League and the Southern Regional Council on problems of desegregation. The first, Token Desegregation and Beyond, by J. Kenneth Morland, professor of sociology at Randolph-Macon Woman's College in Virigina, was published last month. It analyzed "devices" used by eleven "resistant" states in the south which had limited desegregation to less than half of one percent of Negroes in all school districts, and contrasted these efforts with those of six "compliant" states which had moved 51.1 percent of Negro pupils to non-racial schools "creatively and successfully."

Copies of both studies are available from the New England Regional Office of the Anti-Defamation League, 72 Franklin street, Boston 10, Mass.

change their attitudes toward Negro children after attending school with them for a year.

—Negro children find attendance in white schools "stressful but not incapacitating."

—White children in desegregated southern schools suffer no "medical or psychiatric damage" and no "breakdown in ability to work, study and get along with friends." . . Children of both races continue their studies "without impairment."

—From an academic viewpoint, desegregation is easier in elementary grade schools.

Dr. Coles attributed changed attitudes in some white children to "getting to know a particular Negro child," and "thinking about the problem because they were part of a desegregated school." He gave the following excerpt from a statement made by a white Atlanta high school senior as an example:

"I've really changed a lot of my ideas. You can't help but have respect for them, the way they've gone through the year so well. They're nice kids, that's what you find out after a while. They speak well, and are more intelligent than a lot of my friends . . ."

In discussing how well Negro and white students got along in the same school, Dr. Coles said younger children played and worked together more readily than older ones. He found the activities of high school students were determined not only by their racial attitudes but by the normal struggles of growing up which characterize teen - agers. Personal knowledge of Negroes, however, did overcome old ideas of suspicion, distrust, contempt and disdain in some white students, the psychiatrist said.

The study found pressures on Negro children in desegregated schools varied "only in degree" from those which had always faced them in their daily lives. It added that while it was hard for a Negro child to enter an all-white school, the change offered "hopes and opportunities for work, for assertion of self, which contrast with other moments that may have seemed to them not only hard but also futile and less fulfilling."

Both Negro and white students continued to learn successfully. Dr. Coles pointed out, however, that although the majority of younger Negro students managed well, older ones sometimes had to overcome "the burden of their former years" in schools "often regardless of skin color. The particularly enraged person, be he teacher or student, is relatively rare among millions of southerners," the psychiatrist said.

The study is the second in a series to be issued jointly by the Anti-Defamation League and the Southern Regional Council on problems of desegregation. The first, Token Desegregation and Beyond, by J. Kenneth Morland, professor of sociology at Randolph-Macon Woman's College in Virigina, was published last month. It analyzed "devices" used by eleven "resistant" states in the south which had limited desegregation to less than half of one percent of Negroes in all school districts, and contrasted these efforts with those of six "compliant" states which had moved 51.1 percent of Negro pupils to non-racial schools "creatively and successfully."

Copies of both studies are available from the New England Regional Office of the Anti-Defamation League, 72 Franklin street, Boston 10, Mass.

Des Moines Tribune
D. 123,464
AUG 1 6 1963

Best Place to Start Desegregation

Some Southern cities desegregate their schools one grade per year to minimize possible friction. A survey made for the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith suggests that those which begin in the first grade are acting more wisely than than those which start at the top, in high school. (See article in columns at right.)

Dr. Robert Coles, the psychiatrist who made the study, points out that children are more adaptable at six than at 16 and have acquired fewer prejudices. There also is another reason why children of both races should learn together from the beginning.

A good education is the only way through which many Negro children will surmount the handicaps of a poor economic and social environment. They bring these handicaps to the first grade, but they may overcome them by high school with a first-class education. But, with some notable exceptions, most largely Negro schools are poorer in almost every way than most largely white schools.

Thus if a Negro child attends a segregated school for seven or eight years, he is likely to be set back so much farther, intellectually as well as socially, from white children that when he goes to a desegregated high school he simply will be re-segregated by "ability grouping." This has happened in Washington, D. C., among other places.

In Washington's four-track system based on ability, Negroes dominate the lower tracks, whites the upper. For example: in one 75 per cent Negro class at one high school, Negroes accounted for only 45 per cent of the very small (26 pupils) top track, but for 89 per cent of the large (165 pupils) "basic" track. If these Negroes had gotten off to a good start in a desegregated school, the results might have been quite different.

SHREVEPORT, LA.
SUN (N)
W. 9,600

AUG 17 1963

Students Not Hurt By Integration

Atlanta, Ga. — Even when school desegregation is accompanied by community disorder, "young children of both races seem able to learn without any physical or emotional injury or collapse, given . . . initial good health and a functioning school system."

This is one of the findings of the first psychiatric study of the effects of desegregation on participating Negro and white students in the South.

The study, which has been in process for two years, was conducted by Dr. Robert Coles, a psychiatrist of Atlanta, Ga. A summary report, titled The Desegregation of Southern Schools: A Psychiatric Study, was published Aug. 11 by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

The study deals primarily with six and seven year old elementary school students in New Orleans and 16 and 17 year old high school students in Atlanta. Supplementary evaluations were also made in de regated schools in Charl Asheville, and Burnsville, N Carolina; Clinton and Ridge, Tennessee; and L Rock, Arkansas.

(See—STUDENTS, page 8)

Students

(Continued from page 1

Among the findings these:

—Some "segregationist" c dren change their attitudes ward Negro children after tending school with them fo year.

—Negro children find atte ance in white schools "stress but not incapacitating."

—White children in desegr gated southern schools suff no "medical or psychiatric dar age" and no "breakdown in bility to work, study and get long with friends."

—Children of both races con tinue their studies "without impairment."

—From an academic viewpoint, desegregation is easier in elementary grade schools.

The study found pressures on Negro children in desegregated schools varied "only in degree" from those which had always faced them in their daily lives. It added that while it was hard for a Negro child to enter an all-white school, the change offered "hopes and opportunities for work, for assertion of self, which contrast with other moments that may have seemed to them not only hard but also futile and less fulfilling."

Dr. Coles attributed changed attitudes in some white children to "getting to know a particular Negro child," and "thinking about the problem because they were part of a desegregated school." He quoted a white Atlanta high school senior:

"I've really changed a lot of my ideas. You can't help but have respect for them, the way they've gone through the year so well. They're nice kids, that's what you find out after a while. They speak well, and are more intelligent than a lot of my friends . . ."

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
ALABAMA MIRROR
W. 14,436 (N)
PAGE ONE
CRUNFIED
AUG 17 1963

SRC Reports On School Desegregation Favorable

Even when school desegregation is accompanied by community disorder, "young children of both races seem able to learn without any physical or emotional injury tion of Haiti before a southward health and a functioning school system."

This is one of the findings of the first psychiatric study of the effects of desegregation on participating Negro and white students in the South.

The study, which has been in process for two years, was conducted by Dr. Robert Coles, a psychiatrist of Atlanta, Ga. A summary report, titled "The Desegregation of Southern Schools: A Psychiatric Study, was published today by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith

The study deals primarily with six and seven year old elementary school students in New Orleans and 16 and 17 year old high school students in Atanta. Supplementary evaluations were also made in desegregated schools in Charlotte, Asheville, and Burnsville, North Carolina; Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tenn.; and Little Rock, Ark.

Among the findings are these:

Some "segregationist" children change their attitudes toward Negro children after attending school with them for a year.

Negro children find attendance in white schools "stressful but not incapacitating."

White children in desegregated southern schools suffer no "medical or psychiatric damage" and no "breakdown in ability to work study and get along with friends."

Children of both races continue their studies "without impairment."

From an academic viewpoint, desegregation is easier in elementary grade schools.

The study found pressures on Negro children in desegregated schools varied "only in degree" from those which had always faced them in their daily lives. It adder that while it was hard for a Negro child to enter an all-white school, the change offered "hopes and opportunities for work, for assertion of self, which contrast with other moments that may have seemed to them not only hard but also futile and less fulfilling."

Dr Coles attributed change attitudes in some white children to "getting to know a particular Negro child," and "thinking about the problem because they were part of a desegregated school." He quoted a white Atlanta high school senior:

"I've realy changed a lot of my ideas. You can't help but have respect for them, the way they've gone through the year so well. They're nice kids, that's what you find out after a while. They speak well, and are more intelligent than a lot of my friends . . ."

In discussing how Negro and white students got along in the same school, Dr. Coles said younger children played and worked together more readily than older ones. He found the reactions of high school students were determined not only by their racial attitudes. but by the normal teenage struggles of growing up. Personal knowledge of Negroes, however, did overcome old ideas of suspicion, distrust, contempt, and disdain held by some white adolescents.

Both Negro and white students continued to learn successfully Dr. Coles pointed out, however that although the majority of younger Negro students managed well, older ones sometimes had to overcome "the burden of their former years" in schools "often far from comparable to the white ones." Despite some learning difficulties among Negro students who initiated desegregation in their high school years, the psychiatrist found very few academic problems "insurmountable." He asserted, however, that there were less fixed disparities of educational achievement" in earlier grades than in higher ones.

According to the study, racial and personal feelings among teachers in desegregated schools tended to give way "to professional responsibilities and obligations," and few criticisms of teachers were heard from white or Negro children. Professional integrity transcended private feelings about race," Dr. Coles observed. He went on to say that children and teachers whose feelings are "exceptionally strong about desegregation" are "a special an rather small group."

(Continued on Page 6)

SRC. Report On School Desegregation Favorable

(Continued From Page 1)

"Our studies show that many people oppose desegregation, but also oppose the closing of the schools, mob behavior, or insulting of assaulting a fellow student, regardless of skin color. The particularly enraged person, be he teacher or student, is relatively rare among millions of Southernes," the psychiatrist said.

The study is the second in a series to be issued by the Anti-Defamation League and the Southern Regional Council on Problems of desegregation. The first, "Token Desegregation and Beyond, by J Wenneth Morland, professor of sociology at Randolph-Macon Woman's College in Virginia, was published last month. It analyzed "devices" used by "resistant" states in the South which had limited desegregation to less than half of one per cent of Negroes in all school districts, and contrasted these efforts with those of six "compliant" states which had moved 51.1% of Negro pupils to nonracial schools "creatively and successfully."

Copies of both studies are available from the national offices of the Anti-Defamation League, 515 Madison Avenue, New York 22, New York, or from the Southern Regional Council, Inc., 5 Forsyth St., NW, Atlanta, Ga.

The Boston Globe
D. 194,870 S. 465,753

AUG 18 1963

For Martha—A Negro, Year of Silence, Isolation

By TERRY FERRER

For Martha, it was a year of complete silence and isolation, except for an occasional insult of word or deed. Her senior year in high school was a day-to-day torture, and when the last one came around at least, Martha felt she had no friends at all.

Martha was a Negro girl in a newly desegregated high school in Atlanta, and yet, on that last day, 15 white boys and girls came up and asked to autograph her yearbook. Martha was afraid: Perhaps it was just another way to hurt and attack her.

But one boy wrote: "Martha, I cannot tell you how much I admire your courage and determination. After you finished that little talk in English (class), in my eyes you are 'nine feet tall.'"

And a girl wrote: "I only hope you will forgive those of us who have been mean and ugly."

And yet another: "Dear Martha ... I'm sorry not to have been able to get to know you better, but this is just the way it turned out ... I guess that you can understand why I haven't become better acquainted with you. But I personally think that I have missed a great opportunity."

Until the last minute, neither Negro nor white knew what they would say or do. All that year of 1961-62, Martha and the eight other Negro students initially assigned to white Alabama schools had been having psychiatric interviews. So had many of the white students, who reported their conflicting feelings of friendliness and fear and guilt and curiosity.

Not even the psychiatrist, Dr. Robert Coles of Atlanta, knew how that school year would end for Martha.

Now Dr. Coles has put together a fascinating report of two years of research on how participating Negro and white children react to the pressures of desegregation.

"The Desegregation of Southern Schools: A Psychiatric Study" is the first to approach the explosive issue from the pupils' psychiatric point of view. The study is published this week-end by the anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith and the Southern Regional Council, a non-profit, non-political, bi-racial research and educational organizations.

Dr. Coles studied the four little Negro girls who broke the first-grade color line in New Orleans in 1960, and the seven others who followed in 1961.

He also interviewed white children there, their parents, teachers and school officials. Via personal trips, he compared his findings with those on children and adults of both races in Charlotte, Asheville and Burnsville, N.C.; Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tenn., and Little Rock, Ark.

Dr. Coles, a child psychiatrist, found that even with the most extreme pressure, such as in New Orleans, "young children of both races seem able to learn without any physical or emotional injury or collapse, given reasonable, initial good health and a functioning school system."

The white first graders who each day in the 1960-61 school year had to run a screaming gantlet of white housewives to enter the freshly desegregated William Frantz Elementary School in New Orleans often urged their parents to take them to school. They loved the excitement and attention.

In 1961, Dr. Coles points out, "one of the white children who returned to the almost totally boycotted Frantz school told a little colored girl that she would not play with her because her mother had forbidden this, and then, a few minutes later, did just that."

Dr. Coles concludes that it is obviously better to start desegregation in the first grades. "Young children of the two races," he says, "play together and work together even though they have heard many remarks at home which might discourage this. A game means more to a child than an idea at this age."

By the time pupils of both races are in high school, much has happened to the adolescent attitudes and there is little time or inclination to change long-standing ideas and practices.

Can children change the Southern segregation pattern of centuries? Dr. Coles says yes, in many cases, because the children themselves change, even after a year in a classroom where they live and work with Negroes every day. Others, of course, remain hidebound segregationists.

However, "those children and teachers whose feelings are exceptionally strong about desegregation, are, really, a special, rather small group," Dr. Coles concludes. Most teachers, he found, clung to professional responsibilities and obligations to teach all children, whatever their personal feelings about black or white might be.

And consider what this boy, an Atlanta High-School senior, told Dr. Cole in a taped interview toward the end of 1962 — the first year of desegregation:

"Ive really changed a lot of my ideas. You can't help having respect for them, the way they've gone through the year so well. They're nice kids, that's what you find out after a while. They speak well and are a lot more intelligent than a lot of my friends. You have to understand how we've grown up. They were slaves to us, I mean even after the Civil War ... they belonged in the kitchen or fixing your socks. ...

"I sneered a few times the first few weeks, but I just couldn't keep it up, and I felt kind of bad and sorry for them. I used to get nervous when I'd see them eating alone. I wondered how I'd have felt if I were in their shoes ... Next thing I knew I was quiet when some of my friends were calling them all the old names." I felt that I never again would look at them the way I did last September and before ... I can't really describe any time or episode ... No, it was just kind of a gradual feeling..."

(Boston Globe–N.Y. Herald Tribune)

DAYTON DAILY NEWS
DAYTON, OHIO
D. 150,419 S. 189,580

AUG 2 1 1963

Lonely Graduate in the Group

Top of the Stairs

A Boston psychiatrist has completed two years of study, chiefly in New Orleans and Atlanta, in an effort to determine whether school segregation is best started in the upper or lower grades.

Dr. Coles concludes that "young children of stairstep method, now published as a pamphlet by the Southern Regional council and B'nai B'rith's Antidefamation league, should be of poignant interest to James Meredith, who was grudgingly awarded the bachelor's degree he earned at the University of Mississippi.

For an interminable year of harassment and personal struggle as the loneliest scholar in America, Meredith knows best how dark it can be at the very top of the educational stairs.

Dr. Coles conludes that "young children of both races seem able to learn without any physical or emotional injury or collapse," provided they are healthy and the school system is functioning, however subjected they may be to family and community stress. They are energetic, curious, concerned with the moment. They have an overriding zest for new experience. The natural insulations of early childhood itself protect them from the "tensions and ideologies of the adult world."

By the time young people reach 14, however, there are no "easy reversals," according to Dr. Coles, of the attitudes formed by prolonged experience of a rigid caste system. Initial integration, he finds, is easiest for children when begun in the early years.

James Meredith could postscript this substantiation of a long-acknowledged characteristic of human development—that "you've got to be taught," as the "South Pacific" song says—to hate.

Neither fear nor prejudice are inherited. They're learned. They can be so well learned by adulthood that in a university center of advanced learning, where the life of the intellect is theoretically ascendant over bigotry and unreason, a man may experience the most oppressive segregation of all.

Times-Picayune
NEW ORLEANS, LA,
D. 193,514 S. 302,677

AUG 2 1 1963

Segregation Cost High, Is Claim

GUILFORD COLLEGE, N. C. (AP) — A southern regional council official said here Tuesday that segregation has been maintained in the South "at an awful cost."

Dr. Henry Clark of Atlanta, told the continental congress of liberal religious youth at Guilford College that "Booker T. Washington said the only way you can keep a man in the ditch is to stay there with him. And that is what has happened in the South."

The costs of prejudice have been terrific economically, Dr. Clark said. "Racial prejudice has been very important in keeping unions out of the South and preventing workers from getting their fair share of profits from industry."

Dr. Clark said, however, that although the costs have been high, the white people have realized some economical, psychological and political gains from segregation.

The conference is being attended by 186 teen-agers.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
LOUISIANA WEEKLY (N)
W. 19,532

AUG 24 1963

In Desegregated Schools . . .

Study Finds Children Learn Without Injury

Even when school desegregation is accompanied by community disorder, "young children of both races seem able to learn without any physical or emotional injury or collapse, given ... initial good health and a functioning school system."

This is one of the findings of the first psychiatric study of the effects of desegregation on participating Negro and white students in the South.

The study, which has been in process for two years, was conducted by Dr. Robert Coles, a psychiatrist of Atlanta, Ga. A summary report, titled THE DESEGREGATION OF SOUTHERN SCHOOLS: A Psychiatric Study, was published today by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

The study deals primarily with six and seven year old elementary school students in New Orleans and 16 and 17 year old high school students in Atlanta. Supplementary evaluations were also made in desegregated schools in Charlotte, Asheville, and Burnsville, North Carolina; Clinton and Oak Ridge, Tennessee; and Little Rock, Arkansas.

Among the findings are these:

--Some "segregationist" children change their attitudes toward Negro children after attending school with them for a year.

--Negro children find attendance in white schools "stressful but not incapacitating."

--White children in desegregated southern schools suffer no "medical or psychiatric damage" and no "breakdown in ability to work, study and get along with friends."

--Children of both races continue their studies "without impairment."

--From an academic viewpoint, desegregation is easier in elementary grade schools.

The study found pressures on Negro children in desegregated schools varied " only in degree " from those which had always faced them in their daily lives. It added that while it was hard for a Negro child to enter an all-white school, the change offered "hopes and opportunities for work, for assertion of self, which contrast with other moments that may have seemed to them not only hard but also futile and less fulfilling."

Dr. Coles attributed changed attitudes in some white children to "getting to know a particular Negro child," and "thinking about the problem because they were part of a desegregated school." He quoted a white Atlanta high chool senior:

"I've really changed a lot of my ideas. You can't help but have respect for them, the way they've gone through the year so well. They're nice kids, that's what you find out after a while. They speak well, and are more intelligent than a lot of my friends..."

In discussing how Negro and white students got along in the same school, Dr. Coles said younger children played and worked together more readily than older ones. He found the reactions of high school students were determined not only by their racial attitudes, but by the normal teen-age struggles of growing up. Personal knowledge of Negroes, however, did overcome old ideas of suspicion, distrust, contempt, and disdain held by some white adolescents.

Both Negro and white students continued to learn successfully. Dr. Coles pointed out, however, that although the majority of younger Negro students managed well, older ones sometimes had to overcome "the burden of their former years" in schools "often far from comparable to the white ones." Despite some learning difficulties among Negro students who initiated desegregation in their high school years, the psychiatrist found very few academic problems "insurmountable." He asserted, however, that there were "less fixed disparities of educational achievement" in earlier grades than in higher ones.

According to the study, racial and personal feelings among teachers in desegregated schools tended to give way "to professional responsibilities and obligations," and few criticisms of teachers were heard from white or Negro children. Professional integrity "transcended private feelings about race," Dr. Coles observed. He went on to say that children and teachers whose feelings are "exceptionally strong about desegregation" are "a special and rather small group."

"Our studies show that many people oppose desegregation, but also oppose the closing of the schools, mob behavior, or insulting or assaulting a fellow student, regardless of skin color. The particularly enraged person, be he teacher or student, is relatively rare among millions of Southerners," the psychiatrist said.

The study is the second in a series to be issued by the Anti-Defamation League and the Southern Regional Council on problems of desegregation. The first, TOKEN DESEGREGATION AND BEYOND, by J. Kenneth Morland, professor of sociology at Randolph - Macon Woman's College in Virginia, was published last month. It analyzed "devices" used by "resistant" states in the South which had limited desegregation to less than half of one per cent of Negroes in all school districts, and contrasted these efforts with those of six "compliant" states which had moved 51.1% of Negro pupils to non-racial schools "creatively and successfully."

Copies of both studies are available from the national offices of the Anti-Defamation League, 515 Madison Avenue, New York 22, New York, or from the Southern Regional Council, Inc., 5 Forsyth Street, N. W., Atlanta, Georgia.

LWD
VJV
PA
SBL
BA

The Chapel Hill
CONSCIENCE

Sept. 8, 1963

Sir,

See page 4 & 5 for comment on Dr. Coles' Psychiatric Study.

R. Brown
Editor.

see p. 1 —

The Chapel Hill
CONSCIENCE

NO. 2 AUGUST 24, 1963 NO. 2

WE ASK YOU TO BOYCOTT THE FOLLOWING ESTABLISHMENTS BECAUSE THEY PRACTICE RACIAL DISCRIMINATION:

COLONIAL DRUG STORE	FROZEN KUSTARD	THE PATIO
LEO'S GRILL	TAR HEEL SANDWICH SHOP	CAROLINA GRILL
CLARENCE'S	THE ROCK PILE	MERRITT'S ESSO SERVICE
BRADY'S	UNIVERSITY MOTEL	ALLEN'S LUNCH COUNTER
THE PINES	TAR HEEL MOTOR LODGE	WALKER'S GULF STATION
THE SHACK	WATT'S MOTEL	THE SPORT CENTER

editorial editorial

THE SOUTHERN PART OF HEAVEN: ONE SCENE

For many the injustices Negroes experience daily isn't news anymore. Even the injustices toward whites who battle for the rights of others is of questionable interest.

In our society both experiences are so common that most ignore it and many just don't give a damm.

Nonetheless this editorial describes such an ordinary, everyday situation that Americans have come to accept.

It concerns a white man who is known among the people of this community as a dedicated and responsible person. A man who has devoted himself to achieving justice for Negroes.

Pat Cusick is a member of the Executive Committee of the Chapel Hill Committee for Open Business. In that capacity he has participated in every COB activity. It was he, who as Chairman of the Student Peace Union on campus initiated the picketing of the College Cafe in early April, who helped organize the COB, who conducted the non-violent workshops, who led the sit-ins and who remained in the Hillsboro jail four days.

Behind every activity of the COB has been Pat Cusick's strength. If pressing circumstances called for additional effort he always offered his assistance. In this way Pat gave the hospitality of his house to a friend.

The friend was Quintin Baker. For over a month now Quintin, an NAACP commando, has been working with the COB. During this time he accepted the hospitality of other people in the Chapel Hill community. A few days ago he began staying with Pat. He slept and ate in Pat's house for two days.

On Tuesday, August 6, the town constable summoned Pat Cusick to appear before Chapel Hill's Justice of the Peace. There, on Thursday, Aug. 8, he was told to get out of his house by Monday, August 12.

Mr. Giles Horney, Building and Grounds Superintendent of the University, the owner of Pat's house, evicted him. This action was taken because "the rent was 5 days overdue" & because of "the mess" that was entering Pat's house. To Mr. Horney, it made no difference that Pat had been living there for 2½ years.

Because Quintin Baker is a Negro.

OPEN MEETING MONDAY NIGHT

The Chapel Hill Committee for Open Business at a mass meeting on Monday night, Aug. 26, at the First Baptist Church on Robeson St., will discuss the adoption of bylaws to guide their future integration activities in Chapel Hill. (Mimeographed copies of the proposals will be provided.)

According to Executive Committee spokesmen, the meeting will vote on the reorganization of the COB, adopting a new name & planning new activities to eliminate racial discrimination in Chapel Hill.

There is strong feeling among many COB members that demonstrations should continue. This issue & other suggestions will be voted upon by all those present.

QUINTIN BAKER

Quintin Baker the NAACP commando who came to Chapel Hill at the request of the COB left on Aug.9 for a new assignment.

While here he helped organize workshops in civil disobedience & instruct COB members in non-violent techniques.

Mr. Baker is an English major at N. C. College at Durham & will return there in the fall. He is president of the campus NAACP chapter & was a leader of the demonstrations in Durham last Spring. Shortly after leaving Chapel Hill he was arrested in Goldsboro for participating in a sit-in.

He is now serving 30 days in jail.

"The Chapel Hill Committee for Open Business wishes to thank Quintin Baker for his participation & assistance in all its activities and to acknowledge his contributions to the Executive Committee of which he was a member."

THE CONSCIENCE WOULD APPRECIATE INFORMATION FOR PUBLICATION ABOUT THE ACTIVITIES OF ALL GROUPS IN CHAPEL HILL WORKING TOWARD THE GOAL OF A FREE AND JUST SOCIETY.

STATEMENT FROM JAIL

(Ed. note: This was written by demonstrators while in the Chapel Hill jail)

On Saturday, there was singing. The words were blurred as they rebounded among the high cell walls of the Chapel Hill jail. Inside, eight young ladies & three gentlemen heard the echoes and joined in singing their familiar freedom songs.

We knew we had not been forgotten.

We knew too that, even if we have gained nothing for the committee as a whole, we have gained something individually. For the first time, we have had a real taste of freedom, freedom of conscience. We are bound together by the knowledge that we are right & that we will not give in.

The newspapers we read remind us of the many jail cells across the land in which freedom fighters sit. And their biased editorials awaken us to other, far more uncomfortable prisons -- the prisons of apathy, hypocrisy, and bigotry.

But those newspapers also tell us the world now knows that Chapel Hill is not the "Southern part of Heaven," but the Northern part of Birmingham.

Perhaps, like the songs we heard, the winds of freedom can pass between the steel prison bars, and Chapel Hill will lift her head to her responsibilities.

We hope soon to learn about how our brothers in Hillsboro are faring. Our jailers tell us that they are not allowed visitors or packages from the outside. On this Sunday morning, we pray that they can overcome their loneliness & hardships, and someday soon, we can all march together for freedom, sing together for freedom, and, if necessary, sit down again together for freedom.

THE CONSCIENCE is the organ of CURED, published every two weeks or more frequently as activity or amount of news demands. This issue is FREE. News, inquiries and contributions should be addressed to THE CONSCIENCE, Box 109, Chapel Hill, North Carolina.
Editor, Robert V.N. Brown

GUIDELINES FOR THE FUTURE
AN EDITORIAL:

Looking back on the past months activity of the COB a few events stand out.

The first is that without a doubt the sit-ins as the capstone of demonstrations, continuous picketing & a very effective boycott, caused this town to do something about racial discrimination in the community.

Efforts to negotiate with all the segregated businesses were made before the sit-ins & good people did try to use what little influence they had to get of the community's disgrace. But not until the sit-ins occured did a cross section of the community --- businessmen, town officials, & just about every organization -- act as one to solve the problem. More activity took place on the two days after the sit-ins happened than during the previous two months.

For one thing the strength of those who supported the COB's goals was right out in the open & very plain to see. One new idea was brought forward and it is now being acted upon by many in this community. This new method of protest now being used is Personal Confrontations by citizens at the various segregated businesses.

But by & large the results of all the activity was very disappointing.

During the truce the negotiations by "business leaders" with the segregated establishments were a failure. Not only that but it was found that 5 more businesses practice racial discrimination

The Mayor's statement that the "official policy" of Chapel Hill is opposed to racial discrimination is fine But it is not law & it does not, therefore, have any effect on the situation.

The second thing that stands out is the proposal to eliminate by law the practice of racial discrimination in all FUTURE businesses in Chapel Hill. In the opinion of many the proposal did not go far enough. But it did affirm the good faith of the town officials. It showed that they recognized the injustice of the present situation & would act to wipe out the problem for the future

(Cont'd top of next column)

Many were convinced that the Aldermen would pass it. As a matter of fact COB members were told that perhaps ALL the Aldermen were in favor of the compromise measure. In short, it was in the bag.

What happened, of course, was that the Aldermen did not make it law. Instead, they passed the proposal on to the Governor's Committee of Mayors. A sweet way to side step doing anything & at the same time soft-shoeing their own responsibilities to the people of this community.

The third event is the convictions & fines of those who participated in the sit-ins. While an agreement was reached between the COB, the Merchants Assoc. & the police to drop all charges agains those who were arrested in return for a cooling-off period, Roy Cole, the soliciter, refused to go along with the agreement. He was determined to prosecute regardless of the consequences to the community.

Both the Chief of Police & the Merchants Bureau Director told this writer that they would not press charges. They therefore were in good faith with the agreement. The obstacle was the court.

While it was common knowledge that the court in Chapel Hill under Judge Stewart rarely if ever convicted a person when the charges were dropped by the injured party, the Civil Disobedience cases became the exception. Through incompetence Cole did not convict all the defendants. But the majority were found guilty by Judge Stewart.

Now the significant question is why was the traditional practice of the court abandoned in the demonstration cases? Particularly when, once again, so many were convicted that Judge Stewart would follow not only his own established procedure but also that of other cities throughout North Carolina?

(Continued on page 4)

SEND US YOUR VIEWS

continued from page 3

GUIDELINES...

Viewing these three events now highlights at least two very significant factors which many of us have forgotten or overlooked.

This town began moving when direct action techniques were used by the COB. And we were aware of it because we were encouraged by those who came forward to help find a solution. This was based on the premise that the Power Structure of this community - the important people - were acting to do something positive.

But in the light of what happened we were way off base. Our error was in thinking that we were dealing with the power holders in this town when in fact direct action had succeeded in shaking them up a bit not driving them into the open.

The power structure of this community is like an iceberg. We activated much of the visible portion but the real power was hidden from view. And that's where it stayed -- beneath the surface.

It is this influence which does not want to see justice throughout this community. And it is this power that subverted the activity of those who were working for the benefit of all.

Their power is great enough that when it is brought to bare they can overcome all the opposition pressure. The result is that most join their chorus line & soft shoe themselves backstage. They play this follow-the-leader game using all sorts of coverup slogans, when in fact the reason is that the town's prestige & image is more important than human beings.

What will be the catch-phrase they will all fall in line behind if the Board of Aldermen passes a law prohibiting Saturday demonstrations? Football games vs. the fundamental rights and dignity of human beings?

At least now hindsight shows us that only our direct acts & deeds have any effect. Compromise, negotiations & cooling-off periods will be part of the movement for justice but the heart of it must be direct action. If it's not then the struggle for the rights & dignity of all in this community will continue to result in bitter disappointment.

Human beings can not be sacrificed for Chapel Hill's false image & feeble prestige. We ought to have learned this by now.

PSYCHIATRIC STUDY REPORTS THE OBVIOUS

by

Leon Rooke

The "findings" of yet another study of Negro-white relations has appeared. Like most of its predecessors the new "findings" have such a commonsense ring to them that one would have hardly thought a study of the problem to be necessary. But the studies keep turning up so obviously that is not the case. Somewhere there are a people wanting to be convinced.

A report on the present study has just been published by the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League of the B'nai B'rith.

Its title: The Desegregation of Southern Schools: a Psychiatric Study.

Heading the two-year study was Atlanta psychiatrist, Dr. Robert Coles. The findings:

1) Negro children find attendance in white schools hard but not impossible.

2) White children in desegregated southern schools suffer NO MEDICAL OR PSYCHIATRIC DAMAGE.

3) Neither do Negroes.

4) Their ability to work, study and get along with friends, remains the same as in days prior to integration.

5) Some whites change their attitude towards Negro children after attending school with them.

6) Teachers tend to let their professional responsibilities go before any personal antagonism they might feel towards the new system.

(continued on page 5)

(continued from page 4)

PSYCHIATRIC STUDY . . .

As to point #3, the study came up with this interesting observation: pressures on Negro children in desegregated schools were found to be about the same as those they have always had to face in other regards of their daily life in the present society.

According to Dr. Cole's findings, racial and personal feelings among teachers give way"to professional responsibilities and obligations." Few criticisms of teachers were made by either race group. Teachers exceptionally strong about desegregation, he reports, are a "special and rather small group."

Among those students evaluated in the current study are included those from three integrated North Carolina facilities: schools in Charlotte, Asheville and Burnsville.

As one can see at a glance there is nothing really surprising (save perhaps point no. 6) about the new findings. This study, and most prior to it, tends to give support to the old cry, the one heard so often that now it's trite, a cliche of the times; that the only differences between us is in the color of our skins. We can not get overly excited about any study that does no more than elaborate on that verity.

But we do look at these studies, this one, those past and those to come, with some curiosity: their very existence is a kind of freak view into the bad manners of our times that a minority group of ugly whites continue to make necessary.

THE CONSCIENCE THANKS THOSE PEOPLE WHO HAVE DONATED PAPER, TIME AND MONEY IN ORDER TO MAKE THIS ISSUE POSSIBLE.

This issue of The Conscience is distributed at:

1) WEAVER'S SHOE SHOP
2) CALDWELL 66 GAS STATION
3) HOLLYWOOD GRILL
4) MASON'S FOOD STORE
5) "Y" OFFICE

WE WELCOME NEWS ITEMS OR ARTICLES, SHORT OR LONG, FROM OUR READERS.

CURRENT READERS SERVICE

The following materials may be obtained free and postpaid by readers. Supplies are limited; therefore, please list your selections in order of preference on the detachable order card; give your name and address, add postage, and mail. These brochures are offered by the Library Foundation for Voluntary Organizations, Inc., in cooperation with Current, so that they may be more readily available to concerned citizens.

1 The Federal Government and Education, Committee on Education and Labor, House of Representatives, 192 pages. A comprehensive report by Representative Edith Green and staff analyzing education programs in which the Federal Government is involved.

2 The Citizen and Public Education, Helen Rowan, Carnegie Corporation, 8 pages. A summary of James B. Conant's recommendations in "The Education of American Teachers," in the context of his previous six years' work under Carnegie grants (Current, November 1963, page 44).

3 The American High School Graduate, National Education Association, 98 pages. Proceedings of a conference including speeches by the presidents of California Institute of Technology, Educational Testing Service, and National Association of Secondary-School Principals.

4 The Desegregation of Southern Schools: A Psychiatric Study, Robert Coles, M.D., Southern Regional Council, 25 pages. A child psychiatrist reports on the effects of integration upon selected groups of Southern white and Negro schoolchildren.

5 Final Report on 1963 Civil Rights Legislation, American Jewish Committee, 10 pages. A summary of state and municipal enactments.

6 What Our Cities Need Most: Brains, William Carpenter, ACTION, Inc., 24 pages. A plea for voluntary support of graduate education in urban planning, renewal and development.

7 Cities and Space, Resources for the Future, 4 pages. Extracts from papers delivered at a conference on the use of urban space as a resource.

8 Science, Scientists, and Politics, Center for the study of Democratic Institutions, 16 pages. Robert M. Hutchins, Scott Buchanan, Donald N. Michael, Chalmers Sherwin, James Real and Lynn White, Jr. on the role of science executives in government service. (Current, November 1963, page 61)

9 Profiles of Manpower in Science and Technology, National Science Foundation, 36 pages, graphs. Statistical profiles covering historical trends, and distribution according to degrees held, specialty, sectors of the economy, age and geography.

10 Semantics and the Study of Culture, Seymour H. Fersh, The Asia Society, 4 pages. Some applications of the concepts of general semantics to the analysis of differing cultures.

11 China: A Demographic Crisis, Population Reference Bureau, 28 pages. Summary of attempts by Communist China to analyze and cope with her population explosion.

12 Conference to Plan A Strategy for Peace: Report, Strategy for Peace Conference, 72 pages. The fourth conference covered the Nth country problem, nuclear sharing, outer space, the role of the U.N., and U.S. initiatives.

USE FLAP
FOR YOUR CHRISTMAS GIFTS

STATEMENT

Required by the Act of August 24, 1912, as amended by the Acts of March 3, 1933, July 2, 1946, June 11, 1960, and October 23, 1962 (74 Stat. 208) showing the ownership, management, and circulation of Current, published monthly at New York, New York for October 1, 1963.

1. The names and addresses of the publisher, editor, managing editor, and general manager are: Publisher, Eliot D. Pratt, New Milford, Connecticut; Editor, Sidney Hertzberg, 161 Grandview Ave., Monsey, New York; Managing Editor, Allan A. Michie, 69 Oak Road, Briarcliff Manor, New York; General Manager, Frances Green, 233 East 69 Street, New York, New York.

2. The owner is: (If owned by a corporation its name and address must be stated and also immediately thereunder the names and addresses of stockholders owning or holding 1 per cent or more of total amount of stock. If not owned by a corporation, the names and addresses of the individual owners must be given. If owned by a partnership or other unincorporated firm, its name and address, as well as that of each individual member must be given.) Current, Inc., 905 Madison Avenue, New York 21, N. Y.; Eliot D. Pratt, New Milford, Conn.; James H. Sachs, Long Ridge Road, Bedford, N. Y.; Mrs. William Ladd, Lakeville, Conn.; George D. Pratt, Jr., Bridgewater, Conn.

3. The known bondholders, mortgagees, and other security holders owning or holding 1 per cent or more of total amount of bonds, mortgages, or other securities are: (If there are none, so state.) None.

4. Paragraphs 2 and 3 include, in cases where the stockholder or security holder appears upon the books of the company as trustee or in any other fiduciary relation, the name of the person or corporation for whom such trustee is acting; also the statements in the two paragraphs show the affiant's full knowledge and belief as to the circumstances and conditions under which stockholders and security holders who do not appear upon the books of the company as trustees, hold stock and securities in a capacity other than that of a bona fide owner.

5. The average number of copies of each issue of this publication sold or distributed through the mails or otherwise, to paid subscribers during the 12 months preceding the date shown above was: (This information is required by the act of June 11, 1960 to be included in all statements regardless of frequency of issue.) 15,463.

(Signed) Frances Green
General Manager

Sworn to before me this 11th day of October, 1963, Charles Heitmann, Notary Public, State of New York, No. 30-1744750, Qualified in Nassau County, Cert. filed in New York County. (Commission Expires March 30, 1965.)

for SCHOOL BOARD members

See page 7

NOVEMBER 1963

How School Boards Can Raise Teaching Standards

...Some recommendations from James B. Conant

If there are weak and incompetent teachers in the classroom, whose fault is it? The teachers colleges'? In part. The state office of certification's? To a degree. The school board's? Most certainly.

This is one of the major conclusions of Dr. James B. Conant's most recent – and possibly most significant – report, The Education of American Teachers (McGraw-Hill Book Co., 1963). The school board, Dr. Conant maintains, plays a central role in protecting and raising teaching standards. Consider this key passage:

> The employment of teachers in our public schools is a legal responsibility of a local school board, which should act on the advice of a professional school administrator in whom the board has confidence. The responsibility to make wise appointments is inescapable and may not safely be neglected. The assumption that prescribed programs of teacher education or certification procedures can insure public protection from individual incompetence is largely illusory. The final door to the classroom is guarded, it is hoped responsibly, by the local board.

Dr. Conant's prescription for improving the education of teachers in America includes a wide range of recommendations. He would reform existing state certification systems. He would breathe new quality and content into college training programs.

He also suggests dramatic actions by school boards. The boards must pick up where the colleges leave off, says Dr. Conant. They must provide the necessary conditions for teachers to continue to develop in competence on the job.

In April this newsletter previewed some of Dr. Conant's conclusions. Today, the board's role seems in even sharper focus as evidenced by six specific recommen-

Continued on page 16

Mr. Keppel Discusses Local Control

The President's chief lobbyist for federal aid to schools takes time from his busy schedule to chat with our reporter about the U.S. Education Office — and you.

Contrary to persistent fears, the federal government is not about to muscle in on your job. Local control of education, traditionally and actually, is here to stay.

We never really had doubts about this, but just the same it was reassuring to hear this opinion in an interview with the Federal Government's top school official — Francis Keppel, U.S. Commissioner of Education.

The 47-year-old former dean of Harvard's Graduate School of Education is constantly shuffling in and out of his Washington office to answer Congressmen's questions about the President's education bill.

We caught him between shuffles a few weeks ago. Although he'd never met us before, he greeted us with the kind of smile and handclasp one usually reserves for long-lost friends.

Two Functions

We sat down at a rather large coffee table in the Commissioner's office. Despite its barracks-type address (Room 4A019, Federal Office Building No. 6) the Commissioner's quarters are inviting and are located in one of Washington's most attractive buildings.

Mr. Keppel reclined comfortably in his chair and lit a cigarette. First question: What were his views on local control?

"Well," he said after a moment's thought, "local control — as it is commonly understood — is wise public policy. When you speak of local control you are talking essentially about two functions which are, by their very nature, responsibilities of local school authorities — not the Federal Government. These duties are to appoint teachers and to make physical, curricular and organizational arrangements within the school district."

But what of those predictions of a coming national or "super" board of education?

There is an important difference in the daily duties in policy and practice of local boards and the responsibilities proposed for some kind of national planning and policy in education. No one in Washington is proposing a group with powers over local school operations. Nor are there blueprints for national standards in public education.

"We do need a generally higher level of education and training," Mr. Keppel said. "But no one here is even suggesting that this should be accomplished by federal decree."

Influence vs. Control

"But there is a distinction to be made between the word control and the word influence," Mr. Keppel added.

While the federal government neither wants nor is able to control the nation's schools, it has no intention of becoming silent in the continuing fight to improve public education across the country. And it is developing ways to influence educational progress at the local level.

In this connection, the Commissioner's office has three main duties:

1. To collect facts and statistics pertinent to education, and to make these available to local school districts

2. To conduct research and development in education

3. To grant financial aid to local districts for educational improvements "in the national interest." (One example here would be providing funds to expand the schools' output of skilled technicians.)

In doing each of these, the Federal Government channels its efforts through individual state education agencies.

Some states, to be sure, do not have very strong ties with local school authorities. This the Commissioner concedes readily. All the more reason, he adds, for the Federal Government to encourage better cooperation at all levels to bolster the effectiveness of the educational system.

But any alternative that implies federal intervention in the proper tasks of local school boards is out of the question.

"There are serious dangers in not keeping responsibility in the hands of local school authorities," Mr. Keppel said. "Yet the Federal Government has the right and, indeed, the duty to provide assistance to the states and through the state education departments to the local schools."

By the same token, it is clear that the local board has the obligation to set the pace for educational excellence.

• COMMISSIONER KEPPEL once observed that "nobody ever died of a split infinitive" — and that is perhaps why we have not had a due sense of urgency about educational problems in America.

But, he added, "We have talked long enough. We have evaded too long. We need a sense of urgency, for this good and excellent thing, this quality in the educational enterprise stands on the razor edge of danger from apathy and inadequate finance and must be fought for. There is the challenge to you — to act and to inspire others to action."

Portrait of Peter — Potential Dropout, Age 10

by LEONARD M. MILLER, U.S. Office of Education

Peter is a potential dropout. He is a 10-year-old fifth grader, apparently has average intelligence, and so far has managed to keep up with his class — at least to the extent that he has been promoted with it every year.

But the trouble he has always had with reading is getting worse, and each day it widens the gap between him and the upper half of his class. The good behavior his teachers praised him for when he was younger has begun to look like apathy. This spring, his school says, he will have to be held back when his class passes on.

Many of the well-known signs of impending dropout are there. Peter's profile fits closely the profile of the dropout as state and national averages show it, not only because of what he does in school but because of what his home is like. Both his parents were themselves dropouts and both work long hours at odd jobs that require little more than physical strength. They have hardly any time at home for encouraging or helping their children.

Because Peter's circumstances are so typical of dropouts generally, his school has no difficulty in recognizing the danger he is in — and recognition of danger is usually the first step toward safety. But Peter's school, though no stranger to dropouts, has never been inclined to be analytical about them and as a result is not particularly sensitive to danger signs other than the stereotypes. As surely as Peter will drop out before he completes high school, just as surely his school has potential dropouts it does not yet recognize as such. And as long as the school does not recognize them, it is losing time it could use to help them.

Fortunately, all of the school's time has not yet run out: As long as pupils are only potential dropouts, the school still has an opportunity to discover their plight and find ways to hold them. And for each one the school holds, it reduces, by one, the frightening total of 7½ million who, the Labor Department estimates, will drop out of school between the beginning and the end of this decade.

• Editor's Note: For information on school board actions for lowering the dropout rate, write to Mrs. Marjorie Cheetham, Croft Board Service, 100 Garfield Ave., New London, Conn. Mr. Miller's message originally appeared as part of a longer article in the May, 1963, issue of School Life, the journal of the U. S. Office of Education.

A School Board in the Shadow of Congress

The District of Columbia's schools opened this fall with an increased enrollment of about 5000 pupils. But because Congress had yet to approve a new operating budget, the school board was unable to hire any additional teachers.

This is typical of the frustrations faced by school officials here.

Every school district in the country has its share of problems. As a rule, these might include classroom shortages, teacher shortages or textbook shortages.

Washington's schools have all these problems – and more. But its court-appointed, nine-man board of education is virtually powerless to solve them without Congressional consent.

"We just don't have fiscal independence," declares Board President Wesley S. Williams, "and we should. The way it stands now, our annual budget requests must clear appropriation subcommittees of both houses. Then the House and Senate – if we're lucky this year – will finally get around to giving us part of what we need by Christmas."

And Washington's school needs are staggering. According to Supt. Carl F. Hansen, the city is plagued by "overcrowding in homes and in schools; poverty; ignorance and deprivation; joblessness, particularly among the young; mobility and family instability; irresponsibility; and the most devastating handicap – the absence of hope among many young people."

Mr. Williams, an attorney who has served on the Washington board for more than 12 years, is convinced that only a locally-elected school board, independent of Congress, could provide an adequate educational program.

"The voting public as a whole," he says, "is more sensitive to school needs than many Congressmen. An elected board would have greater responsibility to the people of this community."

Occasionally, Congress will even involve itself with board policy matters, as it did last spring when it took time from national affairs to debate a board decision on corporal punishment.

"There's a moral to this story for other boards of education," says Mr. Williams. "Be very jealous of your fiscal independence and guard it well."

Whether we live in California, Georgia or Maine, all Americans have an obligation to the 140,000 pupils in Washington's schools. Should we not, as public-spirited citizens, persuade our Congressmen to grant Washington's board the independence it wants and needs?

Rights Bill Offers Aid to Boards Facing Problems of Racial Imbalance

Legislation before Congress assumes that local school boards will need technical assistance and funds if they are to provide equal and excellent education for all.

It became increasingly clear last summer that the problems of de facto segregation and racial imbalance in the nation's schools had no simple cure-alls.

As advocates of racial equality in the schools became more militant and more demanding, there emerged a realization among educators that quota plans and similar proposals might contain a built-in booby trap.

Could schools truly expect to obliterate racial imbalance by resorting to racial formulas? In so doing would they not be employing the very criteria they were seeking to erase from society and the classroom?

Focus on Education

Recently, constructive efforts to solve the dilemma have begun to focus on educational, rather than racial, considerations.

Fred M. Hechinger, education editor of The New York Times, reflected on this point in a recent column.

"American education," he said, "has a history of errors committed with the best of intentions. . . . Because the racial issue is so important and politically charged it ought to be understood that good education requires hard, unsentimental thinking, without the self-delusion of easy answers."

Types of Aid

The proposed "Civil Rights Act of 1963," which came before Congress this fall, promises federal assistance to school districts beset with the educational as well as the sociological challenges of segregation – de facto as well as de jure.

The bill tacitly acknowledges that the brunt of the integrationists' demands has landed squarely on the shoulders of the school board. And it includes these provisions:

1. School boards would be eligible to receive – through the U.S. Office of Education – "technical assistance in the preparation of plans for the desegregation of public schools or other plans designed to deal with problems arising from racial imbalance in public school systems."

2. Teachers and other public school personnel could receive stipends for taking part in special training institutes where they would learn how "to deal effectively with special educational problems occasioned by desegregation or measures to adjust racial imbalance." The training sessions would be arranged by the U.S. Commissioner of Education with various colleges and universities.

3 School districts could be reimbursed by the U.S. Office of Education for the cost of giving in-service training to school personnel "in dealing with problems incident to desegregation or racial imbalance."

4 School districts could be similarly reimbursed for "the cost of employing specialists . . . and of providing other assistance to develop understanding of these problems by parents, school children, and the general public."

5 School boards could receive federal loans if state or local authorities have withheld or withdrawn funds because of "actual or prospective desegregation."

Factors for Support

The amounts of money available to applicant school boards would depend upon such factors as the financial condition of the local district and the nature, extent and gravity of its racial problems. School board attorneys wishing to study these federal aid provisions more thoroughly will find them described in Title III, H.R. 7152.

At press time, the Civil Rights Bill was still under consideration by Congress.

The Yearbook

It happened in Atlanta, in June, several years ago.

Martha, a Negro girl in a newly-integrated school, had completed her course of study. She was ready to graduate. But she could hardly be as happy as her classmates. She had no friends in school. She had faced insults, silence, isolation. She could talk to no one, though a few white girls had chatted with her, furtively, in the empty corridors.

On the last day of school, Martha was approached by more than 15 classmates. They asked if they might autograph her yearbook. With the first request, came fear: Was this another means of attack — or a new expression of goodwill? Martha offered her book. Some of the comments speak for themselves:

- "Dear Martha, . . . I'm sorry not to have been able to get to know you better, but that is just the way it turned out . . . . I guess that you can understand why I haven't become better acquainted with you."
- "Martha, I cannot tell you how much I admire your courage and determination. . . ."
- "Dear Martha, . . . I only hope that you will forgive those of us who have been mean and ugly . . ."
- "Martha, I have admired your courage in your great decision. I'm sure you've been subjected to much unpleasantness, but you've met it in a most gracious way."

(Reported in The Desegregation of Southern Schools: A Psychiatric Study by Robert Coles. Available from the Southern Regional Council, 5 Forsyth St., Atlanta 3, Ga. 50¢)

Bright, New Ways Boards Are Reporting To 'Stockholders'

Annual reports — once drab, dull documents for filing and forgetting — are being redesigned for readability.

Two-color printing, pictures galore, eye-catching headlines, interesting formats, easy-to-read charts instead of dry-as-dust balance sheets – these are signs of a new realization: That the annual school report represents an annual opportunity to build public understanding of and support for the schools. And instead of cranking out a few copies for the eyes of a few community officials, school departments are now distributing annual reports by the thousands so that all the school's taxpaying "stockholders" can learn about the progress, plans and problems of their most important enterprise — education. Example: The Cincinnati board recently printed its annual report as a newspaper supplement in order to reach a wide readership.

• A candid picture of pupils and teacher absorbed in an elementary science project tells — more than statistics ever could — a story of the value of new instructional supplies. Credit: Montgomery County, Md., Public Schools Annual Report, 1961-62.

Some of the new-style reports focus on a specific curriculum area. The 1962 annual report for Evanston Township High School District in Illinois, for instance, devoted almost 100 pages of pictures and text to the school's art, drama and music program. The back of the book carried the statistical matter and other routine facts.

Other reports are organized around a theme. In Carle Place, N.Y., two years ago, the superintendent gave his the title "Frontiers Old and New" and described the educational frontiers the district had crossed and those still ahead.

C. Taylor Whittier, school superintendent in Montgomery County, Md., calls the annual report "a primary method" through which a school system interprets its efforts to its citizenry. If reports are to do this job, he adds, they must contain "meaningful and pertinent information graphically and tastefully presented."

The superintendent, as the board's agent, prepares the board's report. But he needs the board's support if he is going to improve its quality. More and more boards are realizing that this investment in better communications is worthwhile.

• The Winnetka, Ill., board turned out this attractive abridgement as a way to gain more readers for its annual report. The Montgomery County report below was one of three devoted to the theme "The Challenge of Change."

Coming Right Up — Two Billion Meals

Public school lunch programs today are big business. More than two billion lunches are prepared each year for the nation's school children. But this was not always so.

Before the 20th century, school lunches were practically unknown in this country, writes Marion Cronan in a new book, The School Lunch (Chas. A. Bennett Co.).

Yet the first school feeding program on record was begun in Munich, Germany, in 1790 as part of a campaign against vagrancy. And by the 1860's many European public schools provided pupils with inexpensive noon meals.

Thwarting the Janitor

Not until 1894, however, did the idea begin to catch on in the United States. In Boston that year, Mrs. Ellen H. Richards, a pioneer in home economics, started a nutritious school lunch program — partly in competition with janitors who were selling food to children for profit. After her retirement in 1908, the Women's Educational and Industrial Union, at the request of the Boston School Committee, began providing high schools there with hot lunches "at cost."

At about the same time, similar programs sprang up in other major cities — such as New York, Philadelphia, Cincinnati. Generally, the meals cost pupils from one to six cents. Cincinnati, for example, operated a penny lunchroom for needy pupils of its Jackson School as early as 1908.

Seconds on Raisins?

Menus tended to reflect the preferences of nationalities and religious groups, varying according to the ethnic makeup of different sections of the cities. The bill of fare was also modest. On a given day, the school lunch in a New York City Irish neighborhood comprised cracked wheat, raisins and two slices of bread.

After the start of the first world war, when many of our draftees were found to be suffering from malnutrition, the number of school lunch programs increased substantially. Still, most educators then considered school lunches a necessary evil, the students being fed during single-session school days.

Comes the Depression

Many schools had lunch programs before they had bona fide lunch rooms, and students ate in basements, at their desks or under stairways. Other schools allowed students to purchase meals from outside vendors. In rural areas especially, individual teachers often brought pupils jars of food prepared at home out of their own larders. Parent-teacher groups frequently helped out on a volunteer basis.

Congress began assisting school lunch programs during the Depression, with acts in 1933 and 1935. Currently, The National School Lunch Program, which was created by Congress in 1946, provides about $300,000,000-worth of foods and other assistance for nonprofit school lunch programs across the country.

SOME QUESTIONS FOR THE BARD ON THE BOARD

Being a commentary on school affairs and school board problems compiled from the plays of W. Shakespeare, member from Stratford

Sir, you have seen the report about the defeated bond issue. Your reaction?

"Here are a few of the unpleasant'st words that ever blotted paper!" (The Merchant of Venice)

The man who led the fight against the bond issue—what are your comments about him?

"He draweth out the thread of his verbosity finer than the staple of his argument." (Love's Labor's Lost) "He commands us to provide and give great gifts, and all out of an empty coffer." (Timon of Athens)

You'll have overcrowding now for sure in your schools. What will your board tell the teachers?

"Masters, spread yourselves." (A Midsummer-Night's Dream)

Now, Mr. Shakespeare, some rapid-fire opinions, please: Frills?

"Dispense with trifles." (The Merry Wives of Windsor)

Guidance services?

"Good Counselors lack no clients." (Measure for Measure)

The 3 p.m. detention room for trouble-making students?

"The taming school! What, is there such a place?" (Taming of the Shrew)

Should school boards acquire school sites now or wait until they are actually needed?

"You may buy land now as cheap as stinking mackerel." (King Henry IV, Part II)

Regarding your superintendent, is he conscientious in following board policies?

"He was ever precise in promise-keeping." (Measure for Measure)

Your opinion, please, on the time it takes for you to serve on a school board.

"I have no superfluous leisure." (Measure for Measure)

ACTION

what school boards across the country are doing morning exercises

The New Bedford (Mass.) school committee has drafted a new policy statement designed to encourage moral and spiritual values through morning exercises while still abiding by the Supreme Court's ban on prayer and Bible reading.

Here are the key points of the statement:

- Classroom opening exercises will include "the Pledge of Allegiance to the flag, a moment of meditative silence and such reverent patriotic expressions in song, quotation or drama which will serve to illustrate the meanings of each word in the pledge."
- The pledge must be recited at least once a week. But the meanings of the words in the pledge shall be taught daily "in a manner appropriate to each grade level."
- Those pupils whose religion forbids them from making the pledge, upon submission of a parent's written request, may be "allowed to leave the room or to stand silently during the exercises."
- The fact that some patriotic songs and documents mention God or dependence upon a Supreme Being "does not imply we are teaching religion per se. Rather, the teacher's attitude should be one which will instill in the students a deep sense of reverent patriotism. . . ."

Resources for the teacher to use in leading the exercises are abundant, says the board policy. Some sources: Presidential inaugural addresses, the state constitution, history and music books.

honors for teachers

Ten outstanding classroom teachers were in the spotlight at a special Honors Convocation in Pittsburgh in October. Nominated by former students, each received $1,000 under an Awards of Merit for Teaching Program made possible by a foundation grant.

The purpose of the convocation was to recognize excellence in teaching.

literary packets

The trend away from anthologies in high school English courses has now reached the elementary level in the schools of Portland, Oregon.

Packets of literature, including children's classics in their entirety, were introduced in 25 of the city's elementary schools at the start of the current school year.

The new texts — approved by the school board — will result in a swing away from study of selected parts of good literature to the complete reading of fables, folk tales, myths and legends, stories and novels, biographies and poems, all in their original form.

Portland high schools have followed the plan of using complete works rather than anthologies for several years.

the basics plus

Swahili, mah jongg, ju-jitsu, yoga, Esperanto, slimnastics — they're all in the University City (Mo.) Adult Evening School course catalog.

The board of education, in sponsoring such courses, is acknowledging the ever-widening leisure-time interests of its public. But the unusual offerings are more than balanced by the practical.

In all, the adult education program has more than 100 courses. And it is liberally supplied with courses in such basic fields as business, English, history, language, mathematics and science.

Started in 1948, the evening school is self-supporting. All operating expenses are paid from student fees.

no smoking

A no-smoking rule armed with a suspension clause for violators is in effect at Groton (Conn.) schools as the result of action by the board of education on the suggestion of Dr. William Farris, superintendent.

Heretofore, smoking had been permitted in certain areas of the high school for students having parental permission confirmed by school authorities.

Dr. Farris, in advocating the ban, expressed concern about the published effects of smoking.

Some teachers had favored an even firmer policy, one that would prohibit possession of cigarettes by students.

"If education is as important as Americans profess it to be, the school board must be independent and free to subordinate all other considerations to those of education. This does not mean that any factor may be ignored, but that concern for good education must come first." From the Handbook for School Board Members, 1963 Edition, Nebraska State School Boards Association.

SCHOOL BOARD CLINIC — 9

A series of case studies about school boards and some of the vexing issues they've faced.

PROBLEM: When a board's legal powers are threatened . . .

Year after year, in town after town, school boards are faced with a recurring problem: The mayor, the aldermen, the city council, somebody or other tries to tell the board how to spend its money. In communities where school boards don't have fiscal independence, occasional budget cutting by fiscal officers may be a necessary evil. But when budget-cutters try to tell the board exactly where the cuts should be made, there's the rub – and there's the threat to the board's legal powers.

This was the issue in 1961 in Ellington, Conn., where the fiscal authorities – in this case, a board of finance – were at odds with the school board over the 1961-62 school budget. School officials were perturbed by two actions of the finance board: (1) It had slashed some $95,000 from the proposed school budget and (2) it had placed about $46,000 in the town's general budget – rather than the school budget – and had given the Board of Selectmen the right to appropriate this money for school purposes as selectmen – not the school board – saw fit.

These events had the effect of withholding funds needed for three teaching positions, a curriculum coordinator, maintenance work and capital equipment. The board was also worried about losing its statutory right to decide how to spend its own budget. When school officials failed to persuade the finance board to reconsider its action, they took the dispute to court.

DECISION: What the court said

Superior Court in Tolland County, Conn., ruled that the finance board had been in error when it established separate funds – outside the school budget – for school purposes, and a mandatory injunction was issued to compel the finance board to transfer the money back to the school budget. On an appeal by the finance board, the state's Supreme Court upheld this decision.

"It is obvious," said the Supreme Court, "that the two boards were at odds over which [school needs] should have priority. . . . The board of finance has a broad but not unlimited power to determine the amount that the municipality will appropriate, among other things, for educational purposes."

Citing a previous case and various state laws, the Court noted that a finance board's statutory right to safeguard the town's fiscal health does not also give it the right to tell a school board exactly where to spend its money. The Court added:

"The number of teaching positions necessary in the public schools, the need for a curriculum coordinator, and the maintenance of school properties are matters within the sound discretion of the board of education. . . . This is not to say that the board of education can act without restraint and that the board of finance cannot control the total amount of appropriations. Its control, however, must be exercised reasonably by taking into consideration the duty of the board of education to maintain . . . a program of educational opportunity which meets the requirements of state law; the power of the board of education to exercise a sound and reasonable discretion in carrying out its duties; and the town's financial needs and resources."

DISCUSSION: What are the issues?

The court's judgment served to amplify a basic truth – far too often misinterpreted by fiscal officers – about school budgets: When it comes to deciding how much money a town can afford for its total educational program, a finance board may exercise a check – in light of the town's ability to pay – by reducing a school board budget; but when it comes to deciding exactly where the school budget should be reduced, the authority rests with those most qualified to determine educational needs – the members of the board of education.

The National School Boards Association has made this clear in its statement of beliefs and policies. "In order to discharge the responsibility of providing good educational opportunities," says the association, "local school boards must control the funds used to operate the schools."

Victor MacDonald, executive director of the Connecticut Association of Boards of Education, has termed the Ellington decision "by far the most significant in Connecticut in many years." The CABE, which supported the Ellington school board in its court fight, expects the decision to encourage other boards in the state to assert their budgetary rights.

Ironically, the Ellington school board to date has been unable to win its battle with the finance board, despite the court rulings. The finance board has refused to obey the court injunction, and it seems that only contempt-of-court proceedings would make it do so. But regardless of the final outcome of the Ellington case, its real moral has already been told: A school board must know its powers, be willing to fight for them and use them responsibly in the interests of good education.

CONANT RECOMMENDATIONS, from page 1

dations which would require actions by boards alone or in conjunction with the state.

1. School boards, contracting with colleges or universities for practice teaching, would create a new staff position: The cooperating teacher

Only the best teachers would be given the job of working with practice teachers. And to encourage this work, school boards would reduce the classroom assignments of cooperating teachers and – with the help of state aid – raise their salaries.

2. School boards would provide special help for new teachers during their probationary periods

No longer would the rookie teacher be expected to sink or swim in his first classroom. The Conant-minded board would limit the new teacher's responsibility and make sure, for example, that he wasn't assigned too many problem students. It would see to it that the new teacher had aid in gathering instructional materials, that he had advice from experienced teachers (possibly via a team teaching arrangement), and that he had specialized instruction regarding the characteristics of the community and its students.

3. School boards would drastically revise their salary schedules

In effect, Dr. Conant would have two separate salary schedules – one for "junior" teachers during their four-year probationary period; the second, for "senior" teachers on tenure. The large jump in pay would come when (and if) a teacher moved from probationary status to tenure. The incompetents, of course, would not make this leap as they would be fired beforehand.

4. School boards – or the state – would provide financial aid to teachers for summer study

Such funds would not be for what Dr. Conant has called "Mickey Mouse" courses – the easy credit for salary credit's sake. Instead, teachers would be encouraged to embark upon master's degree programs of graduate school quality that would be directed toward the development of their competencies as teachers. The master's degree, but no random afternoon courses, would carry salary credit.

5. A companion recommendation: School boards would grant leaves of absence to teachers – with salary – for resident graduate study at a university

State aid would help underwrite the cost.

6. School boards would sponsor short-term, in-service seminars during the school year to keep teachers abreast of new developments in subject matter

What Dr. Conant has in mind are the kinds of institutes that have been provided at the national level by the National Science Foundation and NDEA in foreign languages. Such "short courses" would be offered to all teachers without cost to them. Salary credits would not be given for participation.

For SCHOOL BOARD MEMBERS, a component of the Croft Board Service, combines School Board Issues and School Board Action. It is issued monthly. Copyright 1963, Croft Educational Services, a division of VISION Incorporated. General Offices: 100 Garfield Ave., New London, Connecticut. Printed in U.S.A.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
SPOKESMAN
W. 10,121
PAGE ONE CERTIFIED
JAN 4 1963

May Have Far-Reaching Effect:

Church Conference On Religion And Race In Chicago Jan. 14-17

Chicago (ANP)—Religious leaders in the South fully expect the National Conference on Religion and Race to have a part in breaking down the barriers of racial discrimination and segregation in the Deep South.

Their views were released by the National Catholic Conference for Inter-racial Justice, here, which is serving as secretariat for the historic meeting. Called by the major faiths in the United States, the National Conference on Religion and Race will meet January 14-17, at the Edgewater Beach hotel.

Dr. Martin Luther King said that the National Conference on Religion and Race shows how "our nation is developing sensitivity to racial injustice."

"Never before," said Dr. King, "have the major faiths come together to grapple with that which is perhaps our most serious democratic ill."

The National Conference on Religion and Race isn't going to be just a northern conference — one that condemns racial discrimination and segregation in the South, according to Rev. Will D. Campbell, director of the Southern office (Nashville) of the Department of Racial and Cultural Relations of the National Council of Churches.

"At the annual meeting of the Southern Regional Council," Rev. Campbell said, "a rabbi raised that question." I assured him that the participating organizations — representing the major faith groups in the U.S. — have planned the Conference to discuss this moral issue as a national problem.

Dr. Jimmy Allen, executive secretary of the Christian Life Commission, Baptist General Convention of Texas, in Dallas, said that interfaith meetings on race relations are not new to the South.

"We've had some experience with similar meetings, sponsored by the National Conference of Christians and Jews and the Baptist General Convention of Texas. Of course, this is the first time that such a meeting has been called and sponsored by all the major faith groups in the United States to discuss the problem of racial injustice on a national basis."

Conveners of the interreligious Conference are the Department of Racial and Cultural Relations of the National Council of Churches; the Social Action Department of the National Catholic Welfare Conference; and the Social Action Commission of the Synagogue Council of America.

ST. PAUL, MINN.
RECORDER
W. 8,214
PAGE ONE CERTIFIED
JAN 4 1963

May Have Far-Reaching Effect:

Church Conference On Religion And Race In Chicago Jan. 14-17

Chicago (ANP)—Religious leaders in the South fully expect the National Conference on Religion and Race to have a part in breaking down the barriers of racial discrimination and segregation in the Deep South.

Their views were released by the National Catholic Conference for Inter-racial Justice, here, which is serving as secretariat for the historic meeting. Called by the major faiths in the United States, the National Conference on Religion and Race will meet January 14-17, at the Edgewater Beach hotel.

Dr. Martin Luther King said that the National Conference on Religion and Race shows how "our nation is developing sensitivity to racial injustice."

"Never before," said Dr. King, "have the major faiths come together to grapple with that which is perhaps our most serious democratic ill."

The National Conference on Religion and Race isn't going to be just a northern conference — one that condemns racial discrimination and segregation in the South, according to Rev. Will D. Campbell, director of the Southern office (Nashville) of the Department of Racial and Cultural Relations of the National Council of Churches.

"At the annual meeting of the Southern Regional Council," Rev. Campbell said, "a rabbi raised that question." I assured him that the participating organizations — representing the major faith groups in the U.S. — have planned the Conference to discuss this moral issue as a national problem.

Dr. Jimmy Allen, executive secretary of the Christian Life Commission, Baptist General Convention of Texas, in Dallas, said that interfaith meetings on race relations are not new to the South.

"We've had some experience with similar meetings, sponsored by the National Conference of Christians and Jews and the Baptist General Convention of Texas. Of course, this is the first time that such a meeting has been called and sponsored by all the major faith groups in the United States to discuss the problem of racial injustice on a national basis."

Conveners of the interreligious Conference are the Department of Racial and Cultural Relations of the National Council of Churches; the Social Action Department of the National Catholic Welfare Conference; and the Social Action Commission of the Synagogue Council of America.

TARPON SPRINGS, FL
LEADER
W. 2,385

JAN 8 1963

'Integration The Goal, Not Desegregation'-King

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. said that integration, not desegregation, is the "ultimate goal" of persons working for smooth race relations.

King spoke to more than 200 churchmen and civil rights leaders at the Vanderbilt University campus on "an analysis of the ethical demands of integration in the South."

The conference, sponsored by the Southern Regional Council and the Fellowship of Southern Churchmen, ended with a talk by James McBride Dabbs of Mayesville, S. C., president of the Southern Regional Council.

King, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, called desegregation "a negative thing which removes the barrier." He defined integration as "more creative and profound than desegregation" and said integration can "unchain the spirit and mind and bring freedom."

He said "some meaningful strides" have been made against segregation since 1954.

"Diehards used to say never but are now crying later," he said. "I'm convinced that in less than 10 years desegregation will be a reality throughout most of the south."

A report presented to the conference portrayed Charlottesville, Va., as a city moving from "crisis to crossroads" in school desegregation.

Prepared by Paul M. Gaston and Thomas T. Hammond of the department of Virginia history department, the report said that private schools were "widely regarded as 'safety valves,' making unlikely an explosion in the public desegregated schools" at Charlottesville.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
NATIONAL GUARDIAN
W. 30,046

JAN 10 1963

NEGROES AND WHITES AT NASHVILLE CHART PATH TO IN

The 'brotherhood of

By Anne Braden
Special to the Guardian

NASHVILLE, TENN.

ABOUT 150 LEADERS, Negro and white, in the Southern civil rights movement met here the last week of 1962 to search together for the paths that lead from desegregation to integration.

It was a "consultation" sponsored by the Fellowship of Southern Churchmen, a South-wide organization, and the Southern Regional Council, an interracial agency. Leaders from most of the major rights organizations—national, regional, and local—took part.

The conference tackled a question plaguing many people in the front lines of the Southern struggle: After desegregation, what?

As desegregation moves forward in the South, it is apparent that many Southern communities are becoming like Northern communities; the legal barriers fall, but de facto segregation and prejudice remain. Many of those working for change in the South have believed this region ultimately could do better in human relations than the North; they have not been going to jail, risking their jobs and their lives, just to make the South like the North. But the barriers to this dream have become apparent. The Nashville meeting was an attempt to define the problem and propose answers.

KEYNOTE BY KING: The theme was "The Ethical Demands of Integration." Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., in a keynote address, said desegregation was a necessary first step, a negative thing, the breaking of legal barriers, but that integration was a positive and creative thing, the acceptance of human beings by each other. Integration, he said, is the goal; desegregation only the means.

He noted that whereas desegregation can be enforced by law, integration demands inner attitudes, and he made it clear that he wanted no let-up in the legal actions that can control behavior even if they can't regulate attitudes.

"The law cannot make a man love me, but it can keep him from lynching me," he said. "In less than 10 years, desegregation will be a reality throughout most of the South. But the human relations dilemma of our nation will still be monumental, unless we launch now a parallel thrust of the integration process."

The conference was built around panel discussions of specific situations in three Southern communities. Staff members of the American Friends Service Committee reported on a drive for equal employment opportunity in the Greensboro, N.C., area. Prof. Paul Gaston, of the University of Virginia, reported on a study he and Thomas T. Hammond and others made of school desegregation in Charlottesville, Va. And the Rev. Samuel Williams, Baptist minister, professor at Morehouse College in Atlanta and a leader in both the NAACP and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, re-

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BARCLAY 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 CHURCH STREET NEW YORK 7, N.Y.

PATH TO INTEGRATION

d of suffering'

Jr., in a keynote on was a neces- tive thing, the rs, but that in- e and creative f human beings n, he said, is the the means.

s desegregation integration de- and he made it o let-up in the control behavior ate attitudes.

a man love me, n lynching me," years, desegre- throughout most human relations vill still be mon- h now a parallel process."

ilt around panel uations in three staff members of Service Commit- or equal employ- Greensboro, N.C., of the Univer- d on a study he ond and others ation in Charlot- ev. Samuel Wil- r, professor at Atlanta and a P and the South- Conference, reported on the role of the churches in desegregation at Atlanta.

"TOKEN" GAINS: The Greensboro and Charlottesville reports were studies of "tokenism" in action. Although considerable progress has been made by AFSC and other groups on opening new jobs to Negroes, there has been no massive breakthrough. In Charlottesville, the desegregation process has been peaceful—but only 67 Negro pupils, or 5.4% of the Negro school population, are in formerly white schools.

As to the role of the white Christian churches in Atlanta, Williams said they had done nothing.

THE BARRIERS: In the final session James McBride Dabbs, president of the Southern Regional Council, summed up the discussions and called on Southerners to draw upon the hidden human resources of the South to transform its institutions. The Rev. Charles Jones, white minister from Chapel Hill, N.C., articulated what the others present sensed: that even in a group like this—enlightened people, Negro and white, eager to break through artificial barriers—there remain tremendous emotional blocks to mutual trust.

A perceptive insight came from a young Negro minister, Rev. James Forbes, who last summer served as assistant in a white church in Chapel Hill, N.C., in a Union Theological Seminary project to place Negro student ministers in white churches and white students in Negro churches.

Conrad in the Denver Post
Withering Heights

Forbes, describing his experiences in Chapel Hill, said:

"I had accused white people of saying 'We know our Negroes'," he said, "but now I realized that I too had thought I knew my white folks. For the first time, I came to have truly genuine relations with white people—and I can tell you it was a period of suffering for me. It came to me how great is the distance between where the white people are and where the Negroes are, and it occurred to me that it is in this perhaps that we can meet, in a brotherhood of suffering—and it is this brotherhood of suffering that perhaps will form the bridge in this period of transition from desegregation to integration."

NEWARK, N.J.
AFRO-AMERICAN
SAT. 6,649

JAN 12 1963

DR. MARTIN LUTHER KING Jr. of Atlanta, addressing a Nashville (Tenn.) convention sponsored by the Fellowship of Southern Churchmen and the Southern Regional Council, declared last week political leaders should back the fight for integration with the same vigor they supported the government stand at Little Rock and at the University of Mississippi.

NORFOLK, VA.
JOURNAL AND GUIDE
SAT. 33,495

JAN 12 1963

Desegregation Aired At Sessions

NASHVILE, Tenn, (AcNS)—Southern churchm en and race relations s p ecialists d i s cussed desegregating last week at Vandebelt University in Nashv i l l e, The conference was sponsore by the Felowship of Southern Churchmen and the S o u t h ern Reg i o nal Council.

Dr. Martin Luther K i ng addressed the group on "An Analysis of The Et h i c a l Demands of Integrat i o n In The South.'

BALTIMORE, MD.
AFRO-AMERICAN
W. 28,778

JAN 12 1963

DR. MARTIN LUTHER KING Jr. of Atlanta, addressing a Nashville (Tenn.) convention sponsored by the Fellowship of Southern Churchmen and the Southern Regional Council, declared last week political leaders should back the fight for integration with the same vigor they supported the government stand at Little Rock and at the University of Mississippi.

ATLANTA, GA.
JOURNAL-CONSTITUTION
SUN. 502,157

JAN 13 1963

Howe of FDR's Success Explained With Dimension

ROOSEVELT AND HOWE. By Alfred B. Rollins Jr. 455 pp. New York: Alfred A. Knopf. $5.95.

By STAIGE D. BLACKFORD

The story of Roosevelt's long, difficult journey from the New York State Assembly to the White House and of the role Louis McHenry Howe played in its successful completion is one of tragedy and triumph, of heart breaking setback and hard-won success.

Alfred Rollins Jr.

That story is the subject of historian Alfred B. Rollins Jr.'s first book, and it is very well told indeed.

If Howe was, as many contended in 1932 and later, a kingmaker, he was about the most unlikely kingmaker in history.

ALWAYS THIN, plagued by ill health most of his life, with a face pitted and scarred by a childhood accident and fingers stained by countless cigarettes, this frail New York newsman scarcely seemed a Machiavelli, much less a Warwick.

Mr. Blackford is research director of the Southern Regional Council.

Yet, in the political arena few men could match him and none could surpass him.

HIS STRATEGY was almost invariably sound, his intelligence sharp and sure, his influence immeasurable.

The measure of his success can be gauged by the success of Franklin Roosevelt in overcoming the obstacles that faced him on the road to the presidency.

Indeed, one might say, if there had been no Howe, there would have been no FDR.

HOWE AND Roosevelt met each other in 1911, when one was a roving and restless reporter and the other a young, untried assemblyman. A year later, Howe was calling FDR "Beloved and Reverend Future President." Making that nickname a reality became Howe's dream—and his destiny.

Even when things hit rock bottom, with his hero crippled and apparently politically destroyed by polio, Howe never lost hope, never gave up—and never let Roosevelt give up either.

YOU WILL FIND no monuments to Louis McHenry Howe. But, as Rollins aptly and accurately observes, "Louis had left one monument that could never be erased. No one would ever write about the 20th century without mentioning Franklin Delano Roosevelt. No one would ever be able to write about Roosevelt without mentioning Louis McHenry Howe."

And no one who wishes to write about—or, for that matter, learn about—these two remarkable men can afford to overlook this book. Mr. Rollins is a young, relatively unknown historian, but he has a gift many older, more famous historians lack: The ability to combine style with scholarship, to make time past come to life again in time present. If this is his first book, one can only hope it will not be his last.

ATLANTA, GA.
JOURNAL-CONSTITUTION
SUN. 502,157

JAN 13 1963

Viewpoint: James McBride Dabl

By REESE CLEGHORN
Atlanta Journal State Editor

MAYESVILLE, S.C., Jan. 12—Here in the homeland of James McBride Dabbs, planter and philosopher, leader and paradox, the Old South was battered and blown but it did not all go with the wind:

You pass swamp waters blackened by acids from the gaunt cypress trees, leave a U.S. highway to travel by shanties and expanses of now-bare cotton fields, turn into a winding dirt road overhung by crowded pine branches and lush bushes, and come abruptly into a clearing in the wilderness.

The road arches symmetrically to and from a great white house, its distant white columns obscured by veils of Spanish moss hanging from the oaks.

CLOSE BY, Negroes unload sacks of feed at an unpainted outbuilding. In the distance there is the ring of iron upon iron, as one of the plantation tenants does his own "blacksmithing."

Up the front steps into a broad hall, and then into a high-ceilinged room where an intruding gas heater has replaced the open hearth, and where walls are lined with Tocqueville, Nietsche, Lomax and Whyte, you come upon what may be the South's rarest plantation sight:

There over the mantel, under an old shotgun and a muzzle-loaded rifle hand-hewn a hundred years ago by a master of this house, hangs a golden plaque.

IT PRAISES James McBride Dabbs for "wise and dedicated efforts to unify the American people in their quest of the democratic ideal." It is dated April 9, 1961, and it is signed by the Detroit chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

A Southern planter with NAACP laurels is somewhat rarer than a day in June, but Dabbs is rare for other reasons, too.

"He is the only man I know who can intellectualize magnolias," a friend said of him, pointing toward this big, shaggy man's special genius.

DABBS LEADS one of the nation's most important civil rights organizations, the Southern Regional Council, but it is in the realm of the mind rather than in organization work that he has found a special place. He is a sort of poet-philosopher.

He writes of the South today with fervent intimacy, and yet he lives more in the past and the future than in the present. ("I admit that out here I'm not much in this modern world, except in the mind.")

When his book "The Southern Heritage" appeared in 1958, editor Hodding Carter of Mississippi called it "the most meaningful comment on the race situation yet made by a Southerner." It is a classic in the growing field of literature created by the South's coming to grips with itself.

THOUGH HE GOES to Atlanta about four times a year for Southern Regional Council business and makes occasional speeches elsewhere, he is rooted to his birthplace.

Twenty years ago he quit as chairman of the English department at Coker College in Hartwell, S.C., and went back to the land of the McBrides and the Dabbses, where his family has lived for more than 200 years. His stately home, built by the McBrides, is within a mile of the smaller house where he lived as a child.

It is also near a Presbyterian church founded by Scotch-Irish in 1745 and still attended mainly by their descendants. Dabbs, who believes Christianity is "the central fire" in the South, is a ruling elder in his church.

WITH PIPE in hand, dressed in unpressed corduroy trousers and a heavy, gray wo er to keep out the chi old house's poorly he rooms, he sits in his s tells of how he left u life to come home to the Until 10 years ago, h the farm himself; h spending half his tin tractor in the fields, the rich soil that on this a cotton empire. T thousands of acres that ily owned have been to 125.

Now 67, Dabbs le farm to three Negro s pers. ("That word scares my liberal frie said.) The only occupa 12-room plantation h Dabbs, his Charleston- and their 18-year- Richard.

HIS OWN TIME is l voted to writing. Mo hundred of his artic been published in p and he expects his t to appear in 1965.

"I am trying to c Southerner," he said ject. "I want to set nature of the South, of the Southerner. P you can't do it—there Souths. But just a few Karl Barth, the great ologian, said that in across the United Sta sensed a different a in the South."

As far as Dabbs is it is "vive la differen that might surprise m region and even so neighbors. These are who regard Dabbs as to the South" becaus he joined in the fight rights.

(YOU STOP not

Staff Photos

JAMES McBRIDE DABBS AT HOME
Sweater Helps in Poorly Heated Rooms

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BARCLAY 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 CHURCH STREET NEW YORK 7, N.Y.

ride Dabbs

izations, the Southl Council, but it is n of the mind rathorganization work s found a special s a sort of poet-of the South today intimacy, and yet re in the past and han in the present.

at out here I'm not his modern world, mind.")
book "The Southern ppeared in 1958, ed-
Carter of Missis-it "the most mean-ent on the race sit-made by a South-
s a classic in the of literature cre-South's coming to elf.

HE GOES to At-four times a year
Regional Council makes occasional where, he is root-hplace.
ars ago he quit as the English de-Coker College in C., and went back
the McBrides and where his family
r more than 200 tately home, built rides, is within a smaller house d as a child.
ear a Presbyterian ed by Scotch-Irish still attended their descendants.
believes Christianentral fire" in the uling elder in his

in hand, dressed corduroy trousers
and a heavy, gray wool sweater to keep out the chill of the old house's poorly heated big rooms, he sits in his study and tells of how he left university life to come home to the land.

Until 10 years ago, he worked the farm himself; he recalls spending half his time on a tractor in the fields, turning the rich soil that once made this a cotton empire. Today the thousands of acres that his family owned have been reduced to 125.

Now 67, Dabbs leaves the farm to three Negro sharecroppers. ("That word always scares my liberal friends," he said.) The only occupants of the 12-room plantation house are Dabbs, his Charleston-born wife and their 18-year-old son, Richard.

HIS OWN TIME is largely devoted to writing. More than a hundred of his articles have been published in periodicals, and he expects his third book to appear in 1965.

"I am trying to corner the Southerner," he said of his subject. "I want to set forth the nature of the South, the nature of the Southerner. People say you can't do it—there are many Souths. But just a few days ago Karl Barth, the great Swiss theologian, said that in traveling across the United States he had sensed a different atmosphere in the South."

As far as Dabbs is concerned it is "vive la difference," a fact that might surprise many in his region and even some of his neighbors. These are the ones who regard Dabbs as "a traitor to the South" because long ago he joined in the fight for Negro rights.

(YOU STOP not far from where he lives, and one man calls him a hypocrite while another proclaims: "Nobody in South Carolina pays any attention to Dabbs.")

"Defending segregation as our way of life, we sell the South short," he asserted. "Have we lived here 300 years to accomplish only this? I can't believe it.

"I'm defending the South, but I'm defending it against the future rather than the past. Ross Barnett defended it against a remembered terror of 75 years ago.

"I WOULD NEVER leave the South, because it has something the rest of the country doesn't have."

To Dabbs, granting exceptions, the Southerner has these characteristics:

He loves the land, and draws from it some serenity that enables him to be more self-contained.

He is more devoted to leisure, and with it neighborliness and courtesy. At heart he is more a creature of manners than of money.

He is essentially religious, without the harshness of the Puritan.

More than the Midwesterner or the Westerner, he possesses a sense of having a place in the world as a particular individual, without the necessity of competing for it.

AND HE SENSES having a place just as a man, deserving some dignity of treatment and some privacy of living.

"You would not expect, in ordinary times, for a Ross Barnett to be a Southerner," he said. "The narrow, hard people ought to come out of New England, where the Yankee Puritans held sway. Barnett is an exception rather than a true Southerner, a creature of the imbalance that exists within our culture right now."

What is the imbalance?

It was born of conflict between the Southerner's natural desire for a peaceful, pastoral, personal life and the necessity to defend ugly institutions he knew were fundamentally wrong, Dabbs believes. First it was slavery, then segregation, that imposed the pressures bringing about distortion in the Southern character.

HE THINKS the conflict between industrialization and the values of a region traditionally bound to the land and leisure may create a new form of civilization not realized elsewhere in the nation, and he hopes the South's answer will become the nation's answer.

"If we could see the South for what it is, a region where men have striven greatly, endured greatly, and yet have managed through it all to keep a sense of human values, a sense of personal relationships so lacking in the modern world, a sense even of manners in a world gone mad for material gain, a sense of humor, sometimes playful, sometimes wry—if we could see our tragic history, whites and Negores involved together in more than two centuries of defeat . . . then we should come to realize that we have resources here valuable to both the nation and the world, and that segregation is not one of them."

A BELIEF in the special character of the South, he thinks, is in keeping with the aspirations of the Southern Regional Council, an organization of whites and Negroes with a 43-year history of seeking to improve race relations.

DABBS' PLANTATION HOME NEAR MAYESVILLE, S.C.
White-Columned House Almost Hidden by Moss Hanging From Oaks

Dabbs is concerned difference," a fact rprise many in his even some of his hese are the ones Dabbs as "a traitor because long ago he fight for Negro not far from lived here 30 years to accomplish only this? I can't believe it.

"I'm defending the South, but I'm defending it against the future rather than the past. Ross Barnett defended it against a remembered terror of 75 years ago.

"I WOULD NEVER leave the South, because it has something contained.

He is more devoted to leisure, and with it neighborliness and courtesy. At heart he is more a creature of manners than of money.

He is essentially religious, without the harshness of the Puritan.

More than the Midwesterner or the Westerner, he possesses a sense of having a place in

"You would not expect, in ordinary times, for a Ross Barnett to be a Southerner," he said. "The narrow, hard people ought to come out of New England, where the Yankee Puritans held sway. Barnett is an exception rather than a true Southerner, a creature of the imbalance that exists within our culture right now."

What is the imbalance?

It was born of conflict between the Southerner's natural desire for a peaceful, pastoral, personal life and the necessity to defend ugly institutions he knew were fundamentally wrong, Dabbs believes. First it was slavery, then segregation, that imposed the pressures bringing about distortion in the Southern character.

HE THINKS the conflict between industrialization and the values of a region traditionally bound to the land and leisure may create a new form of civilization not realized elsewhere in the nation, and he hopes the South's answer will become the nation's answer.

"If we could see the South for what it is, a region where men have striven greatly, endured greatly, and yet have managed through it all to keep a sense of human values, a sense of personal relationships so lacking in the modern world, a sense even of manners in a world gone mad for material gain, a sense of humor, sometimes playful, sometimes wry—if we could see our tragic history, whites and Negores involved together in more than two centuries of defeat . . . then we should come to realize that we have resources here valuable to both the nation and the world, and that segregation is not one of them."

A BELIEF in the special character of the South, he thinks, is in keeping with the aspirations of the Southern Regional Council, an organization of whites and Negroes with a 43-year history of seeking to improve race relations.

The council staff is at 5 Forsyth St. in Atlanta, and Dabbs, who has been president since 1957, drops in only occasionally. The council's endeavors have been in the realm of research, education and maintaining interracial communications rather than in legal and direct action.

Some of Dabbs' friends were a bit anxious when he was called upon in 1961 to address the national convention of another civil rights organization, the NAACP, in Philadelphia. After all, enemy of segregation or not, here was a Southern traditionalist who didn't quite fit any of the usual patterns of civil rights advocates—an elderly man, a lover of the past, a planter.

"BUT HE GAVE them a sort of cornpone talk that went over wonderfully," a friend recalls.

As usual, the human and folksy cornpone was interspersed with literary allusions, metaphorical flourishes, biting irony and the thunder of strong conviction, cut in no shape but his own.

It was pure Dabbs, and by his own definition of the species, pure Southerner.

The happy reception of his words seemed to confirm his view that the white South and the Negro have a special affinity for each other, and that time will draw them closer together as brothers under the skin.

Pressures for Integration Mount in North and South

Southern Reg. Council

South Moves Slowly

By CLAUDE SITTON

Special to The New York Times

ATLANTA.

A decade under the Supreme Court decision against public school segregation has done little more than clear the way for its implementation in the South.

The passing of the decision's 10th anniversary May 17 will find 98.9 per cent of the 2,901,671 Negro students in the eleven Southern states still in all-Negro schools.

Even this minimum, token progress does not extend to one of the 11, Mississippi. It has yet to take the first step toward compliance with the court's ruling and its officials are still committed to a policy of defiant resistance.

Important advances have been made in the six border states and the District of Columbia. Of this area's 511,128 Negro students, 287,241, 56.2 per cent, are in school with whites.

The desegregation of public

Continued on Page 82, Column 5

Northern Negroes Active

By GENE CURRIVAN

Efforts to bring about school integration in de facto segregated neighborhoods have dominated the Northern education debate.

School authorities in many places thought they had done as well as could be expected, but the civil rights groups expressed dissatisfaction with the pace.

The principal complaint of those who are demanding greater integration is that some educators do not accept the premise that all segregated schools are psychologically and educationally unsound.

A recent report by the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials on "Public School Segregation and Integration in the North" said that the urgent need "is not techniques, but purpose."

Such purpose, broadly interpreted, is true integration. The

Continued on Page 82, Column 6

The New York Times (by Patrick A. Burns)

SIT-IN AT SCHOOL OFFICE: Demonstrators protesting against racial imbalance in public schools by sitting in at office of Dr. Calvin E. Gross, left, School Superintendent.

The New York Times
D. 680,265 S. 1,306,418
JAN 16 1964

South Moves Slowly Toward Integration

NEGROES IN AREA 1.06% INTEGRATED

But Pressures Are Rising a Decade After Court Ban on School Segregation

Continued From Page 73

colleges and universities has moved ahead largely as a result of voluntary action or suits based on legal precedents set by the Supreme Court some years before its 1954 school decision. All of the institutions of higher learning in the border states are desegregated and 115 of the 212 in the South.

Over-all, however, the most significant changes have been those achieved in overcoming legalistic and psychological barriers. And, now, rising pressure from the Federal courts, the Justice Department and Negroes themselves promise a rapid acceleration of school desegregation.

Nevertheless, desegregation in sections of the Deep South with heavy Negro populations will present a critical problem for some time. The possibility of further violence and school closings cannot be ruled out.

Survey Shows Lag

Just how far the South has come in public school desegregation and how far it yet has to go are apparent from a recent survey by the Southern Education Reporting Service. This is a fact-finding agency established by Southern newspaper executives and educators with Ford Foundation funds.

In this school year, according to the service, the 11 states have 7,919,404 white and 2,901,671 Negroes enrolled. Only 30,798, or 1.06 per cent, of the Negroes are in schools with whites.

In the 1954-55 term, shortly after the Supremee Court decision came down to be followed a year later by its implementation ruling, only 23 Negroes, or .001 per cent of the total enrollment of 2,315,062, attended classes with whites. Twenty of them were in Arkansas and three in Texas.

During the 1962-63 school year, the white enrollment was 7,739,629 and that of the Negroes, 2,842,315. A total of 12,868 Negroes, .453 per cent of the total and 17,930 less than this year, were in school with whites.

Texas in the Lead

The greatest desegregation today in the South is in Texas, where about 14,000 Negroes, or 4.29 per cent of the 326,409 enrolled, are in desegregated schools.

North Carolina, which has the largest number of Negroes

Associated Press

STILL SEPARATE: A class in an all-Negro school in Arkansas. In the 11 Southern states 98.9 per cent of the 2,901,671 Negro students are still attending such segregated schools.

Negroes in North Pressing for Racial Balance techniques referred to include attempts such as transporting Negro children to predominantly white schools where they sometimes are again segregated while catching up educationally with other students.

Continued From Page 73

Civil rights groups, while not in complete agreement on techniques, concur in the ultimate objective that school systems must be committed to a definite policy of integration.

This commitment, they believe comes about only after official pressure.

Two examples were New York and New Jersey, where the State Commissioners issued appeals to combat segregation. Both cases resulted from presure by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The action by the Commissioners was hailed by the N.A.A.C.P. as one of the highlights of the year. It was the first time since the United States Supreme Court decision of 1954 that state authorities had directed local school boards to speed integration, even though the boards were not charged with having brought about racial imbalance.

In New Jersey, Commissioner F. M. Raubinger ordered the Orange Public Schools to correct an "extreme racial imbalance" in the Oakwood School that, he said, constituted "a deprivation of educational opportunity for the pupils compelled to attend the school."

In New York, Dr. James E. Allen Jr., took similar action against the Woodfield Road School in the Malverne-Lake-

would mean the transfer of white children from their schools to make way for Negroes. The court held that this was in violation of the State law designed to bar discrimination in the public schools. The State Education Department will probably appeal the ruling.

The N.A.A.C.P. started a national drive against segregated schools in January of 1962 when only six school districts in the North were being pressed to desegregate. Since then the association has moved against 81 school systems in 17 states with varying results. The action included protests, boycotts, demonstrations and, in 16 of the cases, litigation.

By September of last year 26 systems had integrated or taken steps to do so.

Englewood, N. J., was the scene of one of the most publicized cases; others included Montclair and Morristown in New Jersey, Norwalk and New Haven in Connecticut, Freeport, L. I. and Cleveland, Ohio.

New York City made a new commitment for the integration of its schools in September, when it was threatened with a citywide boycott.

The boycott was called off when the Board of Education promised to produce a satisfactory plan by December. However, this plan was rejected by the civil rights groups including the N.A.A.C.P., the Congress of Racial Equality, and the Harlem Parents Committee.

Boycott is Urged

A boycott was again proposed by the Rev. Milton A. Galamison, chairman of the Citywide Committee for School Integracenters throughout the city to aid minority groups, the board was accused of not having produced a "meaningful plan."

Under open enrollment, pupils are sent to specified schools outside their districts where the racial balance is better. The free-choice transfer plan permits parents to choose any school in the city where there are accomodations.

But Miss Shagaloff held that under N.A.A.C.P. policy these plans are acceptable only when more effective plans cannot be used to achieve greater integration. Moving children by bus, she said, is not the answer.

Miss Shagaloff contended that at least 15 plans had been offered to the Board of Education and ignored. They included education centers with clusters of junior and senior high schools drawing from wide areas and changes in zones and feeding patterns for junior high schools.

On the national scene, Miss Shagaloff said, there is some recognition that de facto segregation is educationally undesirable "but there is an unwillingness by school officials to adopt meaningful plans which would fundamentally change racial patterns in the schools."

Dr. Calvin E. Gross, Superintendent of New York City Schools, said in a recent statement that the board was determined "to do everything that a school system can do to improve the ethnic distribution of our pupils and to correct to the extent feasible, the high racial concentrations imposed on the schools by segregated housing and employment patterns.

"We are just as determined to raise the educational standards and the quality of learnthree in Texas.

During the 1962-63 school year, the white enrollment was 7,739,629 and that of the Negroes, 2,842,315. A total of 12,868 Negroes, .453 per cent of the total and 17,930 less than this year, were in school with whites.

Texas in the Lead

The greatest desegregation today in the South is in Texas, where about 14,000 Negroes, or 4.29 per cent of the 326,409 enrolled, are in desegregated schools.

North Carolina, which has the largest number of Negroes in its public school system—346,745, has 1,865, or .538 per cent, in school with whites.

The numbers of Negroes in school with whites in other Southern states and the percentages of total Negro enrollments represented are: Alabama, 11 and .004 per cent; Arkansas, 1,084 and .968 per cent; Florida, 3,650 and 1.53 per cent; Georgia, 177 and .052 per cent; Louisiana, 1,814 and .602 per cent; South Carolina, 10 and .004 per cent; Tennessee, 4,466 and 2.71 per cent, and Virginia 3,721 and 1.57 per cent.

In the border states, the percentages of Negroes in school with whites range from West Virginia's high of 87.9 per cent to Oklahoma's low of 48.1 per cent.

Teaching staffs, according to the Southern Education Reporting Service survey, are completely segregated in Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina and South Carolina. Some teacher desegregation has begun in Florida, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia and in all of the border states and the District of Columbia.

In the early stages of desegregation, many Negro teachers lost their jobs in Missouri, Oklahoma, Texas and West Virginia.

More important from a psychological standpoint than the statistical gains registered last September with the opening of school was the beginning of desegregation in South Carolina and Alabama.

South Carolina, which had bowed to the will of the courts earlier in the year by accepting a Negro student at Clemson College, made the transition peacefully. No major incidents marked the admission of Negroes to previously white schools in Charleston.

Four school systems in Alabama were affected. The pattern there was not peaceful. disturbances in part to the defiant attitude of Gov. George C. Wallace. Tension aroused by racial crises in Birmingham also played a part.

When the school crisis arose, Governor Wallace already had staged a token show of defiance by temporarily blocking two Negroes as they sought to register at the University of Alabama. He stepped aside quickly when confronted by National Guard troops Federalized by the late President John F. Kennedy.

Governor Stepped In

Nevertheless, state troopers under the Governor's orders held up the opening of schools scheduled to be desegregated in Birmingham, Mobile, Huntsville and Tuskegee. But Mr. Wallace, who was under a Federal Court injunction, again relented.

However, the Governor's defiant action had given hard-core segregationists time to muster their forces. Ugly demonstrations followed in Birmingham and Mobile.

In Tuskegee, a rural community and a county where Negroes outnumber whites heavily, an apparent willingness to accept desegregation as inevitable turned into determined resistance. Whites withdrew their children from the desegregated high school and enrolled them in hastily organized private classes.

The situation in Tuskegee differs in one important respect from that in Prince Edward County, Virginia. The Alabama community did not attempt to close its public schools. But in Prince Edward, when the county faced the prospect of desegregation, it failed to reopen any of its public schools for the 1959-60 term. The county has been the only one in the nation since that time without any public education whatsoever.

A Federal District Court held in 1962 that the Prince Edward Schools could not be closed to avoid desegregation so long as the state continued to provide education in other counties. Action on the ruling was later stayed pending the outcome of litigation in the state courts.

The Virginia Court of Appeals held that the state had no responsibility to provide public education in Prince Edward County so long as the county refused to share its part of the cost. This ruling set the stage for further action in the Federal courts, expected this year.

Neither school closings nor the defiant resistance of state officials to Federal court orders are the chief factors responsible for holding desegregation to a minimum. Instead, this is accomplished largely through such devices as pupil placement plans and restricted transfers.

Dr. J. Kenneth Morland, professor of sociology at Randolph-Macon Woman's College, pointed out that none of the placement laws of the 11 southern states mentions race as a criterion of assignment. These laws simply allow the operation of racially separate schools to shift to other grounds.

In a pamphlet distributed the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, Dr. Morland says: "The limited amount of integration that has taken place has come through application for transfer from the school of initial assignment through provision of the placement law. . . . Thus, actual integration of schools has depended upon whether Negro parents and their children were willing to go through time-consuming, expensive steps to contest the initial assignment . . ."

Restrictive transfer systems are usually employed where assignment is based on proximity to a school. Children assigned to a school in which they are in a racial minority are permitted to transfer, others are not. The result is usually total resegregation on only token desegregation.

Both pupil placement and restrictive transfers, when used as devices to maintain segregation, appear to be nearing the end of the legal road.

Long Delays Seen

The prevailing of the Federal judiciary toward token desegregation may well have been summed up by Justice Arthur Goldberg in a Supreme Court ruling last May on a case involving desegregation in the public parks in Memphis:

"It is far from clear that the mandate of the second Brown decision requiring the desegregation proceed with 'all deliberate speed' would today be fully satisfied by types of plans and programs for desegregation of public educational facilities, which eight years ago might have been deemed sufficient. Brown never contemplated that the concept of 'deliberate speed' would countenance indefinite delay . . ."

Further, some of the financial costs of breaching racial barriers may be shifted from the backs of Negroes. This is suggested by the action of the Federal District Court last October in ordering the Powhatan County, Virginia, school board to pay some of the legal fees of Negro plaintiffs because of the board's "long-continued pattern of evasion and obstruction" in a desegregation case.

All of these developments coupled with the growing determination of Negroes to obtain admission to desegregated schools undoubtedly will speed the process and extend desegregation beyond the token level in the South in the near future.

had directed local boards to speed integration, even though the boards were not charged with having brought about racial imbalance.

In New Jersey, Commissioner F. M. Raubinger ordered the Orange Public Schools to correct an "extreme racial imbalance" in the Oakwood School that, he said, constituted "a deprivation of educational opportunity for the pupils compelled to attend the school."

In New York, Dr. James E. Allen Jr., took similar action against the Woodfield Road School in the Malverne-Lakeview District of Long Island. He noted that the school was "commonly viewed in the community as a Negro school" and that "such imbalance constitutes a deprivation of equality of educational opportunity."

But Commissioner Allen received a setback when the State Supreme Court ruled that in the Malverne case the order [illegible] ber, when it was threatened with a citywide boycott.

The boycott was called off when the Board of Education promised to produce a satisfactory plan by December. However, this plan was rejected by the civil rights groups including the N.A.A.C.P., the Congress of Racial Equality, and the Harlem Parents Committee.

Boycott is Urged

A boycott was again proposed by the Rev. Milton A. Galamison, chairman of the Citywide Committee for School Integration, which includes these organizations. On Jan. 4 Frederick Jones, state representative of the N.A.A.C.P. and Miss June Shagaloff, special assistant for education of the organization announced Feb. 3 as the boycott date.

Despite such efforts as open enrollment, free-choice transfer and the establishment of would fundamentally change racial patterns in the schools."

Dr. Calvin E. Gross, Superintendent of New York City Schools, said in a recent statement that the board was determined "to do everything that a school system can do to improve the ethnic distribution of our pupils and to correct to the extent feasible, the high racial concentrations imposed on the schools by segregated housing and employment patterns.

"We are just as determined to raise the educational standards and the quality of learning for all our pupils. Any constructive integration plan that fails to embrace both these essential goals — ethnic distribution and quality education — is neither valid nor responsible. The vast majority of the parents in New York City consistently support the inclusion of both goals in any plan for integration."

FORT MYERS, FLA.
NEWS-PRESS
D. 20,290 S. 21,158

JAN 16 1963

In The Mailbag

The writer's name and address must accompany all letters. The name may be given in confidence and a pen name used for letters of general discussion but no pen name will be permitted when personal attacks are involved. Please keep letters short.

DEFENSE COUNSEL

Editor, News-Press—

This letter is being written with dual purpose. The first of these is of a selfish nature. The second is with consideration for others who find themselves involved with similar dilemmas. It is therefore imperative that I ask someone for help. I believe that your assistance in printing the truth in my case will actually be a service to the public. The following information is true in its entirety:

As of this writing I am incarcerated in the Lee County Jail awaiting trial on a breaking and entering charge. As to my guilt or non-guilt you would not be interested. However, I believe you will be interested in the other aspects of the case. Especially since a great many find themselves in like situations:

1. I have a past record.
2. I do not have funds with which to obtain legal counsel.
3. I do not understand law well enough to conduct my defense in a court of law.
4. Without legal counsel and with a prior record I haven't a chance of proving my innocence.

I feel that our society is remiss in permiting anything of this nature to remain in our democracy. It is my hope that you may be able to help remedy this unfair condition.

CLARENCE C. RAULERSON

* * *

MEREDITH EDITORIALS

Editor, News-Press—

Editorials from southern colleges in regard to the Meredith case have been compiled by the Southern Regional Council, 5 Forsyth St. N.W., Atlanta 3, Ga., and a copy will be mailed free of charge upon request. Those who disagree with the News-Press editorial of Jan. 13 might enjoy these editorials better.

Florida Council on Human Relations, P.O. Box 8292, Jacksonville 11, Florida, will also send the "Southern Student Reactions" free of charge upon request.

DORA FORBES

The Fifteenth Amendment Comes to Mississippi

BARBARA CARTER

Southern Regional Council

"ALL who are qualified to vote, both black and white," Senator James O. Eastland informed the Senate last spring, "exercise the right of suffrage in my state, as I am sure they do in Louisiana and other Southern states." The senator may find it easy to remain uninformed about other Southern states, but it must take a remarkable effort to remain unaware of the pressures and intimidations that prevent all but six per cent of the eligible Negroes from registering to vote in Mississippi.

The senator's home, a ranch-style house graced with three picture windows that look out on a deserted, tumble-down dwelling opposite, is the largest house in Doddsville, a tiny crossroads settlement in Sunflower County marked only by a traffic light. Just five miles to the north is the small community of Ruleville, where a Negro voting drive was launched last summer. Negroes who know the state call Sunflower County the "worst county in Mississippi" and Ruleville the "tightest town" in it.

In mid-August, a group of five Negro women from Ruleville drove to the county seat of Indianola to register. Indianola is the birthplace of the White Citizens Council, the militant segregationist organization whose influence still sets the tone for the county as a whole. The women were permitted to take the registration tests—a series of new and stringent requirements made it doubtful that they could pass anyway—and for the next two weeks a stream of Negroes from Ruleville made the trip to Indianola. Learning that the registrar's office would be closed for the month of September, the Negroes found a bus to use on the last day in August, and some twenty of them rode down to Indianola singing gospel and freedom songs on the way. On arrival, the driver of the bus was arrested and fined for driving a yellow bus: the color was too much like a school bus. Such imaginative uses of the law are not uncommon when Negroes attempt to register in Mississippi.

From the beginning, the mayor of Ruleville, Charles M. Dorrough (who had already run unsuccessfully for the more lucrative position of county sheriff and wasn't sure whether he should try again), had been aware that the Negroes streaming into Indianola to register were acting as if all the barriers so carefully erected over the years had suddenly turned into swinging gates. His reactions were frantic and confused but nonetheless effective. He briefly arrested a couple of young Negro students who were helping with the campaign. He called meetings of the white citizens to discuss the "outside agitators" who were bringing trouble to his town. He shut down Negro businesses wherever he could find minor violations. One woman who had taken the test found the mayor on her front porch, tools in hand, turning off her water because she was three days late in paying her bill.

Negroes with city jobs who were connected with the registration movement were also handled directly by the mayor. He told a sanitation worker who was fired that he would have trouble finding any job in Ruleville. The white citizens were quick to co-operate with their mayor. Many Negro sharecroppers and tenant farmers lost their jobs, and some were evicted from their homes as well. Even relatives of would-be voters felt the weight of the town's displeasure. One woman whose mother had taken the test lost the job she had held at the county hospital for many years.

One of the Negro tenant farmers, a Baptist minister named Jeff Surney, came from Senator Eastland's home town. Although he was not given time to complete his registration test, Surney was evicted anyway. He has had trouble finding work and a permanent home for his family. ("We have been moving ever since," he told me recently.) Surney, however, went to Washington and filed an affidavit with the Civil Rights Commission detailing the reprisals he had suffered. Within a month of his return, he was charged with passing a bad check at the gas station in Doddsville. The station's owner is very sorry about it all. He had often asked Surney to watch his children on evenings he and his wife went to dances. He admits that he was forced to bring charges, though he will not describe the pressure brought on him. "Jeff must have been misled and taken sides with the Communists," he has added as if in further explanation.

By this time, however, the Rule-ville campaign was all over. It ended the night of September 10, when three Negro homes were fired into by unidentified night riders. One of them belonged to the husband of a would-be voter whom the mayor had warned: "We're going to freeze you out, Joe. We can't have anyone living with us and working against us." Another belonged to a woman whose granddaughter, Vivian Hilliet, eighteen, and her friend Marion Burke, twenty, had stopped on their way to Jackson State College to pay a visit. Both girls were wounded, one critically, and were taken to the county hospital. When the energetic mayor arrived at the hospital shortly thereafter, he found a Negro student, Charles Cobb, a slight young man from St. Louis, taking notes on the girls' condition. The mayor promptly arrested him and rushed back to the house where the girls had been shot to announce that he had captured the man responsible. Cobb was released the next morning without explanation.

Mayor Dorrough still claims that he knows who was responsible for shooting into the Negro homes, but adds, "I don't want to pinpoint anyone personally, you understand." According to the mayor, "No local people were involved at all."

The Justice Department Moves

As head of the Senate Judiciary Committee, the senior senator from Mississippi must know that his state is the prime target of the Justice Department in its efforts to secure voting rights for Negro citizens under the Civil Rights Acts of 1957 and 1960. Of thirty-two suits brought in the South since 1961, ten have been filed in Mississippi alone, more than in any other state. In addition, matters involving registration and intimidation are under "active investigation" in sixteen counties, with the senator's county heading the list; and voting records, which can provide evidence for further cases, have been requested or are being analyzed in at least eighteen counties.

The Justice Department's activities are not restricted to the courts. Every step of the way is preceded by talks and letters to avoid suit if possible. Washington officials make no secret of their presence when they arrive in Mississippi towns to photograph registration books and poll-tax receipts—that is, when they can get a court order requiring the registrars to co-operate. Rarely is the co-operation voluntary. Though the department is woefully shorthanded in the face of the magnitude of its task, the six to seven lawyers assigned full time to the state have piled up an impressive number of hours in the field, and numerous Mississippi Negroes have been visited by Washington attorneys and the local FBI, coming as friends. According to John Doar, who is first assistant in the Civil Rights Division, "These people see you and get to know you. They begin to have some confidence that you mean what you say."

Most of the department's cases seek to prove that a "pattern or practice" of discrimination exists, and are brought against various registrars or sheriffs. But "the really great case," according to Doar, is the one against the state of Mississippi, its governor, attorney general, and secretary of state as board of election commissioners, and the registrars of six counties. In this suit the department is challenging as unconstitutional all the recent legal devices designed to deprive the Negro of his vote.

The first of these came in 1954, when the Mississippi electorate (which is ninety-five per cent white) voted to amend the state constitution to require that all future voters be able to interpret any of its sections to the registrar's personal satisfaction. No standards for judgment are given, nor does a later amendment, that the applicant be of "good moral character," require anything beyond the registrar's own opinion. Moreover, the legislature recently permitted the registrar merely to write "Failed" on the tests without specifying the reason (unless it had to do with "character"), the logic being that to do otherwise "may constitute assistance to the applicant on another application." The most severe requirement, added last spring by the resourceful legislature, ruled that the names of all future applicants must be published for a two-week period in the local press. This permits economic pressure, or worse, to be brought easily, immediately, and directly.

The Federal government points out that these stringent requirements apply only to those not yet registered, and the department can prove by photostatic copies of voting records now in Washington how one-sided the application of these laws can be. Not only are Negroes asked to interpret the more difficult sections of the state constitution, but whites are forgiven the most inadequate answers to the far easier sections given them. Though no help is permitted on the tests and minor errors can rule out Negroes, the forms filled out by whites show helpful little check marks penciled in on an easily overlooked line where a second signature is required.

Under the Civil Rights Acts the Justice Department can initiate voting cases directly before the district courts. Mississippi is divided into two districts, the Northern and Southern, and the department prefers to spread its cases evenly between the two to avoid overloading.

The Judges

Presiding in the Southern District is Judge W. Harold Cox, a friend of Senator Eastland's, who has the distinction of being President Kennedy's first judicial appointee. He was selected for the bench in June, 1961, to ensure the senator's co-operation, as head of the Judiciary Committee, on other appointments and to facilitate the necessary working relationship of the Justice Department with his committee. Some say it was a trade for Thurgood Marshall's confirmation as Federal judge. At any rate, Cox's appointment illustrates how an earnest drive in the field of justice can be thwarted by seemingly adroit moves in the field of politics. Judge Cox has acted on the bench like the staunch Mississippian he is. He seems to regard the entire effort of the Justice Department as a grave error in judgment, and evidently feels that his understanding of the Negroes and their situation in the South is somewhat beyond the comprehension of Washington officials. Here, for example, is his reaction when presented with the fact that Negroes are required to see the registrar personally while whites need go no further than the lower clerks: "I think the colored people brought that on themselves. I am thoroughly familiar with some of the conduct of some of the colored gentry and I am not surprised . . . You people up north don't understand what [the registrar] was talking about. I don't expect you to."

In the Northern District, the department faces Judge Claude F. Clayton, who has proved to be reluctant even to issue court orders requiring registrars to produce their records when they refuse the department's initial request. (The Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals has recently ruled that such orders should be granted as "a matter of course.") Judge Clayton held up one such request for twenty-one months. Part of the delay was caused by his asking for lengthy arguments on the otherwise simple matter of substituting the present Attorney General's name for the former Attorney General's. The case had been filed a few days before the Kennedy administration took office, and usually in such matters the substitution of the new Attorney General's name is automatic.

Under Judge Cox, voting records have been slightly easier to get, and even a temporary restraining order has been won on one occasion. When he chooses, Judge Cox can act surprisingly fast. For instance, the contract of a Negro schoolteacher who had appeared as a government witness in a voting suit last spring was not renewed. When talks with the school board proved futile, the department did not hesitate to file suit. The case was heard within two months and Judge Cox handed down his decision in three days. Although his ruling went against the department, the case was at least released, and it is now on appeal.

Both of the Mississippi district courts seem to have ample time to hear all the motions that may be presented by the state attorneys and to require fuller statements from both sides. Their rulings on evidence have also created problems for the Justice Department. In an attempt to prove a pattern of discrimination, the department has tried to bring in Negro witnesses who during a ten-year period have tried without success to register. The courts, however, limit the government to witnesses who tried during the time when the present registrar has been in office, often no more than a two-year period. Instead of forty to fifty witnesses, the government is allowed only the handful who have applied in that short period. In the toughest counties, the futility of trying to register has kept their yearly numbers down. Having limited the evidence to these few witnesses, the court is then unable to discover a "pattern" of discrimination, and the Justice Department's case is called "superficial at best."

But while the courts in Mississippi spin out the judicial processes, the Justice Department moves fast where it can. Take the case of John Hardy, a Negro student civil-rights worker. The year before last, Hardy was smashed in the head by a pistol butt wielded by the registrar of Walthall County when the student brought two Negroes in to register. Hardy was immediately charged with disturbing the peace and his case was promptly set for trial. The department sought an injunction against the trial but got an adverse ruling from Judge Cox the day before the trial was to begin. The department's attorney, John Doar, flew the same day to Montgomery, Alabama, to present the government's suit before Judge Richard T. Rives of the Circuit Court of Appeals. Judge Rives indicated that he would issue a stay, and the state thereupon agreed to put off Hardy's prosecution. Meanwhile, the government filed two suits against the registrar, one for intimidation and another for failing to register any of the Negroes in his county. (The trial date had to be postponed because the registrar's jaw was broken in a fight.) In Walthall County, at any rate, registrars have stopped beating student workers with their guns. But Negroes have also stopped trying to register.

The Student Workers

Student workers like John Hardy are presently conducting the Negro voting drive in Mississippi under the field direction of Robert Moses, a twenty-seven-year-old Negro with an M.A. in philosophy from Harvard. Moses is a member of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC, pronounced Snick), and his co-workers are either from SNCC or CORE (Congress for Racial Equality), the NAACP or the National Urban League, or Dr. King's Southern Christian Leadership Conference. For some time these Negro groups had separately been conducting voter-registration drives in the South along with sit-ins and Freedom Rides, but things were changed last spring when a Southwide Voter Education Project was formed under the auspices of the Southern Regional Council in Atlanta, and some $450,000 was received in grants from the Taconic Foundation, the Edgar Stern Family Fund of New Orleans, and the Marshall Field Foundation of Chicago. Among the Southern states, Mississippi was considered unique. "Because of the extreme resistance, harassment, and intimidation in Mississippi," said Wiley A. Branton, director of the project, "we have launched an entirely different program there." In Mississippi, the workers from various Negro organizations joined together in a new Council of Federated Organizations (COFO) to pool their efforts to get out the Negro vote, and workers for the council limit their activities strictly to registration drives.

Occasionally Robert Moses breaks into a quick grin, but usually his manner is grave and quiet. His job often requires him to urge much older people with family responsibilities to risk the little they have for the mere sake of registering, often unsuccessfully. He has been arrested several times and has spent some forty-five days in Mississippi jails. His latest offense was passing out leaflets to Negroes in front of the Indianola courthouse. Almost a year to the day earlier, he was beaten by a relative of the county sheriff when he accompanied two Negroes who attempted to register in Amite County. Nine stitches had to be taken in his head, and although the suit he brought against his assailant was unsuccessful, Moses feels that the publicity he got for being the first Negro to bring charges against a white man in Amite County has gained him "some kind of immunity" there. (On another visit there he wasn't beaten, but his traveling companion was.)

Moses has concentrated his efforts on the hard-core areas of the Mississippi Delta, counties where the Negroes outnumber the whites and their registered voters are few. In Amite County, for instance, only one Negro is registered. In Senator Eastland's Sunflower County, where the Negroes outnumber the whites three to one, only 1.2 per cent of the Negroes are registered. In thirteen counties the number of Negroes registered is zero, and in twenty others the percentage is .003. These are the areas where resistance to Negro voting will be the most determined.

Some Questions of Tactics

W. C. Patton, the NAACP field secretary from Memphis who has long been working to secure Negro voting rights, recently commented: "In all my years of voter campaigning no one in my group has been arrested. When they bring in sit-ins and freedom rides and someone is arrested, my campaign is shot. That's it." In the hard-core areas, he told me, "We should go in for a test case, and then pull out and go where we can get people on the books and registered." Though the students working under COFO do not conduct sit-ins or freedom rides, Patton notes that $5,000 was recently spent for legal fees following harassment of voter workers in Mississippi's Fourth Congressional District, but only eighty-three Negroes were registered.

The best defense of Robert Moses' operations in the hard-core area was given by government attorney John Doar. "He has to go where it's tough," Doar said, "to prove that he has courage." Courage, it seems, can be as contagious as fear. Recently, nineteen Ruleville Negroes tried again to register and four were successful. "They're really determined to see this through," Moses explained.

"I hope they don't get discouraged," Doar said of the student workers. "I hope they stick it out and keep working. After all, they're only trying to urge people to register." However, he noted sadly, it is "very difficult" to do anything about retaliation when it begins. "I can't keep a crime from being committed," he said. "We try the very best we can to eliminate the lawlessness by seeking injunctions and restraining various forms of economic retaliation. But it is very difficult to win. We have to prepare and check out those cases very carefully."

In John Hardy's case, for instance, the registrar had admitted hitting the student. "Justice really moved fast on that one," Moses told me with a grin, but added, "I suppose it was because the case was so clear-cut." In cases where the issue is not so clear-cut, it seems to the student workers (who are often the first to bear the brunt of ugly reprisals) that the department is unwilling to act unless it is sure of winning. The same complaint has been lodged against the NAACP.

Economic reprisals against the would-be voters are especially difficult to prove. The Ruleville sharecroppers who lost their jobs, for instance, must prove that it was because they tried to register, not because the crop was thin last year. A temporary injunction has been obtained by the Justice Department against mass evictions of sharecroppers in Tennessee, but such injunctions can restrain only so long. If the sharecroppers' leases run out or legitimate-sounding reasons for eviction turn up, it is useless. The Justice Department's main aim is to help the Negro get the vote, and where injunctions prove ineffective as well as difficult to obtain, it may concentrate its efforts elsewhere. For instance, it is understood that the department will bring a suit to secure Robert Moses the freedom to distribute voting literature without harassment, and this will help the Negroes' voting drive. This concentration of action sometimes looks like inaction or, as the student workers put it, "politics." Washington views it as a matter of tactics.

Robert Moses has seen too much in his two years to take a patient view. With seven others, he has just brought suit against Robert Kennedy and J. Edgar Hoover to require them to send Federal marshals to the courthouses to protect Negroes when notified of a registration attempt. The Justice Department had refused on the basis that it can't act as a police force for the entire state.

ON THE OTHER HAND, the first Negro candidate to run for office in Mississippi since Reconstruction, the Reverend R. L. T. Smith, who ran for Congress last year, is really "heartened" by the department's work and most understanding about the difficulties it faces. "The Justice Department has moved in what appears to be a slow fashion," he said recently, "but the 1960 Civil Rights Act is not fully established in the courts. However, they are getting the precedents established, and under somewhat trying conditions."

The story of Smith's candidacy has some interesting facets. When he announced his availability in November, 1961, it was treated by Negroes and whites alike as a grand joke. The president of one TV station in Jackson, WJTV, was eager in December to sell Smith program time for six appearances, but the candidate could afford only three appearances on a pay-as-you-go plan. After the first program, however, the station canceled the whole thing.

When Smith turned to the other TV station in Jackson, WLBT, it responded with a flat refusal to sell him any time at all. The first station, when appealed to again, explained that it had suffered so much intimidation since Smith's one appearance that it could consider his application only after he had appeared on the competing station. Smith reported his predicament to the FCC, and then accepted an invitation to speak at Brandeis University.

After his Eastern visit, Mrs. Roosevelt and James Wechsler, among others, wrote letters of protest to FCC Chairman Newton Minow. Smith also wrote to President Kennedy and got a quick reply from the President's office saying that the matter was being investigated. Within the week he received the letter, the second station notified him that it would sell him prime time, and an appointment was made with Fred L. Beard, its general manager.

It was an unusual interview. Beard confessed that he was afraid that if Reverend Smith made his appearance, "they" would blow up the station, topple the broadcasting tower, and shatter the plate-glass windows. He confided that if the Negro candidate was seen on the screen, "our two bodies will be found floating in the Pearl River," a peaceful stream just across the street from the station. He was kind enough to take the minister outside and point out where the barbed-wire fence would have to be erected, how the windows would be boarded up, and where on the roof he would have to station fifty armed guards. When they went back inside, Smith said he was ready to sign the contract. Nothing happened during or after his appearance, and he eventually was given one more showing on each of the two stations.

Though Smith did not win a seat in Congress and though Negro registration did not pick up significantly because of his campaign, he did win the right to run, the right to be accepted as a Democratic candidate in the counties and in the precincts, and the right to appear on television during his campaign.

The President's position is clear. After the shooting spree in Ruleville, he said: "I hope everybody will register in this country. . . . I commend those who are making the effort to register every citizen. They deserve the protection of the United States Government, the protection of the states, the protection of the local communities . . . And if it requires extra legislation, and extra force, we shall do that."

The Results

What have been the results of all the government's cases? "We have moved from no Negro registration to token registration," Attorney Doar pointed out. None of the cases has yet been won outright; some are on appeal and others have not been given a hearing so far. But in the counties where suits have been brought, the most obvious and blatant discrimination against Negro voters has ceased. Schoolteachers with Ph.D.'s, for instance, have recently been found qualified to pass the registration tests. And the department has, in effect, won one case though it is still pending. A temporary injunction against a registrar was obtained from the Court of Appeals before the case was decided in the district court. "We really bulled through on that one," John Doar recalled happily. The registrar is now in contempt, while the district court has yet to settle down for its long litigation over the issues involved. Furthermore, according to Aaron Henry, the head of the Mississippi COFO operation, if the Justice Department wins its omnibus case against the state and its voting laws it "will be a real breakthrough." The case is expected to open this month.

In the other pending cases, the department may win decisions finding a pattern of discrimination in the counties involved. The department will then, Doar told me, "in effect supervise voter registration there after that."

In Macon County, Alabama, for instance, where only nine Negroes had been able to register in a two-and-a-half year period, the department won such a case in 1961 with "dramatic" results. The decision had included a specific order to the registrars to report monthly on how many applied for registration, how many passed, how many were turned down, and for what reasons. In addition, the department had won the right of continuing record inspection. For three months after the court order, Negroes were allowed to correct inconsequential errors on their registration forms and applicants were processed at the rate of forty-four a day. As the shock of the court order began to wear off, however, another and more specific court order had to be issued to bring the registrars in line. The supervision of Mississippi registrars, obviously, will be a full-time job in itself.

Doar uses Macon County, where more than 2,800 Negroes are now registered, as an example of what lies ahead for Mississippi. "Every month now," he told me, "reports come across my desk from the registrar there, giving all the figures. We can check the reports by inspecting the records and if anything looks wrong send a man right to the spot."

DOWN the hall from Doar's office in the Department of Justice is a three-room section containing several machines that project microfilm onto screens for easy reading. Some fifteen members of the staff, including several Negroes, analyze and abstract the thousands upon thousands of Southern registration records that have already been photographed. Mississippi's records are at last beginning to come in.

RALEIGH, N.C.
NEWS & OBSERVER
D. 127,214 S. 139,363

JAN 18 1963

Area Council Head to Speak At Institute

KINSTON—The first session of Kinston's Human Relations Institute this year will be held Sunday, Feb. 10, at 8 p.m.

James McBride Dabbs of Maysville, S. C., president of the Southern Regional Council, Inc. since 1957, will be the featured speaker. He previously taught at Coker College in Hartsville, S. C for 20 years and was head of the English department there for 12 years.

At the second session, Feb. 17, Dr. Walter N. Ridley, president of the Elizabeth City State Teachers College, will give the address.

The Institute is sponsored by the Lenoir County Inter-Racial Committee.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
ARGUS
W. 9,214

JAN 18 1963

Desegregation Topic For Ga. Discussants

ATLANTA — A conference of southern churchmen and others concerned with regional race relations discussed integrating a desegrating South, Dec. 27-29 in Underwood Auditorium, located on the campus of Vanderbilt University in Nashville.

The consultation was sponsored by the Fellowship of Southern Churchmen and the Southern Regional Council.

The meetings began at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, December 27, with an address by the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., on "An Analysis of the Ethical Demands of Integration in the South." President James McBride Dabbs, of Mayesville, S. C., president of the Southern Regional Council, closed the conference at noon Saturday, Dec. 29, with a talk on "Observations and Insights."

Three studies of desegregation situations were presented and discussed. Thomas Hammond and Paul Gaston of the history department of the University of Virginia reported on "The Public Schools in Charlottesville, Va."; Sarah Herbin and Tartt Bell of the American Friends Service Committee on "Equal Employment in Greensboro, N.C.," and Dr. Samuel Williams, pastor of Friendship Baptist Church in Atlanta, and president of the Atlanta branch of the NAACP, on "The Role of Religion in Desegregation Efforts in Atlanta."

RICHMOND, VA.
AFRO-AMERICAN
W. 14,967

JAN 19 1963

Vivian Carter Mason to spark YW annual dinner

The annual membership dinner meeting of Phyllis Wheatley Branch YWCA is scheduled for Thursday, January 31, at 7 p.m., at Virginia Union University.

Mrs. Vivian Carter Mason, of Norfolk, Virginia, will be the guest speaker. She is a former program director with the YWCA in Baltimore, and Norfolk. For a number of years she was director of Social Service with the Department of Welfare in NYC. She has written special articles and newspapers columns.

Mrs. Mason is an ardent civic worker. She is the founder of One Hundred Women in New York City and the Women's Council for Interracial Co-operation of Norfolk.

She was the third national president of the National Council of Negro Women, Inc., presently serving on the board of directors of this organization and the board of the Southern Regional Council on Human Relations.

SHE HAS traveled extensively in Europe, the United States, and West Indies.

She was with the Peace Corps in Washington, D.C. for approximately one year. She returned to Norfolk to fulfill commitments in regards to education and experimental school projects.

In 1962, a new book "American Women — The Changing Image," appeared by Benson Press. Mrs. Mason contributed the chapter on education.

SHE HAS received many honors for outstanding service from the American Cancer Society, the March of Dimes, the Omega Psi Phi Fraternity, Zeta Phi Beta Sorority, the National Council of Negro Women and others.

Mrs. Mason is now engaged in public relations in Norfolk.

Invitations have been released to the membership. For reservation call MI. 3-2803, deadline, Tuesday, January 29.

NORFOLK, VA.
JOURNAL AND GUIDE
SAT. 33,495

JAN 19 1963

South, Properly Led, Can Set Racial Progress Pace

From The Charlotte Observer

DR. DOW Kirkpatrick, a Methodist minister who has served both northern and southern churches, made an interesting prediction when he said the South will solve its "race problem" before the North does.

We hold with our Methodist brother, but with an important condition attached. The hedge is that the South must continue following the leadership offered by such men as former Gov. Leroy Collins of Florida and former Gov. Luther Hodges of North Carolina.

These men — joined belatedly by Ernest Vandiver of Georgia and Lindsay Almond of Virginia — guided their states peaceably into the first stages of desegregation. They created a climate in which the inevitable break with racial tradition was made calmly and sensibly.

Gov. Terry Sanford took over from Hodges and became a leading spokesman for racial moderation in the South. Florida elected segregationist Farris Bryant to succeed Collins, but he has not attempted to turn the clock back. Vandiver's appeal to reason in Georgia helped pave the way for racial moderate Carl Sanders to succeed him.

We now have the example of Oxford to demonstrate the probable results of the kind of leadership offered by Gov. Ross Barnett of Mississippi and Gov. John Patterson of Alabama. Five years ago we had Little Rock to guide us in shaping the South's racial future.

Out of this ferment has come the realization that people in some parts of the South have been misled by politicians. Their solution to the "race problem" will be delayed to the extent that false prophets continue to have influence.

The Methodist minister says that the southern people generally have a warmer person-to-person relationship with Negroes than northerners do. Much of this is paternalistic and stems from the old master-slave relationship with agree that southern whites and Negroes have a better foundation on which to build understanding.

We have a common birthplace, shared memories and countless thousands of interracial friendships that developed in spite of enforced separation of the races.

The problem, as Kirkpatrick stated, is to shift this existing good will out of the master-servant context and shape it to a society in which color is not synonymous with second place.

Enlightened leadership in the South no longer is keyed to "keeping the Negro in his place" but to providing a place for the Negro that is in keeping with his individual rights of citizenship and his personal abilities.

The Negro In The Vanguard

James M[illegible]de Dabbs of Maysville, S. C., president of Southern [illegible] Council, expressed himself thusly: "The Neg[illegible] [illegible]adership in [illegible]h. It is he who ma[illegible] [illegible]he [illegible]sponds, or more a[illegible] [illegible]ons now takin[illegible]

ATLANTA, GA.
WORLD
D. 29,500

JAN 27 1963

Convocation Today At A.U. Center

The annual joint Atlanta University Center Convocation will be held Sunday, Jan. 27 at 3:00 p. m. in Sisters Chapel, Spelman College campus. The speaker will be Rabbi Jacob Rothschild of the Jewish Temple of Atlanta.

Rabbi Rothschild, who is chairman of the Community Relations Committee of the Jewish Community Council, is on the Executive Board of the Southern Regional Council and is a member of the Board of the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

The public is invited to attend.

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
NEWS-JOURNAL
SUN. 36,784

JAN 27 1963

New Trend Predicted In Race Relations

A new trend in race relations is moving slowly across the South and may put the South in the leadership in building a truly democratic society in America, the Florida Council on Human Relations was told yesterday afternoon in its annual meeting here.

Addressing the state organization's dinner at Bethune Cookman College was Paul Anthony of Atlanta, field director for the Southern Regional Council. Anthony substituted for Wiley Brandt, also of Atlanta, an attorney who is conducting a voter education drive in the South for the S.R.C. Brandt missed his flight out of Atlanta and could not make the meeting.

BRANDT

Anthony cited such movements as the one by 27 Methodist ministers in Mississippi who announced their determination to do something to aid desegregation of schools in Mississippi; as the minister of the largest Methodist church in Mississippi announced his support of those 27 when they were attacked by segregationists; of the Governor of North Carolina declaring his support of merit employment on the state level and urging private industry to do the same; and of top businessmen in Birmingham, Ala., holding breakfast meetings weekly with Negro leaders.

"We have been saddled in the South with what we consider an ingenious procedure of 'tokenism'—a way to avoid the intent of court decisions," he said. "We have shoved a handful of Negro children into a sea of hostile White faces, and prided ourselves on our sense of inventiveness."

"But we haven't been smart at all. We've merely been indulging in one of the oldest practices in America. We're only catching up to an old American farce."

Anthony said the South yet can build the democratic society the World expects this nation to have.

"Ours is not a crusading organization, but we also are not just a band of people who want to do right," Anthony said. "There is no way we can have a committee meeting and have a good community, or just suddenly talk with the Mayor and achieve this good society. We must discipline ourselves with patience and realize we must never let an injustice remain, for in this way we have victims of the injustice who never can be compensated. Every man denied his equal opportunity and expression of his capability is another man damned. Every individual who is made to walk without dignity as a citizen is a person scarred." He urged all members of the council to support the organization's role as mediator in troubled areas and in urging progress in the South's desegregation move, putting emphasis on job opportunity.

The board of directors authorized the hiring of a new executive director by June 1st, contingent on raising the necessary funds in the budget.

Elected president of the Florida Council was Dr. Ralph Dreger, Jacksonville University professor, who replaces Mabel Norris Chesley, News-Journal associate editor.

Other officers are: Mrs. Henrine Banks, Daytona Beach, vice president; Dr. H. Franklin Williams, Miami, secretary; and Herbert Davidson, Daytona Beach, treasurer. Members of the executive board are: Mrs. Francis Miles, Daytona Beach; Rev. Caxton Doggett, Winter Park; Dr. Richard V. Moore, Daytona Beach; Rabbi J. Marshall Taxay, Clearwater; and Mrs. Chesley.

New members of the board of directors are: Mrs. Patricia Chesley, Gainesville; V. C. Johnson, Dinsmore; Mrs. George Lewis II, Tallahassee; and Mrs. Wilhelmina Rutledge, Jacksonville.

The organization set up a budget of $14,962, which includes $6,975 from the Southern Regional Council, to aid in the work to better race relations in Florida. Some $2,000 was contributed by the nearly 125 members attending yesterday's meeting. The rest is to be raised by other contributions and memberships.

ATLANTA, GA.
JOURNAL-CONSTITUTION
SUN. 502,157

JAN 20 1963

Negroes Here Step Up Voter Registration Campaign

Atlanta's All-Citizen Registration Committee has stepped up plans to increase Negro voter registration this year, especially in Fulton County areas outside the Atlanta city limits.

The committee, after a meeting recently, approved plans for a "comprehensive campaign to increase registration in the Negro community," according to committee cochairmen Jesse Hill Jr. and Dr. C. A. Bacote.

The campaign will center on Negroes included on the 15,500-plus purge list and the "problem of the very low numbers of registered voters in the communities of Fulton County outside the Atlanta city limits.

The committee plans to contact those Negroes on the pending purge "to prevent the loss of registered voters.

The "crash program" to register new voters, especially those outside the city limits, will consist of two phases, Mr. Hill said.

ONE is directed at the heavy courthouse traffic of persons purchasing license tags and paying taxes. The second is directed at unregistered high school students.

Schedules have already been made for the mass registration of prep students from Howard, Washington, Turner, Carver and Price High Schools.

The All-Citizens Registration Committee was founded in 1946 shortly after the "white primary" was declared unconstitutional by the federal court. It has co-ordinated the voter registration efforts of Negroes since then.

AN ATLANTA attorney, meanwhile, reported that a recent voter education project for the Southern Regional Council was responsible for registering 27,839 Negroes in Atlanta, Memphis, Chattanooga, Knoxville, Baton Rouge, Jackson and southeast Virginia.

Wiley Branton, the attorney, said some of the drives had affected the outcome of elections, including the defeat of Rep. James C. Davis and the election of Leroy Johnson to the Georgia State Senate.

NEWARK, N.J.
AFRO-AMERICAN
SAT. 6,649

FEB 2 1963

WILEY BRANTON

WILEY BRANTON, Bluff (Ark.) attorney heading up a Southern Regional Council voter education project, last week in Atlanta said the campaign which resulted in 27,839 new voters in seven areas was responsible for the defeat of Rep. James C. Davis and the election of Leroy Johnson to the Georgia state senate.

* * *

MIAMI BEACH, FLA.
TIMES
W. 3,400

FEB 2 1963

Phil Ossofer Says . . .

It is gratifying to know that those religious leaders who met in the recent Conference of Religion and Race in Chicago have agreed that no religion in America can practice its convictions and preach racism. How we hope the representatives of the many denominations of Christianity who attended will return home and convince their brother clergymen to speak out for justice and dignity for all mankind.

An excellent example of the needed attitude is portrayed in Rabbi Mantiband of Temple B'nai Israel in Hattiesburg, Miss., who has continually spoken out against racial inequality. The October, 1962 issue of "New South", published by the Southern Regional Council, describes his outstanding courage against those who would maintain Southern tradition. The Rabbi decided early that in his personal life there would be no distinction between any of God's children, and vowed never to sit in the presence of bigotry and by his silence seem to give consent.

When he was asked by his Temple board to discontinue speaking on race, he refused. His congregation affirmed his valiant decision. He preached on the Emeett Till lynching and "What Mississippi has to atone for." He raised his voice in shame and anger over the unprosecuted lynch murder of Mack Parker.

He and Mrs. Mantinband have long welcomed Negro company in their home. When White Protestant neighbors inquire about the guests, he says. "They're some Christians friends of mine."

Isn't it ironic that one who has accepted Jesus Christ is living a true Christian life while his "Christian neighbors are not? How blind are the blind!

It is a shameful fact that in Mississippi the Christ light is darkened in the hearts of many of those who claim to worship Him, while it beams brightly in the heart of one who has not recognized Him, but who apparently lives His teachings. It is something to think about.

MIAMI, FLA.
TIMES
W. - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

FEB 9 1963

LITTLE ROCK ATTORNEY IS SPEAKER

Thursday, Feb. 14 is a date everyone should remember because it is not only St. Valentine's Day, but also the day a very distinguished man will come to Miami to deliver the main address at a Crusade For Voters' mass meeting. The setting is in St. John's Baptist Church, 1328 NW 3rd Ave. at 8:15 p.m. and the man this article reference to is Attorney Wiley A. Branton, director of the Voted Education Project of Atlanta, Ga.

The Voter Education Project (VEP) which Atty. Branton heads is a special program of the Southern Regional Council, engaged in research relating to the causes for low registration of voters in 11 southern states. This is a cooperative effort, which includes the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) NAACP, National Urban League, Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC) and the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, as well as many local organizations.

Weldon Rougeau, field secretary for CORE and a representative of the VEP is currently in Miami working in voter registration.

Attorney Branton's greatest legal achievement lies in the desegregation of public schools in Little Rock in 1957 when he represented the 13 Negro students seeking admission. He has also worked on the Freedom Ride and Sit-in cases.

Among a few of the many awards and honors bestowed upon Atty. Branton are the C. Francis Stratford award by the National Bar Association at Chicago in 1958, the Democratic Minority Conference award at Los Angeles in 1959, the Arkansas Conference NAACP award for outstanding legal work in the field of civil rights in 1958 and on Sept. 14, 1962(Life Magazine cited him as one of the 100 most important young men and women in the U. S. As you can see, one will certainly miss a treat by failing to see and hear Atty. Branton.

Others on the program include Miss Bertha Johnson, soloist; the Dorsey Junior High School choir, and Dr. H. Franklin Williams, vice president of the University of Miami.

KINSTON, N.C.
FREE PRESS
D. 10,783

FEB 9 1963

Using Area Leaders

The program of the 8th annual Institute on Human Relations which opens at 8 p. m. Sunday in the Lenoir County Court-house is featuring state and regional leaders in the field of human relations this year. This approach should enhance the sponsoring Inter-Racial Committees objective of developing better race relations in this community.

The first speaker will be Dr. James N. Dabbs of Mayesville, S. C., who is president of the Southern Regional Council, Inc. He is an author, lecturer, teacher and student of human relations. He has spent many years studying the region and its problems. He has a contagious sense of humor. Those who know and appreciate his messages describe him as "a reasoned student and teacher."

The other speaker will be Dr. Walter N. Ridley of Elizabeth City. He is president of the Elizabeth City Teachers College. He speaks at 8 p. m. on February 17. His experience in human relations parallels a great deal of North Carolina's experience and action in this field. His observations should provoke further helpful thought. He is a "good neighbor" who seeks to help.

The entire program should appeal to a wide cross-section of citizens from Lenoir and adjacent counties. The fact that this is the eighth in a successful series indicates the sponsoring committee's efforts have met with continuing approval in these yearly Institutes.

GAINESVILLE, FLA.
SUN
D. 14,443 S. 14,683

FEB 13 1963

The New South Is Confab Topic

"Changing perspectives throughout the South" will be considered at the sixth annual institute of the Gainesville Council on Human Relations Friday and Saturday in the Presbyterian Student Center.

James McBride Dabbs, author of "The Southern Heritage" and "The Road Home" will be the keynote speaker.

He'll talk at 7 p.m. Friday. Dabbs is a plantation owner from Mayesville, S. C. and president of the Southern Regional Council on Human Relations.

Group discussions directed by experts in anthropology, sociology, psychology and religion will begin at 9 a.m. Saturday. After a covered dish luncheon, Sociologist Mary L. Divers will speak to the group.

BALTIMORE, MD.
AFRO-AMERICAN
W. 28,778

FEB 23 1963

Rabbi from Mississippi calls freedom rides publicity stunts

BALTIMORE

"Sit - ins, wade - ins and freedom rides were nothing but grandstand stunts for publicity."

The speaker, Rabbi Charles Mantinband, was addressing an audience at the Har Sinai Temple, Tuesday, on the subject: "The Deep South Is My Pulpit."

Rabbi Mantinband, a native of the South, whose congregation is in Hattiesburg, Miss., is thusly described in the Adult Institute program sponsored here by Jewish reform congregations and the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation:

An "outstanding advocate of civil rights and a vigorous opponent of segregation and of White Citizens Councils."

* * *

THE RABBI said during the lecture: "I don't like the word 'gradualism.' It will take something radical to work our way out of this Amercian dilemma."

But, he said, "I score the sit-ins and the freedom riders."

Rabbi Mantinband complained of "Yankee outsiders" leaving their "own soiled homes" to demonstrate in Mississippi.

He also chided Northern Rabbis for demonstrating in Mississippi without first consulting him.

"The greatest experts on Mississippi," he said, "are those persons who have never been there or those demonstrators who are there for 48 hours to get arrested and their names in the papers."

* * *

ACCORDING TO the rabbi, Mississippi is not as bad as it seems to be.

"It is dangerous to generalize," he said, "even about Mississippi.

"Mississippi is not a jungle. There are some other parts of the country equally as disgraceful.

"The best as well as the worst comes out of Mississippi."

To emphasize his point, he said that Leontyne Price, a Metropolitan Opera star, sang before an integrated audience of some 4,000 persons in her native Mississippi.

* * *

HE ALSO mentioned that Nobel Prize winner William Faulkner, Pulitzer prize winner Hodding Carter, and Olympic gold medal winner Ralph Boston, were all Mississippians.

"The way to measure Mississippi in 1963 is not to contrast her with other states," said the rabbi, "but with Mississippi in 1953 and 1943."

"We are making progress," he said.

* * *

RABBI MANTINBAND told of his own feelings, discussed the mood of the South and gave his views of the colored man's point of view.

He said that he decided, after searching his conscience and thinking the situation through very clearly, "never to sit in the presence of bigotry and hatred without giving my protest."

When he invited colored members of his congregation to his home, he said, it caused his Hattiesburg neighbors some embarrassment, but "they soon learned that it was my way."

Speaking about the South, Rabbi Mantinband said: "The South is rebellious. The word is 'Never!'

"Never in history has the Federal Government been in such ill - repute. The Governor (Ross Barnett) is considered a hero. Neighboring governors have pledged, with state funds, never to change.

* * *

"SOUTHERNERS no longer talk logically or listen to reason.

"The scene at the campus (University of Mississippi) was enough to make every American sick at heart."

With reference to Hitler, he warned the predominantly Jewish audience of the consequence of prejudice and hatred.

"The colored man is in revolt," said the rabbi, "but there is great unrest and confusion.

"There is discord and a lack of coordination. Their greatest leaders are not without doubts.

"Then there is the call for black supremacy. They have the NAACP and the Urban League.

* * *

"BUT THE most respected agency in the South is the Southern Regional Council (of which he is a member), whose purpose is to improve the entire South through extensive research and education."

With a prophet's glance into the future, the rabbi said: "Some day we will realize the folly of our day and set our house in order."

NEWSWEEK
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 1,529,440

FEB 25 1963

1962

INTEGRATION: Southern Regional Council

100 Years Later

Sitting with a few friends in his White House study, Abraham Lincoln paused for a moment to steady his hand before signing the Emancipation Proclamation. He wanted history to find no tremor in his signature, no sign of the months of legal, strategic, and social doubts he had put behind him. When at last he acted, he rested his case not on his own moral compunctions about slavery but on "military necessity." It was an act of war; Lincoln could only hope that, in peace, the two races "could gradually live themselves out of their old relation to each other."

Have they? In this centennial year of emancipation, the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights handed President Kennedy a Lincoln's birthday present last week—a 246-page report taking the measure of the Negro's progress in the 100 years since Lincoln struck his chains. "We have come a far journey," the report concluded. And indeed, that same day, a President of the U.S. could welcome several hundred Negro VIP's, ranging from U.S. Court of Appeals Judge Thurgood Marshall to singer, dancer, actor, and Hollywood Clansman Sammy Davis Jr., to a White House reception. Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy and the Lyndon Johnsons posed with some of the visitors (photo). It marked another symbolic milestone on that painfully slow journey.

The commission found many such milestones clustered in the last fifteen years—a time, so it said, of "national awakening of the American conscience" and of a quickening tempo of progress. "Most momentous" was the Supreme Court's school desegregation ruling of 1954. "From this decision," the report said, "has flowed a series of court decisions making it clear that segregation is a dead letter in every area of public activity." If progress toward integration was slow, events had settled some issues: "Violence will not be tolerated . . . closed schools are not an answer; and, as time passes, the courts will demand something more than token compliance." The decision, besides, had injected new energy into the efforts of civil-rights groups on other fronts: voting, employment, housing. "As the century following emancipation draws to a close," the report said, "more forces are working for the realization of civil rights for all Americans than ever before in history."

But the picture was not all so sanguine—particularly for those Northerners who take the comfortable view that race is a Southern problem. In the South, the report said, "the irresistible force is moving the object which was thought to be immovable . . . It is [in the North] that the last battle for equal rights may be fought in America." The barriers there—de facto housing segregation, overcrowded ghetto schools, job discrimination—are "subtler forms of denial and the more difficult to eliminate."

Big Three: Not surprisingly, the acceleration of the Negro's progress has made him all the more ambitious and impatient to break the remaining barriers. At Detroit's Wayne State University last week, the new urgency and militancy pervaded a joint strategy symposium of the top executive officers of the NAACP, the Congress of Racial Equality, and the Urban League.

The NAACP's Roy Wilkins plumped

Dick Darcey—Washington Post

Lincoln Day: The John F. Kennedys pose with Mrs. Robert Kennedy, the Lyndon Johnsons, and (standing, from left) Mr. and Mrs. Erwin Griswold, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Weaver, Mrs. Leroy Johnson, Johnson, Roy Wilkins, Mr. and Mrs. James Farmer, Mr. and Mrs. Spottswood Robinson III, Mrs. Whitney Young for "selective" local boycotts, using the Negro's $20 billion buying power as a lever for equal job opportunity. The Urban League's Whitney Young promised "crash programs" to break down hiring barriers—not so much for Negro professionals, as in the past, as for "the 80 per cent . . . who could have a given job if they were white." And CORE's James Farmer said a cadre of young leaders would soon be fanning out, North and South, from "freedom task force" training schools that teach the history and philosophy of non-violent action—and the hard lessons of experience in the sit-ins and Freedom Rides.

"We now have new laws, new language," Young summed up, "and everyone is talking very sweetly. The problem from this point forward is . . . in implementing it [the law]." The alternatives? Young raised some of the specters: more crime, bigger welfare bills, waxing strength for such anti-white sects as the Black Muslims. Farmer saw the darker threat of bloodshed, North and South.

"If we have to wait another 100 years, there will be violence," he said. "The mood of the Negro is such that he cannot wait another 100 years. Frankly, we can't go another 25 years—or even fifteen years—in our Northern cities without violence. And in the South many of the homes—if not most—are armed. Had it not been for non-violent groups, there would have been violence long ago. Unless the process can be speeded up, the non-violent forces will fight a losing battle."

Progress or Publicity?

The record—on paper—was impressive. Since 1961, the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity had been rounding up the signatures of major government contractors on "Plans for Progress"—voluntary action programs to eliminate job discrimination. John F. Kennedy himself boosted the program as a "historic step forward," and the figures seemed to bear him out. To date, 105 companies have taken the pledge—a source of pride along the New Frontier.

But even within the family, differences have cropped up. The committee, chaired by Vice President Lyndon Johnson, has its own "doves" and "hawks"—its advocates of friendly persuasion and its apostles of compulsory action. Executive director John Field was known among insiders as a hawk. Accordingly, when he announced his resignation two weeks ago, speculation buzzed that the policy split was at least one reason. The talk grew when executive vice chairman Hobart Taylor, by reputation a dove, was named Field's successor in effect (though he will carry the title of executive chairman on the committee's newly revised organization chart).

How effective has persuasion been in practice? Not very, according to a survey by the respected, interracial Southern Regional Council in its home town, Atlanta. Among 24 Plans for Progress firms with offices, plants, or regional headquarters there, the council found only three—Lockheed, Western Electric, and Goodyear—that showed a "vigorous desire to create job opportunities." Four others could offer some evidence that they tried to comply. But the remaining seventeen, despite the pledges, had "paid varying degrees of attention to Plans for Progress, ranging from ignorance to indifference."

But Not Here: A few, in fact, didn't even know what the plans were; one regional manager called the program "Alliance for Progress." Others dismissed them out of hand: "I have other things to worry about, like selling merchandise." Some felt they had done their part by hiring Negro janitors. Some pleaded the pressure of local custom. "We have to be localized in Atlanta," an airline man said. And a regional official for a national firm explained: "When we signed this Plans for Progress thing, we signed it as a corporation as a whole. It doesn't mean that down here we have to hire them."

As the report reached Washington last week, one man close to the President's committee saw comfort in the fact that as many as three firms were complying. But others were dismayed that seventeen were not. Berl I. Bernhard, staff director for the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, found it a "highly disturbing" statistic that "raised questions about the other Plans for Progress promises." A Southern Regional Council official offered a bitter answer: "The Plans for Progress program has caused a lot more publicity than progress."

PENSACOLA, FLA.
JOURNAL
D- 52,230

FEB 27 1963

College Desegregation Up

IN THE LAST TWO YEARS some 89 colleges, both public and private, have desegregated in the 17 Southern and border states, most of them "with neither fuss nor fanfare," according to a Southern Regional Council compilation just made public.

This is an increase of 30 per cent in the number of desegregated colleges and universities since 1961 in the area covered, a rise from 108 public and 94 private to 161 public and 130 private. A few restrict Negro enrollment to graduate and professional level.

Now all Southern States have at least one desegregated institution of higher learning, including the University of Alabama which has been under court order since 1956 but which has no Negro students now.

Some other schools may have no Negro students but statements of governing boards have indicated admission regardless of race, or they are under court order.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
WESTERN EDITION
D. 100,000

PAGE ONE CLIPPED

FEB 28 1963

U.S. Accused of Planning Illegal School Integration

9649

By CLAUDE SITTON

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, Feb. 27—The legally discredited "salt-and-pepper" desegregation plan has been accepted, in effect, by the Kennedy Administration for schools serving Southern military bases.

Such a system provides one school for whites, one for Negroes and one for pupils choosing to attend desegregated classes. Its proposed use by public schools was rejected by the United States Court of Appeals in both the Fifth and Sixth Circuits.

The disclosure that the Health, Education and Welfare Department was taking steps that would result in a "salt-and-pepper" system at six installments drew angry reaction today from civil rights leaders. Their comments ranged from "ridiculous" to "incredible."

One high Government official in Washington conceded: "You would hardly call it a blow for freedom."

Integration Ordered

The situation grew out of efforts by the Health, Education and Welfare Department to carry out a policy decision last year by its leader, Abraham Ribicoff, now Senator from Connecticut. He held that segregated schools were not "suitable" for children of personnel living on military bases.

The department then announced that, unless schools serving the bases were desegregated before September, 1963, it would build and operate class-

Continued on Page 1, Column 7

U.S. Is Accused of Illegal Plan To Integrate Its Pupils in South

9649

Continued from Page 1, Col. 3

rooms for the military dependents. This constituted an implied warning that the Government would withdraw the approximately $180 a year per pupil it contributes to school systems in these Federal areas.

In a companion Federal action, the Justice Department filed desegregation suits against some of the 242 Southern and border state school systems receiving these funds. The legal right to initiate these suits has been challenged, and the courts have not yet issued a final ruling.

Following the refusal of local school officials to promise desegregation, the Health, Education and Welfare Department moved to implement the Ribicoff ruling. But it decided to limit its immediate application to elementary schools and to those bases where a "substantial number" of pupils was involved—that is, more than 200.

Construction Planned

The installations affected included the following: Ft. McClellan, Ala., with 231 white pupils and 19 Negroes living on the base; Ft. Rucker, Ala., 878 whites and 14 Negroes; Ft. Stewart, Ala., 271 whites and 23 Negroes; Robins Air Force Base, Ga., 657 whites and 8 Negroes; Ft. Jackson, S.C., 185 whites and 18 Negroes; and Myrtle Beach Air Force Base, S.C., 354 whites and 20 Negroes.

James M. Quigley, Assistant Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, said the department would build classroom space at each installation sufficient to house all its children of elementary school age. He noted that under Public Law No. 874 the responsibility for providing "suitable" education extended only to children of base residents.

Mr. Quigley, who was reached by telephone at his Washington office, said the estimated goal of construction was $2,000,000. Most of the projects likely will go to local contractors.

Local education officials will be offered the opportunity to operate these new schools, according to the Assistant Secretary.

Mr. Quigley said pupils might continue to attend segregated schools off the base if they so desired. And for each one who does, the local system will be paid the usual amount of Federal funds.

Some education officials in the affected areas have been quoted as having predicted that many of the white children would choose to remain in the segregated schools. Some observers said they believed this would leave the base institutions with an almost all-Negro group of pupils.

Mr. Quigley agreed that this might be the practical result of the Government plan and admitted that in other circumstances it would not be acceptable under the Supreme Court's anti-segregation decision.

"I think if this were being put forward by a school district as a suitable way of complying with the 1954 Supreme Court decision, it would be turned down," he said.

Mr. Quigley contended that because of the local officials' refusal to desegregate their systems, the department had no alternative but to construct classrooms for children on the base. Nevertheless he said he did not believe military officials had authority to force the pupils to use them.

One Washington source said this course of action was dictated by Administration officials who wanted to avoid an outright withdrawal of school-aid funds. They feared this would lead to a controversy with the Southern bloc in Congress.

Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, called on Anthony J. Celebrezze, the department's present secretary, to scrap the salt-and-pepper plan.

Policy Called 'Incredible'

In a statement issued in New York, Mr. Wilkins asserted:

"It is incredible that the Federal Government would adopt as an official policy in February, 1963, a program which the Assistant Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare admits would be thrown out by the United States Supreme Court if a local school board adopted it.

"The department's newly announced plan for continued subsidizing of Jim Crow schools nullifies the modest steps announced by former Secretary Abraham Ribicoff."

Leslie W. Dunbar, executive director of the Southern Regional Council, said in Atlanta that if the department went ahead with the plan, "the Federal Government will appear ridiculous."

"One, it is establishing a tri-school plan repeatedly disallowed by the Federal courts," said Mr. Dunbar. "Two, it is saying, in effect, that segregated schooling is not 'unsuitable' for white children. Three, the Federal Government is offering to hire the services of local school administrators who will not operate their own schools according to the Constitution."

The Washington Post
WASHINGTON, D.C.
D. 407,089 S. 474,073

FEB 28 1963

Segregation Foes Rap On-Base School Plans

By Robert E. Baker
Staff Reporter

The Federal Government was accused yesterday of helping to perpetuate school segregation with its program to build integrated schools on military bases in the hard-core South.

The criticism came after James M. Quigley, Assistant Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, conceded that the program could establish a three-school system around the bases — an integrated school on base and segregated schools for whites and Negroes off base.

"Incredible," was the reaction of Roy Wilkins, Executive Secretary of the NAACP in New York, who called for a change in the HEW program.

"Fantastic . . . ludicrous," said Leslie Dunbar, Director of the Southern Regional Council in Atlanta.

"We have to be practical and have a workable program," said Quigley, who also indicated that the Defense Department may decide to operate the base schools in a manner more satisfactory to civil rights advocates.

HEW announced last week that it will build integrated schools for the children of base personnel at Ft. Jackson and Myrtle Air Force Base in South Carolina, Ft. Stewart and Robins Air Force Base in Georgia and Ft. McClellan and Ft. Rucker in Alabama.

Children on these installations now attend public schools off-base. The local school boards have been receiving Federal grants to cover the cost. HEW's action came after the school boards refused to desegregate the schools.

Quigley said yesterday that the local school boards would [illegible]ven the option of operat[illegible] on-base schools and [illegible]eive grants for [illegible] said that the [illegible]e probably [illegible] choice of [illegible] inte-plan, actually rewarding them financially."

In a tongue-in-cheek editorial, the Atlanta Journal noted that one Tom Linder, an also-ran gubernatorial candidate in 1954, advocated the three-school system as well as predicting the end of the world. Perhaps, said the Journal, another look should be taken at that prediction.

Quigley said HEW had no atuhority to operate the on-base schools once they are built, that either local school boards or the Defense Department would operate them. Perhaps, he said, the Defense Department will direct that all on-base children must attend the on-base schools.

The HEW official said the Department hopes to keep the on-base schools to the elementary level. Accreditation of high schools, he said, would pose a knotty problem.

Quigley also noted that the HEW program was only part of a two-pronged effort by the Federal Government to fight school segregation at Southern military bases. The Justice Department has filed desegregation suits against schools serving Biloxi-Gulfport, Miss., Shreveport, La., and Huntsville and Mobile, Ala.

NORFOLK, VA.
VIRGINIAN-PILOT
D. 5 710

FEB 28 1963

Integrationists Assail U. S. School Plan

By ROBERT E. BAKER

Special to The Virginian-Pilot

WASHINGTON — The federal government was accused Wednesday of helping to perpetuate school segregation with its program to build integrated schools on military bases in the hard-core South.

The criticism came after James M. Quigley, assistant secretary of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW), conceded the program could establish a three-school system around the bases — an integrated school on base and segregated schools for whites and Negroes off-base.

"Incredible," was the reaction of Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the NAACP in New York, who called for a change in the HEW program.

"Fantastic," "ludicrous," said Leslie Dunbar, director of the Southern Regional Council in Atlanta.

"We have to be practical and have a workable program," said Quigley.

HEW announced last week it will build integrated schools for the children of base personnel at Ft. Jackson and Myrtle Air Force Base in South Carolina, Ft. Stewart and Robins Air Force Base in Georgia and Ft. McClellan and Ft. Rucker in Alabama.

Children on these installations now attend public schools off-base. The local school boards have been receiving federal grants to cover the cost. HEW's action came after the school boards refused to desegregate the schools.

Quigley said Wednesday that the local school boards would be given the option of operating the on-base schools and would receive grants for doing so. He said the children on the base probably would be given the choice of attending the on-base integrated schools or the off-base segregated schools.

Both the NAACP and the Southern Regional Council pointed out that federal courts have refused to permit Houston, Dallas and Nashville school boards to set up such three-school systems.

For the NAACP, Wilkins sharply attacked HEW's plan "to continue subsidizing Jim Crow schools." For the Southern Regional Council, Dunbar said:

"Far from penalizing the local school districts for non-compliance with the Constitution, the federal government will be, in the HEW plan, actually rewarding them financially."

Quigley said HEW had no authority to operate the on-base schools once they are built, that either local school boards or the Defense Department would operate them. Perhaps, he said, the Defense Department will direct that all on-base children must attend the on-base schools.

The HEW official said the department hopes to keep the on-base schools to the elementary level. Accrediation of high schools, he said, would pose a knotty problem.

Quigley also said the HEW program was only part of a two-pronged effort by the federal government to fight school segregation at southern military bases. The Justice Department has filed desegregation suits against schools serving Biloxi-Gulfport, Miss., Shreveport, La., and Huntsville and Mobile, Ala.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
LABOR REPORTS
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY
FEB 1963

SEPARATE AND UNEQUAL

by Harry Gersh

We know from experience that segregationists will throw out the baby with the bath water, cut off their noses to spite their faces, and in general destroy their culture and economy rather than let Negroes share them - and add to them.

Still, every new manifestation of this self-destructive madness makes us wonder whether the news stories can possibly be true. Are those people for real?

For instance: When the sit-ins began, the sitters-in decided to open the Danville, Virginia, library to all people who loved books or needed to consult books. They didn't think that allowing a Negro to read Carl Sandburg's biography of Lincoln or the latest best-seller was either subversive, unconstitutional, or un-American.

The idea of a Negro borrowing the same copy of Tobacco Road as a white person was too much for Danville's city fathers. So they shut down the library altogether.

That was quite a hardship - on the whites. The Negroes hadn't been allowed in the library anyway. Now it was closed to whites too. Smart.

Eventually they caught on. They reopened the library on a stand-up basis. Negroes and whites could use the library - but they couldn't sit down. After some kids developed hernias and bursitis trying to hold the encyclopedia with one hand while making notes with the other - standing up - the city fathers relented.

Now Danville's library is integrated.

In Greensville, South Carolina, the story began to unfold the same way. But not with the same steps. There the city father's bowed to the inevitable. They opened their library on a racially integrated basis - but they segregated the sexes. Black and white can go to the same library at the same time in Greensville if they're the same sex. But if a high school student sits down in the library next to his girl friend - in come the police.

See. I said these stories are hard to believe.

Which brings up the whole problem of Negro access to culture in the South. The Southern Regional Council looked at the movie programs in 13 Southern cities on a single day to see what was being offered in white theatres and in Negro theatres.

In Richmond, Virginia, for example, whites had a choice of 12 movie programs ranging from The Music Man to Aida, from Bird Man of Alcatraz to Guns of Darkness. Negro moviegoers had a choice of three programs - Tarzan Goes to India, a double bill headed by Don't Knock the Twist, and another headed by Lonely Are the Brave.

Whatever the cultural values of movies, a choice between Tarzan and the Twist is at least a hardship; at most cruel and unusual punishment. That's unconstitutional.

Oddly, the live theatre picture is a lot brighter. Of 23 theatres, 10 are segregated, 13 are not. Still, Negroes living in and around Columbia, Jackson, Savannah, Charlotte, Dallas are barred from the legitimate theatre.

Libraries, museums, theatres, movies are not side issues. Schools are only part of the educational process. An integrated school alongside of a segregated library, museum, theatre means that three-fourths of the community's education facilities are closed to Negroes; and they have only one-fourth the opportunities of whites to learn and progress.

JLC Labor Reports

KANSAS CITY, MO.
STAR
D. 334,790 S. 363,420

MAR 1 1963

WOUNDED IN MISSISSIPPI.

Negro Voter Registration Worker Is Shot.

Greenwood, Miss. (AP) — A barrage of shots fired from a passing car wounded a Negro voter registration leader, a companion reported today.

The registration leader, Jimmy Travis, was hit in the neck near Greenwood late last night. At the Greenwood hospital he was reported in satisfactory condition.

The report on the shooting came from Robert Moses of Greenville, who, with Randolph Blackwell of Atlanta, accompanied Travis.

Travis and Moses, Negroes, are field secretaries for the Student Nonviolent Co-ordinating committee. Blackwell, also a Negro, is associated with the Southern Regional council. Neither Moses nor Blackwell was injured.

KANSAS CITY, MO.
TIMES
D. 330,412

MAR 2 1963

Unite for Vote Drive in South

(© 1963, New York Times News Service.)

Atlanta — Four major civil rights organizations yesterday announced that they were joining forces immediately in a saturation campaign to register Negro voters in Leflore County, Miss.

The action followed the shooting of a Negro registration worker Thursday night on a highway west of Greenwood, seat of the rich farming and industrial county in the heart of the Mississippi Delta.

The victim, 20-year-old James Travis, was moved early yesterday to a Jackson hospital. He was being treated for a gunshot wound in the neck and was expected to recover.

The registration drive was announced here by Wiley A. Branton, director of the Voters Education project. The project was established last year by the Southern Regional council "to find the best ways of increasing the electorate in the South."

ATLANTA, GA.
JOURNAL
D. 257,694

MAR 1 1963

FLEXIBLE TACTICS

Notes on New Realities in Shifting Southern Race Relations History

I

By PAT WATTERS

THE HISTORY of race relations in the South (and its interlocking relationship with present crucial world history) is rapidly shifting, and whole new concepts and situations are only gradually becoming understood and reacted to.

Probably the best succinct presentation of many of these new developments to date was in a speech by Charles F. Wittenstein, Southeast area director of the American Jewish Committee, at that organization's recent annual dinner.

"There was a time," he said, "when we in Atlanta could talk of little but race relations. That time has passed, but for the region as a whole, race remains the central issue. But the way in which that issue is formulated has changed. We no longer wonder 'whether or not,' but we ask 'how' and 'when.' "

TACTICS

The speech goes into how—the tactics, listing as most important direct action, successful on lunch counters and in calling attention to injustices; litigation, most effective in desegregating public institutions, and negotiation, effective in desegregating privately owned facilities.

Negotiation, Mr. Wittenstein pointed out, "requires responsible Negro and white leadership. . . . Neither negotiation or picketing would have ever gotten James Meredith in Ole Miss. Sometimes negotiation has been effective only when combined with direct action or litigation, or when there is the threat that such other tactics may be used."

He cited Albany as an example of misused tactics. "I would liken the city fathers of Albany to the Pharoah in Egypt. Their hearts were hardened and no demonstration could persuade them to modify their policy of massive resistance. This situation was ideally suited for neither direct action nor negotiation, but litigation.

"Finally, a suit was filed by the NAACP — and it will be this suit (or one like it) that will eventually bring desegregation to Albany, not Martin Luther King, not the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee, and not the courageous but futile demonstrations by Negroes of the Albany movement, or their visiting Northern supporters."

He cited the contrast between federal intervention in Oxford and lack of it in Albany, saying the federal government, "rightly or wrongly" never found in Albany a handle like the Meredith court order. He also cited Albany's "ultimate refinement" of the Jackson, Miss., approach of jailing "everybody who publicly demonstrates against Jim Crow," and said an ensuing important debate is on the "duty of the federal government to actively protect its citizens in the exercise of freedom of speech and assembly against police infringement."

Then he went on to say calm negotiation offers the most hope where it is possible in good faith as in Macon and Brunswick.

OBSERVATION

Rounding out the presentation was the observation that Alabama is experiencing an undercurrent of public sentiment against massive resistance which "may be too little and too late but is encouraging," and the point that efforts are underway in Atlanta to translate locally the ideas of the Chicago Conference on Religion and Race.

Overall, this was a hopeful and constructive presentation, as well as informative. An interesting footnote to it, especially on the question of negotiation, is the Southern Regional Council report on results in Atlanta of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity's voluntary Plans for Progress agreements. Twenty-four firms here have signed them; only seven show "evidence of compliance," and "only three appear to have responded with vigor," these being Lockheed, Western Electric and Goodyear.

Mr. Wittenstein's main point would seem to apply here: "In matters of tactics . . . we must always be guided by the test of effectiveness."

Cider From The Georgia Press

Many nations apparently want to wrest in peace.—Kate's Korner in The Dawson County Advertiser.

HOUSTON, TEXAS
CHRONICLE
D. 215,198 S. 243,108

MAR 2 1963

Civil Rights War In Mississippi Declared

Greenwood, Miss. (UPI) — A civil rights leader, angered by the shooting of one of his workers, said Friday the nation's most powerful integrationist groups would pool their resources to make Leflore County "the testing ground for democracy."

The challenge was made to Gov. Ross Barnett in a telegram from Wiley A. Branton of Atlanta, director of the Voter Education Project, who also alerted Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy.

"The campaign will begin immediately. You must anticipate that this campaign will be met by violence and other harassment," Branton told Kennedy.

"We are notifying you in advance so that you can provide at once the necessary federal protection to prevent violence and other forms of intimidation against registration workers and applicants."

Branton said the shooting of Jimmy Travis, 20-year-old Negro voter registration worker, here Thursday night was not the first harassment of such workers.

Travis was struck twice by a fusilade fired at a car in which he and two other civil rights workers were riding. He was reported in satisfactory condition in a Jackson hospital.

Branton said "the time has come for us to pick up the gauntlet. We are accordingly . . . announcing a concentrated, saturation campaign to register every qualified Negro of Leflore County," he said.

The "full resources" of a number of co-operating agencies would be concentrated immediately in the county, Branton said. He listed among these agencies the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference and the Congress of Racial Equality.

NYACK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-NEWS
D. 16,460

MAR 2 1963

Government Warned:

Negro Registration Shoots Off To Fighting Start In Mississippi

GREENWOOD, Miss. (UPI)—A civil rights leader, angered by the shooting of one of his workers, said Friday the nation's most powerful integrationist groups will pool their resources to make LeFlore County "the testing ground for democracy."

The challenge was made to Gov. R. Barnett in a telegram from Wiley A. Branton of Atlanta, director of the Voter Education Project, who also alerted Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy.

"The campaign will begin immediately. You must anticipate that this campaign will be met by violence and other harassment," Branton told Kennedy.

"We are notifying you in advance so that you can provide at once the necessary federal protection to prevent violence and other forms of intimidation against registration workers and applicants."

Branton said the shooting of Jimmy Travis, 20-year-old Negro voter registration worker, here Thursday night was not the first harassment of such workers.

Travis was struck twice by a fusilade fired at a car in which he and two other civil rights workers were riding. One of the other occupants of the car, Bob Moses, Greenville, Miss., field worker for the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), said the shots came from a car containing three white men. Neither Moses nor Randolph Blackwell, a companion, was hit by the bullets.

A 45-caliber bullet lodged near Travis' spine was removed Friday and turned over to the FBI, which is investigating the incident. Travis, who also suffered a shoulder wound, was reported in satisfactory condition in a Jackson hospital.

Branton said "the time has come for us to pick up the gauntlet.

"We are accordingly...announcing a concentrated, saturation campaign to register every qualified Negro of LeFlore County," he said.

The "full resources" of a number of cooperating agencies would be concentrated immediately in the county, Branton said. He listed these agencies as SNCC, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC), and the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE).

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
TRIBUNE
D. 229,837 S. 661,654

MAR 2 1963

Drive Set for Negro Voters in Mississippi

New York Times Service

ATLANTA, Ga. — Four major civil rights organizations Friday announced that they were joining forces immediately in a saturation campaign to register Negro voters in Leflore County, Miss.

The action followed the shooting of a Negro registration worker Thursday night on a highway west of Greenwood, seat of the rich farming and industrial county in the heart of the Mississippi Delta.

THE VICTIM, 20-year-old James Travis, was moved early yesterday to a Jackson, Miss., hospital. He was being treated for a gunshot wound in the neck and was expected to recover.

The registration drive was announced here by Wiley A. Branton, director of the Voter Education Project. The project was established last year by the Southern Regional Council "to find the best ways of increasing the electorate in the South."

Pledging support were the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Southern Christian Leadership Council, the Congress of Racial Equality and the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee.

Branton also telegraphed President Kennedy that he must anticipate that the campaign would be met with violence and should be prepared to provide federal protection. He said this protection had not been extended in the past.

SIMILAR telegrams went to Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy, Gov. Ross Barnett of Mississippi, Dr. John Hannah, chairman of the Federal Civil Rights Commission, and other federal officials.

MOUNT VERNON, N.Y.
WESTCHESTER OBSERVER
W. - CIRC.N.AVAIL.

MAR 2 1963

Civil Rights Reports Given President

WASHINGTON, D. C. — President Kennedy on Feb. 12 was presented a copy of a report on civil rights developments over the past one hundred years by Robert G. Storey, vice chairman of the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights, as part of the Emancipation Proclamation centennial observance at the White House the same evening.

Other participants in the brief ceremony were Commissioners Erwin N. Griswold, Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh, C.S.C., Robert S. Rankin, and Spottswood W. Robinson III, Staff Director Berl I. Bernhard, Clarence Clyde Ferguson Jr., and M. Carl Holman, staff member.

A White House reception attended by government officials and civil rights leaders from all over the nation followed the presentation of the report.

THE TITLE of the report, "Freedom to the Free," comes from the passage in Abraham Lincoln's Second Annual Message to the Congress in December 1862 in which he said: "In giving freedom to the slave, we assure freedom to the free — honorable alike in what we give, and what we preserve. We shall nobly save, or meanly lose, the last, best hope of earth."

Copies of the book-length report may be obtained by writing to the Supt. of Documents, U. S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C. Price $1 (paper cover).

The report was prepared by the commission at President Kennedy's request. In preparing the report, the commission's research staff benefited from a manuscript prepared for the commission by Dr. John Hope Franklin, chairman of the department of history at Brooklyn College, and papers developed under the direction of Dr. Charles Wesley, president of the Association for the Study of Negro Life and History and of Wilberforce (Ohio) University.

THE REPORT briefly sketches in the events which led up to the emancipation decree, then summarizes one hundred years of efforts by Negroes themselves, federal, state, and local governments, and civil rights groups to make equality under the law a reality for the American Negro.

Noting the halting pace at which gains were made in the decades between Reconstruction and the second World War, the report states: "the legally free Negro citizen was denied the franchise, excluded from public office, assigned to inferior and separate schools, herded into ghettos, directed to the back of the bus, treated unequally in the courts of justice, and segregated in his illness, his worship, and even in his death."

Nearly one-half of the commission's report deals with the post-World War II period since, according to Staff Director Bernhard, "the most positive and fundamental civil rights developments have taken place within the past ten or fifteen years."

THE 1954 Supreme Court school desegregation decisions, the voting safeguards provided by the Civil Rights Acts of 1957 and 1960, the ICC rulings of 1961 desegregating travel, and the Presidential executive orders in the fields of employment and housing are among the governmental actions recorded in this section of the report.

The report also chronicles the legal battles of the NAACP, the advances won through negotiation by the Urban League, and the successes gained through the nonviolent, direct-action approach employed in the sit-in movement and the "freedom rides."

ENLIGHTENED state and local governments, and such groups as the Southern Regional Council and some of the major religious bodies, are described as playing significant roles in recent civil rights progress.

In the final chapter of the report, entitled "The Task Ahead," the commission concludes that "We have come a far journey from a distant era in the 100 years since the Emancipation Proclamation. At the beginning of it, there was slavery. At the end, there is citizenship.

" . . . The condition of citizenship is not yet full-bloom or fully realized for the American Negro. There is still more ground to cover. The final chapter of the struggle for equality is yet to be written."

CHARLESTON, S.C.
NEWS AND COURIER
D. 61,500 S. 73,339

MAR 2 1963

Local Boards Given Option On Mixed Military Schools

Official's Remarks Irk Negro Leaders

By ROULHAC HAMILTON

WASHINGTON — Assistant Health, Education and Welfare Secretary James M. Quigley said Friday that local school boards are being given an option to operate integrated federal on-base schools at Myrtle Beach Air Force Base and Fort Jackson.

If the local boards reject the chance to operate the elementary schools which will be established next September at the two military bases, they will be operated by the Defense Department, Quigley said.

The HEW official, who signed the basic order to establish the schools because of refusal of local districts to desegregate, said that his own department has no authority to actually operate the schools through its office of education.

Quigley said that if the local boards elected to operate the on-base integrated schools at the two South Carolina military installations, and at four other southern bases, they would receive federal compensation for doing so.

ATTENDANCE OPTION

In addition, he said, parents of children resident on-base probably would be given the option of sending them to the integrated on-base schools or to segregated off-base local schools. But, the HEW official added, if the Defense Department operates the schools, it is possible that on-base children will be required to attend them, with off-base dependents of service personnel permitted to do so.

Quigley said his department hopes to keep the program for establishment of on-base schools at southern military posts at the elementary level. He said that accreditation of on-base high schools established in the fight against segregation would be a knotty problem.

Quigley conceded that the program set up by HEW, which might be extended to many more southern military bases a year from now, could result in establishment of a three - school system in the South — segregated for whites and Negroes off-base and racially integrated on-base.

the South Carolina military installations, and at four other southern bases, they would receive federal compensation for doing so.

ATTENDANCE OPTION

In addition, he said, parents of children resident on-base probably would be given the option of sending them to the integrated on-base schools or to segregated off-base local schools. But, the HEW official added, if the Defense Department operates the schools, it is possible that on-base children will be required to attend them, with off-base dependents of service personnel permitted to do so.

Quigley said his department hopes to keep the program for establishment of on-base schools at southern military posts at the elementary level. He said that accreditation of on-base high schools established in the fight against segregation would be a knotty problem.

Quigley conceded that the program set up by HEW, which might be extended to many more southern military bases a year from now, could result in establishment of a three - school system in the South — segregated for whites and Negroes off-base and racially integrated on-base.

NEGRO LEADERS

Quigley's remarks brought down on his head accusations from Negro leaders that the federal government was helping perpetuate segregation with the on-base integrated school program.

"Incredible," said Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. "Fantastic, ludicrous," said Leslie Dunbar, director of the Southern Regional Council.

Wilkins said that under the HEW plan, the federal government would "continue subsidizing Jim Crow schools." Dunbar said that "far from penalizing local school districts for non-compliance with the constitution, the federal government will be, in the HEW plan, actually rewarding them financially."

Both Wilkins and Dunbar want HEW to cut off all impacted-area-aid to local school districts which continue segregation, despite the mandatory nature of the law providing such assistance to them.

Quigley said that "we have to be practical and have a workable program." But he indicated that the Defense Department might decide to operate on-base schools in a manner more satisfactory to the Negro leaders, if the local boards elect not to operate them, as appears to be the case in South Carolina.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
WESTERN EDITION
D. 100,000

MAR 2 1963

NEGRO'S SHOOTING SPURS VOTE DRIVE

4 Rights Groups Will Press Mississippi Campaign

By CLAUDE SITTON
Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, March 1 — Four major civil rights organizations announced today that they were joining forces immediately in a saturation campaign to register Negro voters in Leflore County, Miss.

The action followed the shooting of a Negro registration worker last night on a highway west of Greenwood, seat of the rich farming and industrial county in the heart of the Mississippi delta.

The victim, James Travis, 20 years old, was moved early today to a Jackson hospital. He was being treated for a gunshot wound in the neck and was expected to recover.

The registration drive was announced here by Wiley A. Branton, director of the voter was established last year by the Southern Regional Council "to find the best ways of increasing the electorate in the South."

Mr. Branton also telegraphed President Kennedy that he must anticipate that the campaign would be met with violence and should be prepared to provide Federal protection. He said this protection had not been extended in the past.

Similar telegrams went to Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy, Gov. Ross Barnett of Mississippi, Dr. John Hannah, chairman of the Federal Civil Rights Commission, and other Federal officials.

Latest 'Vicious Assault'

"This is but the latest of these vicious assaults against registration workers and applicants in Mississippi," the telegrams said. "This can no longer be tolerated. We are accordingly today announcing a concentrated, saturation campaign to register every qualified Negro in Leflore County."

Mr. Branton said the following organizations, all active in the voter education project, had pledged their full resources to the drive:

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; the Southern Christian Congress of Racial Equality, and the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee.

Leflore joined Sunflower paign would be met with violence and should be prepared to provide Federal protection. He said this protection had not been extended in the past.

Similar telegrams went to Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy, Gov. Ross Barnett of Mississippi, Dr. John Hannah, chairman of the Federal Civil Rights Commission, and other Federal officials.

Latest 'Vicious Assault'

"This is but the latest of these vicious assaults against registration workers and applicants in Mississippi," the telegrams said. "This can no longer be tolerated. We are accordingly today announcing a concentrated, saturation campaign to register every qualified Negro in Leflore County."

Mr. Branton said the following organizations, all active in the voter education project, had pledged their full resources to the drive:

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; the Southern Christian Congress of Racial Equality, and the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee.

Leflore joined Sunflower County, home of Senator James O. Eastland, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and birthplace of the militantly Councils. The locale of the campaign and the forces behind it promise to make it a major test of Mississippi's resistance to racial change and the Kennedy Administration's determination to enforce the rights of Negroes. This was underscored in the three-page announcement issued by Mr. Branton.

"The state of Mississippi has repeatedly thrown down a gauntlet at the feet of would-be Negro voters, not only by the discriminatory practices of the registrars, but also by economic pressures, threats, coercion, physical violence, and death to Negroes seeking the right to vote," he asserted.

Plan to Meet Challenge

"The time has come for us to pick up the gauntlet. Leflore County, Miss., has elected itself as the testing ground for democracy and we are accordingly meeting the challenge there."

Mr. Branton emphasized that methods would be peacable and lawful and that the campaign would be conducted openly through literacy schools, meetings, and individual contacts.

"Based on the unhappy experience of recent months we must anticipate that our efforts will be met by continued harrassment and violence," he said.

He contended that both the Federal Government and that of Mississippi has not only failed to provide this protection in the past, but, in fact, has cooperated with those who would deny basic rights to American citizens of color.

NASHVILLE, TENN.
TENNESSEAN
D. 131,339 S. 207
PAGE ONE
CERTIFIED
MAR 2 1963

Delta Shooting Starts Negro Voting Drive

4 Civil Rights Groups Join For Mass Registration Effort In Mississippi; U.S. Aid Asked

By CLAUDE SITTON
The New York Times News Service

ATLANTA—Four major civil rights organizations announced yesterday that they were joining forces immediately in a saturation campaign to register Negro voters in Leflore County, Mississippi.

The action followed the shooting of a Negro registration worker Thursday night on a highway west of Greenwood, seat of the rich farming and industrial county in the heart of the Mississippi delta.

The victim, James Travis, 20, was moved early yesterday to a Jackson hospital. He was being treated for a gunshot wound in the neck received when his car was fired on from a passing auto. He was expected to recover.

(Travis and two companions in the car at the time of the shooting, Robert Moses of Greenville, Miss., and Randolph Blackwell of Atlanta, are all active in a voter registration drive, the Associated Press said.

(MOSES SAID the bullets came from a white car that passed them about seven miles out of Greenwood on U.S. Highway 82 as they were driving toward Greenville.

(Several bullets ripped into the car and smashed windows, Moses said. Neither he nor Blackwell was hurt.

(Blackwell is associated with the Southern Regional Council's voter educational project. Travis and Moses are field secretaries for the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, a desegregation group.

(Moses said the same white car, carrying three white men, had been observed earlier circling around the committee office here.)

The registration drive was announced here by Wiley A. Branton, director of the voter education project. The project was established last year by the SRC "to find the best ways of increasing the electorate in the South.'

BRANTON ALSO telegraphed President Kennedy that he must anticipate that the campaign would be met with violence and should be prepared to provide

(Turn to Page 2, Column 1)

Delta Shooting Starts Negro

(Continued From Page One)

federal protection. He said this protection had not been extended in the past.

Similar telegrams went to Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy, Gov. Ross Barnett of Mississippi, Dr. John Hannah, chairman of the federal Civil Right Commission, and other federal officials.

"This is but the latest of these vicious assaults against registration workers and applicants in Mississippi, the telegrams said.

"This can no longer be tolerated. We are accordingly today announcing a concentrated, saturation campaign to register every qualified Negro in Leflore County."

Branton said the following organizations, all active in the voter education project, had pledged their full resources to the drive:

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; the Southern Christian Leadership Conference; the Congress of Racial Equality, and the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee.

Leflore joined Sunflower County, home of Sen. James O. Eastland, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and birthplace of the militantly white supremacist Citizen's Councils.

The locale of the campaign and the forces behind it promise to make it a major test of Mississippi's resistance to racial change and the Kennedy administration's determination to enforce the rights of Negroes. This was underscored in the three-page announcement issued by Branton.

"The state of Mississippi has repeatedly thrown down a gauntlet at the feet of would-be Negro voters, not only by the discriminatory practices of the registrars, but also by economic pressures, threats, coercion, physical violence, and death to Negroes seeking the right to vote," he asserted.

"The time has come for us to pick up the gauntlet. Leflore County, Miss., has elected itself as the testing ground for democracy and we are accordingly meeting the challenge there."

Branton emphasized that methods would be peaceable and lawful and that the campign would be conducted openly through literacy schools, meetings, and individual contacts.

"BASED ON the unhappy experience of recent months we must anticipate that our efforts will be met by continued harrassment and violence," he said.

Scranton contended that both the federal government and that of Mississippi had a responsibility to protect voter registration workers.

However, he said, "the state of Mississippi has not only failed to provide this protection in the past, but, in fact, has cooperated with those who would deny basic rights to American citizens of color."

"The federal Congress and executive have, in the past, failed to meet the minimum requirements for protecting the rights of Negro citizens in Mississippi."

Voting is a federally guaranteed right, declared Branton, and the United States has an obligation not only to punish community lawlessness that interfers with this right but also to put it down.

"We, therefore, call upon the President of the United States to use his executive powers to help make meaningful the provisions of the 15th Amendment—100 years late."

WINTER HAVEN, FLA.
NEWS-CHIEF
D. 6,924 S 7,300

MAR 3 1963

Mixing Backers Set Dixie Bid To Test Democracy

GREENWOOD, Miss. (UPI) —A civil rights leader, angered by the shooting of one of his workers, said Friday the nation's most powerful integrationist groups will pool their resources to make LeFlore County "the testing ground for democracy."

The challenge was made to Gov. Ross Barnett in a telegram from Wiley A. Branton of Atlanta, director of the Voter Education Project, who also alerted Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy.

"The campaign will begin immediately. You must anticipate that this campaign will be met by violence and other harassment," Branton told Kennedy.

"We are notifying you in advance so that you can provide at once the necessary federal protection to prevent violence and other forms of intimidation against registration workers and applicants."

Branton said the shooting of Jimmy Travis, 20-year-old Negro voter registration worker, here Thursday night was not the first harassment of such workers.

Travis was struck twice by a fusilade fired at a car in which he and two other civil rights workers were riding. One of the other occupants of the car, Bob Moses, Greenville, Miss., field worker for the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), said the shots came from a car containing three white men. Neither Moses nor Randolph Blackwell, a companion, was hit by the bullets.

A 45-caliber bullet lodged near Travis' spine was removed Friday and turned over to the FBI, which is investigating the incident. Travis, who also suffered a shoulder wound, was reported in satisfactory condition in a Jackson hospital.

Branton said "the time has come for us to pick up the gauntlet.

"We are accordingly...announcing a concentrated, saturation campagin to register every qualified Negro of LeFlore County," he said.

The "full resources" of a number of cooperating agencies would be concentrated immediately in the county, Branton said. He listed these agencies as SNCC, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC), and the ongress of Racial Equality (CORE).

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
NEWS-JOURNAL
SUN. 36,784

MAR 3 1963

Human Relations HQ Coming To Daytona

The Florida Council on Human Relations will return its headquarters from Jacksonville to Daytona Beach in June to be under the direction of Lou Mitchell of Birmingham, Ala., Dr. Ralph Dreger announced here last night.

Mitchell is resigning from the pastorate of the largest Episcopal Church in Alabama to accept the post of Executive Director for the state human relations group. Dreger, a Jacksonville University professor, has been serving as voluntary director since last July with the assistance of his wife, Dr. Georgia Dreger. Dreger recently was elected president of the organization.

The Florida Council has chapters in all of the state's larger cities and many at large members in smaller communities.

Founded about 20 years ago, the Council's stated purpose is to develop programs for youth and adult education to counteract prejudice based on racial, religious, nationality or ethnic grounds; to stimulate interest among community groups to further democratic attitudes and acceptance of the nation's multicultural society, and to cooperate with local, state, regional and national agencies to achieve the objectives.

The local organization, Halifax Area Human Relations Council, is headed by Mrs. Lilburn Moseley.

Mitchell, his wife and their five children will arrive here in June to establish their residence. He will travel the state in assisting groups to form constructive programs and arouse further interest in the work.

His salary and other expenses of the organization are paid through memberships, voluntary contributions and matching grants from the Southern Regional Council of Atlanta.

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE
D. 151,577 S. 166,246

MAR 3 1963

State Human Relations Council To Move Office

DAYTONA BEACH (AP) — The Florida Council on Human Relations will return its headquarters to Daytona Beach, site of its birth years ago under the direction of Lou Mitchell of Birmingham, Ala., Dr. Ralph Dreger announced here Friday night.

Mitchell is resigning from the pastorate of the largest Episcopal church in Alabama to accept the post of executive director for the state human relations group. Dreger, a Jacksonville University professor, has been serving as voluntary director since last July with the assistance of his wife, Dr. Georgia Dreger. Dreger recently was elected president of the organization.

The Florida council has chapters in all of the state's larger cities and many at large members in smaller communities.

Founded about 20 years ago, the council's stated purpose is to develop programs for youth and adult education to counteract prejudice based on racial, nationality or ethnic grounds; to stimulate interest among community groups to further democratic attitudes and acceptance of the nation's multicultural society, and to cooperate with local, state, regional and national agencies to achieve the objectives.

The local organization, Halifax Area Human Relations Council, is headed by Mrs. Lilburn Mosely.

Mitchell, his wife and their five children will arrive here in June to establish their residence. He will travel the state in assisting groups to form constructive programs and rouse further interest in the work.

His salary and other expenses of the organization are paid through memberships, voluntary contributions and matching grants from the Southern Regional Council of Atlanta.

ATLANTA, GA.
JOURNAL-CONSTITUTION
SUN. 502,157

MAR 3 1963

Emancipation Act Of Lincoln Studied

THE EMANCIPATION PROCLAMATION. By John Hope Franklin. 156 pp. Garden City: Doubleday. $3.50.

By JOE LOUIS TUCKER

If contemporary American historians were to list men who have made outstanding contributions to their profession, John Hope Franklin undoubtedly would rank near the top of the list.

Historian Franklin is a competent and perceptive student of Negro life in America. He has written numerous books about the Negro before and after the Civil War.

From innumerable sources, newspapers, magazines, unofficial and official documents, manuscripts, books and diaries, Franklin has now produced a timely, scholarly, exciting history of the evolution of a document — the Emancipation Proclamation.

Mr. Tucker is in the research department of the Southern Regional Council.

THE PROCLAMATION has received considerable attention during the 100 years since it was promulgated by Abraham Lincoln. Franklin deals with the principal outlines of its history and discusses its general significance at the time of its enunciation as well as to later generations of Americans.

He traces Lincoln's emotional and mental struggle as the Great Emancipator moved toward the signing and explores the circumstances which imposed counteracting pressures on the President.

The book throughout is concerned with a factual rather than sentimental evaluation of the Emancipation Proclamation. Franklin measures the impact of the signing as a moral and military force.

WITHOUT underestimating the proclamation's importance, the historian explains why its signing was so long delayed — and why a century later its great expectations have not been fully realized. The proclamation actually freed no slaves in 1863, but there can be no doubt that it sounded the death knell of human slavery in America.

Those laymen who read this book will find John Hope Franklin's style easy to follow, his organization of materials masterly, his generalizations properly supported and his use of factual illustrations excellent.

WINTER HAVEN, FLA.
NEWS-CHIEF
D. 6,924 S 7,300

MAR 3 1963

Quotes From The News

(Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.)

By United Press International

GREENWOOD, Miss.—Wiley A. Branton, director of the Voter Education Project, telling atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennnedy that other integration groups will help register Negroes in a county where a civil rights worker was shot:

"We are notifying you in advance so that you can provide at once the necessary federal protection to prevent violence and other forms of intimidation against registration workers and applicants."

PENSACOLA, FLA.
JOURNAL
D- 52,230

MAR 5 1963

Report Says Progress Slow, and . . .

Negro Job Equality 'Rare'

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP)—Southern Negroes constantly are reminded of the two cardinal rules which apply to them when it comes to hunting for a job.

They must not work on an equal status with white persons, and

They must not, if it can at all be avoided, supervise white persons.

The Southern Regional Council has made several studies to determine what is being done to place Negroes in positions other than traditional jobs.

One study indicates that Macon, Ga., is doing a better job in raising the working standards of the Negro than any other Southern city.

There were these other findings:

Atlanta's image as a leader in the integration movement in the South is, for the most part, only an image.

While scattering of Negro clerks can be found among Atlanta's smaller downtown stores, the city's two biggest department stores have only one Negro clerk each.

This compares with more than 100 such positions held by Negroes in Macon.

Although there are about 1,500 persons in apprenticeship training programs in Dade County, Miami, Fla., none is a Negro.

Negroes at Houston, Tex., predominate as folders in laundries—hot and strenuous work paying $25 a week—and as shirt press operators, considered by laundry owners as highly skilled work.

Desegregation of various public facilities and upgrading of Negro employment has moved ahead quietly in Macon. Negroes there are being given such jobs as clerks, sales girls, cashiers and similar positions in stores which previously employed only white persons.

In 1961, President Kennedy issued an executive order giving the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity powers to require government contractors to eliminate job discrimination. The executive order was called the Plans for Progress.

The key to the plan was that it was voluntary. Eventually, more than 100 major companies in the United States with federal contracts signed the agreement. Of these, 24 were either located or had branch offices in Atlanta.

Of the 24, says the Southern Regional Council, only three lived up to the agreement: Lockheed's plant at nearby Marietta, Ga.; Western Electric Co., and Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.

Robert B. Troutman Jr., an Atlanta lawyer and a former member of the committee which drew up the Plans for Progress, said in his final report last summer that 37 firms throughout the nation which signed the agreement reported a 10 per cent increase in nonwhite workers in a six-month period.

The total increase in income for nonwhite workers was expected to have been about $7.8 million, but the report shows that actual income was $27 million.

The Southern Regional Council noted that only a small proportion of this additional income was paid in the South.

In salaried positions, as distinguished from hour-paid jobs, the 37 companies reported at the beginning that only one per cent of the jobs were held by nonwhites.

At the end of the six months Troutman reported, 6.6 per cent of the new salaried jobs were filled by nonwhites.

The council says that "except for a handful of the companies, the Plans for Progress were, for the regional offices in Atlanta, largely meaningless."

Only seven of the firms gave any evidence that they are trying to comply with their pledges, the council said.

Many employers in the South say they hire Negroes because it is good business to hire good workers. Most do not want any publicity.

A young Negro woman, hired as a maid by a jewelry store in Miami, does all of the store's bookkeeping and earns a bookkeeper's salary. The manager still requires her to wear a maid's uniform, so his customers won't know that she works in a white collar job.

In Houston, a bakery, two automobile dealers and a brewing company have hired Negro salesmen. But they work with Negro customers.

A national food processing firm at Houston says the company now has more Negroes in key positions than at any time in the firm's history. These include foremen, supervisors, and coffee processors.

And a taster in the coffee-blending department, a prestige position, is a Negro with long seniority.

DALTON, GA.
CITIZEN-NEWS
D. 6,972

MAR 4 1963

Quotes From The News

GREENWOOD, Miss.—Wiley A. Branton, director of the Voter Education Project, telling Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennnedy that other integration groups will help register Negroes in a county where a civil rights worker was shot:

"We are notifying you in advance so that you can provide at once the necessary federal protection to prevent violence and other forms of intimidation against registration workers and applicants."

BATON ROUGE, La.—U.S. District Court Judge E. Gordon West, condemning the U.S. Supreme Court's 1954 desegregation decision:

"As far as I can see, all that has been accomplished (by the decision) is to create discontent and chaos without any real benefits. Even more regrettable is the fact that almost without exception, trouble has resulted from the decision."

WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS
D. 34,518

MAR 5 1963

Must Be 2d in Dixie

Studies Show Low Negro Job Status

By JACK STILLMAN
AP Writer

ATLANTA — Southern Negroes constantly are reminded of the two cardinal rules which apply to them when it comes to hunting for a job.

—They must not work on an equal status with white persons.

—They must not, if it can at all be avoided, supervise white persons.

The Southern Regional Council has made several studies to determine what is being done to place Negroes in positions other than traditional jobs.

One study indicates that Macon, Ga., is doing a better job in raising the working standards of the Negro than any other southern city.

THERE WERE these other findings:

Atlanta's image as a leader in the integration movement in the South is, for the most part, only an image.

While a scattering of Negro clerks can be found among Atlanta's smaller downtown stores, the city's two biggest department stores have only one Negro clerk in each.

This compares with more than 100 such positions held by Negroes in Macon.

ALTHOUGH there are about 1,500 persons in apprenticeship training programs in Dade County (Miami), Fla., none is a Negro.

Negroes at Houston, Tex., predominate as folders in laundries—hot and strenuous work paying $25 for a 50-hour week—and as shirt press operators' considered by laundry owners as highly skilled work.

Desegregation of various public facilities and upgrading of Negro employment has moved ahead quietly in Macon. Negroes there are being given such jobs as clerks, sales girls, cashiers and similar positions in stores which previously employed only white persons.

IN 1961, PRESIDENT Kennedy issued an executive order giving the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity powers to require government contractors to eliminate job discrimination. The executive order was called the plans for progress.

The key to the plan was that it was voluntary. Eventually, more than 100 major companies in the United States with federal contracts signed the agreement. Of these, 24 were either located or had branch offices in Atlanta.

Of the 24, says the regional council, only three lived up to the agreement: Lockheed's plant at nearby Marietta, Ga., Western Electric Co., and Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.

ROBERT B. TROUTMAN Jr., an Atlanta lawyer and a former member of the committee which drew up the plans for progress, said in his final report last summer that 37 firms throughout the nation which signed the agreement reported a 10 per cent increase in non-white workers in a six-month period.

The total increase in income for non-white workers was expected to have been about $7.8 million, but the report shows that actual income was $27 million.

The regional council noted that only a small proportion of this additional income was paid in the South.

In salaried positions, as distinguished from hourly-paid jobs, the 37 companies reported at the beginning that only 1 per cent of the jobs were held by non-whites.

AT THE END of the six months, Troutman reported, 6.6 per cent of the new salaried jobs were filled by non-whites.

The council says that "except for a handful of the companies, the plans for progress were, for the regional offices in Atlanta, largely meaningless."

Only seven of the firms gave any evidence that they are trying to comply with their pledges, the council said.

Many employers in the South say they hire Negroes because it is good business to hire good workers. Most do not want any publicity.

OWENSBORO, KY.
MESSENGER-INQUIRER
D. 25,436 S. 24,307

MAR 5 1963

Byrelles

Some Dixie Areas Raising Negro Working Standard

By JACK STILLMAN

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP)—Southern Negroes constantly are reminded of the two cardinal rules which apply to them when it comes to hunting for a job.

They must not work on an equal status with white persons, and

They must not, if it can at all be avoided, supervise white persons.

The Southern Regional Council has made several studies to determine what is being done to place Negroes in positions other than traditional jobs.

One study indicates that Macon, Ga., is doing a better job in raising the working standards of the Negro than any other Southern city.

There were these other findings:

Atlanta's image as a leader in the integration movement in the South is, for the most part, only an image.

While scattering of Negro clerks can be found among Atlanta's smaller downtown stores, the city's two biggest department stores have only one Negro clerk each.

This compares with more than 100 such positions held by Negroes in Macon.

Although there are about 1,500 persons in apprenticeship training programs in Dade County, Miami, Fla., none is a Negro.

Negroes at Houston, Tex., predominate as folders in laundries—hot and strenuous work paying $25 a week—and as shirt press operators, considered by laundry owners as highly skilled work.

Desegregation of various public facilities and upgrading of Negro employment has moved ahead quietly in Macon. Negroes there are being given such jobs as clerks, sales girls, cashiers and similar positions in stores which previously employed only white persons.

In 1961, President Kennedy issued an executive order giving the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity powers to require government contractors to eliminate job discrimination. The executive order was called the Plans for Progress.

The key to the plan was that it was voluntary. Eventually, more than 100 major companies in the United States with federal contracts signed the agreement. Of these, 24 were either located or had branch offices in Atlanta.

Of the 24, says the Southern Regional Council, only three lived up to the agreement: Lockheed's plant at nearby Marietta, Ga.; Western Electric Co., and Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.

Robert B. Troutman Jr., an Atlanta lawyer and a former member of the committee which drew up the Plans for Progress, said in his final report last summer that 37 firms throughout the nation which signed the agreement reported a 10 per cent increase in nonwhite workers in a six-month period.

The total increase in income for nonwhite workers was expected to have been about $7.8 million, but the report shows that actual income was $27 million.

The Southern Regional Council noted that only a small proportion of this additional income was paid in the South.

In salaried positions, as distinguished from hour-paid jobs, the 37 companies reported at the beginning that only one per cent of the jobs were held by nonwhites.

At the end of the six months, Troutman reported, 6.6 per cent of the new salaried jobs were filled by nonwhites.

The council says that "except for a handful of the companies, the Plans for Progress were, for the regional offices in Atlanta, largely meaningless."

Only seven of the firms gave any evidence that they are trying to comply with their pledges, the council said.

Many employers in the South say they hire Negroes because it is good business to hire good workers. Most do not want any publicity.

A young Negro woman, hired as a maid by a jewelry store in Miami, does all of the store's bookkeeping and earns a bookkeeper's salary. The manager still requires her to wear a maid's uniform, so his customers won't know that she works in a white collar job.

In Houston, a bakery, two automobile dealers and a brewing company have hired Negro salesmen. But they work with Negro customers.

A national food processing firm at Houston says the company now has more Negroes in key positions than at any time in the firm's history. These include foremen, supervisors, and coffee processors.

And a taster in the coffee-blending department, a prestige position, is a Negro with long seniority.

A leading flower farm at Chattanooga, Tenn., with a large southeast clientele, employed a Negro flower designer who works with white colleagues.

President Kennedy in his address to Congress on Feb. 28 made no recommendation in the realm of racial discrimination in employment. He did however, caution labor unions which have been accused of discrimination. He said he hoped administrative and legal action would make legislation unnecessary.

AUGUSTA, GA.
CHRONICLE
D. 46,564 S. 57,597

MAR 5 1963

Macon is surprise leader in improving Negroes' jobs

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) — Southern Negroes constantly are reminded of the two cardinal rules which apply to them when it comes to hunting for a job.

They must not work on an equal status with white persons, and They must not, if it can at all be avoided, supervise white persons.

The Southern Regional Council has made several studies to determine what is being done to place Negroes in positions other than traditional jobs.

One study indicates that Macon, Ga., is doing a better job in raising the working standards of the Negro than any other Southern city.

There were these other findings:

Atlanta's image as a leader in the integration movement in the South is, for the most part, only an image.

While scattering of Negro clerks can be found among Atlanta's smaller downtown stores, the city's two biggest department stores have only one Negro clerk each.

This compares with more than 100 such positions held by Negroes in Macon.

Although there are about 1,500 persons in apprenticeship training programs in Dade County, Miami, Fla., none is a Negro.

Negroes at Houston, Tex., predominate as folders in laundries—hot and strenuous work paying $25 a week—and as shirt press operators, considered by laundry owners as highly skilled work.

Desegregation of various public facilities and upgrading of Negro employment has moved ahead quietly in Macon. Negroes there are being given such jobs as clerks, sales girls, cashiers and similar positions in stores which previously employed only white persons.

In 1961, President Kennedy issued an executive order giving the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity powers to require government contractors to eliminate job discrimination. The executive order was called the Plans for Progress.

The key to the plan was that it was voluntary. Eventually, more than 100 major companies in the United States with federal contracts signed the agreement. Of these, 24 were either located or had branch office in Atlanta.

Of the 24, says the Southern Regional Council, only three lived up to the agreement; Lockheed's plant at nearby Marietta, Ga.; Western Electric Co., and Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.

Robert B. Troutman Jr., an Atlanta lawyer and a former member of the committee which drew up the Plans for Progress, said in his final report last summer that 37 firms throughout the nation which signed the agreement reported a 10 per cent increase in nonwhite workers in a six-month period.

MOULTRIE, GA.
OBSERVER
W. 2,297

MAR 6 1963

Macon Reportedly Doing Best Job Helping Negroes

ATLANTA (AP)—A study by the Southern Regional Council indicates that Macon, Ga., is doing a better job in raising the working standards of Negroes than any other southern city.

The Council made the study to determine what is being done to place Negroes in positions other than traditional jobs.

Two cardinal rules apply to Negroes who are job hunting, the bi-racial group reported. These are that Negroes must not work on an equal status with white persons and must not, if it can be avoided, supervise white persons.

Atlanta's image as a leader in the integration movement in the South was termed only an image by the council. A scattering of Negro clerks have been employed by small downtown Atlanta stores but the city's two largest department stores have only one Negro clerk each. The council said this compares with more than 100 such positions held by Negroes in Macon.

The council said desegregation of various facilities and upgrading of Negro employment moved ahead quietly in Macon. Negroes there are being given such jobs as clerks, sales girls, cashiers and similar positions in stores that previously hired only white persons.

In other findings the council reported:

More than 100 major companies holding federal contracts signed an agreement requiring them to eliminate job discrimination. The agreement was contained in an executive order by President Kennedy in 1961 giving the President's Committee an Equal Employment Opportunity power to require such compliance.

Of the 100 firms signing the agreement, 24 were either located or had branch offices in Atlanta. The Council said only three of the 24 lived up to the agreement. It listed these as Lockheed's Marietta, Ga., plant, Western Electric Co., and Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.

NORFOLK, VA.
VIRGINIAN-PILOT
D. 115,710

MAR 6 1963

Defense To Run 6 Schools

Special to The Virginian-Pilot

WASHINGTON — The Defense Department will operate the new integrated elementary schools which the government plans to build on six military bases in segregated Southern communities, Anthony J. Celebrezze announced Tuesday.

Thus, the local school boards operating segregated schools in these districts will lose federal funds for on-base children attending the integrated schools, added Celebrezze, secretary of health, education and welfare.

The secretary made the announcement to clarify the government's position after it was accused of helping to perpetuate segregation with its new on-base school building program.

ON 6 BASES

Last month HEW announced it will build integrated schools for the children of base personnel at Ft. Jackson and Myrtle Air Force Base in South Carolina, Ft. Stewart and Robins Air Force Base in Georgia and Ft. McClellan and Ft. Rucker in Alabama.

The criticism came last week from the NAACP and the Southern Regional Council after Asst. HEW Secretary James M. Quigley said local school boards would be given the option of running the on-base schools and would receive federal grants for doing so.

Quigley conceded the new program could establish a three-school system — integrated on-base schools and segregated schools for whites and Negroes off base. The NAACP and the Southern Regional Council noted that federal courts have refused to permit such three-school systems.

Celebrezze emphasized Tuesday that "the local school boards will not operate these schools."

They "will not, therefore, receive any federal funds with respect to the education of these children" attending the on-base elementary schools, he added.

As for the children living on-base who may want to continue attending an off-base segregated school, the secretary said the government does not expect this to happen. But he did not mention the on-base high school students who presumably will have to attend community schools.

Celebrezze said there are special programs available only in the local schools.

However, "with few exceptions, parents residing on these bases send their children to the on-base schools," he said.

The Washington Post
WASHINGTON, D.C.
D. 407,089 S. 474,073

MAR 7 1963

U. S. to Run On-Base Integrated Schools

The Defense Department will operate the new integrated elementary schools which the Government plans to build on six military bases in segregated Southern communities, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare Anthony J. Celebrezze announced yesterday.

Thus, the local school boards operating segregated schools in these districts will lose Federal funds for on-base children attending the integrated schools, added Celebrezze.

The Secretary made the announcement to clarify the Government's position after it was accused of helping to perpetuate segregation with its new on-base school building program.

Criticism Aroused

Last month HEW announced it will build integrated schools for the children of base personnel at Ft. Jackson and Myrtle Air Force Base in South Carolina, Ft. Steward and Robins Air Force Base in Georgia, and Ft. McClellan and Ft. Rucker in Alabama.

The criticism came last week from the NAACP and the Southern Regional Council after Assistant HEW Secretary James M. Quigley said local school boards would be given the option of running the on-base schools and would receive Federal grants for doing so.

Quigley conceded the new program could establish a three-school system — integrated on-base schools and segregated schools for whites and Negroes off base. The NAACP and the Southern Regional Council noted that Federal courts have refused to permit such three-school systems.

To Lose Federal Funds

Celebrezze emphasized yesterday that "the local school boards will not operate these schools."

They 'will not, therefore, receive any Federal funds with respect to the education of these children" attending the on-base elementary schools, he added.

As for children living on-base who might want to continue attending an off-base segregated school, the Secretary said the Government does not expect this to happen. But he did not mention the on-base high school students who presumably will have to attend community schools.

Celezrezze said there are special reasons for an elementary student to attend the local public schools. For instance, he said, mentally retarded children may require special programs available only in the local schools.

However, "with few exceptions, parents residing on these bases send their children to the on-base schools," he said.

PAGE(S) PARTIALLY ILLEGIBLE

PINE BLUFF, ARK.
COMMERCIAL
D. 19,445 S. 19,607

MAR 7 1963

Attacks Aimed at Negroes Who Are Attempting to Vote

WILEY BRANTON
Former Pine Bluff Attorney

In a Press Release from the Voter Education Project

On the night of February 28, 1963, in LeFlore County, Mississippi, white men, from their moving car, shot and seriously wounded a young Negro registration worker. The victim was James Travis of Jackson, Mississippi, a field secretary for the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee. This attack, with intent to kill, was made by men who had been observed throughout the evening watching a building in Greenwood where registration workers were meeting.

After the meeting, Travis, Robert Moses, Director of the Council of Federated Organizations, and Randolph Blackwell, Field Director of our Voter Education Project, drove from Greenwood down U.S. Highway 82. Some miles outside Greenwood the attackers' car drove alongside and opened rifle or pistol fire. Fortunately, only Travis was wounded.

TRAVIS WAS returned to a hospital in Greenwood. The local police and the Department of Justice were promptly notified. On March 1, Travis was moved to a hospital in Jackson.

This is but the latest of brutal attacks in Mississippi, southwest Georgia, and other areas of the South, against registration workers and would-be Negro voters. These registration workers are people cooperating with the Voter Education Project. This Project, which has the endorsement of the chairmen both of the Democratic and Republican National Committees, is a large scale effort to find the best ways of increasing or she has any desire to do so.

Our methods will, at all times, be peaceable and lawful and will be conducted in the best traditions of American democracy.

The campaign will be conducted openly. Voter registration is a civic duty, and registration workers will dignifiedly and publicly carry on their activities, which will include literacy schools, meetings, and individual contacts.

BASED ON the unhappy experience of recent months we must anticipate that our efforts will be met by continued harassment and violence. The state of Mississippi and the United States government each have a responsibility to protect those seeking the right to vote for all citizens. The state of Mississippi has not only failed to provide this protection in the past but, in fact, has cooperated with those who would deny basic rights to American citizens of color. The federal Congress and Executive have, in the past, failed to meet the minimum requirements for protecting the rights of Negro citizens in Mississippi.

Recently, the Mississippi Advisory Committee to the United States Commission on Civil Rights has said: "This Committee finds that the Federal Government has not provided the citizens of Mississippi the protection due them as American citizens." We concur in this finding.

REGARDLESS OF past attitudes and actions, we are advising the Governor of Mississippi hospital in Greenwood. The local police and the Department of Justice were promptly notified. On March 1, Travis was moved to a hospital in Jackson.

This is but the latest of brutal attacks in Mississippi, southwest Georgia, and other areas of the South, against registration workers and would-be Negro voters. These registration workers are people cooperating with the Voter Education Project. This Project, which has the endorsement of the chairmen both of the Democratic and Republican National Committees, is a large scale effort to find the best ways of increasing the electorate in the South, in order to bring into participation in American democracy citizens who have not before exercised, or been allowed to exercise, their responsibilities. In most areas of the South, work carried on in cooperation with the Project has been without disturbance, and in some cases even welcomed by local authorities.

BUT IN certain outlaw communities registration workers have been constantly harassed and put in danger of life. Negroes seeking to register have been cruelly treated.

These are intolerable conditions to expose people to, and they cannot be allowed to continue. Accordingly, there is a need to establish once and for all that in this land people do not have to be afraid to be free.

The state of Mississippi has repeatedly thrown down a gauntlet at the feet of would-be Negro voters, not only by the discriminatory practices of the registrars, but also by economic pressures, threats, coercion, physical violence, and death to Negroes seeking the right to vote. The time has come for us to pick up the gauntlet. LeFlore County, Mississippi, has elected itself as the testing ground for democracy and we are accordingly meeting the challenge there.

WE ARE, therefore, announcing that the full resources of the agencies cooperating with us in the Voter Education Project will be immediately concentrated in LeFlore County, Mississippi. Mr. Roy Wilkins of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, Mr. James Forman of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, and Mr. James Farmer of the Congress of Racial Equality, have agreed with us today to put all necessary support at once into a concerted campaign to get every qualified Negro in LeFlore County registered to vote, if he have, in the past, failed to meet the minimum requirements for protecting the rights of Negro citizens in Mississippi.

Recently, the Mississippi Advisory Committee to the United States Commission on Civil Rights has said: "This Committee finds that the Federal Government has not provided the citizens of Mississippi the protection due them as American citizens." We concur in this finding.

REGARDLESS OF past attitudes and actions, we are advising the Governor of Mississippi of our plans for action in LeFlore County and have asked that the state of Mississippi provide protection.

We have also notified the Attorney General of the United States that this campaign is being undertaken and we have called to his attention our past experiences regarding the failure of the state and federal governments to protect the citizens of Mississippi. We have requested that federal protection be provided immediately to assure the personal safety of those working in voter registration or who seek the right to vote. We are asking the Justice Department to take the necessary legal action to see to it that discriminatory practices by the registrar cease and desist.

Voting is a federally guaranteed right, and when its exercise is prevented by community lawlessness, the United States government has an obligation not only to punish that lawlessness but to put it down.

We, therefore, call upon the President of the United States to use his executive powers to help make meaningful the provisions of the Fifteenth Amendment — 100 years late.

ATLANTA, GA.
INQUIRER
W. 18,960

PAGE ONE
CERTIFIED

MAR 9 1963

1962

"SHOOTINGS WON'T STOP MISSISSIPPI VOTE DRIVE"

Field Secretaries for the Atlanta-based Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) have vowed that the near-fatal shooting of one of their workers outside Greenwood, Mississippi last Thursday night won't stop their drive to register Negro voters in Mississippi.

Jimmy Travis, 20, of Jackson, Mississippi, was shot twice in the hail of bullets that broke out three windows in the rented car he was driving. Two other occupants of the car - SNCC's Bob Moses and Randolph Blackwell of the Voter Education Project- were unhurt.

CONTINUED TO PAGE 7

Mississippi

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 1

Travis was operated on at the University Hospital in Jackson on last Saturday night. Doctors removed a slug from the base of his neck that they said would have killed him instantly if it had hit a little harder.

"The Travis shooting is not the first incident of violence we've faced in Mississippi," one worker told the Inquirer. "Last summer, two girls were shot in Ruleville and four of our workers just missed being lynched in Greenwood when they jumped out of a second story office window to escape a mob of white men carrying ropes, chains and pipes."

SARASOTA, FLA.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 20,177 S. 24,183

MAR 10 1963

U.S. Surveying 24 Atlanta Firms

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The government has started a survey to determine whether some 24 Atlanta area firms are complying with non-discrimination agreements.

A spokesman for the President's Committee for Equal Employment Opportunity said that the survey is being conducted by the Defense Department and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, the two major government contractors.

The compliance survey was based on a report by the Southern Regional Council—an independent biracial research group — which claimed that the companies were discriminating.

At the direction of Hobart Taylor Jr., executive vice-president of the President's committee, a preliminary survey was made.

The spokesman said not all of the comapnies would be checked because some were very small.

ATLANTA, GA.
WORLD
D. 29,500

PAGE ONE CERTIFIED

MAR 10 1963

Job Survey Cites Real City Image

According to studies made by the Southern Regional Council, Macon, Ga., is doing a better job in raising the working standards of the Negro than any other southern city.

The report charges that Atlanta's image as a leader in the integration movement in the South is, for the most part, only an image.

The Southern Regional Council study said that while a scattering of Negro clerks can be found among Atlanta's downtown stores, the city's two largest department stores have only a few Negro clerks.

This compares with more than 100 such positions held by Negroes in Macon.

QUIET ADVANCE

Desegregation of various public facilities and upgrading of Negro employment has moved ahead quietly in Macon. Negroes are being given such jobs as clerks, sales girls, cashiers and similar positions in stores which previously employed only white persons, the sources stated.

In 1961, President Kennedy issued an executive order giving the President's Committee on Equal Opportunity powers to require government contractors to eliminate job discrimination. The executive order was called the Plans for Progress.

KEY TO PLAN

The key to the plan was that it was voluntary. Eventually, more than 100 major companies in the United States with federal contracts signed the agreement. Of these, 24 were either located or had branch offices in Atlanta.

Of the 24, says the Southern Regional Council, only three lived up to the agreement: Lockheed's plant at nearby Marietta, Ga., Western Electric Co., and Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.

Robert B. Troutman Jr., an Atlanta lawyer and a former member of the committee which drew up the Plans for Progress, said in his final report last summer that 37 firms throughout the nation which signed the agreement reported a 10 per cent increase in non-white workers in a six - month period.

The total increase in income for non - white workers was expected to have been about $7.8 million, but the report shows that actual income was $27. million.

The Southern Regional Council noted that only a small proportion of this additional income was paid in the South.

In salaried positions, as distinguished from hourly - paid jobs, the 37 companies reported at the beginning that only 1 per cent of the jobs were held by non - whites.

At the end of the six months, Troutman reported, 6.6 per cent of the new salaried jobs were filed by non - whites.

The council says that "except for a handful of the companies, the plans for progress were, for the regional offices in Atlanta, largely meaningless."

Only seven of the firms gave any evidence that they are trying to comply with their pledges, the council said.

President Kennedy in his address to Congress Feb. 28 made no recommendation in the realm of racial discrimination in employment. He did, however, caution labor unions which have been accused of discriminnation. He said he hoped administrative and legal action would make legislation unnecessary.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE
D: 191,751 S: 302,524

MAR 10 1963

LA. DELAYS BID FOR U.S. GRANT

Non - Discrimination Provision Involved

Louisiana remains the lone holdout among 50 states in the federal manpower development and training program which began last September.

The state has yet to sign a contract for its trade schools to participate, according to the Southern Education Reporting Service of Nashville, Tenn.

The reporting service, which distributes periodic summaries of school desegregation activities in the South, said that Louisiana's officials have not offered explanations.

But, according to the service report, "reliable informants pointed to the non-discrimination clauses in the grants."

REJECT FEDERAL AID

Participation in the program could bring more than $1 million in federal funds to the state training schools, SERS says.

The service also noted that St. Tammany Parish has rejected federal aid, and is promoting a $1.9 million bond issue, to expand school facilities in view of the influx of about 1000 new pupils expected to come with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Mississippi Test Facility.

The report also revealed that a Department of Health, Education and Welfare plan for cutting off funds to segregated schools in federally impacted areas is not running according to its timetable.

Almost a year ago, the department announced that in the fall of 1963, segregated public schools would no longer be considered "suitable" to receive federal funds for educating the children of parents living or working on federal institutions.

HEW CHANGES PLAN

The department tried to persuade the school districts to desegregate, but only 15 — all in Texas and Florida — complied.

Since then, the department has backed away from its statement of a year ago. Instead of cutting off the money, HEW has decided:

—to establish some desegregated schools on armed forces bases — but only at the elementary level.

—to estalish these only where relatively large numbers of federally connected children are involved.

—to give the federally connected parents a choice of sending children to the desegregated on-base school or to an all-white or all-Negro school off the base. Aid payments will continue for the cost of educating the children who choose to attend the segregated schools.

APPLICATION LIMITED

And the department isn't applying the new plan to areas where desegregation suits have been filed against the school systems —in Bossier Parish, Louisiana; Biloxi, Gulfport-Mississippi, and Huntsville and Mobile, in Alaba-eral aid, and is promoting a $1.9 million bond issue, to expand school facilities in view of the influx of about 1000 new pupils expected to come with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Mississippi Test Facility.

The report also revealed that a Department of Health, Education and Welfare plan for cutting off funds to segregated schools in federally impacted areas is not running according to its timetable.

Almost a year ago, the department announced that in the fall of 1963, segregated public schools would no longer be considered "suitable" to receive federal funds for educating the children of parents living or working on federal institutions.

HEW CHANGES PLAN

The department tried to persuade the school districts to desegregate, but only 15 — all in Texas and Florida — complied.

Since then, the department has backed away from its statement of a year ago. Instead of cutting off the money, HEW has decided:

—to establish some desegregated schools on armed forces bases — but only at the elementary level.

—to estalish these only where relatively large numbers of federally connected children are involved.

—to give the federally connected parents a choice of sending children to the desegregated on-base school or to an all-white or all-Negro school off the base. Aid payments will continue for the cost of educating the children who choose to attend the segregated schools.

APPLICATION LIMITED

And the department isn't applying the new plan to areas where desegregation suits have been filed against the school systems —in Bossier Parish, Louisiana; Biloxi, Gulfport-Mississippi, and Huntsville and Mobile, in Alabama.

HEW's assistant secretary, James Quigley, also has said he "had a feeling" that nothing will be done this year about segregation in Dougherty county, Ga.

The county, which includes strife-afflicted Albany, has a Marine Corps depot and Turner Air Force Base. Quigley said the school board voted against mixing schools this year but sought a solution. This, he said, indicates "there is a possibility that they can next year, or the next."

The new on-base schools will be built — for about $2 million — at Ft. Jackson and Myrtle Beach Air Force Base in South Carolina, Ft. Stewart and Robins Air Force Base in Georgia, and Ft. McClelland and Ft. Rucker in Alabama.

CHARLESTON LEFT OUT

Desegregation advocates, critical of the plan, note that it doesn't include Charleston, which has the largest number of federally connected people in South Carolina.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the Southern Regional Council have attacked the plan, comparing it to the "salt-and-pepper" plans overruled by federal courts in Houston, Dallas and Nashville.

Mississippi's NAACP president, Aaron Henry, told the state advisory committee to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights that the federal government is "dragging its feet on the civil rights issue."

He said federal money is subsidizing segregated state agencies and perpetuating "a system which denies the Negro a first class citizenship."

In Alabama, Gov. George C. Wallace said that a firm stand by his state's congressional delegation forced HEW to back away on its threat. Gov. Wallace said Alabama's congressmen have said they will kill the entire impacted aid program if any funds are withheld.

CHICAGO, ILL.
DAILY DEFENDER
D. 35,795

MAR 13 1963

On-Base Integration

The announcement by the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare that the Defense Department will operate the new integrated elementary schools which the government plans to build on six military bases in segregated Southern communities, is indeed gratifying.

Thus, the local school boards operating segregated schools in these districts will lose Federal funds for on-base children attending the integrated schools.

The Secretary made the announcement to clarify the government's position after it was accused of helping to perpetuate segregation with its new on-base school building program.

Last month HEW announced that it will build integrated schools for the children of base personnel at Ft. Jackson and Myrtle Air Force Base in South Carolina, Ft. Steward and Robins Air Force Base in Georgia, and Ft. McClellan and Ft. Rucker in Alabama.

The criticism came from the NAACP and the Southern Regional Council after Assistant HEW Secretary James M. Quigley said that local school boards would be given the option of running the on-base schools and would receive Federal grants for doing so.

Mr. Quigley conceded that the new program could establish a three-school system—integrated on-base schools, segregated schools for whites and Negroes off base. The NAACP and the Southern Regional Council noted that Federal courts have refused to permit such three-school systems.

But HEW Secretary Anthony J. Celebrezze emphasized that "the local school boards will not operate these schools. They will not, therefore, receive any Federal funds with respect to the education of the children attending the on-base elementary schools."

The government's belatedness in reaching that decision has brought grief that might have been avoided had its on-base integration policy been established sooner and with greater clarity. The Kennedy Administration simply cannot afford to bow to stupid Southern traditions.

CHICAGO, ILL.
DAILY DEFENDER
D. 35,795

MAR 13 1963

U. S. Uses Courts, Funds To Push Desegregation

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — The federal government continues to press for more school desegregation in the South, using court action and the administration of its aid programs, Southern School News reports.

The U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare, using the threat of withdrawal of federal "impacted area" funds, has arranged for 15 Texas and Florida districts to desegregate. HEW announced it would provide on-base schools at six military installations where local authorities refuse to co-operate.

The U.S. Department of Justice filed four suits to desegregate public schools serving large numbers of military dependents and has joined in a fifth suit to force the reopening of Prince Edward County, Va., schools, closed since 1959.

President John F. Kennedy, in his first Congressional message devoted exclusively to civil rights. proposed new legislation on schools. He asked Congress to approve federal technical and financial assistance to districts that are in the process of desegregating.

EQUAL OPPORTUNITIES

The President said "the Executive Branch will continue its efforts to fulfill the constitutional objective of an equal, non-segregated educational opportunity for all children."

Although the Department of Health, Education and Welfare announced plans to establish desegregated schools on six military bases, some military dependents will continue to attend segregated schools next year, and the districts will receive federal "impacted area" funds.

Almost a year ago the department announced that in the fall of 1963, segregated public schools would no longer be considered "suitable" to receive the federal funds for educating children of parents living or working on federal installations. HEW tried to persuade the segregated school districts to desegregate, but only 15 Texas and Florida school districts complied.

Instead of withdrawing all military dependents and federal aid from the remaining segregated districts, HEW adopted these policies:

On-base schools will be established at the elementary level.

The schools will be established only at military bases.

The children of federal personnel will be given a choice of attending a desegregated on-base school, or an all-white or all-Negro school off the base.

SNUB MISSISSIPPI

Associate Commissioner of Education Arthur Harris said Mississippi was not included in the plans because of pending school suits there. The Department of Justice has filed desegregation suits against schools serving military dependents at Biloxi-Gulfport, Miss.; Shreveport, La.; and Mobile, Ala.

Civil rights organizations have attacked some of HEW's policies. Both the NAACP and the Southern Regional Council compared the option of attending segregated or desegregated schools to the "salt-and-pepper" plans overruled by the federal courts for Houston, Dallas and Nashville.

In Mississippi, the state NAACP president, Aaron Henry, told the state advisory committee to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights that the federal government is "dragging its feet on the civil rights issue" there.

TO KILL AID PROGRAM

Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace said the Alabama Congressional delegation had forced the Department of Health, Education and Welfore to back away from its threat to withhold federal funds from segregated school districts.

The Huntsville and Madison County, Ala., school districts, which are defendants in one of the Justice Department suits, have 11,000 children of military and civilian personnel at Redstone Arsenal. These include 750 Negroes.

Fort Rucker, Ala., which is scheduled to receive one of the HEW on-base schools, has about 1,000 federally connected white students and 18 Negroes.

Small numbers of Negro students would be involved at the two Georgia bases scheduled to receive on-base schools. Houston County, which serves Robins AFB, has eight Negro military dependents and Liberty County has 22 or 23 Negroes from Fort Stewart.

34 DISTRICTS GET AID

James Quigley, HEW assistant secretary, said he "had a feeling" that nothing would be done this year about the segregated schools in Dougherty County, Ga., (Albany), which has a Marine Corps depot and Turner Air Force Base.

Thirty-four South Carolina school districts have received $29.8 million in federal "impacted area" aid since the plan began in 1950. Critics of the new HEW policy noted that the department did not include Charleston, location of the greatest number of federally connected people in the state.

Fort Jackson, where HEW plans an on-base school, has about 300 children attending a Richland County school off the base. The other installation scheduled to have its own school, Myrtle Beach AFB, has 400 white and some 20 Negro dependents attending Horry County elementary schools.

A few years ago, the government purchased two Beaufort County schools near Parris Island Marine Base and Beaufort Marine Air Station. The Marine installations took over operation of the schools and desegregated them.

KEEP AID

A Florida school district agreed in February to desegregate next fall rather than to lose the federal school funds. Okaloosa County's school board plans to assign 28 Negro students from Eglin Air Force Base and Hulbert Field to previously all-white schools. The board also agreed to start work on a plan for assignment of all federally connected students living off the bases — about 5,500 whites and 500 Negroes.

The school board members said government representatives not only threatened to cut off future funds, but also to sue for recovery of $5.5 million granted the county in previous years.

Louisiana is the only one of the 50 states that has not signed a contract agreement with the federal government for its trade schools to participate in the manpower development and training program which began last September. The state stands to lose over $1 million in federal funds.

In Atlanta, officials have desegregated voluntarily a vocational school financed largely by state and federal funds.

Smith-Hughes became the first desegregated vocational school in Georgia by admitting two Negro students.

Educators in the Houston area have urged the removal of racial barriers because, among other things, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration center is being built there. Federal grants to schools for education and research are administered under non-racial policies.

MERIDEN, CONN.
JOURNAL
D. 9,128

MAR 14 1963

Equality Of Employment Opportunity Comes Slowly For Negroes In South

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP)—Southern Negroes constantly are reminded of the two cardinal rules which apply to them when it comes to hunting for a job.

They must not work on an equal status with white persons, and they must not, if it can at all be avoided, supervise white persons.

The Southern Regional Council has made several studies to determine what is being done to place Negroes in positions other than traditional jobs.

One study indicates that Macon, Ga., is doing a better job in raising the working standards of the Negro than any other Southern city.

Other Findings

There were these other findings:

Atlanta's image as a leader in the integration movement in the South is, for the most part, only an image.

While scattering of Negro clerks can be found among Atlanta's smaller downtown stores, the city's two biggest department stores have only one Negro clerk each.

This compares with more than 100 such positions held by Negroes in Macon.

Although there are about 1,500 persons in apprenticeship training programs in Dade County, Miami, Fla., none is a Negro.

Negroes at Houston, Tex., predominate as folders in laundries—hot and strenuous work paying $25 a week—and as shirt press operators, considered by laundry owners as highly skilled work.

Progress In Macon

Desegregation of various public facilities and upgrading of Negro employment has moved ahead quietly in Macon. Negroes there are being given such jobs as clerks, sales girls, cashiers and similar positions in stores which previously employed only white persons.

In 1961, President Kennedy issued an executive order giving the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity powers to require government contractors to eliminate job discrimination. The executive order was called the Plans for Progress.

Voluntary Plan

The key to the plan was that it was voluntary. Eventually, more than 100 major companies in the United States with federal contracts signed the agreement. Of these, 24 were either located or had branch offices in Atlanta.

Of the 24, says the Southern Regional Council, only three lived up to the agreement: Lockheed's plant at nearby Marietta, Ga.; Western Electric Co., and Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.

Robert B. Troutman Jr., an Atlanta lawyer and a former member of the committee which drew up the Plans for Progress, said in his final report last summer that 37 firms throughout the nation which signed the agreement reported a 10 per cent increase in nonwhite workers in a six-month period.

The total increase in income for nonwhite workers was expected to have been about $7.8 million, but the report shows that actual income was $27 million.

The Southern Regional Council noted that only a small proportion of this additional income was paid in the South.

In salaried positions, as distinguished from hour-paid jobs, the 37 companies reported at the beginning that only one per cent of the jobs were held by nonwhites.

At the end of the six months, Troutman reported, 6.6 per cent of the new salaried jobs were filed by non whites.

The council says that "except for a handful of the companies, the Plans for Progress were, for the regional offices in Atlanta, largely meaningless."

Only seven of the firms gave any evidence that they are trying to comply with their pledges, the council said.

Don't Want Publicity

Many employers in the South say they hire Negroes because it is good business to hire good workers. Most do not want any publicity.

A young Negro woman, hired as a maid by a jewelry store in Miami, does all of the store's bookkeeping and earns a bookkeeper's salary. The manager still requires her to wear a maid's uniform, so his customers won't know that she works in a white collar job.

In Houston, a bakery, two automobile dealers and a brewing company have hired Negro salesmen. But they work with Negro customers.

A national food processing firm at Houston says the company now has more Negroes in key positions than at any time in the firm's history. These include foremen, supervisors, and coffee processors.

And a taster in the coffee-blending department, a prestige position, is a Negro with long seniority.

A leading flower farm at Chattanooga, Tenn., with a large southeast clientele, employed a Negro flower designer who works with white colleagues.

President Kennedy in his address to Congress on Feb. 28 made no recommendation in the realm of racial discrimination in employment. He did however, caution labor unions which have been accused of discrimination. He said he hoped administrative and legal action would make legislation unnecessary.

JET
CHICAGO, ILL.
W. 335,101

MAR 14 1963

1962

WILL U. S. DOLLARS BRING INTEGRATION TO ALA.?

ALA. CITY DROPS BIAS TO KEEP FROM EMBARRASSING SPACE WORK

As the Kennedy Administration continues to spend millions of dollars in Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi for National Defense and economic development, the old adage "money is the root of all evil," appears to be changing to "Federal Funds is the basis for the only good" in the dear old Southland. Despite the outspoken Dixie opposition to the government's strongest civil rights program since the Emancipation Proclamation, there was growing evidence that the land below the Mason-Dixon line was ready to accept public desegregation to keep the United States funds flowing in.

Among the fast-rising cities offering proof that "The South Will Rise Again—Integrated," is the rocket City of Huntsville, Ala., deep in the Heart of Dixie. Known as the Space Capital of the World, Huntsville is the home of the

After Huntsville sympathizers picketed N. Y., Chicago stock exchanges, space center businessmen quickly met with Negroes

60,000 acre Army Missile Command and the 1,600 acre George C. Marshall Space Center headed by former German U-2 wizard Wernher von Braun. While new Alabama Gov. George Wallace rants and raves about keeping the state segregated with his last drop of blood and state funds, Huntsville authorities were quietly setting a pace for desegregation that observers predict will be followed by the rest of the state and the south.

Commenting on the successful integration of the city's major lunch counters (Sears, Woolworths, G. C. Murphy's, all except Walgreen's Drug Stores), public parks, auditoriums, bus station, taxicabs and proposals for the desegregation of schools and the local branch of the University of Alabama, J. E. Harris, Atlanta Life Insurance district manager and member of the recently formed Mayor's R. B. Searcy Bi-Racial Committee, stated "the businessmen downtown realize that Alabama can not survive segregated."

Teamed together at integrated Alabama arsenal, troops were forced to go separate ways in town until race bars dropped.

Dr. Cashin, S. W. Hereford, Jane Reed, Mrs. Cashin, Dwight Crawford and Lois Jones (l-r) plan more integration for city.

stone Arsenal (Only 80-90 Negro employees); A virtual radio, television and newspaper blackout covered the city to keep from embarrassing the nation's space program; outraged ministers finally ordered their congregations to wear overalls and rags to church Easter Sunday "just like Jesus Christ" to dramatize the plight of Alabamans caught in the Southern System. And Mrs. Burnett personally appealed to President Kennedy to get her daughter in school.

Although it was a highly organized Negro effort which brought about the change, Huntsville sympathy demonstrations before the New York and Chicago stock exchanges was the finally crushing blow. Huntsville leaders immediately called for a meeting with Negro leaders and Negroes were soon appointed to the local bi-racial committees including the powerful Community Advisory Committee, personally headed by Von Braun.

For most Huntsvillians, like America's gigantic space effort, the human relations job was far from finished. Said one longtime resident "before we get a man on the moon 18,000 miles away, I'd like to see us get a Negro child in school right across the street from the arsenal."

Chicago Savings-Loan Exec Named Vice-President

Hervey

Henry P. Hervey, general manager of Chicago's Service Federal Savings & Loan Assn., was appointed vice president and managing officer, Dr. Theodore K. Lawless, president announced. Dr. Lawless reported a $815,000 increase from $5,814,000 in assets in 1961 to $6,629,000 in 1962 and a mortgage-in-force total of $5,753,000.

New Orleans Insurance Exec A. P. Bedou Retires

One of the original founders and board members of New Orleans' People's Life Insurance Co., Arthur P. Bedou has resigned as vice president of the firm. Once the official photographer of Booker T. Washington, Bedou was considered an outstanding portrait photographer in addition to being a top insurance executive.

Third Atlanta Bakery Drops Discrimination

The Atlanta Baking Company became the third such firm agreeing to a non-discriminatory policy in a drive by 400 Negro ministers dubbed Operation Breadbasket.

Once Famous Pershing Hotel Abandoned By Owners

Announcing the temporary closing of the Pershing Hotel in Chicago, manager Edward Flagg said it would be reopened as soon as repairs were made and the place put back in good condition.

Negro Buys Home; Atlanta Judge Orders Wall Down

As Atlanta officials scurried to rebuild a street barrier torn down between a white and Negro community, Mayor Ivan Allen confirmed reports that the Negro owner of Thorton Real Estate Investment Co., C. C. Thorton, purchased a home from a white owner on the "white side" of the barricade. In a separate action, a Fulton Superior Court judge ruled that the barricade must come down. Although the mayor called it "regrettable that any action has been taken by any resident in this area that would add to the tensions" already in the area, he revealed no plans to appeal the court ruling.

Businessmen Believe Ala. Can't Survive Segregated

The Rev. Ezekiel Bell, chairman of the tightly knit Community Service Committee which led the campaign to change Huntsville, added: "It wasn't only the integration of the lunch counters that was important . . . it was the pride the Negro community felt in proving they could stick together . . . now we can go on to more important things like jobs and voting . . ." Dr. John Cashin Jr., pioneer dentist whose pretty wife, Joan, took her four-month old baby to jail with her during the local sit-ins, simply declared "You can believe we worked miracles in this town. Everything is going so smooth now, I can hardly believe it myself."

Although most Huntsville citizens are proud of developing the rocket power which sent America's astronauts into orbit and may place the U. S. on the moon, human relations experts are calling the city's partial desegregation the real "miracle of Huntsville." The city has already been selected as a pilot area by the Southern Regional Council which recently hired former Alabama A. and M. Prof. R. T. Blackwell, a leader in the Huntsville movement. A look at the background of the Rocket City will explain "the miracle of Huntsville."

Just before Easter last year, the Space Capital was on the verge of exploding into a bitter racial battleground. Local high school and college students had sat in at lunch counters for three months; Representatives from the NAACP, CORE and SNCC were barred from the city by new state laws still being appealed; (CORE leader Henry Thomas was chased out of town after being doused with mustard gas). Children, two to five years old joined their elders in "poster walks" carrying signs reading: "I ordered a hamburger and was served a warrant," and "You're Worried About Laos and Berlin. What About Alabama and Mississippi?" Governor candidate Wallace (now elected) harangued unruly crowds on the Courthouse steps while Negroes prayed across the street. The city's 19,500 Negroes worked as laborers and domestics while most of the 60,000 whites enjoyed the $55 million annual payroll of the Redstone Arsenal (Only 80-90 Negro employees); A virtual radio, television and newspaper blackout covered the city to keep from embarrassing the nation's space program; outraged ministers finally ordered their congregations to wear overalls and rags to church Easter Sunday "just like Jesus Christ" to dramatize the plight of Alabamans caught in the Southern System. And Mrs. Burnett personally appealed to President Kennedy to get her daughter in school.

Dr. Cashin, S. W. Hereford, Jane Reed, Mrs. Cashin, Dwight Crawford and Lois Jones (l-r) plan more integration for city.

Although it was a highly organized Negro effort which brought about the change, Huntsville sympathy demonstrations before the New York and Chicago stock exchanges was the finally crushing blow. Huntsville leaders immediately called for a meeting with Negro leaders and Negroes were soon appointed to the local bi-racial committees including the powerful Community Advisory Committee, personally headed by Von Braun.

For most Huntsvillians, like America's gigantic space effort, the human relations job was far from finished. Said one longtime resident "before we get a man on the moon 18,000 miles away, I'd like to see us get a Negro child in school right across the street from the arsenal."

LOUISVILLE, KY.
DEFENDER
W. 3,897

MAR 14 1963

Urban League Dinner Notes . . .

For you who missed the Urban League's Annual Dinner, we who were there are sorry, for here was an occasion that lent itself to execution of one's civic duties, stimulation of the mind by a speaker who brought a message of truth, and an occasion to chat with people you don't see too often. Mr. James M. Dabbs, President of the Southern Regional Council, guest speaker for the dinner, pointed out that, "A strange and exciting thing is happening in the south. The old life is moving in new channels driven and guided largely by Negro citizens."

The Urban League Guild under the Chairmanship of Mrs. John Gregory served as hostess and among the charming Guild hostesses were Miss Eleanor Young, Miss Alyce Holden, Miss Marlene Sweet and Mrs. Roscoe Bryant. Presiding for the dinner was Mr. Thomas Ballantine with invocation by Rev. F. G. Sampson, vocal selections by Miss Roslyn Morris accompanied by Mr. Philip Buckman; annual report by Mr. Charles Steele, introduction of speaker by Miss Dorcas Rutherburg and remarks by membership chairmen Mr. Jos. Kaplan and Mr. J. E. Smith presented his personal membership drive check for $100.

ATLANTA, GA.
WORLD
D. 29,500

PAGE ONE CERTIFIED

MAR 16 1963

1962

Job Survey Cites Real City Image

According to studies made by the Southern Regional Council, Macon, Ga., is doing a better job in raising the working standards of the Negro than any other southern city.

The report charges that Atlanta's image as a leader in the integration movement in the South is, for the most part, only an image.

The Southern Regional Council study said that while a scattering of Negro clerks can be found among Atlanta's downtown stores, the city's two largest department stores have only a few Negro clerks.

This compares with more than 100 such positions held by Negroes

(Continued On Page Two)

Job Survey

(Continued from Page One)

in Macon.

QUIET ADVANCE

Desegregation of various public facilities and upgrading of Negro employment has moved ahead quietly in Macon. Negroes are being given such jobs as clerks, sales girls, cashiers and similar positions in stores which previously employed only white persons, the sources stated.

In 1961, President Kennedy issued an executive order giving the President's Committee on Equal Opportunity powers to require government contractors to eliminate job discrimination. The executive order was called the Plans for Progress.

KEY TO PLAN

The key to the plan was that it was voluntary. Eventually, more than 100 major companies in the United States with federal contracts signed the agreement. Of these, 24 were either located or had branch offices in Atlanta.

Of the 24, says the Southern Regional Council, only three lived up to the agreement: Lockheed's plant at nearby Marietta, Ga., Western Electric Co., and Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.

Robert B. Troutman Jr., an Atlanta lawyer and a former member of the committee which drew up the Plans for Progress, said in his final report last summer that 37 firms throughout the nation which signed the agreement reported a 10 per cent increase in nonwhite workers in a six - month period.

The total increase in income for non - white workers was expected to have been about $7.8 million, but the report shows that actual income was $27. million.

The Southern Regional Council noted that only a small proportion of this additional income was paid in the South.

In salaried positions, as distinguished from hourly - paid jobs, the 37 companies reported at the beginning that only 1 per cent of the jobs were held by non - whites.

At the end of the six months, Troutman reported, 6.6 per cent of the new salaried jobs were filed by non - whites.

The council says that "except for a handful of the companies, the plans for progress were, for the regional offices in Atlanta, largely meaningless."

Only seven of the firms gave any evidence that they are trying to comply with their pledges, the council said.

President Kennedy in his address to Congress Feb. 28 made no recommendation in the realm of racial discrimination in employment. He did, however, caution labor unions which have been accused of discriminnation. He said he hoped administrative and legal action would make legislation unnecessary.

RICHMOND, VA.
AFRO-AMERICAN
W. 14,967

MAR 16 1963

More Deliberation Than Speed

That unfortunate phrase, "all deliberate speed," is affecting Southern progress in more ways than school desegregation alone. A recent report of the Southern Regional Council shows that employers in the South are being very "deliberate" about letting down the bars that face qualified colored persons seeking better-paying jobs.

The duty to widen job opportunities was one that the employers imposed on themselves voluntarily. In line with President Kennedy's "Plans for Progress," 100 major companies that made money from government contracts agreed to eliminate job discrimination.

More than a year later, only three of the 24 companies located in the South have lived up to their agreement.

The record in the North is not much better. The relatively few companies which have "desegregated" higher-paying jobs have done so only to a "token" extent.

That is, they have hired two or three colored persons in white-collar jobs, made a great deal of self-congratulatory noise about it, and have gone back to their old hiring practices. They do, however, have a secretary or a salesman or two to exhibit when they are asked if they fulfilled their promise.

The picture in the South is, as usual, much worse. Despite their pledges to Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson, who heads the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, they still have not kept their word.

This is the kind of failure that makes non-Southern observers wonder just how truthful are the reports that the die-hard segregationists who shout "segregation forever" are not representative of the "better" people of the South.

We read in the slick magaines that in Atlanta, Birmingham and other Southern cities, there is a large body of intelligent, rational, substantial people who decry the more violent manifestations of racial prejudice.

These people are usually identified as those in the business - executive class — the employers. This liberal image of the Southern businessman is, however, marred by the realization that in his area of influence (employment), he is just as "unreconstructed" as the hoodlum is in his area (violence).

Even when the Southerner makes an uncommon excursion into the realm of recognizing a colored employee's true worth, he does it in a way that would shame a decent man.

In Miami, Fla., for instance, a jewelry store has a young colored woman keeping its books. For this, the owners pay her a book-keeper's salary.

The shameful part is that they require her to wear a maid's uniform so that white customers won't be offended.

Fear of retaliatory boycott by whites in this and many other instances seems to be one of the major barriers to fair hiring. In some cities like Philadelphia, Washington and Baltimore, the colored communities have launched "selective buying campaigns" to counteract the fear of a possible boycott by staging an actual one in order to show the economic strength and moral unity of the colored group.

This tactic has been spectacularly successful.

Until this strategy was adopted, Northern employers were just as reluctant to hire colored white-collar workers as Southerners were.

The Dixie-based businessman can read of these developments, can recall how such movements spread throughout the country and can make a decision.

His decision, in its baldest terms, will be whether to desegregate voluntarily or be remembered forever as the company that had to be forced—by selective buying campaign or by federal suit.

BALTIMORE, MD.
AFRO-AMERICAN
W. 28,778

MAR 16 1963

U. S. Begins Probe Of Job Equality Pledges

(Editorial on Page 4)

WASHINGTON

The Plans for Progress program, under which firms doing business with the government voluntarily signed pledges to hire on the basis of merit, is a flop in Atlanta.

According to a survey by the Southern Regional Council, the Kennedy Administration program — except for a handful of companies — "for the regional office in Atlanta is largely meaningless."

FROM ALL indications a follow-up investigation by representatives of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity supports the charges by the private bi-racial agency.

And in that light, Hobart Taylor Jr., executive vice chairman of the committee, reportedly has called a conference with officials of government agencies doing business with the firms to order a crackdown.

VOLUNTEER signers are American Machine and Foundry, Burroughs Corp., Chrysler Corp., Collins Radio, Continental Motors, Ford Motor Co., Garrett Corp., General Dynamics, General Electric, General Motors, Goodyear Tire and Rubber;

Hercules Powder, International Business Machines, International Harvester, Kaiser Industries, Lockheed Aircraft, Minneapolis - Honeywell Regulator on., Pan-American World Airways, Philco Corp., Radio Corp. of America, Raytheon Corp.,

And also Thompson Ramo-Wooldridge, Western Electric and Westinghouse.

BATON ROUGE, LA.
NEWS-LEADER
SAT. 10,500

MAR 16 1963

Editorials

Higher Education in South

It has been said that figures do not lie — but do they?

The Southern Regional Council recently released a report, which was heartening, indeed, if one did not stop to reflect too much on the matter.

The report indicates there has been an increase during the past two years of approximately 30 percent in the number of desegregated colleges and universities in 17 southern and border states and the District of Columbia. The total number of secondary schools desegreated were 89, "most of them without fuss or fanfare."

On the latter we happily agree. Most of the schools were desegregated quietly. But the report goes on to state that all southern states today have at least one mixed institution of higher learning, and at this point the council's optimistic figures do not reflect the true status of Negro enrollment in southern schools of higher learning.

Alabama is a notable exception to the council's statement that all southern states have at last one mixed institution of higher learning. True, the courts ordered the University of Alabama desegregated in 1956 and Autherine Lucy was enrolled — but she certainly did not stay very long and since that time no Negro has been enrolled in that school.

If one choses to split legal hairs he may say that the University of Alabama is, in fact, desegregated but a play on words — or on figures — does not alter a situation which does not admit of Negro enrollment at that university. For all practical purposes of academic pursuit it is, as it was before 1956, all white.

Other "desegregated" schools were also listed in the report, their inclusion apparently justified by "expressions of willingness" of their governing boards to admit students without regard to race. Expressions of willingness to perform, no matter how sincere, does not necessarily mean that it will be accomplished.

The report was interesting. We regret, however, that it did not more accurately reflect the possibilities for higher education of the Negro.

RICHMOND, VA.
AFRO-AMERICAN
W. 14,967

MAR 16 1963

U. S. Begins Probe Of Job Equality Pledges

(Editorial on Page 4)

WASHINGTON

The Plans for Progress program, under which firms doing business with the government voluntarily signed pledges to hire on the basis of merit, is a flop in Atlanta.

According to a survey by the Southern Regional Council, the Kennedy Administration program — except for a handful of companies — "for the regional office in Atlanta is largely meaningless."

FROM ALL indications a follow-up investigation by representatives of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity supports the charges by the private bi-racial agency.

And in that light, Hobart Taylor Jr., executive vice chairman of the committee, reportedly has called a conference with officials of government agencies doing business with the firms to order a crackdown.

VOLUNTEER signers are American Machine and Foundry, Burroughs Corp., Chrysler Corp., Collins Radio, Continental Motors, Ford Motor Co., Garrett Corp., General Dynamics, General Electric, General Motors, Goodyear Tire and Rubber;

Hercules Powder, International Business Machines, International Harvester, Kaiser Industries, Lockheed Aircraft, Minneapolis - Honeywell Regulator on., Pan-American World Airways, Philco Corp., Radio Corp. of America, Raytheon Corp.,

And also Thompson Ramo-Wooldridge, Western Electric and Westinghouse.

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
NEWS-JOURNAL
SUN. 36,784

MAR 17 1963

Southern Regional Council Director Will Be Final Forum Speaker

Dr. Leslie W. Dunbar, executive director of the Southern Regional Council, Atlanta, will be the speaker today at the conclusion of the Daytona Beach Open Forum series.

Dr. Dunbar will discuss "The South at Political Crossroads." Herbert M. Davidson, editor and publisher of The News-Journal papers, will be moderator.

The Daytona Beach Civic Ballet company, composed of more than 50 Daytonans, will perform the ballet immediately preceding the speaker at the Peabody Auditorium. The senior company, made up mostly of high school and college students, will present four numbers, and the junior group, from 10 to 12, will perform two.

The Southern Regional Council, an all Southern interracial organization with headquarters in Atlanta, has become widely known for its research and as an information center in the field of race relations.

Dr. Dunbar, who was born in Lewisburg, W.Va., holds degrees from the Maryland State Teachers College, the University of Maryland, Johns Hopkins University, the University of Maryland law school and Cornell University.

He holds an M.A. degree and a Ph.D from Cornell.

In 1948, he was named instructor in the extension division of the New York State School of Industrial and Labor Relations, and later that year received an appointment as instructor in political science at Emory University, Atlanta.

He was assistant professor of political science at Emory from 1949 until 1951 when he was named to the Atomic Energy Commission. He served on the commission until 1954.

In 1955, he was appointed assistant professor of political science at Mt. Holyoke College and remained in that position

(See FORUM on Page 2A)

DR. LESLIE W. DUNBAR
. . . to discuss South

A Matter Of Environment

"Now," he continued, "the custom begins to die out, save in the back country, or bush, as we call it. We can see the forces of environment at work. In the past it was good economic sense to have a plurality of wives. Now, in the towns and cities, it is not. The cost is too great. The services are near. The market is reasonably close by. It is not possible to have a plot of land and to grow food in the urban centers. Nor is there fruit to pick free. So an extra wife is not a necessity, but a costly burden. It never entered the head of the African, as it does not the Moslems in the Arabian countries, and as it did not Old Testament heroes, that a plurality of wives was immoral or wrong.

"It is the same with other old

MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS
D. 157,012 S. 135,810

MAR 17 1963

Is The South Changing? A Southerner Says 'Yes'

By REESE CLEGHORN
Special To The Miami News

MAYESVILLE, S.C. — Here in the homeland of James McBride Dabbs, writer and philosopher, plantation squire and paradox, the Old South was battered and blown but it did not all go with the wind:

You pass swampwaters blackened by acids from the gaunt cypress trees, leave a U. S. highway to travel by shanties and expanses of now-bare cotton fields, turn into a winding dirt road overhung by crowded pine branches and lush bushes, and come abruptly into a clearing in the wilderness.

The road arches symmetrically to and from a great white house, its distant columns obscured by veils of Spanish moss hanging from the oaks.

Close by, Negroes unload sacks of feed at an unpainted outbuilding. In the distance there is the ring of iron upon iron, as one of the plantation tenants does his own "blacksmithing."

Up the front steps into a broad hall, and then into a high-ceilinged room where an intruding gas heater has replaced the open hearth, and where walls are lined with Tocqueville, Nietzsche, Lomax, and Whyte, you come upon what may be the South's rarest plantation sight:

There over the mantle, under an old shotgun and a muzzle-loaded rifle hand-hewn a hundred years ago by a master of this house, hangs a golden plaque.

It praises James McBride Dabbs for "wise and dedicated efforts to unify the American people in their quest for the democratic ideal." It is dated April 9, 1961, and it is signed by the Detroit Chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

A southern planter with NAACP laurels is somewhat rarer than a day in June, but Dabbs is rare for other reasons, too.

Dabbs On Steps Of Home

"He is the only man I know who can intellectualize magnolias," a friend said of him, pointing toward this big, shaggy man's special genius.

Dabbs leads one of the nation's most important civil rights organizations, the Southern Regional Council, but it is in the realm of the mind rather than in organization work that he has found a special place. He is a sort of poet-philosopher of his region, many believe a profound one.

He writes of the South today with fervent intimacy, and yet he lives more in the past and the future than in the present. ("I admit that out here I'm not much in this world, except in the mind," he said.)

WHEN HIS BOOK "The Southern Heritage" appeared in 1958, editor Hodding Carter of Mississippi called it "the most meaningful comment on the race situation yet made by a Southerner." It is a classic in the growing field of literature created by the South's coming to grips with itself.

Though he goes to Atlanta about four times a year for Southern Regional Council business and makes occasional speeches elsewhere, he is rooted to his birthplace.

Twenty years ago he quit as chairman of the English Department at Coker College in Hartwell, S.C., and went back to the land of the McBrides and the Dabbses, where his family has lived for more than 200 years. His stately home, built by the McBrides, is within a mile of the smaller house where he lived as a child.

It is also near a Presbyterian church founded by Scotch-Irish settlers in 1745 and still attended mainly by their descendants. Dabbs, who believes Christianity is the "central fire" in the South, is a ruling elder in his church.

With pipe in hand, dressed in unpressed corduroy trousers and a heavy gray wool sweater to keep out the chill of the old house's poorly heated big rooms, he sat in his study and told of how he left university life to come home to the land.

Until 10 years ago, he worked the farm himself; he recalls spending half his time on a tractor in the fields, turning the rich soil that once made this a cotton empire. Today the thousands of acres that his family owned have been reduced to 125.

NOW 67, Dabbs leaves the farm to three Negro sharecroppers. ("That word always scares my liberal friends.") Though his name appears on other mail boxes nearby, the only occupants of the 12-room plantation house are Dabbs, his Charleston - born wife, and their 18-year-old son, Richard.

His own time is largely devoted to writing. More than a hundred of his articles have been published in periodicals, and he expects his third book to appear in 1965.

"I am trying to corner the Southerner," he said of his subject. "I want to set forth the nature of the South, the nature of the Southerner. People say you can't do it — there are many Souths. But just a few days ago Karl Barth, the great Swiss theologian, said that in traveling across the United States he had sensed a different atmosphere in the South."

As far as Dabbs is concerned, it is "vive la difference," a fact that might surprise many in his region and even some of his neighbors. These are the ones who regard Dabbs as a "traitor to the South" because long ago he joined in the fight for Negro rights.

(You stop not far from where he lives, and one man calls him a hypocrite while another asserts: "Nobody in South Carolina pays any attention to Dabbs.")

★ ★ ★

"DEFENDING segregation as our way of life, we sell the South short," he said with feeling. "Have we lived here 300 years to accomplish only this? I don't believe it.

"I'm defending the South, but I'm defending it against the future rather than the past. Ross Barnett defended it against a remembered terror of 75 years ago.

"I would never leave the South, because it has something the rest of the country doesn't have."

To Dabbs, granting exceptions, the Southerner has these characteristics:

IN JOURNAL

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BARCLAY 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 CHURCH STREET NEW YORK 7, N.Y.

g?
es'

have been reduced

, Dabbs leaves the ree Negro sharecrop-
That word always liberal friends.") is name appears on l boxes nearby, the pants of the 12-room house are Dabbs, his
- born wife, and their son, Richard.

time is largely de-writing. More than a of his articles have lished in periodicals, xpects his third book in 1965.

trying to corner the er," he said of his
"I want to set forth
re of the South, the the Southerner. Peoyou can't do it — e many Souths. But few days ago Karl e great Swiss theoloid that in traveling he United States he sed a different ate in the South."

as Dabbs is concern-
"vive la difference," a might surprise many gion and even some of bors. These are the regard Dabbs as a o the South" because he joined in the fight rights.

op not far from where and one man calls
ypocrite while another
"Nobody in South Carys any attention to

★ ★ ★

NDING segregation as of life, we sell the ort," he said with feel-ve we lived here 300 accomplish only this? I ieve it.

efending the South, but nding it against the fu-er than the past. Ross defended it against a red terror of 75 years

uld never leave the because it has some-e rest of the country have."

bbs, granting excep-Southerner has these istics:

James Dabbs' Home Built By Grandfather A Century Ago

He loves the land, and draws from it some serenity that enables him to be more self-contained.

He is more devoted to leisure, and with it neighborliness and courtesy. At heart he is more a creature of manners than of money.

He is essentially religious, without the harshness of the Puritan.

★ ★ ★

MORE THAN the Midwesterner or the Westerner, he possesses a sense of having a place in the world as a particular individual, without the necessity of competing for it.

And he senses having a place just as a man, deserving some dignity of treatment and some privacy of living.

"You would not expect, in ordinary times, for a Ross Barnett to be a Southerner," he said. "The narrow, hard people ought to come out of New England, where Yankee Puritans held sway. Barnett is an exception rather than a true Southerner, a creature of the imbalance that exists within our culture right now."

What is the imbalance?

It was born of conflict between the Southerner's natural desire for a peaceful, pastoral, personal life and the necessity to defend ugly institutions he knew were fundamentally wrong, Dabbs believes. First it was slavery, then segregation, that imposed the pressures bringing about distortion in the Southern character.

"I think we will have to hammer out from scratch new values for an industrial, urban society," he said. "I don't believe the country has done it yet. I would hope that somehow we can transfer to this new order some of the values of the earlier, agrarian order, to leave us a life with some dignity."

★ ★ ★

A BELIEF in the special character of the South, he thinks, is in keeping with the aspirations of the Southern Regional Council, an organization of whites and Negroes with a 43-year history of seeking to improve race relations.

The council staff is in Atlanta, and Dabbs, who has been president since 1957, drops in only occasionally. The council's endeavors have been in the realm of research, education and maintaining interracial communications rather than in legal and direct action.

Some of Dabbs' friends were a bit anxious when he was called upon in 1961 to address the national convention of another civil rights organization, the NAACP, in Philadelphia. After all, enemy of segregation or not, here was a Southern traditionalist who didn't quite fit any of the usual patterns of civil rights advocates — an elderly man, a lover of the past, a planter.

"But he gave them a sort of cornpone talk that went over wonderfully," an associate recalled.

As usual, the human and folksy cornpone was interspersed with literary allusions, metaphorical flourishes, biting irony and the thunder of strong conviction, cut in no shape but his own.

It was pure Dabbs, and by his own definition of the species, pure Southerner.

The happy reception of his words seemed to confirm his view that the white South and the Negro have a special affinity for each other, and that time will draw them together as brothers under the skin.

★ ★ ★

CONSERVATIVE OR LIBERAL?

James McBride Dabbs is called a liberal. He does not like the racial pattern established in the South half a century ago.

"Well, of course, I am a conservative," he said. "I want to save as much of the old order as possible. All the thrust of my thinking is to find in the past the chief values in hope that some can be transferred to modern society.

"That's the way of the conservative."

★ ★ ★

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
JOURNAL
D. 30,308

MAR 18 1963

Decline Of Southern Leadership Deplored

Forum Speaker Notes Changing Scene In Politics, Interests

By DRIW MURPHY

The "deterioration" of Southern statesmanship was singled out yesterday as "the one most alarming" thing in any picture of the contemporary South.

Dr. Leslie W. Dunbar, executive director of the Southern Regional Council, Atlanta, said "an abysmal failure of intelligence . . . among our political leaders" is even more alarming than the South's economic and educational shortcomings."

Addressing this year's last Open Forum audience, Dr. Dunbar said the sophistication and realism which once characterized the South's politics, especially its presidential and congressional politics, have all but disappeared.

Questioned as to why Southern political leadership has declined, Dr. Dunbar said he thinks the cause lies in undue preoccupation with race questions.

"Southern leaders have been too absorbed with this one problem," Dr. Dunbar said. "They have had time for little else."

He added he thinks it is "discouraging" that Southern statesmen, once noted for traditional interest in national questions (foreign policy, for instance), have been sidetracked by the race question.

This sidetracking, which has led to what Dr. Dunbar called "Southern oppositionism," dates back to 1947 when Pres. Truman appointed his Civil Rights Committee and "subsequently espoused its recommendations."

"From this time on, Democratic politicians from the South have retreated from the Democratic Party," Dr. Dunbar said. "and step by step have come to oppose virtually everything for which the national Democratic Party stands.

"At the very time that the South was moving economically toward the rest of the nation," he continued, "the South politically has been pulling away."

The South now has reached a fork in the road, according to Dr. Dunbar.

One way leads toward keeping a "politics which is not really anything except a politics of opposition, based on a crude and defeatist belief that the South must defend itself against the invader—even if the invader be the spirit of democracy, and even if the invader be the religious spirit of brotherhood," Dr. Dunbar said.

"The other fork of the road leads us toward union with the political and intellectual life of the country as a whole," he added.

Dr. Dunbar gave three "optimistic" reasons why he thinks the South will choose the last course. They were: the improved racial climate, reapportionment, and the emergence of a realistic two party system in some Southern states.

The improved racial climate was termed "the greatest asset the South has today" by Dr. Dunbar.

Reapportionment should help in coping with "our most critical problems in the next decades," which will be urban, Dr. Dunbar said.

An active two party system in the South could keep the region from remaining "oppositionist," he added, "with Southern Democrats truly allied to the national Democratic Party, and Southern Republicans truly allied to the national Republican Party."

Dr. Dunbar called the growth of a two party system the "best means for ending Southern isolation," and issued a call to "stop defending what is bad in Southern traditions, give up oppositionism, and cast our lot with the nation."

Five "landmark dates" were picked by Dr. Dunbar to illustrate changes in American society which "are a special challenge to the South." The dates were:

—1944, and the Supreme Court decision in the case of Smith vs. Allwright. This decision outlawed the White primary in the South and made the power of Negro voting a decisive factor.

—1954, and another Supreme Court decision in Brown vs. Topeka. This ruling meant the desegregation of public schools.

Calling progress in desegregation "cruelly and stupidly slow," Dr. Dunbar pointed out that the Supreme Court ruling and the resulting controversy exposed the fact that both the North and the South have practiced practical segregation of Negroes.

—1960, and John F. Kennedy's election as President. Dr. Dunbar called the election of the country's first Catholic President symbolically important, confirming the fact that non-Protestants have a "share in the power to make the highest decisions for this country."

—1962, again a decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Baker vs. Carr. Here the Court ruled that when the apportionment of legislative seats in a state is grossly unfair, the federal courts can give relief. Resulting reapportionment moves should permit urban opinion to play a much bigger part in the South, Dr. Dunbar said.

—1940, the last year of a peacetime economy. Tracing ups and downs of employment levels since that time, Dr. Dunbar said it is a "tragic irony" in our society that while our Negro population represents "the only remaining large supply of underused labor," Negroes always are the last hired.

Entertainment for 45 minutes before Dr. Dunbar's talk was supplied by the Daytona Beach Civic Ballet, Dr. Hollace Arment of the Daytona Beach Junior College, and DBJC student Richard Huff, a baritone.

Moderator for yesterday's Open Forum was Herbert M. Davidson, editor and publisher of The News-Journal, himself a director of the Southern Regional Council.

ERIE, PA.
NEWS
D. 24,370

MAR 19 1963

Negro Jobseekers In South Face 2 Traditional Thorns

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP)—Southern Negroes constantly are reminded of the two cardinal rules which apply to them when it comes to hunting for a job.

They must not work on an equal status with white persons, and they must not, if it can at all be avoided, supervise white persons.

The Southern Regional Council has made several studies to determine what is being done to place Negroes in positions other than traditional jobs.

One study indicates that Macon, Ga., is doing a better job in raising the working standards of the Negro than any other Southern city.

There were these other findings:

Atlanta's image as a leader in the integration movement in the South is, for the most part, only an image.

While scattering of Negro clerks can be found among Atlanta's smaller downtown stores, the city's two biggest department stores have only one Negro clerk each.

This compares with more than 100 such positions held by Negroes in Macon.

Although there are about 1,500 persons in apprenticeship training programs in Dade County, Miami, Fla., none is a Negro.

Negroes at Houston, Tex., predominate as folders in laundries—hot and strenuous work paying $25 a week—and as shirt press operators, considered by laundry owners as highly skilled work.

Desegregation of various public facilities and upgrading of Negro employment has moved ahead quietly in Macon. Negroes there are being given such jobs as clerks, sales girls, cashiers and similar positions in stores which any evidence that they are trying to comply with their pledges, the council said.

Many employers in the South say they hire Negroes because it is good business to hire good workers. Most do not want any publicity.

A young Negro woman, hired as a maid by a jewelry store in Miami, does all of the store's bookkeeping and earns a bookkeeper's salary. The manager still requires her to wear a maid's uniform, so his customers won't know that she works in a white collar job.

In Houston, a bakery, two automobile dealers and a brewing company have hired Negro salesmen. But they work with Negro customers.

A national food processing firm at Houston says the company now has more Negroes in key positions than at any time in the firm's history. These include foremen, supervisors, and coffee processors.

And a taster in the coffee-blending department, a prestige position, is a Negro with long seniority.

A leading flower farm at Chattanooga, Tenn., with a large southeast clientele, employed a Negro flower designer who works with white colleagues.

President Kennedy in his address to Congress on Feb. 28 made no recommendation in the realm of racial discrimination in employment. He did, however, caution labor unions which have been accused of discrimination. He said he hoped administrative and legal action would make legislation unnecessary.

stores have only one Negro clerk each.

This compares with more than 100 such positions held by Negroes in Macon.

Although there are about 1,500 persons in apprenticeship training programs in Dade County, Miami, Fla., none is a Negro.

Negroes at Houston, Tex., predominate as folders in laundries—hot and strenuous work paying $25 a week—and as shirt press operators, considered by laundry owners as highly skilled work.

Desegregation of various public facilities and upgrading of Negro employment has moved ahead quietly in Macon. Negroes there are being given such jobs as clerks, sales girls, cashiers and similar positions in stores which previously employed only white persons.

In 1961, President Kennedy issued an executive order giving the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity powers to require government contractors to eliminate job discrimination. The executive order was called the Plans for Progress.

The key to the plan was that it was voluntary. Eventually, more than 100 major companies in the United States with federal contracts signed the agreement. Of these, 24 were either located or had branch offices in Atlanta.

Of the 24, says the Southern Regional Council, only three lived up to the agreement: Lockheed's plant at nearby Marietta, Ga.; Western Electric Co., and Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.

Robert B. Troutman Jr., an Atlanta lawyer and a former member of the committee which drew up the Plans for Progress, said in his final report last summer that 37 firms throughout the nation which signed the agreement reported a 10 per cent increase in nonwhite workers in a six-month period.

The total increase in income for nonwhite workers was expected to have been about $7.8 million, but the report shows that actual income was $27 million.

The Southern Regional Council noted that only a small proportion of this additional income was paid in the South.

In salaried positions, as distinguished from hour-paid jobs, the 37 companies reported at the beginning that only one per cent of the jobs were held by nonwhites.

At the end of the six months, Troutman reported, 6.6 per cent of the new salaried jobs were filed by nonwhites.

The council says that "except for a handful of the companies, the Plans for Progress were, for the regional offices in Atlanta, largely meaningless."

Only seven of the firms gave

And a taster in the coffee-blending department, a prestige position, is a Negro with long seniority.

A leading flower farm at Chattanooga, Tenn., with a large southeast clientele, employed a Negro flower designer who works with white colleagues.

President Kennedy in his address to Congress on Feb. 28 made no recommendation in the realm of racial discrimination in employment. He did, however, caution labor unions which have been accused of discrimination. He said he hoped administrative and legal action would make legislation unnecessary.

ATLANTA, GA.
WORLD
D. 29,500

MAR 23 1963

Vote Campaign Stepped Up Despite Gunfire Terror

GREENWOOD, Miss — Undaunted by shotgun terror and other forms of intimidation, the NAACP this week expanded its efforts to register Negro voters in Leflore County where the White Citizens Council maintains its headquarters.

Arriving here immediately after the second shooting within a week at young Negro registration workers, W. C. Patton, NAACP field secretary for voter registration, arranged for employment of a team of five young persons to engage in a two-month intensive campaign to get Negroes on the voting rolls. Also he engaged the services of Amzie Moore, veteran civil rights fighter and former president of the Cleveland Miss., NAACP branch.

These NAACP workers, Mr. Patton said, would augment the personnel already engaged in voter registration work here under supervision of Robert Moses who heads the Voter Education Project activity in this area.

The decision to step up the drive followed attempts by unidentified white persons to frighten the youthful campaigners at gun point. On Feb. 23, James Travis was seriously wounded by gunfire in his neck and shoulders when a car occupied by three white men sped by and shot into the automobile in which he, Mr. Moses and Randolph Blackwell were driving. On the night of March 6, three young registration workers — Samuel Block, 23, Willie Peacock, 25, and Miss Peggy Marye, 19 were injured by flying glass when the parked car in which they were seated was shot into.

MIAMI, FLA.
TIMES
W. 4,412

MAR 23 1963

Desegregation in Higher Education

Southern Regional Council has just distributed revised report listing formerly all-white colleges and universities of the 17 southern and border states and District of Columbia which are known to be desegregated. An increase of approximately 30 percent in two years. A few copies of the full report are available at FCHR office; the Florida colleges are listed here:

PUBLIC: Dade County Junior, Miami; Daytona Beach Junior, Daytona; Fla. State Univ., Tallahassee; Manatee Junior, Bradenton; Palm Beach Junior, Lake Worth; St. Petersburg Junior, St. Pete; Univ. of Fla., Gainesville; Univ. of South Fla., Tampa.

NON-PUBLIC: Barry College, Miami; Florida Presbyterian, St. Pete; Stetson Univ., DeLand; Univ. of Miami, Coral Gables.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
STAR
D. 267,282 S. 313,407

MAR 24 1963

Conference On Liberties Scheduled

Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas will speak at Thursday's dinner meeting of the 15th annual conference of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House. His topic will be "Education for a Society under the Bill of Rights."

Equality in housing, prayer in the schools and the mood of the Negro will be among the subjects aired at the two-day meeting, March 28 and 29, at the Sheraton-Carlton Hotel Representatives of more than 100 citizens' organizations, as well as Government officials, are scheduled to attend.

Gov. David L. Lawrence, chairman of the President's Committee on Equal Opportunity in Housing, will open a session on "Housing Discrimination — Whose Responsibility?" at 2 p.m. Thursday. Other speakers on this problem will be Nathaniel H. Rogg, director of economics of the National Association of Home Buildings, and Whitney M. Young, jr., director of the Urban League.

The issue of prayer in the public schools will be discussed at 9:30 a.m. Friday by William B. Ball, general counsel of the Pennsylvania Catholic Welfare Committee; the Rev. Dean M. Kelley, director of the National Council of Churches' Department of Religious Liberty, and Dr. Theodore Powell, of the Connecticut State Department of Education.

Speakers at Friday's luncheon will be Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for Advancement of Colored People; James Farmer, national director of CORE, and Leslie W. Dungar, director of the Southern Regional Council

ATLANTA, GA.
JOURNAL-CONSTITUTION
SUN. 502,157

MAR 24 1963

Photo—Fred Powledge

VOTER REGISTRATION CLASS CONDUCTED IN LIBERTY COUNTY
Sheriff Robert V. Sikes (Standing) Speaks to Group on Procedures

AID FOR NEGROES

'Citizen'?---Class Probes And Takes Step to Voting

voter education project

By FRED POWLEDGE
Atlanta Journal Staff Writer

MIDWAY, Ga., March 23—The teacher wrote "citizen" on the blackboard. Then she wrote "Constitution" and "amendment." Then she turned to her class of 30 adult students.

"What do these mean, students?" she asked. She got a variety of answers, and when the discussion died down, the teacher was able to make a generalization:

"This is the reason we know we are citizens: Because it's written in an amendment to the Constitution."

An elderly Negro minister from Arkansas took notes on a yellow legal pad. A machine operator from Atlanta raised his hand to ask another question.

THIS WAS an opening session in an unusual citizenship education program held near here in a big brick building erected 29 years ago for the purpose of helping Negroes in the task of educating themselves.

By the time this week's session was over, those three words on the blackboard had become the basis of a new education in citizenship for the 29 Negroes and one white who attended the five-day workshop.

Now they have left for their homes in Georgia, Alabama, Arkansas, and South Carolina with what the school's directors hope is a burning desire to start their own voter registration schools among their own communities.

tricts there are and how many congressional districts; and I find that people who can't read or write have very good memories."

THE INSTRUCTORS are proud of some of their former students, like "a little old lady from Clinch County," Ga., who finished her course, went home, and started sending in reports that she had registered 300 voters. The school checked and found that she had operated 13 home-town registration schools on her own.

Another students went home to Louisiana and initiated action which got 500 voters restored to the registration list. And a woman from Virginia turned her home into a voter registration center.

The membership of the school is, unlike the membership of many civil rights organizations, not all young people. In this week's class were middle-aged and elderly people who work as domestics and housewives or who are retired or unemployed.

THEIR STUDIES in Liberty County have been uninterrupted partially because of the county's history of racial cooperation—or at least of noninterference. The U. S. Civil Rights Commission, in its 1961 report on voting, found that Liberty County Negroes make up 50.2 per cent of the registered voting age population. There were 8,348 whites and 6,139 nonwhites in the county in 1960.

Another reason for the tranquil atmosphere at Dorchester Center is the fact that, aside from singing such "freedom songs" as "We Shall Overcome," the Negroes are simply students who spend long hours in class and who didn't come here to sit-in or picket.

THEIR CLASS hours are largely spent in learning simple things—and in learning how to teach those same principles to the people back home: Simple things like pronunciation. This week the students worked hard on the word "registration."

One of the students pronounced it "reddish" in Mrs. Cotton's class. She asked:

"Could that be improved on, class? Let's pronounce it, class. You'll be working in a voter registration campaign and you wouldn't want to say 'reddish.' . . ."

The class pronounced the word. Then a middle-aged woman tried it, again and again. She finally pronounced the word correctly.

"That's good," said a man who had only recently mastered the word himself. The class applauded.

tion:

"This is the reason we know we are citizens: Because it's written in an amendment to the Constitution."

An elderly Negro minister from Arkansas took notes on a yellow legal pad. A machine operator from Atlanta raised his hand to ask another question.

THIS WAS an opening session in an unusual citizenship education program held near here in a big brick building erected 29 years ago for the purpose of helping Negroes in the task of educating themselves.

By the time this week's session was over, those three words on the blackboard had become the basis of a new education in citizenship for the 29 Negroes and one white who attended the five-day workshop.

Now they have left for their homes in Georgia, Alabama, Arkansas, and South Carolina with what the school's directors hope is a burning desire to start their own voter registration schools among their own communities.

THE PROGRAM, sponsored by the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, is one of several different projects now under way to increase Negro voting strength in the South. The program at Dorchester Center, near here, has resulted in the training of about 275 persons in the best methods to stimulate registration back in their home towns.

Funds for the school — about $95,000 for the first year—come from the Field Foundation. The program is being conducted jointly by the Board of Home Missions of the United Church of Christ and by the SCLC, an Atlanta civil rights organization headed by the Rev. Martin Luther King Junior.

THE PERSONS who instruct at Dorchester, Mrs. Septima P. Clark, Mrs. Dorothy F. Cotton, and Rev. Andrew Young, estimate that the school's first five classes, conducted between July 1962 and January 1963, resulted in the registration of more than 8,000 voters in the South.

There is a variety of instruction, ranging from discussions of simple words like "amendment" to practice in correct pronounciation of words like "register." The students talk about the sources of political power, and they hear speeches from outsiders.

LAST WEDNESDAY the sheriff of Liberty County, Robert V. Sikes, explained the functions of county officers to the interracial gathering. He was followed by Mayor F. W. Mingledorff of nearby Hinesville, who explained the functions of his city.

The sheriff said at the beginning that he was about as nervous as his son, who was preparing to quarterback in a school football game that night. But as he fielded questions from the students his nervousness disappeared.

THE STUDENTS learn, in addition to some of the more abstract concepts of democracy, hard political facts. One class is devoted to a discussion of voting requirements in the various states.

For those who cannot read or write, the requirements are stiffer. In Georgia, for instance, illiterates must correctly answer 20 out of 30 questions about state government; in Alabama they must answer 21 out of 21 questions. The class moaned this week when Georgia's list was read, but Mrs. Clark said:

"It sounds like a lot, but it is awful good history to learn about your state this way. It's good to know how many senatorial dis-operated 13 home-town registration schools on her own.

Another students went home to Louisiana and initiated action which got 500 voters restored to the registration list. And a woman from Virginia turned her home partially because of the county's history of racial cooperation—or at least of noninterference. The U. S. Civil Rights Commission, in its 1961 report on voting, found that Liberty County Negroes make up 50.2 per cent of the registered voting age population. There were

PROVIDENCE, R.I.
JOURNAL
D. 61,910 S. 191,554

MAR 24 1963

'For Wise and Dedicated Efforts'

NAACP Honors Southern F

By REESE CLEGHORN
Special to The Sunday Journal

Mayesville, S. C. — Here in the homeland of James McBride Dabbs, writer and philosopher, plantation squire and paradox, the Old South was battered and blown but it did not all go with the wind.

You pass swampwaters blackened by acids from the gaunt cypress trees, leave a U.S. highway to travel by shanties and expanses of now-bare cotton fields, turn into a winding dirt road overhung by crowded pine branches and lush bushes, and come abruptly into a clearing in the wilderness.

The road arches symmetrically to and from a great white house, its distant columns obscured by veils of Spanish moss hanging from the oaks.

Close by, Negroes unload sacks of feed at an unpainted outbuilding. In the distance there is the ring of iron upon iron, as one of the plantation tenants does his own "blacksmithing."

Up the front steps into a broad hall, and then into a high-ceilinged room where an intruding gas heater has replaced the open hearth, and where walls are lined with Tocqueville, Nietzsche, Lomax, and Whyte, you come upon what may be the South's rarest plantation sight.

Golden Plaque Tells NAACP Appreciation

There over the mantle, under an old shotgun and a

"He is the only man I know who can intellectualize magnolias," a friend said of him, pointing toward this big, shaggy man's special genius.

Mr. Dabbs leads one of the nation's most important civil rights organizations, the Southern Regional Council, but it is in the realm of the mind rather than in organization work that he has found a special place. He is a sort of poet-philosopher of his region, many believe a profound one.

Writes of His South With Understanding

He writes of the South today with fervent intimacy, and yet he lives more in the past and the future than in the present. ("I admit that out here I'm not much in this world, except in the mind," he said.)

When his book "The Southern Heritage" appeared in 1958, editor Hodding Carter of Mississippi called it "the most meaningful comment on the race situation yet made by a Southerner." It is a classic in the growing field of literature created by the South's coming to grips with itself.

Though he goes to Atlanta about four times a year for Southern Regional Council business and makes occasional speeches elsewhere, he is rooted to his birthplace.

Twenty years ago he quit as chairman of the English Department at Coker College in Hartwell, S. C., and went

With pipe in hand, dressed in unpressed corduroy trousers and a heavy gray wool sweater to keep out the chill of the old house's poorly heated big rooms, he sat in his study and told of how he left university life to come home to the land.

Until 10 years ago, he worked the farm himself; he recalls spending half his time on a tractor in the fields, turning the rich soil that once made this a cotton empire. Today the thousands of acres that his family owned have been reduced to 125.

Now 67, Mr. Dabbs, leaves the farm to three Negro sharecroppers. ("That word always scares my liberal friends.") Though his name appears on other mail boxes nearby, the only occupants of the 12-room plantation house are Mr. Dabbs, his Charleston-born wife, and their 18-year-old son, Richard.

Time Largely Given To Writing Ventures

His own time is largely devoted to writing. More than a hundred of his articles have been published in periodicals, and he expects his third book to appear in 1965.

"I am trying to corner the Southerner," he said of his subject. "I want to set forth the nature of the South, the nature of the Southerner. People say you can't do it—there are many Souths. But just a few days ago Karl Barth, the great Swiss theologian, said that in traveling across the South Carolina pays any attention to Dabbs.")

"Defending segregation as our way of life, we sell the South short," he said with feeling. "Have we lived here 300 years to accomplish only this? I don't believe it.

"I'm defending the South, but I'm defending it against the future rather than the past. Ross Barnett defended it against a remembered terror of 75 years ago.

"I would never leave the South, because it has something the rest of the country doesn't have."

To Mr. Dabbs, granting exceptions, the Southerner has these characteristics:

He loves the land, and draws from it some serenity that enables him to be more self-contained.

He is more devoted to leisure, and with it neighborliness and courtesy. At heart he is more a creature of manners than of money.

He is essentially religious, without the harshness of the Puritan.

Finds Special Traits In Southern Persons

More than the Midwesterner or the Westerner, he possesses a sense of having a place in the world as a particular individual, without the necessity of competing for it.

And he senses having a place just as a man, deserving some dignity of treatment and some privacy of living.

"You would not expect, in

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BARCLAY 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 CHURCH STREET

ern Planter

rolina pays any at-Dabbs.")

ding segregation as of life, we sell the ort," he said with
'Have we lived here to accomplish only
n't believe it.

efending the South, defending it against re rather than the ss Barnett defended
t a remembered ter-years ago.

ld never leave the ecause it has some-rest of the country ave."

Dabbs, granting ex-the Southerner has racteristics:

ves the land, and om it some serenity bles him to be more ined.

more devoted to leid with it neighborli-courtesy. At heart
e a creature of man-of money.

essentially religious, he harshness of the ecial Traits hern Persons

han the Midwesterner esterner, he possesses of having a place in d as a particular in-without the necessi-peting for it.

e senses having a t as a man, deserv-dignity of treatment privacy of living.

would not expect, in then segregation, that imposed the pressures bringing about distortion in the Southern character.

"I think we will have to hammer out from scratch new values for an industrial, urban society," he said. "I don't believe the country has done it yet. I would hope that somehow we can transfer to this new order some of the values of the earlier, agrarian order, to leave us a life with some dignity."

A belief in the special character of the South, he thinks, is in keeping with the aspirations of the Southern Regional Council, an organization of whites and Negroes with a 43-year history of seeking to improve race relations.

The council staff is in Atlanta, and Mr. Dabbs, who has been president since 1957, drops in only occasionally. The council's endeavors have been in the realm of research, education and maintaining interracial communications rather than in legal and direct action.

Some of Mr. Dabbs' friends were a bit anxious when he was called upon in 1961 to address the national convention of another civil rights organization, the NAACP, in Philadelphia. After all, enemy of segregation or not, here was a Southern traditionalist who didn't quite fit any of the usual patterns of civil rights advocates — an elderly man, a lover of the past, a planter.

Gives Cornpone Talk And Scores Success

"But he gave them a sort of

James McBride Dabbs—Apostle of Racial Unity muzzle-loaded rifle hand-hewn a hundred years ago by a master of this house, hangs back to the lan Brides and th

where his famil

D. 61,910 S. 191,554

MAR 24 1963 Buffalo

'For Wise and Dedicated Efforts'

NAACP Honors Southern Planter

By REESE CLEGHORN
Special to The Sunday Journal

Mayesville, S. C. — Here in the homeland of James McBride Dabbs, writer and philosopher, plantation squire and paradox, the Old South was battered and blown but it did not all go with the wind.

You pass swampwaters blackened by acids from the gaunt cypress trees, leave a U.S. highway to travel by shanties and expanses of now-bare cotton fields, turn into a winding dirt road overhung by crowded pine branches and lush bushes, and come abruptly into a clearing in the wilderness.

The road arches symmetrically to and from a great white house, its distant columns obscured by veils of Spanish moss hanging from the oaks.

Close by, Negroes unload sacks of feed at an unpainted outbuilding. In the distance there is the ring of iron upon iron, as one of the plantation tenants does his own "blacksmithing."

Up the front steps into a broad hall, and then into a high-ceilinged room where an intruding gas heater has replaced the open hearth, and where walls are lined with Tocqueville, Nietzsche, Lomax, and Whyte, you come upon what may be the South's rarest plantation sight.

Golden Plaque Tells NAACP Appreciation

There over the mantle, under an old shotgun and a muzzle-loaded rifle hand-hewn a hundred years ago by a master of this house, hangs a golden plaque.

It praises James McBride Dabbs for "wise and dedicated efforts to unify the American people in their quest for the democratic ideal." It is dated April 9, 1961, and it is signed by the Detroit Chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

A Southern planter with NAACP laurels is somewhat rarer than a day in June, but Mr. Dabbs is rare for other reasons, too.

"He is the only man I know who can intellectualize magnolias," a friend said of him, pointing toward this big, shaggy man's special genius.

Mr. Dabbs leads one of the nation's most important civil rights organizations, the Southern Regional Council, but it is in the realm of the mind rather than in organization work that he has found a special place. He is a sort of poet-philosopher of his region, many believe a profound one.

Writes of His South With Understanding

He writes of the South today with fervent intimacy, and yet he lives more in the past and the future than in the present. ("I admit that out here I'm not much in this world, except in the mind," he said.)

When his book "The Southern Heritage" appeared in 1958, editor Hodding Carter of Mississippi called it "the most meaningful comment on the race situation yet made by a Southerner." It is a classic in the growing field of literature created by the South's coming to grips with itself.

Though he goes to Atlanta about four times a year for Southern Regional Council business and makes occasional speeches elsewhere, he is rooted to his birthplace.

Twenty years ago he quit as chairman of the English Department at Coker College in Hartwell, S. C., and went back to the land of the McBrides and the Dabbses, where his family has lived for for more than 200 years. His stately home, built by the McBrides, in within a mile of the smaller house where he lived as a child.

Feels Christianity Is Dominant Spark

It is also near a Presbyterian church founded by Scotch-Irish settlers in 1745 and still attended mainly by their descendants. Mr. Dabbs, who believes Christianity is the "central fire" in the South, is a ruling elder in his church.

With pipe in hand, dressed in unpressed corduroy trousers and a heavy gray wool sweater to keep out the chill of the old house's poorly heated big rooms, he sat in his study and told of how he left university life to come home to the land.

Until 10 years ago, he worked the farm himself; he recalls spending half his time on a tractor in the fields, turning the rich soil that once made this a cotton empire. Today the thousands of acres that his family owned have been reduced to 125.

Now 67, Mr. Dabbs, leaves the farm to three Negro sharecroppers. ("That word always scares my liberal friends.") Though his name appears on other mail boxes nearby, the only occupants of the 12-room plantation house are Mr. Dabbs, his Charleston-born wife, and their 18-year-old son, Richard.

Time Largely Given To Writing Ventures

His own time is largely devoted to writing. More than a hundred of his articles have been published in periodicals, and he expects his third book to appear in 1965.

"I am trying to corner the Southerner," he said of his subject. "I want to set forth the nature of the South, the nature of the Southerner. People say you can't do it—there are many Souths. But just a few days ago Karl Barth, the great Swiss theologian, said that in traveling across the United States he had sensed a different atmosphere in the South."

As far as Mr. Dabbs is concerned, it is "Vive la difference," a fact that might surprise many in his region and even some of his neighbors. These are the ones who regard Mr. Dabbs as a "traitor to the South" because long ago he joined in the fight for Negro rights.

Denies Segregation Is Real Way of Life

(You stop not far from where he lives, and one man calls him a hypocrite while another asserts: "Nobody in South Carolina pays any attention to Dabbs.")

"Defending segregation as our way of life, we sell the South short," he said with feeling. "Have we lived here 300 years to accomplish only this? I don't believe it.

"I'm defending the South, but I'm defending it against the future rather than the past. Ross Barnett defended it against a remembered terror of 75 years ago.

"I would never leave the South, because it has something the rest of the country doesn't have."

To Mr. Dabbs, granting exceptions, the Southerner has these characteristics:

He loves the land, and draws from it some serenity that enables him to be more self-contained.

He is more devoted to leisure, and with it neighborliness and courtesy. At heart, he is more a creature of manners than of money.

He is essentially religious, without the harshness of the Puritan.

Finds Special Traits In Southern Persons

More than the Midwesterner or the Westerner, he possesses a sense of having a place in the world as a particular individual, without the necessity of competing for it.

And he senses having a place just as a man, deserving some dignity of treatment and some privacy of living.

"You would not expect, in ordinary times for a Ross Barnett to be a Southerner," he said. "The narrow, hard people ought to come out of New England, where Yankee Puritans held sway.

"Barnett is an exception rather than a true Southerner, a creature of the imbalance that exists within our culture right now."

What is the imbalance?

It was born of conflict between the Southerner's natural desire for a peaceful, pastoral, personal life and the necessity to defend ugly institutions he knew were fundamentally wrong, Mr. Dabbs believes. First it was slavery, then segregation, that imposed the pressures bringing about distortion in the Southern character.

"I think we will have to hammer out from scratch new values for an industrial, urban society," he said. "I don't believe the country has done it yet. I would hope that somehow we can transfer to this new order some of the values of the earlier, agrarian order, to leave us a life with some dignity."

A belief in the special character of the South, he thinks, is in keeping with the aspirations of the Southern Regional Council, an organization of whites and Negroes with a 43-year history of seeking to improve race relations.

The council staff is in Atlanta, and Mr. Dabbs, who has been president since 1957, drops in only occasionally. The council's endeavors have been in the realm of research, education and maintaining interracial communications rather than in legal and direct action.

Some of Mr. Dabbs' friends were a bit anxious when he was called upon in 1961 to address the national convention of another civil rights organization, the NAACP, in Philadelphia. After all, enemy of segregation or not, here was a Southern traditionalist who didn't quite fit any of the usual patterns of civil rights advocates — an elderly man, a lover of the past, a planter.

Gives Cornpone Talk And Scores Success

"But he gave them a sort of cornpone talk that went over wonderfully," an associate recalled.

As usual, the human and folksy cornpone was interspersed with literary allusions, metaphorical flourishes, biting irony and the thunder of strong conviction, cut in no shape but his own.

It was pure Dabbs, and by his own definition of the species, pure Southerner.

The happy reception of his words seemed to confirm his view that the white South and the Negro have a special affinity for each other, and that time will draw them together as brothers under the skin.

ANCESTRAL HOME near Mayesville, S.C., of Southerner whose modern views on race question irk his neighbors.

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
NEWS-JOURNAL
SUN. 36,784

MAR 24 1963

Bigotry Has No Props

IT WAS LAST SUNDAY that a number of Greater Daytona Beach Area citizens heard the warning that the contemporary South must restore responsible leadership if this area is to face up to its problems of education and employment.

It was the close of Open Forum for another year, and the speaker was Dr. Leslie W. Dunbar, executive secretary of the Southern Regional Council. The Council is a southwide organization undergirded financially by grants from foundations concerned with promoting democracy in the U.S. as a way of life far superior to one of boasted opulence and material well being.

Dr. Dunbar was showing us that in too many areas of the South, men in political power have contented themselves with avoiding doing anything about racial equality, or have been satisfied with "tokenism" in granting the Negro his rights. Or they have pointed fingers at the North and cited incidents of racial ill feeling there, or crime statistics, or other faults of "the other side" — as if one side of the country were democratic and the other side still living in the magnolia and mansion era of our history.

* * *

TRUE, the North has its racial problems. But much of it has been caused by the press of poorly educated Negroes who have quit the repressive South and crowded into already troubled urban areas, threatening all there with their demands for scarce jobs or their costs on public welfare.

Some have turned to crime — economic lack historically has caused men to turn to crime.

But we can't abide forever with stereotypes. Some Negroes who have left the South for the North have established themselves as responsible citizens, and they have reared their children proudly. Better educated than their parents, some of these children have grown up to make distinctive contributions to the American scheme as they became engineers, scientists, doctors or educators.

Negroes do not have the same opportunity in the South because the barriers in education, housing and economic equality are far higher here.

* * *

IT WAS AFTER his discourse at Peabody Auditorium that Dr. Dunbar talked with friends of the troubled areas of the South that go beyond the sham that is tokenism.

He talked of the "Deep South" states —of Mississippi, Alabama and parts of Georgia—where men's lives are threatened if they attempt to claim their right to the basic American tenet—that every adult has political power.

Dr. Dunbar told of gunfire as Negroes set out for the Registrar's office in Mississippi, of fires started in homes and churches of Negro civil rights leaders, of police brutality beyond belief.

The description of the ugly resistance to democracy made Mississippi and her sister states practicing these things sound more like events in South Africa.

In Albany, Ga., where every device has been tried by the White power structure to deny civil rights to Negroes, a pregnant woman, her three small children clinging to her, was beaten by police for participating in a nonviolent demonstration, and her baby was born dead.

* * *

SOMEONE SAID that you can't knock the props out from under the structure of bigotry because it doesn't have anything to stand on. Obviously, a nation built on the foundation of the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution and the Bill of Rights does not have in these the underpinnings for bigotry.

And yet, the ugly force is built into some Americans. It is there as a hangover from the cave era when early man believed in the survival of the fittest, and not in the brotherhood of man. The strain of the belief was passed down through the genes of humanity that emerged as the unholy conquerors, and in modern times they have stood out as the Mussolinis, Hitlers, Stalins, Trujillos and still alive communist or fascist leaders. Pipsqueaks who mimic them run throughout our country today, mouthing ugly slogans of racial and religious discrimination, and they are aided and abetted by politicians who begin an after dinner speech with a racial or religious joke.

Since the nonexisting legs of such discrimination can't be eliminated by force or by persuasion, then the belief must be controlled by law.

It will take further action on the part of the Civil Rights Commission to investigate brutality and other means of denial of constitutional rights in any area of the country, and action to follow by the Justice Dept.

Bigots, perhaps, can be persuaded to discard their beliefs if they have to forego their own liberties for a term in jail, and there meditate on what democracy is all about.

DALTON, GA.
CITIZEN-NEWS
D. 6,972

MAR 25 1963

Bernard J. Roswig

Many Negroes in South Try to Elevate Themselves

Voter Education project

ATLANTA (UPI) — Across the South thousands of middle-aged Negroes are attempting to win their spurs as full-fledged citizens by mastering such complexities as the alphabet, "beginner's arithmetic" and how to write a "friendly letter."

The studies—aimed at passing voter registration tests—go on in the open where possible, in secret where not.

In two years, and with a limited budget, the program—under the direction of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. and his Southern Christian Leadership Conference claims to have brought about the registration of 21,000 additional Negroes.

Workers in the program say they have barely scratched the surface and that the illiterate Negro population in the states of Georgia, Virginia, South Carolina, Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi numbers in the tens of thousands.

The classes are conducted by an estimated 200 volunteer teachers, all recruited by four members of the SCLC.

The four are the Rev. Andrew Young, program administrator; Mrs. Septima P. Clark, supervisor of teacher training; Mrs. Dorothy F. Cotton, educational consultant; and Miss Anell Ponder, field secretary.

The Ford Foundation, sole supporter of the infant organization, granted $55,000 during the first year. This year, a $95,000 grant was awarded—not even half the amount necessary to meet essential needs.

But Young said staff and financial problems are among the smallest.

Participants in the program have been subjected to harassment and economic reprisals, he said. In one instance, a staff member in Mississippi was shot at four separate times.

In other areas where there is little attempt to block voting efforts, Young said, apathy "generally is deeply etched upon the habits of the Negro community."

The SCLC has aimed its program at men and women over 40. The young generation is more able to help itself, the educators say.

The SCLC trains its teachers at the Dorchester, a rambling house at McIntosh, Ga.

The prospective teachers get a week's training in reading and writing teaching methods, basic politics and civics and the general Negro movement across the South.

Then they return home and begin the tedious task of getting their illiterate neighbors started to the polls.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
STAR
D. 267,282 S. 313,407

MAR 27 1963

Civil Liberties Group To Hear Justice Douglas

Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas will be among eatured speakers on civil rights nd liberties issues at the 15th nnual conference of the National Civil Liberties Clearing Iouse tomorrow and Friday.

Justice Douglas will speak at dinner meeting of the conerence at 7 p.m. tomorrow at he Sheraton-Carlton Hotel His topic will be, "Education or a Society Under the Bill of Rights."

The conference will begin at p.m. tomorrow with a panel liscussion on the topic, "Housng Discrimination—Whose Reponsibility?" Former Pennsylvania Gov. David L. Lawrence, chairman of the President's Committee on Equal Opportunity in Housing, will act as moderator.

Other speakers at the panel discussion tomorrow include Nathaniel H. Rogg, director of policy planning and economics for the National Association of Home Builders, and Whitney M. Young, jr., director of the National Urban League.

Religion in the public schools will be discussed at 9:30 a.m. Friday with speakers William B. Ball, general counsel of the Pennsylvania Catholic Welfare Committee; the Rev. Dean M. Kelly, director of the department of religious liberty of the National Council of Churches, and Dr. Theodore Powell of the Connecticut State Department of Education.

The conference will close with a luncheon meeting at 12:30 p.m. Friday with Roy H. Millenson, Washington representative of the American Jewish Committee, as chairman.

Speakers at the final session include Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; James Farmer, national director of the Congress of Racial Equality, and Leslie W. Dunbar, director of the Southern Regional Council.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
EUROPEAN EDITION
DAILY - CIRC.N.AVAIL.

MAR 29 1963

POLICE SET A DOG ON NEGRO GROUP

Minister Marching With 41 in Mississippi Vote Drive Is Bitten

By CLAUDE SITTON

Special to The New York Times

GREENWOOD, Miss., March 28—Policemen set a snarling dog at the heels of 42 Negroes today as they marched homeward after having applied to register as voters.

The German shepherd lunged again and again at the group and seized the left ankle of the Rev. D. L. Tucker. The minister apparently was not bitten seriously.

A half dozen policemen and auxiliary policemen armed with nightsticks drove the other Negroes along a sidewalk in the heart of the business section until they dispersed. White bystanders yelled at the patrolmen handling the dog, "Turn him loose!" and "sic 'em, sic 'em."

Mayor Charles E. Sampson was asked why the police had dispersed the Negroes, who were marching by two's along the sidewalk and stopping for traffic signals.

"They had a report up there that them niggers was going to the Alice Cafe for a sit-in," the Mayor replied.

Continued on Page 9, Column 1

POLICE SET A DOG ON NEGRO GROUP

Continued From Page 1, Col. 4

The only arrest made was that of Dick Perez, identified by the police as a Columbia Broadcasting System television cameraman. He was released without charges after his film of the incident had been confiscated.

The dispersal of the Negroes was the latest in a series of incidents accompanying a voter registration campaign in this farming and industrial center in the Mississippi Delta.

Racial tension, whipped up by the voting drive and attacks on Negroes, created an explosive situation. Officials conceded readily that they were alarmed.

Greenwood's 30-man police force was reinforced by 24 auxiliary policemen, by sheriffs and deputies from Leflore and surrounding counties, and by state troopers.

Two Justice Department attorneys and six or more agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation moved into this city, which is on the banks of the Yazoo River.

Roughly dressed whites stood on sidewalks in the vicinity of the court house and muttered threats. More than 150 gathered at the City Hall this afternoon during the trials of nine of 11 Negroes arrested yesterday while marching toward the courthouse to protest against the shotgun attack on a Negro's house Tuesday night.

City Judge L.O. Kimbrough, sitting as a Justice of the Peace, postponed the trial of James Forman pending the arrival of Mr. Forman's legal counsel. The Negro is secretary of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee of Atlanta, one of four civil rights organizations cooperating in the voter registration campaign.

Mr. Forman told Judge Kimbrough that Wiley A. Branton, a civil rights lawyer and director of the Voter Education Project, would defend him. The project, with headquarters in Atlanta, was established last year by the Southern Regional Council and is providing financial assistance in the voter drive here.

Henry Smith of Greenwood, the second Negro who was not tried, was released this morning by Gray Evans, the city's prosecuting attorney, for lack of evidence.

Lawrence Guyat, a coordinating committee field secretary from Chicago, was cited for contempt by Judge Kimbrough. Despite warnings from the judge, Mr. Guyat repeatedly objected to testimony being given against him by Chief of Police Curtis Lary.

PROVIDENCE, R.I.
BULLETIN
D. 143,970

MAR 29 1963

Miss. Negroes Plan New March for Vo

Greenwood, Miss. — (AP) — Vowing to make Greenwood and Leflore County "a testing ground for democracy," Negroes planned another march on the county courthouse today in their drive to register as voters.

Police, using a trained dog and aided by civilian volunteers, equipped with riot clubs and wearing yellow Civil Defense helmets, have twice dispersed the marchers.

The Rev. D. L. Tucker, a Greenwood Negro pastor who led yesterday's march, claimed he was bitten by a police dog. Police said he was faking.

Police Commissioner B. A. Hammond said Mr. Tucker was examined and definitely was not bitten. However, Dr. Mabel T. Garner of Greenwood said she treated the minister for "several severe bites" on his left ankle.

Mr. Tucker described the incident later as another in a series of voter registration rallies being held at his church, the Turner Chapel African Methodist Episcopal Church.

"All at once a large police dog jumped out," Mr. Tucker said. "Somebody yelled, 'There's that black nigger preacher.'

"The dog lunged. The whites yelled 'Kill him.' The dog knocked me down and grabbed my leg.

"A policeman said, 'Get up you black nigger, you're not hurt.'

"I tried. I couldn't. Two of my brothers carried me."

The policeman told him, Mr. Tucker said, to get a cab. The minister quoted the officer as saying "I can't hold them back much longer. They want to kill you."

No arrests were made yesterday. The previous day 11 marchers were jailed and six have been convicted in city court of disorderly conduct. Sentencing was delayed. One man was released. Two cases were dismissed, another was postponed and one defendant, Lawrence Guyat of Chicago, was cited for contempt.

Mr. Guyat was cited after he interrupted testimony by Police Chief Curtis Lary to object to the chief's opinion that the demonstration threatened to turn into a riot.

Mr. Tucker urged the 400 persons at the rally to continue the vote registration drive.

Wiley Branton an attorney who heads the Southern Regional Council's voter education project with offices in Atlanta, said Negro leaders want to make Leflore County "a testing ground for democracy."

"In a matter of h not necessarily days, an end to viciousness wood," said Mr. Bra mocracy is on mora Greenwood."

PROVIDENCE, R.I.
JOURNAL
D. 61,910 S. 191,554

MAR 29 1963

The Rev. D. L. Tucker led group of Negroes in Greenwood, Miss., yesterday to register as voters at the county courthouse. Group encountered no trouble in latest attempt.

—Associated Press Wirephoto

Dog Used to Disperse 42 Negro Applicants

© N.Y. Times News Service

Greenwood, Miss.—Policemen set a snarling dog at the heels of 42 Negroes yesterday as they marched homeward after having applied to register as voters.

The German shepherd lunged again and again at the group and seized the left ankle of the Rev. D. L. Tucker. The minister apparently was not bitten seriously.

A half dozen policemen and auxiliary policemen armed with nightsticks drove the other Negroes along a sidewalk in the heart of the business section until they had dispersed.

Mayor Charles E. Sampson was asked why the police had dispersed the Negroes, who were marching by two's along the sidewalk and stopping for traffic signals.

"They had a report up there that they were going to a cafe for a sit-in," the mayor replied.

The only arrest made was that of Dick Perez, identified by the police as a Columbia Broadcasting System television cameraman. He was released without charges after his film of the incident had been confiscated.

The dispersal of the Negroes was the latest in a series of incidents accompanying a voter registration campaign in this farming and industrial center in the Mississippi delta.

Racial tension, whipped up by the voting drive and attacks on Negroes, created an explosive situation. City officials conceded readily that they were alarmed.

Greenwood's 30-man police force was reinforced by 24 auxiliary policemen, sheriffs and deputies from Leflore and surrounding counties, and by state troopers.

Two Justice Department attorneys and six or more agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation have moved into the city.

More than 150 gathered at the city hall yesterday afternoon during the trials of nine of 11 Negroes arrested Wednesday while marching toward the courthouse to protest the shotgun attack on a Negro's house ister apparently was not bitten seriously.

A half dozen policemen and auxiliary policemen armed with nightsticks drove the other Negroes along a sidewalk in the heart of the business section until they had dispersed.

Mayor Charles E. Sampson was asked why the police had dispersed the Negroes, who were marching by two's along the sidewalk and stopping for traffic signals.

the incident had been confiscated.

The dispersal of the Negroes was the latest in a series of incidents accompanying a voter registration campaign in this farming and industrial center in the Mississippi delta.

Racial tension, whipped up by the voting drive and attacks on Negroes, created an explosive situation. City officials conceded readily that they were alarmed.

Greenwood's 30-man police force was reinforced by 24 auxiliary policemen, sheriffs and deputies from Leflore and surrounding counties, and by state troopers.

Two Justice Department attorneys and six or more agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation have moved into the city.

More than 150 gathered at the city hall yesterday afternoon during the trials of nine of 11 Negroes arrested Wednesday while marching toward the courthouse to protest the shotgun attack on a Negro's house Tuesday night.

City Judge L. O. Kimbrough, sitting as a justice of the peace, postponed the trial of James Forman pending the arrival of Mr. Forman's attorney. The Negro is secretary of the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee of Atlanta, one of four civil rights organizations cooperating in the voter registration campaign.

Mr. Forman told Judge Kimbrough that Wiley A. Branton, a civil rights lawyer and director of the Voter Education Project, would defend him. The project, with headquarters in Atlanta, was established last year by the Southern Regional Council and is providing financial assistance in the voter drive here.

Henry Smith of Greenwood, the second Negro who was not tried, was released yesterday morning by Gray Evans, the city's prosecuting attorney, for lack of evidence.

Lawrence Guyat, a coordinating committee field secretary from Chicago, was cited for contempt by Judge Kimbrough. Despite warnings from the judge, Mr. Guyat repeatedly objected to testimony being given against him by Chief of Police Curtis Lary.

Negroes scheduled a mass meeting last night to hear James Farmer, chief of the Congress of Racial Equality, a national organization based in New York. CORE, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the South Christian Leadership Conference are working in the drive with the student coordinating committee.

The Washington Post
WASHINGTON, D.C.
D. 407,089 S. 474,073

MAR 30 1963 Bruxelles

Wilkins Sees Possi[illegible]ty Of Shift to GOP by [illegible]egroes

By Wallace Terry
Staff Reporter

Roy Wilkins yesterday predicted a wholesale transfer of Negro support from the Democratic Party to the GOP unless the Government—at both Federal and local levels—answers Negro needs.

As a last resort, warned the chief executive officer of the NAACP, the Negro may "be driven to try it alone" politically to achieve equal opportunity—operating outside of either major party.

He himself would not advocate this last resort, Wilkins told the windup session of the 15th annual conference of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House at the Sheraton Carleton.

Negro Responsibility Cited

Leslie W. Dunbar told the same session that the pace of integration should be set by Negroes—"not by white liberals and certainly not by white moderates and not by the Department of Justice."

He recalled that his organization, the Atlanta-based Southern Regional Council, had publicly defended the Attorney General's plea for a "cooling off" in the Freedom Ride two years ago. But timing was not an issue at that point, he said; the demand had already been made.

"Whenever white liberals or government officials seek by either persuasion or maneuver to postpone Negro pressure for some legitimate objective," he asserted, "they—and not the Negroes—are guilty of the subsequent and inevitable estrangement."

Dunbar also joined Wilkins and Clarence Mitchell Jr. in a sweeping attack on Justice Department policies in dealing with voting and education crises in the Deep South.

He indicated that Justice has the responsibility to provide law and order in racially embattled LeFlore County, Miss., which he described as existing in a state of "anarchy."

"I think Justice has its political theory mixed up," he said. A Federal system provides for division of government on county and state levels as well as national, he allowed.

"But in LeFlore you don't have government," he said. "If that government force does not come from LeFlore or the state of Mississippi, it has to come from Washington."

Prince Edward Status Noted

Dunbar also called on the Administration to provide a new program of action in Prince Edward County, Virginia, where Negro children have been without formal education since public schools were closed by the County Board in 1959.

"For this Administration or any other to continue to ap[illegible] this situation as solely [illegible] one is very wrong," he [illegible]

Mitchell asked the Administration to make "the presence of the Federal Government" felt in LeFlore by sending marshals or troops to protect Negroes engaged in voter registration drives. He is the NAACP's Washington representative.

In the area of civil rights, Wilkins said, the Negro stands today "where he should have stood in 1870" and he is "impatient and dissatisfied" with the speed at which his rights are being achieved.

'In the Cause of Freedom'

Dunbar urged Negroes not to lose sight of how far they have come in gaining equal rights, for the distance traveled demonstrates "that American political and legal processes can be made to work in the cause of freedom."

But he also looked into the future with this warning: "If white people lose sight of how very much there still is to do, they will consign the country straight to a holiday of hell . . . a succession of Albanys, McCombs, Greenwoods . . . the Thanksgiving Day brawl here . . . and tortures not yet dreamed of."

He further underscored the importance of Negroes not to "acquiese" segregation whether by law, custom, or contrivance. "Jim Crow cannot live without Uncle Tom, and Uncle Tom is dying fast."

Dunbar also said he believed that the Southern Negro was capable of carrying on his own protest against segregation without "witnesses" from Chicago, New York and elsewhere.

"I don't believe the white South hears the transient witness from abroad," he said.

In an apparent criticism of CORE and the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee, Dunbar observed that the "unity of the Negro movement" is more threatened by "the self-adulation" of leaders in the direct action movements than by the Black Muslims and the Marxists.

DALLAS, TEXAS EXPRESS
W. 5,045

MAR 30 1963

A Changing World

The report labeled 'Report L-23B, Revised,' gotten out by the Southern Regional Council, said that all southern states have at least one desegregated institution of higher learning in them up to date. The University of Alabama is not actually desegregated, but it is under court order since 1956 (it will be remembered that Miss Autherine Lucy was ordered into the University of Alabama in 1956.)

We cite the above facts to say further that today all southern states have at least one desegregated institution of higher learning. Furthermore, to note that in the past two years 89 colleges and universities have desegregated, most of them "with neither fuss nor fanfare." We suggest that our readers compare the statistics cited here with those of May 17, 1954, when the Supreme Court gave down the decision in the Brown case.

ATLANTA, GA.
JOURNAL-CONSTITUTION
SUN. 502,157

MAR 31 1963

MENTAL MECHANISMS

Why Is There Not More Moral Resistance to Mississippi Evil?

By PAT WATTERS

"The peace of the United States is broken and shattered by the lawlessness in Mississippi." — Voter Education Project news release.

WE HAVE read so much of mass and cosmic murder, insanity and suicide that we are numbed, and react helplessly and hopelessly to these entirely human horrors (and all the array of lesser acts of inhumanity) as we do to the impersonal destructions of nature.

It takes something like the quietly terrifying book by Hannah Arendt on the Eichman trial to penetrate numbness and make clear and understandable that the ultimate horror of the Nazi race murder thing was, indeed, entirely human, involving millions more of normal, decent people, passively and even actively, than abnormal monsters.

INDIVIDUALS

Mental mechanisms involved were many. Good conscience could come by respecting authority, not questioning what authority did or compelled one to do. One did not accept evil, only the power to do it, and one tended to shift the blame from the persecutors to those unlucky enough to be persecuted. Individuals were not the vehicles of decency and morality.

In only a very few countries occupied by Germany was there a show of resistance, of decent humanity's and civilization's contempt and horror at the "final solution" of murdering every Jew — man, woman, child. But, and Miss Arendt reiterates the point, wherever there was resistance, it succeeded.

The question, crying out from such a book, is why wasn't there more? Why not more people ready to die if necessary for life? Why?

Now, 250 miles away, in Mississippi there builds the climax to years of a pattern of violence and intimidation against Negroes. Racism has not of course reached the extremes and its ultimate in Mississippi that it did in Nazi Germany, but enough has happened to raise the same question of why is there not more moral resistance, why don't Americans protest and stop what is happening? Why?

Pat Watters' column appears regularly in the daily Atlanta Journal.

One of a number of pointings up of the pattern is the news release by the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council, a respected source of race news information in the nation, which sets out 64 acts of "violence and intimidation" since January, 1961, against Negroes in Mississippi.

The release says the list is based on newspaper stories. Certainly over the years, the casual reader could piece out from these casual tellings of terror the pattern. The impact of this news release is the totality of reading such a list all at once.

This ranges from the charges of senseless, you might almost say playful, brutality—lassoing from a car, a 9-year-old girl with wire and dragging her along a street—to the purposeful bombings and shotgun blastings of homes and people. Always, the worst of it, are the stories and incidents showing police and courts and governments (power and authority) supporting the intimidation, the violence.

Fully half the incidents in this particular study are related to efforts of Negroes to register to vote. And that is what the current crisis, the police dog dispersal of marchers, is about.

COMPLICATED

America reacted to the sit-ins and freedom rides with much the mechanism of Europe to Nazism. It deplored what happened, but accepted use of power to put down Negroes, and somehow shifted blame to Negroes for being in a position to suffer from such use of power.

The rights in question then were legally complicated. But the right involved in Mississippi now is the basic one of voting. Can we shift blame again to the victim?

Federal help, long overdue, is being called for — the "entire strength" of the nation to protect constitutional rights. But where is the "entire strength," far more powerful than formal federal action, of America's moral opinion, civilization's horror and contempt and condemnation of what has been going on in Mississippi? Why is there not more individual indignation? Why?

ATLANTA, GA.
WORLD
D. 29,800

MAR 31 1963

More Than Tears

By SADIE BELLE BARROW
Executive Director
Y. W. C. A. Branch
New Orleans, Louisiana

Accepting an invitation from the noted Mrs. Dorothy Tilly, Director of Women's Work of the Southern Regional Council, I went to Atlanta, Georgia, recently for participation in "The Fellowship of The Concerned'.' On the evening of the day I arrived, I had the opportunity to view the beautiful fountain dedicated that day on the Clark College Campus as a memorial to the late Bishop J. W. E. Bowen. The impressive fountain with its constant flow of sparkling, fresh water is an on-going tribute to a Christian gentleman and ,churchman of distinction by his beloved widow and inspiration to youth through the years, Dr. Margaret Davis Bowen. As I stood with Mrs. Bowen and an interracial group of friends on a crisp Atlanta evening while the sounds of students moving to and fro on the campus mingled with the sound of the flowing water and the sounds of night, my mind focused on the deep significance of the tribute Bishop Bowen's widow had given evidence of expression beyond that of tears.

How often is our grief contained in tears; our sorrow expressed thereby; and our tribute ended therewith; What greater tribute can be paid loved ones who depart than by helping the causes to which they gave their devotion and substance!

An inspiring college meditation room given by Mrs. Bowen as a memorial when her mother died, an impressive fountain given by Mrs. Bowen as a memorial when Bishop Bowen died are but two ilustrations to which you, the reader might add of instances known to you in which persons paid tribute that was more than tears.

Vast resources are possible for the improvement of our churches and church - related institutions if just some of the money spent for frills and fading flowers in connection with deaths would be converted into building improvements, scholarship assistance to the deserving, aid to the needy, etc., as ON-GOING TRIBUTE TO THE DEPARTED THROUGH HELP TO THE LIVING. Like Mary and Martha of old, we continue to choose different things to which we give priority. Our challenge, however, is to choose the greater flow of human good long after the human body shall have mingled with the dust of earth.

NEW YORK
Herald Tribune
D. 355,898 S. 451,270
V + I rept
APR 1 1963
Byfuller

Associated Press

OUTSIDE—Policeman holds taut leash as his dog growls at Rev. D. L. Tucker at Greenwood, Miss., courthouse. . .

67 Violent Acts Against Greenwood Negroes

Ugly Days in Mississippi Town

By Walter Rugaber
Special to the Herald Tribune

ATLANTA.

The atmosphere was tense and explosive yesterday in Greenwood, Miss., where an all-out Negro voter registration drive has produced strong shock waves. However, the streets were quiet after a week of turmoil.

The Federal government, under strong and steady pressure from the Negroes, is moving to stop interference with the registration drive. But the racial upheaval still dominates the state.

Almost simultaneously a report was issued here detailing 64 acts of violence and intimidation against Negroes in Mississippi during the last 27 months.

An Ugly Scar

more flareups in Greenwood and Leflore Country.

Fire destroyed four Negro businesses adjacent to a voter registration office maintained by the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) Feb. 20.

A worker in the office said she received an anonymous call in which a man declared she wouldn't be going there any more because it had "been taken care of."

Later, on March 24, another fire partially destroyed the office itself. Witnesses said they saw two white men running from the scene just before the fire was discovered.

There were four gunfire attacks from Feb. 28 to last Tuesday, when a shotgun blast was fired into the home of Dewey Greene Sr., father of the latest Negro applicant to Ole Miss.

tion drive has produced strong shock waves. However, the streets were quiet after a week of turmoil.

The Federal government, under strong and steady pressure from the Negroes, is moving to stop interference with the registration drive. But the racial upheaval still dominates the state.

Almost simultaneously a report was issued here detailing 64 acts of violence and intimidation against Negroes in Mississippi during the last 27 months.

An Ugly Scar

The report, put together by the Southern Regional Council's Voter Education Project, traces a series of shooting and repressions that run across the state like an ugly scar.

Wiley A. Branton, the project director, said he was sure the 17-page compilation was not complete. He said, however, it demonstrates that constitutional rights are "virtually inoperative."

The report, which does not include any of the violence surrounding James Meredith's entrance into the University of Mississippi, runs chronologically from January, 1961.

All but 12 of the incidents took place in only six of the state's counties: Pike, Leflore (Greenwood), Sunflower, Himbs, Amite and Coahoma.

Included in the report were such seemingly pointless flareups as the dragging of a 9-year-old Negro girl down a Jackson street behind a car driven by several whites.

Associated Press

. . . INSIDE—Here, Rev. Tucker displays his leg while announcing the dog bit him during the Negro march to urge registration.

The young child, according to the report, had been lassoed as she walked along. She suffered various injuries, including a deep gash on the head. Arrests were made.

News Accounts

The compilation, which its author said was gathered mainly from daily newspaper accounts, is filled with incidents involving local officials.

A Walthall County registrar, the report said, told a campaign worker and two Negroes wiht him that he wasn't going to register any voters that day.

When the worker, John Hardy, then turned to leave, the official pulled a pistol from his desk and slugged Hardy from behind, the report said.

Hardy was arrested and charged with disturbing the peace.

The reports recounts three instances in which Negroes were shot and killed by local law engorcement officials or other governmental employees.

As the report moved into 1963, it included more and Committee (SNCC) Feb. 20.

A worker in the office said she received an anonymous call in which a man declared she wouldn't be going there any more because it had "been taken care of."

There were four gunfire attacks from Feb. 28 to last Tuesday, when a shotgun blast was fired into the home of Dewey Greene Sr., father of the latest Negro applicant to Ole Miss.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL
D. 373,657 S. 561,118

APR 5 1963

The Issue in Greenwood

In Greenwood, cotton capital of the Mississippi delta, national headquarters of the White Citizens' Councils, a drama is being enacted that involves the basic economic, political and social issues facing the south and the nation.

Negroes are determinedly seeking the right to vote. Whites are just as determinedly trying to deny them that right.

Greenwood is in Leflore county, which has a population of 31,000 Negroes and 17,000 whites. Of the whites eligible to vote, some 90% are registered. Of the Negroes eligible to vote, less than 2% are registered. Other Negroes who seek to register are being hampered in every way, including violence. The other day the police even turned dogs loose on a group of Negroes who were walking to the registration office to register. Mayor Charles Sampson implied this was all a mistake. The police weren't interested in registration, he said, adding: "They had a report up there that them niggers was going to the Alice cafe for a sit-in."

The justice department has now started court action to enforce the right of qualified Negroes to register. This caused Mayor Sampson to proclaim that the trouble was being caused by outsiders and that the justice department was adding to it. His explanation: "The only purpose of these agitators is to follow the Communist line of fomenting racial violence and the obvious purpose of the attorney general is to get votes."

The violence so far, of course, has been caused by the police and by those whom the police allow to break the law.

The Southern Regional Council's Voter Education Project issued a 17 page report the other day listing almost 70 cases of acts of violence and intimidation against Negroes in Mississippi in the last 27 months. They include everything from arson against Negro business places to the lassoing of a 9 year old Negro girl by some white men in a car, who dragged her down a Jackson (Miss.) street. There have been brutal physical attacks. There have been cases of economic vengeance—firing of Negroes who tried to register and ordering others off tenant farms they have worked for years.

In the end the Negroes must win the right to vote. Law, decency, the federal government and a great majority of the American people are on their side.

ORLANDO, FLA.
FLORIDA SUN & MIRROR
W. - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

APR 5 1963

post $500 bail

GREENWOOD, Miss. — Eight student non-violent coordinating committee leaders have refused to post $500 appeal bail on sentences of four months in county jail and $200 fines each.

Atty. Wiley Brandon, chief of the Voter Education Project, said the convictions on disorderly charges would be appealed.

Maximum sentences and fines were imposed by City Judge O. L. Kimbrough.

One of the eight, Lawrence Guyat of Chicago, was given an extra day and an additional $50 fine on a contempt charge growing out of an incomplete hearing on Thursday.

ATLANTA, GA.
JOURNAL
D. 259,003

APR 6 1963

Boyd Says Executions Necessary

By SALLY RUGABER
Atlanta Journal Religious News Editor

Fulton County Sol. Gen. Bill Boyd told United Church Women of Atlanta that there comes a time when some criminals "forfeit their right to live."

Mr. Boyd, speaking in a debate on capital punishment, stressed his belief that laws and juries are too lenient with those "who kill, rape, rob and steal."

"Unless the juries of my circuit make up their minds once and for all to give capital punishment in cases where it is deserved, the criminals are going to take this town," Mr. Boyd said.

He said, "We had better think what's good for society rather than what's good for the criminal."

Society "can't afford to look with great compassion upon the criminal. It is past time to feel compassion for the wrongdoer," Mr. Boyd said.

SPEAKING ON the other side of the question was Paul Anthony of the Southern Regional Council.

Mr. Anthony gave two reasons for his opposition to capital punishment:

"It is immoral to take a life," and "it doesn't work."

Mr. Anthony said the supreme penalty is "not applied to society uniformly. There's no question but that those on the bottom of the ladder—economically, socially and racially are at a great disadvantage" in hiring lawyers and appealing convictions.

Mr. Anthony said capital punishment is not a deterrent to some segments of society because it does not work uniformly.

"As long as our system is so spotty, so unfair, we should not take it upon ourselves to use the death sentence," Mr. Anthony argued.

The church women met at Druid Hills Methodist Church.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS
D. 188,346 S. 222,244

APR 7 1963

Moderates At Issue

THE POINT is obvious: Some Negroes think well of what are called "white moderates." Others do not. Powell apparently doesn't. He boldly criticized even the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People because whites are among its leaders.

Newer Negro groups—CORE, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee—have appeared more pressing, more activist, than older, more established Negro leadership.

Most Negroes, of course, are aware that their differences will be highlighted by resisting whites and used against them. It is only wisdom for whites of any persuasion to recognize that (1) Negro leaders are often brilliant strategists; but that (2) Negro leaders as whites can commit grievous errors of policy. Judged only by strategy evidences, both whites and Negroes at times have shown remarkable ability in this "contest"; but both have shown miserable judgment at other times.

There is a continual struggle within the national and the local community for leadership of Negroes, for authority to speak for Negroes. This registers in political matters and policy as to integration effort timing and degree.

It is related to present contest over the Negro vote in national presidential elections. Significance of this issue readily is recognized; it involves "swinging" half a dozen major cities, hence states, in the North and East.

Roy Wilkins, NAACP executive director, in a recent Washington address to the National Civil Liberties Clearing House, stated that the Negro may go over to Republicans unless Democrats now in office answer Negroes' demands for action. Wilkins heeds the activists in this.

At that meeting, Wilkins and Clarence Mitchell, Washington NAACP head, joined in strong criticism of Justice Department policies regarding voting and schools. So also said Leslie W. Dunbar of the Southern Regional Council. (Dunbar is white.)

The New York Times
D. 680,265 S. 1,306,418
APR 7 1963

RACIAL TENSIONS

Continued racial troubles in Greenwood, Miss., where Negroes seeking to register as voters marched on the Leflore County courthouse despite police orders to break into smaller groups, and in Birmingham, Ala., where Negroes attempted lunchroom sit-ins to protest segregation, last week brought these comments from some Southern sources.

Haynie in The Louisville Courier-Journal

"One swallow doth not a sinner make."

What is being tested in Leflore County, Miss., is whether the people of this country and their national Government really are interested in the rights guaranteed by the First and Fifteenth Amendments to the Constitution. So far, the answer seems to be no. In the meantime, Negroes of Leflore County are on their own and show every day that they want to be entrusted with the responsibilities of citizenship.—LESLIE W. DUNBAR, executive director of the Southern Regional Council.

Negroes are not being prevented from applying for the voting privilege. Greenwood leaders who are responsible for keeping order have tried to keep mobs from forming in city streets. We dare say police in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia or Los Angeles would do the same. In huge groups of tell the people of Birmingham that this is an attempt to stage a big show . . . to make headlines throughout the country. These strangers now in our city are more interested in headlines to help them raise money for their hate campaign than they are in the welfare of their people. . . . I urge everyone, white and Negro, calmly to ignore what is now being attempted in Birmingham.—MAYOR-ELECT ALBERT BOUTWELL of Birmingham.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
NATIONAL OBSERVER
W- 250 000

APR 8 1963 Bryhelles

1962

New 'Battlegrounds'

In Greenwood and in Birmingham, Negroes Press for Their Rights

Dick Gregory is a comedian with a sharp wit who pokes fun at whites and Negroes alike over racial discrimination.

"I sat at a lunch counter for nine months," goes one of his jokes. "When they finally integrated, they didn't have what I wanted."

He has developed an image, at least among his devotees in night clubs and before television sets, of a social satirist who can needle but not offend. There is another side to the comic, however, a crusading nature that last week led him to say some things that were not funny in an explosive situation.

He went to Greenwood, Miss., where Negroes are demonstrating for their right to vote. Mr. Gregory joined them.

The whites called him an outside agitator. Answered Mr. Gregory: "Hitler could have said the same thing about Southern white boys." The whites weren't amused.

Hesitant Demonstrators

There was still less amusement when he told some hesitant Negro demonstrators: "I don't know why you're afraid to die, because you haven't a damn thing to live for."

But it was Birmingham that may prove the more important "battleground" —as both cities were being called in the press. There, the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr. of Atlanta, also called an outside agitator by city officials, named Birmingham as the key current city in the struggle for Southern Negro rights. Dr. King joined marchers in demanding desegregation throughout the city.

The Greenwood demonstrations were in their second week, with Negroes marching daily to the courthouse in an attempt to register as voters. The police let them apply for registration in groups of two and three. In breaking up larger groups, which police said threatened the peace, they arrested 19 demonstrators; 12 were still in jail at week's end.

Mr. Gregory vowed to stay in the city until Federal troops were sent to halt "police brutality," which he said was evident as police used dogs to break up the marchers and pushed them along the sidewalks. He protested that the police had struck him in the back.

But Mr. Gregory changed his mind late in the week and prepared to leave. "We got all we can get out of them (the city)," he said. Said another Negro leader: "We have made significant gains."

The Justice Department also was in the mood for conciliation. It agreed to drop a request for a restraining order against interference with the Negro registrants if the city would release eight Negroes arrested during the first week. The City released them.

In Washington, Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy said he had "assurances" the city would not interfere with the Negroes. A hearing on a permanent injunction against interference may not be held until October. Charged Mr. Gregory, "The Justice Department has made deals with these people."

Greenwood is a wealthy, pleasant city of 22,000 in Mississippi's Delta region, a band of fantastically rich alluvial soil stretching along the Mississippi River. With more than half of Greenwood's Leflore County on relief half the year (26,000, including 22,000 Negroes), the average income per capita is still $4,000.

There are 30,000 Negroes to 16,000 whites in the county, which calls itself the "Long-Staple Cotton Capital of the World." Its wealth is built upon the land and the men and machines help work it.

As in many Southern states, Negroes are leaving Mississippi in droves. From 1950 to 1960 a total of 323,000 Negroes moved out. The migration was greater than from any other southern state and almost equals the total Negro population of Arkansas (389,000).

In recent years, Negro leaders decided the key to advancement was the vote. Greenwood, where only 2 per cent of the Negroes of voting age are actually registered, was a prime target.

In a drive begun two years ago but stepped up last fall, young people came from all over the country to help the Negroes get on the voting rolls. The drive is supported through the Southern Regional Council's Voter Education Project, which conducts similar drives elsewhere in the South.

The Nature of the Tests

The whites in Greenwood insist they don't prevent registration. In fact, Greenwood City Attorney Hardy Lott notes, 336 Negroes applied just last month. But fewer than 10 finally passed the tough exams. "Many cannot read or write," he said.

As most whites see it, the Negro can register if he wants to, but generally he is illiterate and cannot pass the test when he tries. The Negroes answer that the tests are often arbitrary and many fail the tests because the registrar doesn't want them to pass.

The goal in Birmingham is not the vote but much broader desegregation. Dr. King's demands: Desegregation of all lunch counters and public facilities downtown; more hiring of qualified Negroes; dropping of all charges against Negroes arrested in sit-ins; reopening of city parks; and a bi-racial committee to work on desegregation in city schools.

The Commissioners' Claim

Political disarray complicates the Birmingham situation. The city elected former Alabama lieutenant governor Albert Boutwell mayor last week, replacing the three-man commission which ran Birmingham. But the commissioners claim the legal right to serve out their terms through 1965 and have asked the courts for a ruling.

Until that ruling, or until the mayor takes office April 15, the Negroes must deal with the segregationist commissioners, especially Eugene T. "Bull" Connor, who heads the police. Mr. Boutwell is considered more moderate, and some whites feel the Negroes could have gained some ground if they waited to deal with him as mayor.

Voting drives like the one in Greenwood have been successful in many places: Huntsville, Ala., Miami, in much of Virginia and Tennessee, Memphis—and in Birmingham.

Last week, a voter project official pointed to one city in particular, Savannah, Ga. There, the local "Crusade for voters" has waged a campaign for a decade and registered 13,000 Negroes. A special drive begun in January netted 2,000 more voters by the time it ended last month.

There are differences, though. Savannah is a seaport and, as one Negro put it, "has always looked more to the sea than the South." Its population is ethnically diverse, and Negro leadership is more "sophisticated than in many places," said the official. The change in the city's racial attitude has been gradual but clearly defined. Two years ago, Negro voters provided the margin of victory for the white mayor. As a new political force, they find it easier to be heard. This is the goal Negroes in Greenwood and Birmingham strive for.

HOUSTON, TEXAS
POST
D. 220,491 S. 243,883

APR 14 1963

MRS SHAW TALKED ABOUT GOALS AND ACTIONS
'Methodists Are Glad to Know Catholics' —Post Photo by Dell Van Dusen

ONE HOUSTON WOMAN

It's Hard to Sound Practical About Ideals, Mrs Shaw Says

By MARY ANNE HAYES
Post Women's Staff

Four years ago a small group of Houstonians founded the Council on Human Relations. Mrs E. Pliny Shaw was one of the first members.

"'GOALS,'" SHE read from a brochure on the council in a small office at the group's headquarters the other afternoon. "'To uphold the human dignity and self respect of all citizens—regardless of religion, race, creed or national origin . . ."

The council's program committee members were meeting in the next room. Their voices could be heard in the background as Mrs Shaw talked.

It was a hot afternoon, and the council's air conditioning couldn't combat it effectively.

Mrs Shaw put down the brochure and said: "We spent hours trying to find the right words. It's high sounding and nebulous, but in our program we try to make it come alive. Anytime you have an ideal, it's hard to sound practical. But we try to do these things, strive [illegible] day in and day great deal of credit," Mrs Shaw said.

THE COUNCIL HAS maintained the office through three of its four years.

The membership includes people of all faiths and ethnic groups in Houston, who work together on seminars, workshops and lectures sponsored by the council.

The council has standing committees on health and welfare, housing, cultural programs, employment, education, youth and international relations. Members are beginning to collect a library on tolerance.

"We write letters to the school board and the mayor on problems we are interested in. Some of our people have served on the mayor's committees.

"OUR GROUP BRINGS together the different groups. We co-operate with other groups and often join with them in presenting programs," Mrs Shaw said.

"You could say that now we are focusing on integration. We sometimes criticize ourselves for that because we perhaps have not been as effective as could be heard in the background as Mrs Shaw talked.

It was a hot afternoon, and the council's air conditioning couldn't combat it effectively.

Mrs Shaw put down the brochure and said: "We spent hours trying to find the right words. It's high sounding and nebulous, but in our program we try to make it come alive. Anytime you have an ideal, it's hard to sound practical. But we try to do these things, strive to do them day in and day out."

THE BROCHURE lists as further goals a widening of spheres of opportunity for all Houstonians and the fostering of the democratic way of life, under the Constitution, in Houston.

"We want to learn as a group to respect the needs of other people.

"Cities become jungles without good relations between different groups. The communication in a community makes the difference between a healthy environment and an unhealthy one.

"We try to help people to be open to other groups, to reduce prejudice, explore the areas of the community which are unfamiliar.

"WE HAVE FOUND that Methodists are glad to know Catholics, that whites are happy to have Negroes in their homes . . . People are bored with being with their own kind all the time," she said.

The council now has a membership of 700. The group's growth has been gradual but substantial, Mrs Shaw said, and every member is a dedicated one.

"There is no purpose in joining unless they are sincere in wanting to understand the racial and ethnic dilemmas society has burdened us with," she said.

The council's first year was one of exploration. The members wanted to find out just what they could do, just what the council could become.

"WE HAD SOME support from the Southern Regional Council, which has a long history of helping Negroes in the South," Mrs Shaw said.

There had been groups working on similar problems in Houston before, Mrs Shaw said. But they were limited in membership. There were church groups and school groups.

The Council on Human Relations offered everybody who was interested in these problems a chance to work together, she said.

"And we had the funds to be serious about the problems and to make a consistent attempt to solve them," she said.

IN ADDITION TO the Southern Regional Council funds, the council receives aid from Houston foundations and from membership fees.

The Southern Regional Council provides the Houston group with matching funds—up to $2,600—for all of the money they raise over $3,500. The council has just passed the $3,500 mark for this year. The first $3,500 has been raised through memberships and donations from small foundations.

"We have the finances to pay for this office and to pay Mrs Ethel Dumbauld, the secretary. She is an organizer, and she is devoted. Her efforts deserve a board and the mayor on problems we are interested in. Some of our people have served on the mayor's committees.

"OUR GROUP BRINGS together the different groups. We co-operate with other groups and often join with them in presenting programs," Mrs Shaw said.

"You could say that now we are focusing on integration. We sometimes criticize ourselves for that because we perhaps have not been as effective as we could in dealing with other problems, those of Latin Americans, for instance.

"But the race question confronts us so that we can't look at the others. The inequalities and injustices there are so blatant," she said.

ALTHOUGH MRS SHAW is worried about the possibility of overemphasizing one problem, the council will deal with another problem with a special program in May. The program will be on the separation of church and state.

"I was in Washington a year ago, and many people there felt that the church-state issue is the one that will agitate many communities," she said.

The council will bring Dr Franklin Littell of the Chicago Theological Seminary to Houston for a series of meetings on May 6.

"MEETING THE PEOPLE who come in to speak is one of the real rewards of working with the council. These are people who are so alive, who are not so conforming, who really have something to say," Mrs Shaw said.

Mrs Shaw, a board member, served the council as president for a two-year term from 1960-62.

Before the council was founded Mrs Shaw and her husband, who died three years ago, were members of the Parents Council, the Houston Association for Better Schools and several inter-racial groups.

"WE HAD THE Houston Forum that met at the South Central YMCA. We brought in outside speakers like P. D. East," she said.

Mrs Shaw's four children have been interested in the problems of human relations.

"We are all on the same side of the fence. They support the council. It's rewarding for the family all to agree.

"It's a terrible thing when the parents in a family move in one direction and the children in another. The parents just don't understand," she said.

MRS SHAW SAID she didn't know of a case in which parents who were in favor of desegregation were chastised by their children. The reverse, parents who were segregationists opposing children who had developed different ideas, is generally true, she said.

Mrs Shaw picked up another council brochure and looked at the cover.

"WE HAVE TOKEN integration how, but the great problem of breaking up the great social disease of segregation is still there. We have a long pull ahead before we get over there were that sunshine is breaking through," she said.

Mrs Shaw pointed to the brochure's cover, which pictured a rocky foreground and a cloudy sky with the sun just beginning to push its rays through.

ATLANTA, GA.
JOURNAL
D. 257,694

APR 16 1963

South Judged by Culture, Minister Tells Meeting Here

By SALLY RUGABER
Atlanta Journal Religious News Editor

The South in the past failed at the point "where we thought we had done so well" and The "grace" of its culture has turned into a judgment upon it.

So said James McBride Dabbs of Mayesville, S.C., president of the Southern Regional Council, who spoke at the opening session of a 4-day consultation on "The Mission of the Church in the South" at the Interdenominational Theological Center here.

Mr. Dabbs spoke of grace and judgment, commenting that to find "the chief structure of grace in the South" is to find where its "chief sin" also lies.

THE SOUTH has always boasted of "the personal quality" of its life, he said, and maintained that it created "a distinctly personal culture."

That personal culture viewed the relationship between whites and Negroes on two levels, Mr. Dabbs said. First there was the "common level of everyday kindness," developed, he suggested, because "the white South found it nearly impossible to face the injustice of the Negro's situation."

ON THE second level, white and Negro relationships took the form of "stoic respect," Mr. Dabbs continued, "a conservatism imbued with a sense of the order of the world . . . holding in respect those who submit to it and manfully bear life's burdens."

In between the kindliness and the stoic respect is the vast middle ground of institutions, Mr. Dabbs said, "that middle public world of education, business and the professions."

"THIS MIDDLE world is the arena in which man gains honor," the one in which he makes "his economic and political advances," he said and whites "carefully excluded" the Negro from it.

"In the wide middle world, where men work out their lives, whites and Negroes are pretty effectively separated," Mr. Dabbs said. "This division in our society, this separation, is the judgment of God upon us."

"The miracle," Mr. Dabbs said, is that if "out of grace comes sin and judgment . . . it is also true that out of judgment comes grace, as it is coming in the South today."

IN THE PAST, "the whites pushed the Negroes aside," he said. "Now the Negroes are coming forward to offer the South and the nation the contribution which only they . . . can bring."

This is a "unifying, universal spirit which the South has always aimed at but never attained," he said, "that view of man as a citizen both of this world and another."

In the Southern Negro's "drive for American citizenship . . . Christian commitment and devotion are combined with a prophetic passion for social justice," he said.

"These people are simply seeking their legitimate share in our society," Mr. Dabbs said. "As we welcome them, we shall heal, by God's grace, the breach within our own hearts."

"THE SOUTH was looking in the right direction when it looked for persons," he said, "but the white South, especially as regards the Negro, did not look deep enough. It believed too much in persons; it didn't understand that human lives are lived in institutions; that persons come into being through institutions, and are cherished or destroyed by institutions.

"This is what as Christians we must do now," he said.

The consultation will bring more than 100 persons from some 15 denominations to look at the church's future place in the South, with addresses, panel discussions and workshops scheduled through Thursday afternoon.

MOUNT VERNON, N.Y.
ARGUS
D. 18,659

APR 18 1963

Janet Feagans Is Selected For Operation Crossroads

Operation Crossroads Africa has announced the selection of Miss Janet Feagans, daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. Harry D. Robinson Jr. of 117 W. Second St. as a group leader for this summer's work project in Tanganyika.

Operation Crossroads Africa located in New York City is a private, voluntary organization which since 1958 has sent more than 760 young, North Americans into Africa to participate in summer work projects with the cooperation of African governments and people. Crossroads, often considered a pilot project for the Peace Corps and a "people to people" diplomatic effort, was conceived by Dr. James H. Robinson, former minister of the Church of the Master, New York City. In 1958, he took a pilot group of 60 students to West Africa. This year's group will include over 320 participants in 27 different work projects through - out Africa.

JANET FEAGANS

Miss Feagans received her B.A. degree from the University of Florida in 1958. She is a former school teacher and staff member of the Southern Regional Council, a race relations research foundation in Atlanta, Georgia. This past summer, Miss Feagans was a faculty member of the Encampment for Citizenship, New York City. She is currently a graduate student in the Department of Political Science, University of North Carolina, and Research Assistant at the University's Institute of Government.

JET
CHICAGO, ILL.
W. 370,968

APR 18 1963

Troubled Miss. County Named After Negro's Kin

Atty. Branton

Fair-skinned Atty. Wiley Branton, director of the Southern Regional Council's Voter Education Project, told a shocked Greenwood, Miss., audience in racially tense Leflore County that: "My grandfather was named Greenwood Leflore . . . this place was named for him." Greenwood Leflore was the son of a French trader and an Indian maiden. The half-breed later became a Choctaw chief and married the daughter of a white mail carrier, John Donly. Afterwards Leflore became a wealthy plantation owner with Negro slaves. He opposed Mississippi secession from the Union, however, and flew the U. S. flag all during the Civil War.

Negro Leader Says Justice Dept. Action 'No Good'

Despite the injunction requested by Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy to prevent arrest and harassment of Negro vote registration leaders in Greenwood, Charles McDew, chairman of the militant Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, expressed little faith in the Federal action. McDew said the Justice Dept. enjoined Terrell County, Ga., officials from interfering with voter registration "three times" without ever arresting officials. McDew said FBI agents stand on the sidelines and watch vote leaders being manhandled and only make "reports" to Washington.

St. Louis Elects 2 New Negro Aldermen; Now Six

In St. Louis, five Negroes were elected to the Board of Aldermen—including Mrs. Edna E. Brown, a Democrat and the first Negro woman ever to sit on the aldermanic panel. Another new face on the Board was Joseph W. B. Clark, also a Democrat, a 47-year-old auditor in the State Revenue Collector's office. Other Negroes re-elected were Wayman F. Smith Jr., Lawrence E. Woodson and William L. Clay. A sixth Negro, DeWitt Lawson, was not up for re-election this year and remains on the aldermanic panel. Archie Blaine, a former Negro alderman, lost in primary.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
STAR
D. 258,167 S. 313,112

APR 18 1963

LETTERS TO THE STAR

Pen names may be used if letters carry writers' correct names and addresses. All letters are subject to condensation. Those not used will be returned only when accompanied by self - addressed, stamped envelopes.

Rockefeller on Cuba

Your April 11 editorial, "Unworthy Politicking," about Gov. Rockefeller's remarks on Cuba, is not up to your usual standards of knowledgeable and fair comment. Somehow I have the feeling that you are politicking some yourself. You are remiss on two important counts.

First, you reject Rockefeller as presidential candidate on the Cuba part of his press conference. Actually, Rockefeller touched on several other national issues of major importance. And he did quite well with them. Furthermore, Rockefeller is to be judged by his entire record (not just one press conference) by the fair-minded people who make up most of the electorate, if not by The Star. It may be said that he has established himself as one well qualified to judge events in Latin America through his service in the Government and otherwise.

The real nub of the Cuban problem is the failure of President Kennedy to reveal to the American people the substance of his secret negotiations with Khrushchev and the agreement made regarding Cuba which binds the United States. That is what worries the average American and I must say that Rockefeller or anyone else certainly has a right to surmise and wonder just what did happen and what our President committed us to.

Ralph R. Will.

* * * *

Your editorial, "Unworthy Politicking" reprimands Gov. Rockefeller for intimating that our President is appeasing the Soviets.

I have no political love for Mr. Rockefeller, whom I consider an opportunist of the first water. But, can it honestly be said that President Kennedy is not appeasing the Soviets? I am sure he does not like doing so but, in my opinion, that is exactly what he is doing and has been doing ever since Khrushchev agreed to take the missile bases out of Cuba and asked, or suggested that we do the same thing with regard to Turkey and Italy. We are

'Squandermania'

"Cut of 5 to 11 Cents in Tax Rate Seen for Montgomery"! This headline in The Sunday Star was as manna from heaven to this dehydrated taxpayer, at least, and I suspect to many in the over-taxed suburbs of Squandermania.

There was, of course, a brief mention of increased assessments under a new Maryland law, a maneuver with which we Northern Virginians are painfully familiar. But the new Montgomery County government seems to be in earnest about cutting fat and easing tax burdens.

Arlington is different. We have just established probably the highest school salaries in the Nation and our assessments are constantly being raised unconscionably (42 per cent in my case).

It is to be hoped that Montgomery County will continue to lead the way, that its voters will sufficiently appreciate their good fortune by voting to support those who have brought it about.

I sincerely hope, too, that Arlington's electorate will take heart and elect to its County Board two candidates dedicated and pledged to economy and tax reduction, two commodities totally unknown under ABC's mismanagement. This can and must be done.

We must clean house nationally, too, unless we are to know complete bankruptcy and repudiation in the near future.

Charles W. Carter.

'On Living Together'

Your April 8 editorial entitled "On Living Together," completely ignores the information available in press reports regarding the harass-

'In Tech's Defense'

I found it hard to follow the reasoning of the writer of the editorial in The Star of April 9 entitled "In Tech's Defense." Perhaps nostalgic tears dimmed his logic as well as his vision. Forty years ago, Tech was only 21 years old, and should have been in pretty fair shape. Now, it is 61 years old, and the wear and tear in the interim must have deteriorated it somewhat. In fact, over 14 years ago the Strayer survey staff of qualified school buildings appraisers concluded that: "The educational adequacy of the plant is so low that no reasonable amount of rehabilitation could correct its deficiencies." Since no improvements of any substance have been made since 1948-49, it is safe to assume that the present condition of Shaw is worse than it was at the time of the survey. I am bound to give greater weight to the evaluation of Dr. Strayer's professionals than to that of an editorial writer—even one for so eminent a newspaper as The Star. Incidentally, when was the last time your editorial writer visited his haunts of 40 years ago?

The logical support for the editorial is weak in another respect. Dr. Henderson's reference to Shaw as evidence of the inequality of the opportunities and facilities afforded Negro pupils in District public schools is supported by facts. There are four junior high schools currently in use with predominantly white pupil populations (Deal, Gordon, Hart and Kramer). Not one is substandard structurally or educationally. In fact, only Hines has a poorer plant than Shaw among all the 24 junior high school plants now in use—and that also has a predominantly Negro population. This has been true for the past 15 years. But 40 years ago, when the old Tech building was 21 years old, it was newer than Western — though probably not as adequate educationally. Eastern and Central were newer than Tech, and so was Dunbar—for Negroes. Even Business (later old Cardozo) was probably better

TAMPA, FLA.
FLORIDA SENTINEL
BULLETIN
TUES. 11,100 FRI. 6,31

APR 23 1963

Economic Enforcement

Senators James O. Eastland, A. Willis Robertson and John J. Sparkman along with several Southern daily newspapers have started whimpering already about a U. S. Civil Rights Commission proposal to cut off federal funds for Mississippi because of racial disorders.

In asking that President Kennedy not consider the commission's proposal, Eastland (Miss.) labeled it "the most monstrous libel that has ever been leveled against a state in this union. Robertson (Virginia) said "our form of federal union is gone." Sparkman (Alabama) called the recommendation "absolutely absurd and completely contrary to the intent of Congress and doesn't seem to represent clear thinking."

The daily papers in essence, oppose the President's use of executive power in the issue claiming it is wrong in principle, that it is a matter for the judiciary branch of government, and that it simply won't work.

Meanwhile, Senators Hart (Michigan), Keating (New York), and Javits (New York) think the proposal is a good one, and Hart says he's preparing legislation that would cut off funds for any state with programs that involve racial discrimination.

The actual course and outcome remains to be seen. Whether the President or the Congress has such authority is a matter of conjecture and will require study by our best legal minds. But in reality, the concept seems to be a good one to us, when we consider the unlidited acts of intimidation perpetrated against Negroes in the state of Mississippi.

In the University of Mississippi case involving James H. Meredith, a mockery was made of federal law and the U. S. Constitution by Mississippi officials that our President is appeasing the Soviets.

I have no political love for Mr. Rockefeller, whom I consider an opportunist of the first water. But, can it honestly be said that President Kennedy is not appeasing the Soviets? I am sure he does not like doing so but, in my opinion, that is exactly what he is doing and has been doing ever since Khrushchev agreed to take the missile bases out of Cuba and asked, or suggested that we do the same thing with regard to Turkey and Italy. We are taking them out, are we not?

Moreover, can it be anything else but appeasement to allow thousands of Russian troops to continue to stay in Cuba with no true prospect of getting them out except by force or threat of force? If throwing away our Monroe Doctrine is not appeasement, what is? If permitting the Soviet Communists to continue to hold Cuba in bondage 90 miles from our shores is not appeasement, what is? In fact, letting them get a hold there in the first place was appeasement.

Clarkson J. Beall.

* * * *

So it is "unworthy politicking" to deplore the Kennedy administration's handling of the Cuban situation. Dear me!

Why is this administration importuning Congress for more and more millions to fight communism in far away Laos and South Viet Nam while at the same time it sends our armed forces into the Caribbean, not to fight communism 90 miles from our shores, but to protect communism from a handful of Cuban patriots? As if this were not enough it has enlisted the aid of the British to help harry them.

The people of Southeast Asia are happy to have our millions but they have always been apathetic and indifferent about fighting communism. The Cubans, on the other hand, are a fiercely patriotic people. They have been betrayed by a trusted leader and have seen their land overrun by thousands of Russian troops in defiance of the Monroe Doctrine. All they ask is a chance to get in there even if the odds are overwhelming, and do something about it. They do not need everlasting prodding as our friends in Southeast Asia do. They know about communism and they hate it.

So we protect the Communists! How can you bear it?

Ruth D. Beyer.

two commodities totally unknown under ABC's mismanagement. This can and must be done.

We must clean house nationally, too, unless we are to know complete bankruptcy and repudiation in the near future.

Charles W. Carter.

'On Living Together'

Your April 8 editorial entitled "On Living Together," completely ignores the information available in press reports regarding the harassment and intimidation by local citizens and police against Negro voter registration workers in Greenwood, Miss. There were no mass walks or demonstrations prior to March 27, 1963.

On page 5094 of the Congressional Record of April 2, 1963, Senator Stennis of Mississippi is quoted as follows: "Last week, during one day alone, I am advised that 50 Negro applicants were actually registered to vote." Why not have your reporter phone Mrs. Martha T. Lamb, the Leflore County registrar and ask her if this statement is true and, if not, what are the facts regarding the total number of Negroes who have applied for registration this year and how many of that number have actually been registered?

I cannot believe that The Washington Star would want to print misleading news and I, therefore, invite you to investigate the facts and circumstances to see if your editorial can be supported by your own honest, objective findings.

Wiley A. Branton,
Director, Voter Education Project, A Program of the Southern Regional Council,
Atlanta, Ga.

Art at Ole Miss

G. Ray Kerciu, art professor at the University of Mississippi, will now become a symbol of freedom of expression and the darling of the meddlers who have been disappointed that the Oxford business has quieted down.

A look at the pictures he had on display convinces me that Mr. Kerciu does not deserve the support of the group of students who have sided with him and "academic freedom."

If Mr. Kerciu is removed from the university faculty, both art and education will be advanced.

Dunbar MacNemar.
Millersville, Md.

turally or educationally. In fact, only Hines has a poorer plant than Shaw among all the 24 junior high school plants now in use—and that also has a predominantly Negro population. This has been true for the past 15 years. But 40 years ago, when the old Tech building was 21 years old, it was newer than Western — though probably not as adequate educationally. Eastern and Central were newer than Tech, and so was Dunbar—for Negroes. Even Business (later old Cardozo) was probably better than Tech. But Tech's opposite number in the Negro segment, Armstrong, was built the same year as Tech and—in 1948-49 — was rated 31 points higher as a senior high than Shaw was as a junior high. If Tech's pupils did not feel any discrimination in the facilities they enjoyed, compared with those used by comparable Negroes, there was good reason—there was not much. By standards existing when Tech was built in 1902, it wasn't a bad school. By 1963 standards it is a very bad building. If your editorial writer doesn't think so, he ought to go through the building. I would like to accompany him and observe his reactions to the sights he would see. Harry B. Merican.

* * * *

Your editorial comment anent my criticism of past policies of Southern school administrations in providing for education of Negroes afforded us a bit of nostalgic history.

We still insist that in Washington and points South it was a policy of school administrators and Boards of Education to give to Negro education abandoned schools and second - hand buses where travel was provided. Tech moved to its handsome edifice in Northeast and even today Shaw students still are in the building, with all its inadequacies, erected nearly a half country ago.

Until Judge Parker's Circuit Court decision on June 8, 1940, that unequal pay for equally qualified teachers was a clear violation of the Fourteenth Amendment, more than $25 million in salaries was lost each year by Negro teachers solely because they were Negroes.

We repeat that many of the present day problems in our urban areas we are reaping from the seeds of neglect and discrimination planted during the past 100 years.

E. B. Henderson,
Publicity director, Virginia State NAACP.

branch of government, and that it simply won't work.

Meanwhile, Senators Hart (Michigan), Keating (New York), and Javits (New York) think the proposal is a good one, and Hart says he's preparing legislation that would cut off funds for any state with programs that involve racial discrimination.

The actual course and outcome remains to be seen. Whether the President or the Congress has such authority is a matter of conjecture and will require study by our best legal minds. But in reality, the concept seems to be a good one to us, when we consider the unlidited acts of intimidation perpetrated against Negroes in the state of Mississippi.

In the University of Mississippi case involving James H. Meredith, a mockery was made of federal law and the U. S. Constitution by Mississippi officials headed by Governor Ross Barnett. Their antics cost U. S. taxpayers $7 million.

The Southern Regional Council only last month listed a total of 64 acts of violence and intimidation against Negroes in Mississippi in the last two years, long before the Meredith case. The list ranges from homicide and physical multilation to voter intimidation and excessive court penalties against citizens of color. The report also lists three instances in which Negroes were shot to death by law officers or other employees of local government and nothing done about it. In Liberty of Amite County, Herbert Lee, a Negro active in voter registration was shot down, the report shows, by State Represntative E. H. Hurst. No prosecution was undertaken. A nine-year-old Negro girl walking along a street in Jackson, Miss., was lassoed with wire by several white youths and dragged down it. Though she was maimed for life, the youths went scot free.

The Southern Senators should be informed that there is too much proof indicating that Mississippi officials have "libeled" themselves with "monstrous" acts of self incrimination. And there is no certainty or guarantee that these officials will ever comply with the laws and constitution of the United States.

We therefore believe that the isolationists in Mississippi should be handled like the rebellious children they are. If federal funds are cut off, the stress and strain on the union's poorest state would undoubtedly provoke capitulation and voting freedom for a large segment of its 915,000 Negroes. Where court and military enforcement failed, maybe economic enforcement won't.

The New York Times
D. 680,265 S. 1,306,418
APR 23 1963

Assertive Spirit Stirs Negroes, Puts Vigor in Civil Rights Drive

Racial Pride Increases Throughout U. S. —'Black Nationalism' Is Viewed as Powerful Force for Change

By M. S. HANDLER

A new assertive mood, characterized by some Negro leaders as "Black Nationalism," is spreading throughout the United States.

This spirit is usually identified by the general public with the Black Muslims, the extremist group dedicated to the establishment of a Negro nation carved out of America.

But, in the opinion of many responsible Negro observers, this new mood also lies behind movements with much greater Negro support—the voter registration drive in Greenwood, Miss., and the assault by the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. on segregation in Birmingham, Ala., to cite two examples.

For the term Black Nationalism is now used by Negroes to embrace a multitude of feelings, many of them contradictory, but all having one concept in common—identification of America's Negro population as a group with a common heritage of suffering and achievement, engaged in mass action to compel the white majority to recognize and implement their legal rights.

A Way of Life

A Negro social philosopher, Dr. C. Eric Lincoln of Clark College in Atlanta, explains that Black Nationalism developed because "the Negro is required to be Negro before, and sometimes to the exclusion of, anything else."

But Dr. Lincoln says that this new mood goes beyond earlier appeals for equality.

"Black Nationalism is more than courage and rebellion," he says, "it is a way of life," rejecting white symbols and culture and emphasizing pride in being black.

As yet Black Nationalism has not developed into an organized political force, although the potentiality worries both Republicans and Democrats.

Democrat Takes Note

Louis Martin, a Negro, who is deputy chairman of the Democratic National Committee, notes the rising demands of his race to improve its lot and says Negro aspirations can be summed up in one phrase:

"White man, move over."

Negro leaders differ in their assessment of this new mood, but they agree that it is a powerful new force in American public life.

It is threatening the old order of Negro leaders, the business and professional class and ministers. It is questioning the coleadership of liberal whites in the struggle against discrimination.

Moreover, it is helping destroy the stereotypes of the shiftless Negro as well as the Uncle Toms.

Heartaches For Some

It is bringing new heartaches as Negro parents find they no longer understand their children, who are filled with new racial pride. It has also brought to the surface widespread hatred for the white in the hereafter, and according to the Black Muslims, this belief is designed to condition Negroes to accept their inferior status on this earth. But all the old-line Negro leaders insist that the Christian churches are the most powerful force in the Negro community, without which no gains can be made.

The Black Muslims are organized in a vertical chain of command that makes for authoritarian control vested in Elijah Muhammed, who resides in Chicago. A highly trained praetorian guard, called Fruit of Islam, assures almost military discipline and unquestioning execution of orders.

This élite was recruited in part in penitentiaries among prisoners who were later rehabilitated.

Malcolm X, who is of impressive bearing and is endowed with a shrewd mind, today overshadows Elijah Muhammed.

Rising Popularity

Other Negro leaders are very conscious of the growing popularity of Malcolm X. While they reject his contention that alienation of the Negroes from the American social order is "an accomplished fact," they concede that he is able.

They also grudgingly agree that the puritanical code of the movement—its prohibition of smoking, drinking, gambling, prostitution and narcotics, is destroying the old symbols affixed to Negroes.

The obscure origins of the Black Muslims used to generate derision. But one visit to the Black Muslim restaurant on Lenox Avenue is enough to silence those who make fun of the movement. Waiters dressed in immaculate white jackets and black trousers move about quietly. Mirrors glisten and tables, chairs and floor are almost antiseptically clean.

The old-line leaders also note that Black Muslim ideology, which preaches racial pride, is sweeping Negro communities.

For example, a distinguished Negro who is committed to a "social contract" between the white and Negro populations tells the story of his daughter, the only Negro pupil in an upper middle class school in Westchester County. Though friendly and helpful at school, white pupils refused to attend her Christmas party. She was deeply hurt but said nothing. Several months later, without the knowledge of her parents she wrote a moving essay for school on the meaning of being black.

Warns of Dangers

James Farmer, executive secretary of the Congress of Racial Equality warns of the perils of Black Nationalism. CORE is the organization identified with the sit-ins, freedom rides and voters' registration.

"There is the possibility that Black Nationalism could develop into hate of everything that is different," he says. "How it turns out will depend on how successful the Negroes will be in bringing down the barriers fairs people would say to me, 'man, what are you talking about?' "

BLACK MUSLIM HEAD: Malcolm X, leader of extremist group in New York.

Mr. Farmer says this lack of interest is due more to Negroes' preoccupation with their own problems than to a conscious withdrawal from the problems of the United States.

Thus students at the all-Negro Atlanta University said they were not interested in and did not favor the American Government's Cuban policy until last fall when war seemed near.

Asked why they changed their minds, one replied:

"Well we wanted to find out why we might have to get killed."

Widening Gulf

The evidence seems to indicate that the widening gulf between the dominant white majority and the Negro minority in the United States is paralleled by a growing gulf separating the educated Negroes from the Negroes masses.

For example, Atlanta University students from rural districts said they had lost contact with their own families after a brief time at the university. They said they found it difficult to communicate when they returned home during the holidays.

Such alienation is found in all societies, but it apparently is more acute for the Negro because of his struggle for civil rights. Professor Samuel duBois Cook, Negro sociologist of Atlanta University, explains the effect of education on Negroes:

"In a sense the Negro's very progress tends to magnify his frustrations, insecurities, anxieties, tensions and pathetic dilemmas. For his unsatisfied desires expand, his longings intensify, his expectations are greater, his level of aspiration soars, and his imagination and vision are more lucid, inspired and vivid. Accordingly, his disappointments are more bitter, roadblocks more intolerable, barriers more baffling and gnawing, suffering more poignant. Success aggravates failure. Failure erodes success."

Southern students publicly accept Dr. King's approach of non-violence as the guideline for all assaults on segregation.

Nevertheless, they seem attracted to the extremist views of Malcolm X, although reluctant to discuss them.

Leslie Dunbar, of the Southern Regional Council, one of country are not divided, it is the leadership that is divided.

"The established Negro leaders have lulled the white man into believing everything is under control. There is a difference of night and day when a white man and a Negro say 'our country.' The white man means it. The Negro behaves like a house dog and wags his tail."

Malcolm X maintains that the Negroes should dispense with white liberal leadership and guidance in the civil rights fight. This view, which is shared in part by moderate Negroes, is based on two assumptions.

The first is that the Negroes have developed enough leaders capable of taking charge of their own struggle. The second is that the white liberal cannot be trusted because he is identified with the white man's power structure and when the chips are down will support the white man's interests.

The consensus among Negro leaders is that the key to the problem of race relations is the refusal and inability of the white majority to understand the prevailing mood of the Negro minority. There is no escape from blackness for the Negro, they said, and this goes for all Negroes regardless of their station in life.

Thus a Negro girl with Caucasian features, a graduate cum laude from Vassar, recalled that whenever her white college friends held a party they included her but always invited a Negro man as her escort. She knows this was done out of kindness, but to the Negro girl it meant there was no escape for her from her race. Now she is Negro-conscious and is working actively on racial problems.

Although Malcolm X regards the Negro Christian Ministry as an evil influence, he found it politically expedient to share the same platform with Representative Adam Clayton Powell, who is pastor of the Abyssian Baptist Church, one of the largest Protestant congregations in the United States.

Malcolm X had no compunction on this score because Mr. Powell shares his opposition to whites in policy-making positions in Negro civil rights organizations.

Negro leaders believe there are other clues indicating a tactical shift by the Black Muslims to exploit the old-line Negro organizations.

Muhammed Speaks, the Black Muslim newspaper, has begun to report Mr. Powell's speeches with approval. It also published a lengthy interview with A. Philip Randolph, president of the Sleeping Car Porters Union.

There is no doubt in Mr. Farmer's mind that Malcolm X is beginning to emerge as a political power. Interviewed last Sunday on the WINS program, "News Conference," Mr. Farmer suggested that Mr. Powell might consider the Black Muslims a political threat to him and that this fear might explain his friendly public attitude toward Malcolm X.

Regardless of tactical shifts Malcolm X remains firm on one point:

"You cannot integrate the Negroes and the whites without bloodshed. It can't be done. The only peaceful way is for the Negroes and whites to separate."

Negro leaders differ in their assessment of this new mood, but they agree that it is a powerful new force in American public life.

It is threatening the old order of Negro leaders, the business and professional class and ministers. It is questioning the coleadership of liberal whites in the struggle against discrimination.

Moreover, it is helping destroy the stereotypes of the shiftless Negro as well as the Uncle Toms.

Heartaches For Some

It is bringing new heartaches as Negro parents find they no longer understand their children, who are filled with new racial pride. It has also brought to the surface widespread hatred for the white man.

One highly placed Negro leader, who has dedicated his life to integration within the present framework of society, sadly remarked:

"There is a bit of hatred in every Negro's heart. The Negro would not be human if he did not resent the oppression to which he has been subjected. But this feeling would be stifled if the Negro were to receive the equal status he is entitled to as a citizen of this country."

Black Nationalism as a mood is to be found in varying degrees in all segments of the Negro population, but only the Black Muslims expound a complete renunciation of coexistence with the whites.

Malcom X, the dynamic leader of the Black Muslims in New York, contends that the Negroes "have already seceded" emotionally and intellectually from American society.

To this, Roy Wilkins, the executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, replies:

"Hogwash. Ninety-nine per cent of the Negroes want in."

In an interview published this week in U. S. News & World Report, Mr. Wilkins described the dominant mood of the Negroes today as "very great impatience" with the slow progress toward the "status of full citizenship." He said the Black Muslims are an outgrowth of this sentiment. But he pointed out that the Muslims, "idea of black for black has always been around in one form or another."

However, even the most bitter opponent of the Black Muslims agrees that they have contributed to the growth in Negro racial pride, group identification, self-respect and the conscious worth of Negro values.

The Black Muslims have never published any figures about their membership, but estimates have ranged from as low as 25,000 to as high as 250,000, with the number often put as 70,000. None of these estimates, however, is based on verifiable data. There are more than 18,000,000 Negroes in the country.

Followers of Islam

The Muslims assert that they are faithful followers of Islam, a claim that raises some doubts among their opponents. The Muslims, note, however, that Elijah Muhammed, head of the movement, has made a pilgrimage to Mecca, a journey reserved for Islam's faithful.

The Black Muslims reject Christianity as a white man's religion imposed on the Negroes to insure their prolonged servitude and inferior status. Christianity promises rewards chester County. Though friendly and helpful at school, white pupils refused to attend her Christmas party. She was deeply hurt but said nothing. Several months later, without the knowledge of her parents she wrote a moving essay for school on the meaning of being black.

Warns of Dangers

James Farmer, executive secretary of the Congress of Racial Equality warns of the perils of Black Nationalism. CORE is the organization identified with the sit-ins, freedom rides and voters' registration.

"There is the possibility that Black Nationalism could develop into hate of everything that is different," he says. "How it turns out will depend on how successful the Negroes will be in bringing down the barriers to desegregation."

Whitney Moore Young Jr., executive director of the National Urban League, which has contributed greatly to equal job opportunity, assessed the situation even more seriously.

"In previous generations the Negro believed what is white is right, he said. "This was the standard to which the Negro aspired. This has changed. The Negro is taking a second look and is rejecting many of the white man's values and codes of behavior."

Mr. Young attributed the radical change in the Negro's attitude to the fact that "he no longer feels innately inferior to the white man."

This point was brought home to a white man who drove a few blocks out of his way to take a Negro home. As the Negro got out of the car, he turned and said:

"Thanks for the lift. It was mighty black of you."

Negroes are Divided

There seems to be a sharp cleavage between Negro intellectuals and Negro organization officials in their assessment of the Negro's viewpoint. The intellectuals are closer to James Baldwin, the Negro author, sharing his anger, despair and rage.

In his essay, "Letter From A Region In My Mind," Mr. Baldwin, said:

"The treatment accorded the Negro during the Second World War marks, for me, a turning point in the Negro's relation to America. To put it briefly, and somewhat too simply, a certain hope died, a certain respect for white Americans faded. One began to pity them, or to hate them."

Many New York City Negro intellectuals are categorical in their belief that the Negro fundamentally hates the white man.

They insist that this hatred is spreading as the entrenched white men in the North resort to more refined and resourceful techniques of confining the Negroes to black ghettos, denying them equal work opportunities and hospital facilities and arranging de facto school segregation and token desegregation of the major institutions of higher learning.

Dr. Kenneth Clark, Negro professor of psychology at the City College of New York, says "the Negro does not feel himself a part of this white dominated country, and there is no reason why he should concern himself with this country's international relations."

"There is a colossal indifference to the United States Government's foreign problems," he said. "If I were to talk to a Negro crowd about frustrations, insecurities, anxieties, tensions and pathetic dilemmas. For his unsatisfied desires expand, his longings intensify, his expectations are greater, his level of aspiration soars, and his imagination and vision are more lucid, inspired and vivid. Accordingly, his disappointments are more bitter, roadblocks more intolerable, barriers more baffling and gnawing, suffering more poignant. Success aggravates failure. Failure erodes success."

Southern students publicly accept Dr. King's approach of non-violence as the guideline for all assaults on segregation.

Nevertheless, they seem attracted to the extremist views of Malcolm X, although reluctant to discuss them.

Leslie Dunbar, of the Southern Regional Council, one of the white men most intimately associated with Negro communities in the South, says it is difficult, if not impossible, to ascertain the true feelings and aspirations of the Negroes. He doubts whether the Negro leaders themselves are fully cognizant of what the Negro masses want because, he says, the Negro almost instinctively hides his feelings, even from members of his own race.

Malcolm X goes even further:

"Because of his special history the Negro has had to become a two-faced individual. I could take you to a round of meetings in one evening and you would find the same Negroes responding enthusiastically to the most divergent point of view on the same theme. And this is when he is among his own people."

But Malcolm X believes he knows where the Negro masses stand:

"The black masses in this

Sunday on the WINS program, "News Conference," Mr. Farmer suggested that Mr. Powell might consider the Black Muslims a political threat to him and that this fear might explain his friendly public attitude toward Malcolm X.

Regardless of tactical shifts Malcolm X remains firm on one point:

"You cannot integrate the Negroes and the whites without bloodshed. It can't be done. The only peaceful way is for the Negroes and whites to separate."

SYRACUSE, N.Y.
HERALD JOURNAL
D. 132,375

APR 30 1963

Javits to Attach Rights Riders To 2 Senate Agriculture Bills

By EDWIN J. SAFFORD
Herald-Journal Bureau

WASHINGTON—Sen. Jacob K. Javits has served notice he will initiate the first civil rights battle of the Senate session by submitting anti-discrimination amendments to two sections of an agriculture supplemental appropriation bill.

A spokesman for the New York Republican said Javits' action is based on the reports of the Southern Leadership Conference and Southern Regional Council.

The report showed that federal funds are distributed under the Farmers Home Administration and the Agricultural Extension Act with no regard as to whether they are being administered on a segregated basis.

The amendments specify that no funds for programs carried out in cooperation with the Agriculture Department shall be paid to any state in which participants are "segregated or otherwise discriminated against on account of race, creed or color."

The Javits aide said that similar amendments submitted by Javits in the past have always failed.

However, other federal laws recently enacted by Congress have contained civil rights riders of the same tone as the two Javits proposals.

The amendments' chances for success will be heavily influenced by a ruling the Senate parliamentarian must make as to whether they are germane to the terms of the pending bill.

If the parliamentarian rules as expected—that they are not—it will then take a two-thirds vote to amend the appropriations. In this case, said Javits' aide, the amendments are sure to lose.

Javits will not press the fight, however, if he can get a promise from Agriculture Secretary Orville L. Freeman that no department funds will be used to support segregated programs, the spokesman said.

The source said the issue should reach the Senate floor either today or tomorrow.

Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield, he said, probably will move to table the civil rights amendments if the two-thirds rule is required to enact them. The move to table would be almost certain to carry.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
D. 61,299 S. 108
CERTIFIED
MAY 3 1963

Negroes Stage Record Protest In Birmingham

Police Estimate 750 Arrested, More Than 400 Juveniles

Birmingham, Ala. —(UPI)— Birmingham's Negro population yesterday staged the largest segregation protest demonstration in the history of the Deep South.

Police estimated more than 750 persons were arrested, and by late last night they had booked more than 650 persons on charges of parading without a permit. More than 400 of those arrested were juveniles.

At least 2,000 Negroes were milling in the streets at the height of the protest.

The demonstration lasted four hours, during which time wave after wave of Negroes, many of them juveniles who had skipped school, marched toward the downtown area, singing.

In each instance police were waiting for them at roadblocks and herded them into paddy wagons.

When the police ran out of paddy wagons, school buses were used.

There was no violence, although in one instance motorcycle patrolmen drove their vehicles up over curbs and chased a group of marchers who attempted to flee when they were stopped. All were corraled.

Although police obviously had been tipped of the demonstrations, they apparently were not prepared for a protest of such magnitude.

Pickets with signs reading "Segregation Sold Here," and "No Dignity, No Dollars," appeared at downtown stores. They too were arrested.

Hundreds of Negroes poured out into the streets to watch the marchers and to shout encouragement.

Police, fearing the situation would get out of hand, called for help from the fire department and the sheriff's office.

Seven fire trucks responded, and firemen dressed in helmets

Continued on Page 12, Col. 4

Racial

Continued From Page One

and boots hooked up hoses to fire hydrants.

At this point Negroes were lined five and six deep along the sidewalks along about a six-block area of the Negro section. But they showed no signs of becoming violent and many began drifting away when the hoses were attached. Eventually firemen rolled up the hoses and left.

The Negroes staged at least 10 separate marches, starting from different points in the Negro section.

One group got to within two blocks of city hall before being intercepted.

Members of another group of marchers dropped to their knees and continued singing a freedom hymn, "We Shall Overcome," when police stepped in to make the arrests. However, they got into the vans without force.

There was no physical contact between police and the marchers, many of whom were children. Once arrested, the demonstrators heeded all commands and police did not attempt to manhandle them.

The 400 juveniles were crammed into a juvenile detention center adjacent to the juvenile court room and spent the evening on cots and mattresses laid out on the floor.

Because of the crowded conditions, some were moved to the county jail at Bessemer. All of the adults remained in the city jail.

Sellers Stough, assistant city school superintendent, said Negro high schools were warned Wednesday that students would be suspended or expelled for participating in demonstrations.

"We intend to follow this policy," Mr. Stough said.

One of the Negro leaders, Wyatt T. Walker, said another 200 demonstrators were held in reserve yesterday but would be sent out today and tomorrow.

The Southern Regional Council in Atlanta, which keeps statistics on racial matters, said even a total of 400 arrests in one day would eclipse any demonstration on record. About 250 were arrested during a single day during racial protests in Albany, Ga., last year.

Dr. King kicked off the current desegregation drive here last month. A spokesman said the campaign was started because downtown merchants had not honored a promise to integrate lunch counters and restaurants.

Almost daily protests were staged last month and Mr. King himself was arrested during one of them.

Yesterday's demonstrations got underway shortly after noon when about 300 Negro youths gathered in the 16th Street Baptist Church, jumping off point for many previous protests.

Mr. King and other integration leaders addressed the group in a closed-door session for about 45 minutes.

BOSTON, MASS.
GLOBE (EVENING)
D: 147,750

MAY 7 1963

Mental Study

Negro Pupils Held Unhurt by New Role

ST. LOUIS—The Negro children who spearhead desegregation in the public schools will not be seriously hurt by their trials.

For once, they can face humiliation and isolation for a purpose. This may be one of the first times in their lives when their suffering seems sensible, when they have a chance to gain a sense of self-respect and dignity, a two-year psychiatric study has shown.

The Negro child is used to a life of restriction, Dr. Robert Coles told the 119th annual meeting of the American Psychiatric Association here yesterday. The city has taught him to live with the fact of his inferiority. At an early age he learns to master his feelings of worthlessness and anger at the unfriendly world, Dr. Coles said.

White children learn to associate dark skin with the bad, or the untouchable, Dr. Coles, research consultant to the Southern Regional Council, Atlanta, reported. Sometimes they develop a pathologically strong fear of dark skin that, later on in life, appears as a passionate hatred of Negroes.

In most cases, however, the problem of desegregation merges with the other problems of growing up, Dr. Coles said, and so it is soft or harsh depending on the individual child.

In New Orleans, the 11 Negro 6-year-olds who initiated desegregation and eight of their white classmates were studied, and their parents were interviewed. Nine Negro high school students who started desegregation in the city of Atlanta and 11 of their white classmates were interviewed. Students, parents and teachers in the rural towns and larger cities of Arkansas, Tennessee and North Carolina were questioned.

There is hope for change, Dr. Coles said. Negroes often lose some of their doubts, and whites, some of their misinformation, he found. The teacher may gradually be able to relax in the classroom. Children may even be able to educate their parents to accept social changes, he reported.

(Science Service)

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
WALL STREET JOURNAL
D. 145,901
PAGE ONE
CERTIFIED
MAY 10 1963

Birmingham Impact

Alabama Struggle May Spur Broad New Rights Push by Dixie Negroes

Students in Nashville Stage Protests; Albany, Ga., May Face a Renewal of Strife

Rev. King Wins Concessions

A WALL STREET JOURNAL News Roundup

The racial developments in strife-torn Birmingham are being watched intensely by white and Negro citizens all across Dixie, for riding on the outcome of the Alabama drama may be the course of race relations in the South for years to come.

That's the consensus of talks with businessmen, clergymen and Negro and white leaders in seven Southern states. Most are convinced the significance of the battle of Birmingham and any settlement that emerges will by no means be limited to inhabitants of that Deep South city. They predict any Negro successes in Birmingham will encourage more militant Negro moves elsewhere—and a speed-up in concessions by whites. Indeed, some say the impact of this week's massive demonstrations already is being felt in other cities and states.

In Nashville yesterday about 1,000 Negro high school students demonstrated for the second day in a row in front of downtown restaurants and the city-county building. The demonstrations were part of a concerted campaign to expand Negro civil rights now getting under way in the Tennessee city. The Rev. Kelly Smith, pastor of Nashville's First Baptist Church and a prominent Negro leader, says the campaign is patterned after the Birmingham effort and the goals are similar—more opportunities for employment and integration of the city's restaurants and hotels. The Birmingham Negroes appeared to have won concessions on some of their demands yesterday, but negotiations continued last night on other issues clear at a late hour last night.

In Baton Rouge, La., Negro leaders are making plans for public demonstrations against segregation for the first time since December 1961. At that time, city police relied on tear gas and billy clubs to break up Negro student demonstrations. "It's been hard to get the Negro going since then," reports the Rev. Arthur L. Jelks, president of the Baton Rouge chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP). "But the demonstrations in Birmingham have given us new hope."

Renewed Strife in Albany?

In Albany, Ga., a racial hotspot in recent years, there are signs civil rights strife is in the making once more. "Our thinking is that [illegible] at a late hour last night.

In Baton Rouge, La., Negro leaders are making plans for public demonstrations against segregation for the first time since December 1961. At that time, city police relied on tear gas and billy clubs to break up Negro student demonstrations. "It's been hard to get the Negro going since then," reports the Rev. Arthur L. Jelks, president of the Baton Rouge chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP). "But the demonstrations in Birmingham have given us new hope."

Renewed Strife in Albany?

In Albany, Ga., a racial hotspot in recent years, there are signs civil rights strife is in the making once more. "Our thinking is that if the demonstrations can succeed in Birmingham, they can here, too," declares Dr. W. G. Anderson, Negro leader of the integrationist Albany movement. "I've already told Police Chief Pritchett to clean out his jails if the Negroes win in Birmingham because we'll be coming in."

It's not surprising that the Birmingham integration effort has special significance across the South. The industrial city, along with Jackson, Miss., has long been a symbol of white resistance and Negro frustration on the matter of integration. (Tension pervaded Birmingham yesterday despite the truce agreed on by Negro and white leaders. See story on page 4.)

The events in Birmingham in recent days take on even more meaning when viewed in the light of earlier racial developments. Impatient with what they term the "token" integration accomplished through court action, Negro leaders in the past four years have been gradually turning to more "direct" efforts—sit-ins, parades and boycotts. These actions, particularly the boycotts, often have proved successful. But even these methods are too slow for a large body of Negroes and other civil rights advocates. This group argues that massive public demonstrations, despite the dangers of violence, are the best answer to Negroes' problems.

The "Freedom Rides"

The "freedom rides" of some 15 months ago represented the first major effort of these advocates of demonstrations. Though they succeeded in bringing grievances of Southern Negroes to the forefront for a time, it's generally conceded in the South—by both Negroes and whites—that the rides were far from a success. "They did not achieve the goals we thought they might, though I guess we couldn't call them an outright failure," says Clarence A. Laws, Southwest regional secretary for the NAACP.

So the Birmingham clash stands not only as an effort to crack one of the country's most important segregation strongholds, but as a test of the tactic of direct Negro action as well.

"If Martin Luther King loses in Birmingham, it will mean the whole direct action movement will be drastically curtailed," comments Paul Anthony, field director of the respected Southern Regional Council, a bi-racial Southern human rights group headquartered in Atlanta. "But if he wins, there will be a wave of new demonstrations. Every Negro in the South who reads about a Birmingham victory would be reminded that he needs to do something about himself. The chances are that this increased pressure would speed up desegregation because few whites want Montgomery or Birmingham to happen to their city."

Another Southern white agrees. Hodding Carter III, liberal editor of the Greenville (Miss.) Delta Democrat Times, figures the "direct action" at Birmingham "must succeed or it will die out. Look what happened to the freedom rides." Mr. Carter notes that last month's Negro demonstrations in Greenwood, Miss.—led by some of the leaders now in Birmingham—failed to budge white citizens from their segregationist stand and has put added pressure on Negroes to achieve success in Birmingham.

Segregationist View

The importance of the Birmingham struggle is also clear to white segregationists. "The whites just have to hold the line in

Please Turn to Page 13, Column 1

Birmingham Impact: Alabama Clash May Spur a Broad New Rights Push

Continued from First Page

Birmingham," says Sam M. Engelhardt, Jr., a farmer from near Montgomery who is a member of the governing body of the Alabama Association of Citizens' Councils. Mr. Engelhardt professes confidence the segregationists will win eventually. "The white community will be starting an economic withdrawal soon, and it'll hurt the blacks where they can least afford to be hurt—in the pocketbook," he says.

Caught in the middle in the current racial troubles, as usual, are the thousands of Southern whites who don't want integration but are resigned to it if it isn't shoved at them too fast.

"Integration of the sort they're seeking at Birmingham right now would cause complete deterioration of the community," contends Leon Godchaux, vice president of Godchaux's Department Store in New Orleans. "Gradual desegregation would be better." However, Mr. Godchaux expects that events in Birmingham will speed desegregation in his city. "It is helping us make decisions that we otherwise would be reluctant to make," he says, referring to current moves to desegregate lunch counters in New Orleans. "We want no violence. We've already had a good taste of what Birmingham is going through, and we don't want any more."

In Ft. Worth, which up to now has strongly resisted integration, George W. Armstrong, chairman of Texas Steel Co. and in his own description a "moderate" on the race question, thinks the Birmingham situation will slow down integration movements in the South. He believes whites resent the pressure applied by Negroes in Birmingham and as a result will be far more cautious about cooperating with Negro efforts to desegregate gradually, regardless of the outcome of the Alabama demonstrations. "Would you rather be talked out of your money or have it taken at the point of a gun?" he asks in criticizing the Negro action in Birmingham.

The Birmingham dispute has pushed to the fore what many Negroes and whites consider the major problem facing the South—job integration. Since the big move to desegregate began in the early 1950s, Negroes have been concentrating on desegregating public schools and other public institutions, transportation facilities and, more recently, restaurants and hotels.

But probably the Southern Negro's most coveted goal is equal job opportunities. Nondiscrimination in hiring is one of the four demands that Birmingham Negroes have pressed in their campaign. Negro leaders complain that unemployment rates for their race run more than double that for whites in the South and that Negroes often are restricted to the most menial jobs.

Though Negroes have been making job gains in many parts of the South, especially in such cities as Dallas, Houston and Atlanta, heavy layoffs in farm fields because of automation in recent years have worsened Negro unemployment. "Because of this agricultural automation, job equality is the most important race question facing the South," says Mr. Carter of Mississippi.

Maxine Smith, executive secretary of the Memphis NAACP, figures Negroes in her area stand to reap important benefits in the job field if Birmingham Negroes win their fight. Since the spring of 1960, segregation barriers have been coming down in Memphis at bus stations, lunch counters, movies and public parks, she reports. But job prospects for Negroes are still "pretty dismal," she adds.

"What happens in Birmingham certainly will have a tremendous psychological effect here," Miss Smith says. "To know that the white leadership there has made concessions would help us greatly."

BOSTON, MASS.
CHRISTIAN SCIENCE
MONITOR
WESTERN EDITION
D. 174,850
MAY 11 1963

Two Clergymen in Mississippi

Herewith are excerpts from sermons preached by two Mississippi clergymen shortly after the disorders at the University of Mississippi last fall. The portions quoted are from the New South, published by the Southern Regional Council in Atlanta.

For the past eight years we have known of a well organized movement spreading a doctrine of hate. We knew this, yet we did nothing to offset this movement. We have let this group discredit our national government, the United Nations, the courts, the church, and some of our basic ideals. We sat idly by while this movement gained control of our press and state government.

We have let prejudice shut out the Gospel and in many cases we have turned to the gods of segregation and white supremacy.

The Lord our God will not allow us to have these lesser gods. We must repent for this idolatry.

We need, more than ever before, to seek the power of God to free us from all that is in our minds and hearts which keeps us from seeing the will of God for us in this hour of crisis.

* * *

If we are to solve our own problems we must think through and establish a doctrine of man that will be acceptable to God. I believe that this doctrine must be firmly planted on a foundation of brotherhood through the Fatherhood of God. This doctrine must be all inclusive in relation to man. In other words, what we think of the white man must also be true of the Asian, the Indian and the Negro.

If we are to face our own problems in this hour, we must maintain complete freedom of speech. We must be free to say what we think without reprisal or harassment. We must be willing to hear the ideas of others without cutting ourselves apart from them. We must not let smear tactics and gossip prevail against those with whom we disagree. It is only as we share our ideas that we can mold our ideas into a reasonable solution to our problem.

Our press must be kept free to give us a just account of the news and to speak its convictions in editorials. I uphold the right of every newspaper to express its convictions even though I may disagree with them vehemently.

I believe in a free pulpit. The minister must be free to present the gospel as he feels God reveals it to him. It should be clearly understood that any pastor will say things with which his congregation will not agree. If this were not true there would be no way that the pastor could lead them in growth.

We must reestablish communications with the leaders of white and Negro peoples on the local level. It is only as we understand each other's positions that we can come out with fair and equitable solutions.

We must see that our institutions of education are kept open. I do not believe that it is fair to the children of our nation to close our public schools as a solution to our problem. The education of our children is far more important than most of the political issues that rise and fall. It is certainly more important than the doctrine of segregation. If the time ever comes when the choice of whether my children go to school with Negroes or else have no school at all, my children will go to school with Negroes. The education of my children is this important to me. We must never use the possibility of closing our schools as a solution to this problem of segregation.

We must come to the place where we dare to put our beliefs into practice. We have grown up to believe in the American creed in which we say that all men are created equal, that all men are endowed with certain rights and that we are a government "of the people, by the people, and for the people."

* * *

The real and basic problem is not merely a problem between the white man and the Negro . . . it is rather a problem between what we believe on the one hand, and what we practice on the other.

Finally we must let love permeate our lives. Jesus said, "This is my commandment that you love one another as I have loved you." Can we love and hate at the same time? If we are to see man as God sees him, we must see the steadfast love that always reaches out. Paul tells us that "Love does no wrong to a neighbor; therefore, love is the fulfilling of the law." As we reexamine our own actions, can we say that they are an expression of love . . . do they do no wrong to a neighbor?

I do not speak to you as one who has shed all of his prejudice.

I have my fears and my doubts about the future but I do speak to you as one who is willing to open my mind and heart to the will of God. I must come at least to say, if God loves one I must love him too.—Rev. James B. Nicholson, Byram Methodist Church, Jackson, Miss.

The first thing we can do is to face up to our own guilt in the situation. You and I didn't go out there and throw the broken bricks and the bottles. You and I didn't go out there and fire the guns. Yet you and I, along with every other Mississippian, are responsible in one degree or another for what happened. For we are responsible for the moral and political climate in our state which made such a tragedy possible. Maybe you and I didn't do much to create this climate, it is certainly evident that we did all too little to dispel or change it. The "things that we have left undone which we ought to have done" should bother us every bit as much as the "things which we have done which we ought not to have done." The decent, respectable, and responsible people of Mississippi have failed, when events like those of last Sunday night can take place within our state.

But true repentance means more than just remorse. We must now give our all to salvaging the situation; to bringing order out of chaos, peace out of strife. We must accept the fact that the color of a person's skin can no longer be a barrier to his admission to the University of Mississippi. I would hope that, as Christians we would accept this because it is just and right whether we like it or not. But if we are not yet able to do this, at least we can be realistic enough and patriotic enough to accept this as the law of the land.

* * *

I, for one, look to the future with faith and confidence. I am convinced that most of the decent and responsible people of the Oxford university community have learned the lesson we must learn from last Sunday's madness. And from the statement of those 127 Mississippi businessmen released last Tuesday it is apparent that others have learned also. The fact that many other Mississippians have not, and that many of our political leaders are still making every effort to keep them from doing so should only spur us on to better and greater efforts. By God's grace, some real good can come out of this tragedy, and it is up to you and to me to see that it does.

Even more serious than the threat to the University is the threat to our nation and our system of government posed by our continued defiance of the federal courts and the federal government. No government is perfect. But I sincerely believe, as I'm sure you do, that our system of government in this country comes closer to providing the Christian ideal of freedom and justice than any other system yet devised by the mind of man. So, then, it is as a Christian, as well as an American, that I want to see this system preserved. But we cannot long survive as a country if every state is free to decide which federal laws she will obey and which she will not. We found this out 100 years ago, and most of us thought the issue was settled then.

We know there are good laws and bad laws, good court decisions and bad court decisions; and, fortunately, under our system of government, we are free to protest the ones we don't like and to take every legal means to repeal or reverse them. We do not have the right to defy and disobey the law when it is established and in force. In trying to do this, we have brought upon ourselves the threat of anarchy, and, as Christians, we cannot and must not support this alternative to the democracy under which we live.

Finally, and most important of all, I ask you as a Christian people to consider the real moral issue which lies at the base of the whole crisis: are we morally justified in refusing to admit to the University of Mississippi any student who meets all the necessary requirements except for the color of his skin? Remember, the question here is not "What would I like?" or "What do I want?" The question is simply, "What is just and right?"

* * *

Our governor has said that the state's cause on this score is righteous and just and I am sure he is sincere in his belief, as are many other Mississippians who share it with him. But in the name of reason and of Christian standards of freedom and justice, I ask you to consider the fact that no university in the world would defend this position rationally, and no Christian church in the world would defend it morally. And I do not believe that any one of us here today could stand in the presence of Jesus of Nazareth, look Him squarely in the eye, and say, "We will not admit a Negro to the University of Mississippi." For it was our Lord who said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Brethren we need to pray, for our University and our community, our state and our nation. Perhaps, above all, we need to pray for ourselves. The seeds of anger and hatred, bitterness and prejudice, are already widely sown, and, as Christians we need to do our utmost to uproot them and cast them out.

Let us pray daily, even hourly, for God's guidance and direction, that we may faithfully fulfill this responsibility to the end that God's will be done.—Rev. Duncan M. Gray Jr., St. Peter's Episcopal Church, Oxford, Miss.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
WALL STREET JOURNAL
D. 207,369
MAY 10 1963

Scorecard Gives Progress Of Desegregation in South

By a WALL STREET JOURNAL Staff Reporter

Here's a rundown on desegregation progress made so far by Negroes on several fronts in the South:

Since 1954, when the U.S. Supreme Court struck down school segreation, the number of desegregated public school districts has climbed from five to 977. There's still a long way to go, however, since 5,252 districts in the 17 Southern and border states are still not integrated.

At the college and university level, 168 of the South's 292 institutions are segregated "in practice or principle," reports the Southern Education Reporting Service in Nashville.

The Southern Research Council in Atlanta estimates that 110 cities now have desegreated lunch counters, up from 85 in September 1961, and none in 1960.

The council estimates that transit systems in 36 Southern cities now are desegregated, against "almost none" 10 years ago.

A recent study of 13 major Southern cities shows 18 of 168 movie theaters are desegregated, against "almost nine" five years ago.

BOSTON, MASS.
CHRISTIAN SCIENCE
MONITOR
EASTERN EDITION
D. 174,850

MAY 11 1963

Two Clergymen in Missis

Herewith are excerpts from sermons preached by two Mississippi clergymen shortly after the disorders at the University of Mississippi last fall. The portions quoted are from the New South, published by the Southern Regional Council in Atlanta.

For the past eight years we have known of a well organized movement spreading a doctrine of hate. We knew this, yet we did nothing to offset this movement. We have let this group discredit our national government, the United Nations, the courts, the church, and some of our basic ideals. We sat idly by while this movement gained control of our press and state government.

We have let prejudice shut out the Gospel and in many cases we have turned to the gods of segregation and white supremacy.

The Lord our God will not allow us to have these lesser gods. We must repent for this idolatry.

We need, more than ever before, to seek the power of God to free us from all that is in our minds and hearts which keeps us from seeing the will of God for us in this hour of crisis.

* * *

If we are to solve our own problems we must think through and establish a doctrine of man that will be acceptable to God. I believe that this doctrine must be firmly planted on a foundation of brotherhood through the Fatherhood of God. This doctrine must be all inclusive in relation to man. In other words, what we think of the white man must also be true of the Asian, the Indian and the Negro.

If we are to face our own problems in this hour, we must maintain complete freedom of speech. We must be free to say what we think without reprisal or harassment. We must be willing to hear the ideas of others without cutting ourselves apart from them. We must not let smear tactics and gossip prevail against those with whom we disagree. It is only as we share our ideas that we can mold our ideas into a reasonable solution to our problem.

Our press must be kept free to give us a just account of the news and to speak its convictions in editorials. I uphold the right of every newspaper to express its convictions even though I may disagree with them vehemently.

I believe in a free pulpit. The minister must be free to present the gospel as he feels God reveals it to him. It should be clearly understood that any pastor will say things with which his congregation will not agree. If this were not true there would be no way that the pastor could lead them in growth.

We must reestablish communications with the leaders of white and Negro peoples on the local level. It is only as we understand each other's positions that we can come out with fair and equitable solutions.

We must see that our institutions of education are kept open. I do not believe that it is fair to the children of our nation to close our public schools as a solution to our problem. The education of our children is far more important than most of the political issues that rise and fall. It is certainly more important than the doctrine of segregation. If the time ever comes when the choice of whether my children go to school with Negroes or else have no school at all, my children will go to school with Negroes. The education of my children is this important to me. We must never use the possibility of closing our schools as a solution to this problem of segregation.

We must come to the place where we dare to put our beliefs into practice. We have grown up to believe in the American creed in which we say that all men are created equal, that all men are endowed with certain rights and that we are a government "of the people, by the people, and for the people."

* * *

The real and basic problem is not merely a problem between the white man and the Negro . . . it is rather a problem between what we believe on the one hand, and what we practice on the other.

Finally we must let love permeate our lives. Jesus said, "This is my commandment that you love one another as I have loved you." Can we love and hate at the same time? If we are to see man as God sees him, we must see the steadfast love that always reaches out. Paul tells us that "Love does no wrong to a neighbor; therefore, love is the fulfilling of the law." As we reexamine our own actions, can we say that they are an expression of love . . . do they do no wrong to a neighbor?

I do not speak to you as one who has shed all of his prejudice.

I have my fears and my doubts about the future but I do speak to you as one who is willing to open my mind and heart to the will of God. I must come at least to say, if God loves one I must love him too.—Rev. James B. Nicholson, Byram Methodist Church, Jackson, Miss.

The first thing we can do is to face up to our own guilt in the situation. You and I didn't go out there and throw the broken bricks and the bottles. You and I didn't go out there and fire the guns. Yet you and I, along with every other Mississippian, are responsible in one degree or another for what happened. For we are responsible for the moral and political climate in our state which made such a tragedy possible. Maybe you and I didn't do much to create this climate, it is certainly evident that we did all too little to dispel or change it. The "things that we have left undone which we ought to have done" should bother us every bit as much as the "things which we have done which we ought not to have done." The decent, respectable, and responsible people of Mississippi have failed, when events like those of last Sunday night can take place within our state.

But true repentance means more than just remorse. We must now give our all to salvaging the situation; to bringing order out of chaos, peace out of strife. We must accept the fact that the color of a person's skin can no longer be a barrier to his admission to the University of Mississippi. I would hope that, as Christians we would accept this because it is just and right whether we like it or not. But if we are not yet able to do this, at least we can be realistic enough and patriotic enough to accept this as the law of the land.

* * *

I, for one, look to the future with faith and confidence. I am convinced that most of the decent and responsible people of the Oxford university community have learned the lesson we must learn from last Sunday's madness. And from the statement of those 127 Mississippi businessmen released last Tuesday it is apparent that others have learned also. The fact that many other Mississippians have not, and that many of our political leaders are still making every effort to keep them from doing so should only spur us on to better and greater efforts. By God's grace, some real good can come out of this tragedy, and it is up to you and to me to see that it does.

Even more serious than the threat to the University is the threat to our nation and our system of government posed by our continued defiance of the federal courts and the federal government. No government is perfect. But I sincerely believe, as I'm sure you do, that our system of government in this country comes closer to providing the Christian ideal of freedom and justice than any other system yet devised by the mind of man. So, then, it is as a Christian, as well as an American, that I want to see this system preserved. But we cannot long survive as a country if every state is free to decide which federal laws she will obey and which she will not. We found this out 100 years ago, and most of us thought the issue was settled then.

We know there are good laws and bad laws, good court decisions and bad court decisions; and, fortunately, under our system of government, we are free to protest the ones we don't like and to take every legal means to repeal or reverse them. We do not have the right to defy and disobey the law when it is established and in force. In trying to do this, we have brought upon ourselves the threat of anarchy, and, as Christians, we cannot and must not support this alternative to the democracy under which we live.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST-DISPATCH
D. 347,672 S. 564,337

PAGE ONE
CERTIFIED

MAY 12 1963

White House's Efforts In Civil Rights Fight Being Called Inadequate

Robert Kennedy Defends Secret Behind-Scenes Mediation as Best Approach—Critics Advocating Strong Statement by President, Filing of Suits to Enforce Present Laws, and New Legislation

By THOMAS W. OTTENAD
A Washington Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch

WASHINGTON, May 11

NEW RACIAL DEMONSTRATIONS in the South have raised serious doubts about the adequacy of the Kennedy Administration's civil rights program. Leaders of some Negro groups and civil rights organizations have long been dissatisfied with the Administration's record, and members of Congress now have joined the chorus of criticism.

Among the latest are Senator John Sherman Cooper, Republican from the border state of Kentucky, and Senator Wayne Morse, the independent-minded Oregonian who was once a Republican and now is a Democrat.

ALTHOUGH differing somewhat in their approaches, Morse and Cooper fundamentally make the same two charges. The Administration, they say, has not made full use of existing civil rights laws nor has it made enough of an effort to obtain new legislation that would strengthen its hand.

Both of these complaints are denied by top Administration leaders. Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy told the Post-Dispatch in an interview that in his opinion the Administration had done everything possible to ease racial tensions.

Kennedy, who has directed most of the Administration's civil rights efforts for his brother, the President, was obviously nettled at suggestions that the Administration has not been as vigorous as it might have been.

The Attorney General laughed at a suggestion that perhaps Southern cities troubled by racial unrest could be assisted by a national program aimed at educating, explaining racial problems and providing a means of communication, so often lacking, between white and Negro groups.

HE TERMED the idea "utterly unrealistic and unworkable." In contrast with Kennedy's view, some civil rights experts have said such a program might be helpful, particularly if led by persons of outstanding reputation and prestige.

Later the Attorney General conceded there was a great need for more public understanding and better communication between whites and Negroes to avert racial troubles.

These remarks were made at a press conference he called here last night shortly after agreement was announced in Birmingham, Ala., on a limited desegregation plan that apparently ended five weeks of racial crisis there.

"All of us in all sections of the country have a hell of a lesson to learn in getting a dialogue going between the North and South," he said. "We need greater meetings and exchanges of points of view."

Although he said in his interview with the Post-Dispatch that he would welcome any suggestions for dealing with racial problems, the President's brother indicated very firmly that he felt the Administration's program not only was adequate but that it represented the best approach.

Dunbar, executive director of the Southern Regional Council in Atlanta, Ga., a group that has worked actively for civil rights for many years, who disagree with this analysis. Dunbar said voting rights for Negroes are indispensable to progress in other areas of civil rights but of themselves they are not enough.

Except for a proposal to extend the life of the Civil Rights Commission, the legislation offered by the Administration this year deals with the problem of voting. It would outlaw the discriminatory use of literacy tests as a voting requirement, establish completion of the sixth grade as evidence of literacy and provide federal referees to speed registration of qualified Negro voters.

Asked why the Administration has not asked for stronger laws, Attorney General Kennedy said, "We are suggesting legislation we think we can get through Congress. We have the best chance of obtaining voting legislation." Asked if additional legislation would be sought, he replied, "If we can attain this, then we'll see."

Among legislation civil rights advocates would like to have, but which the Administration has never sought, are measures that would give the Attorney General authority to initiate court suits to protect all civil rights, establish a time table for compliance by school districts with the 1954 Supreme Court school desegregation decision and create a fair employment practices commission. President Kennedy pledged action in each of these areas in his campaign for the White House.

DUNBAR and Senators Cooper and Morse have very definite ideas on steps they think the Administration could take to strengthen its performance in the field of civil rights.

In a telephone interview with the Post-Dispatch, Dunbar paid tribute to the effort the Justice Department has put into its civil rights activities but urged additional action by the Federal Government. He stressed particularly the need for a strong statement to the nation by President Kennedy, withdrawal of the Justice Department from its role as a civil rights mediator, institution of lawsuits by the Justice Department in civil rights areas where it has been slow to act and vigorous efforts to obtain new legislation, particularly in the area of desegregation.

Dunbar said a presidential statement would be extremely valuable in the South. "There is a great receptivity of moderates in the South toward moral and intellectual leadership in the field of civil rights," he asserted. "A strong statement by the Pres-nedy's view, some civil rights experts have said such a program might be helpful, particularly if led by persons of outstanding reputation and prestige.

Later the Attorney General conceded there was a great need for more public understanding and better communication between whites and Negroes to avert racial troubles.

These remarks were made at a press conference he called here last night shortly after agreement was announced in Birmingham, Ala., on a limited desegregation plan that apparently ended five weeks of racial crisis there.

"All of us in all sections of the country have a hell of a lesson to learn in getting a dialogue going between the North and South," he said. "We need greater meetings and exchanges of points of view."

Although he said in his interview with the Post-Dispatch that he would welcome any suggestions for dealing with racial problems, the President's brother indicated very firmly that he felt the Administration's program not only was adequate but that it represented the best approach.

Aside from two rather obvious areas of operation—correcting racial abuses where possible through administrative action by the President and others in the executive branch and meeting a responsibility to make use of and enforce existing civil rights laws—the Administration says much of its effort has been devoted to behind-the-scenes mediation efforts.

The Attorney General and his aids say this method was used in the desegregation demonstrations in Birmingham. Assistant Attorney General Burke Marshall was there to assist in working out a solution. Kennedy and other high Administration officials are reported to have telephoned business leaders, lawyers and others, seeking to encourage moderate and responsible elements to assert themselves.

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT officials assert this technique has been used repeatedly and, in many instances, successfully. They deny the complaint of critics who say the Administration has bounced from one racial crisis to another, doing little between times and then improvising hurriedly when the flash point is near. Spokesmen for the department say they have been busy in the lulls between the storms, trying by quiet, often completely unpublicized efforts to avert difficulties.

There is a cloak-and-dagger aspect to this operation. Justice Department officials decline even to name the communities in which they say they have succeeded in helping to avert racial unrest. They say they have kept no tally of the number, but insist that it is considerable.

Behind their reluctance to talk is the conviction that secrecy is essential to the success of their operation. They say Southerners who have assisted in these efforts cannot be identified lest their positions in their communities be jeopardized. Kennedy and his chief aids in the Justice Department are convinced that private, unpublicized efforts are the most effective, if not the only method for mobilizing moderate elements in the South.

SEVERAL OTHER characteristics distinguish the Administration's policy on civil rights. In the first place, its greatest emphasis is placed on efforts to register Negroes to vote. From the Attorney General on down, Justice Department officials are convinced that other civil rights problems will be solved once Southern Negroes register in large numbers. Said Kennedy:

"When the Negroes become a voting force, they won't be disregarded by their local officials. It is the fastest way to cure other civil rights problems."

There are some observers like Leslie W. Dunbar and Senators Cooper and Morse have very definite ideas on steps they think the Administration could take to strengthen its performance in the field of civil rights.

In a telephone interview with the Post-Dispatch, Dunbar paid tribute to the effort the Justice Department has put into its civil rights activities but urged additional action by the Federal Government. He stressed particularly the need for a strong statement to the nation by President Kennedy, withdrawal of the Justice Department from its role as a civil rights mediator, institution of lawsuits by the Justice Department in civil rights areas where it has been slow to act and vigorous efforts to obtain new legislation, particularly in the area of desegregation.

Dunbar said a presidential statement would be extremely valuable in the South. "There is a great receptivity of moderates in the South toward moral and intellectual leadership in the field of civil rights," he asserted. "A strong statement by the President would raise a rallying standard for them. It would encourage them to take action, to assert leadership."

He disagreed emphatically with Attorney General Kennedy's view that Southern moderates would respond only to private pleas, would act only in secret. He also expressed great doubt about the value of the Justice Department's secret maneuverings. "They burn up the telephone wires and send people in and out of town, but we don't find much evidence that they have been very successful," he observed.

He saw a potential hazard, too, in having the Justice Department, a law enforcement agency, serve as a mediator in racial disputes. "We need mediation and conciliation, but the Justice Department should not be the one to provide it," he added.

Senator Cooper said he will introduce in Congress legislation that would allow the Attorney General to initiate and the Government to bear the cost of school desegregation suits. He plans also a measure that would prohibit discrimination against Negro customers in businesses affecting the public interest, such as restaurants, hotels and amusement places.

Continued on Page 3, Col. 7

Civil Rights

Continued From Page One

Senator Morse called for the Justice Department to test fully its existing legal powers. He noted that federal law makes it an offense willfully to deprive anyone of constitutional rights. "For the enforcement arm of the National Government to do nothing, except to send mediators and await reports from the combat zones, is a shameful commentary on American democracy," Morse said on the floor of the Senate Monday.

In the midst of pressure from those who think he is doing too little and those who think he is doing too much in the difficult field of human rights, President Kennedy apparently has been trying to avoid the shoals on both sides. He has yet to make a vigorous speech that would seek to rally the nation to end the evils of racial intolerance. The closest he came was his television address last Sept. 30, in the crisis at the University of Mississippi.

At his press conference last Wednesday, he declined even to comment on the tactics used in the Alabama struggle, including the use of police dogs and fire hoses by white authorities and the use of young Negro children as demonstrators by Negro leaders.

THE METHODS employed by both sides in Birmingham have been sharply criticized. The Rev. Albert S. Foley, chairman of the Alabama Advisory Committee of the Federal Commission on Civil Rights, spoke out strongly against street disturbances, directing his criticism against the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, leader of the Negro movement.

Father Foley called on the Rev. Dr. King "in the name of properly achieved civil rights for all citizens, Negro and white," to end the mass demonstrations.

One of the biggest dangers in the Birmingham situation and others like it is that under tension and pressure attitudes on both sides harden. Communication becomes more difficult. Actions tend to become more extreme. The way is opened for demagogues, both white and Negro, for those who want personal publicity and those who prefer turmoil and unrest to the settlement of difficult problems.

In the face of problems of this magnitude, the role of the President and the Federal Government is admittedly a most difficult one. But as Dunbar put it:

"What is it worth to the nation to prevent another Birmingham?" Then answering his own question: "Even from just a pragmatic point of view I think it might be more important to the country than cutting taxes."

ATLANTA, GA.
WORLD
D. 29,800

MAY 14 1963

Dr. Richardson To Deliver Washington High Baccalaureate

DR. H. V. RICHARDSON

Dr. Harry V. Richardson, President and founder of Interdenominational Theological Center, will deliver Booker T. Washington High School's Baccalaureate Address, Sunday, May 19, at 9:30 A. M. in the gymnatorium. Some 350 seniors are in the graduating class.

Dr. Richardson, an eminent scholar and churchman served for 16 years as Chaplain of Tuskegeee Institute, Tuskegee, Alabama. In addition, he served for 11 years as President of Gammon Theological Seminary, Atlanta, Georgia, and presently, is President of I. T. C. Atlanta.

He serves on the Board of Directors of the Southern Regional Council, Inc., Atlanta Urban League and the Atlanta Tuberculosis Association. He is a member of National Council of Churches in Christ, Council of Evangelism of the Methodist Church, Treasurer of the Methodist Rural Life Fellowship, member of the Methodist Seminar on Theology, Oxford, England, and numerous others.

The public is cordially invited to hear Dr. Richardson. J. Y. Moreland is Principal of Booker T. Washington High School.

ATLANTA, GA.
WORLD
D. 29,800
PAGE ONE CERTIFIED
MAY 16 1963

South Changing For Better Dr. Richardson Declares

By WILLIAM A. FOWLKES
Managing Editor, Atlanta Daily World

The South has made noble contributions in the achievement of democracy, Dr. Harry V. Richardson told the Hungry Club Wednesday. While pointing out that the millennium has not been reached, the I.T.C. president said the fact that so many changes are coming in the area which held slaves longest and has long been known as "the seat of the most undemocratic practices in the nation," is highly significant.

"In the development and expression of constructive mass opinion, the South has made splendid contributions," Dr. Richardson pointed out. The speed of this development came, he said, through such monumental landmarks as the two editions of the "Ministers' Manifesto," the Atlanta students' "An Appeal for Human Rights;" hearings by the Sibley Commission on the question of Georgia public school desegregation, the movement called "HOPE" (Help Our Public Education), educational efforts of such organizations as the Southern Regional Council and church agencies. He also credited the achievement of Negroes who have been admitted to larger opportunities.

The speaker said the South had made contributions against undemocratic practices, getting people to change their "wicked ways," by appeal to reason, appeal to law and direct action. There have been many stalwart leaders and followers who have joined in pointing out the evils of segregation and discrimination and who have worked against them, the speaker declared.

GOVERNMENT FORCE

"An achievement is that national government has shown that laws must be respected and obeyed by all, even if force is necessary to secure such obedience," Dr. Richardson went on. "One of the hardest areas to change is that of vested interests — those areas where money and power are concerned. The two methods of protest demonstrations and selective buying are making some headway in fairer employment and more equal services."

Another Southern contribution, credited by the theological center head, was in the area of political power and control. He pointed out that two southern states — Tennessee and Georgia — attacked the evils of the rural - dominated legislative systems, resulting in the Supreme Court -outlawing of Georgia's county unit votes. As a result, he showed, Georgia got its first Negro senator since "reconstruction days."

Speaking of what looms in the future for the Negro "in the next forty years," Dr. Richardson said that some people will be enjoying the highest standard of health and security beyond present dreams. He also foresaw the demise of discrimination. But, he declared, that he could see poverty for too many, most of them Negroes, since "poverty is cumulative and self- perpetuating." The speaker spoke of Negro neighborhoods — North and South — which show "unused and unusuable manpower," unkemp and hopeless-looking men and women.

(Continued on Page 6, Col. 2)

South Changing

(Continued from Page One)

Poverty, Dr. Richardson said, causes a higher rate of mental illness and emotional upset, physical illness, illiteracy and increased school dropouts, general lack of motivation and delinquency among the young, little or no social security. He pointed out that additional problems will come with automation and technical changes, making it impossible for the untrained and unskilled to get [illegible]

"We can't make it unless we have hopeful young men for the future," Dr. Richardson declared while calling for more concern on the part of church people and for home missions.

Dr. Hilliard E. Bowen, area superintendent of Atlanta schools, moderated the luncheon - forum session.

BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD
D. 178,553 S. 283,819

MAY 26 1963

Speed Held Urgent On Integration

By CLAUDE SITTON
(New York Times News Service)

ATLANTA — The Southern Regional Council asserted Saturday that immediate elimination of segregation in all public facilities is a "practical necessity" for the South and the nation.

Token steps, it said in one of the few statements yet issued by its executive council, "already are outgrown by Negro needs and impatience."

HISTORIC CHOICE

The 15 white and Negro Southern leaders, whose stated objective is equal opportunity for all persons in the region, said the Supreme Court's sit-in decision last Monday presented a historic choice.

The court held that cities that make segregation a policy by ordinance or official statement could not prosecute Negroes for seeking service in privately owned stores.

The Council statement said the ruling offered the South another opportunity like the one it spurned following the court's 1954 decision against school segregation.

NEW OPORTUNITY

"They set before us a renewed opportunity for the kind of magnanimity— an intelligence—which he turned our backs on in 1954," the Council said. It continued:

"The South nine years ago was called on by the national will for greatness. Instead, if responded with a self-blighting display of malice and futility. The recent events in Birmingham are only the latest episode of this impocerishing of the regional spirit.

"The court's decision of May 20 came, however, at a time of promising events as well, in several Southern cities—Raleigh, Durham, Greensboro, Knoxville, and Nashville among others—there has arisen an unprecedented awareness among civic leaders that segregation must end, without delay, in all public and business services."

The statement came as legal guns were primed for the South's last great sovereignty stand.

Diminutive Gov. George C. Wallace, a fiery foe of federal sovereignty, vowed his stand would be at the door of the University of Alabama to prevent the enrollment of two Negroes.

SOVEREIGN CAPACITY

President Kennedy grimly warned that federal court orders would be executed, without the use of troops if possible.

Wallace, ordered to appear for a June 3 hearing in Birmingham, planned his next move in secrecy.

MONROE, LA.
WORLD
D. 27,587 S. 41,061

MAY 26 1963

South Is Given Second Historic Choice Since 54

ATLANTA (UPI)— The executive committee of the integrationist Southern Regional Council said Saturday that the Souht is confronted with its second historic choice in nine years.

The committee, in a statement, said the sit-in demonstration rulings by the U. S. Supreme Court set before the South "a renewed opportunity for the kind of magnanimity and intelligence which we turned our backs on in 1954."

The committee charged that the South responded to the 1954 school desegregation decision "with a self-blighting display of malice and futility" and said the recent racial disturbances in Birmingham, Ala., "are only the latest episode of this impoverishing of the regional spirit."

It said the Supreme Court's latest racial rulings came at a time when in several Southern cities—with Raleigh, Durham and Greensboro, N. C., and Knoxville and Nashville, Tenn., named specifically—"there has arisen an unprecedented awareness among civic leaders that segregation must end, without delay, in all public and business services."

The committee said that measures are now being adopted in the United States, and particularly in the South "which already are outgrown by Negro needs and impatience."

In regard to the attempt by Birmingham schools to suspend students who took part in demonstrations in that city, the committee said, "vindictive policies are always self-defeating; responsible Southerners must no longer tolerate them."

The group called on the South to take two steps:

COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
D. 208,913 S. 287,442

MAY 26 1963

Says South Confronted With Historic Choice

ATLANTA (UPI)—The executive committee of the integration Southern Regional Council said Saturday that the South is confronted with its second historic choice in nine years.

The committee, in a statement, said the sit-in demonstration rulings by the U.S. Supreme Court set before the South "a renewed opportunity for the kind of magnanimity and intelligence which we turned our backs on in 1954."

THE COMMITTEE charged that the South responded to the 1954 school desegregation decision "with a self-blighing display of malice and futility" and said the recent racial disturbances in Birmingham, Ala., "are only the latest episode of this impoverishing of the regional spirit."

It said the Supreme Court's latest racial rulings came at a time when in several Southern cities — with Raleigh, Durham and Greensboro, N.C., and Knoxville and Nashville, Tenn., named specifically — "there has arisen an unprecedented awareness among civic leaders that segregation must end, without delay, in all public and business services."

THE COMMITTEE said that measures are now being adopted in the United States, and particularly in the South "which already are outgrown by Negro needs and impatience."

In regard to the attempt by Birmingham schools to suspend students who took part in demonstrations in that city, the committee said, "vindictive policies are always self-defeating; responsible southerners must no longer tolerate them."

The group called on the South to take two steps:

- "The immediate dropping of charges against peaceful demonstrators in any cities where charges are pending;
- "The removal in all cities of segregated practices in governmental facilities and in stores, hotels, restaurants or other businesses serving the general public."

In conclusion of its statement, the committee urged students at the University of Alabama to act "with the dignity and good will shown in January by the students at Clemson" rather than allow the disorders that befell the University of Mississippi to recur when two Negro students enter the University of Alabama next month.

CHARLESTON, S.C.
NEWS AND COURIER
D. 60,053 S. 73,976

MAY 26 1963

Council Says South Faced With 2nd Historic Choice

ATLANTA (UPI) — The executive committee of the integrationist Southern Regional Council said yesterday that the South is confronted with its second historic choice in nine years.

The committee, in a statement, said the sit-in demonstration rulings by the U. S. Supreme Court set before the South "a renewed opportunity for the kind of magnanimity and intelligence which we turned our backs on in 1954."

The committee charged that the South responded to the 1954 school desegregation decision "with a self-blighting display of malice and futility" and said the recent racial disturbances in Birmingham 'are only the latest episode of this improverishing of the regional spirit."

It said the Supreme Court's latest racial rulings came at a time when in several southern cities — with Raleigh, Durham and Greensboro, N.C., and Knoxville and Nashville, Tenn., named specifically — "there has arisen an unprecedented awareness among civic leaders that segregation must end, without delay, in all public and business services."

The committee said that measures are now being adopted in the United States, and particularly in the South "which already are outgrown by Negro needs and impatience."

In regard to the attempt by Birmingham schools to suspend students who took part in demonstrations in that city, the committee said, "vindictive policies are always self-defeating; responsible southerners must not longer tolerate them."

The group called on the South to take two steps:

—"The immediate dropping of charges against peaceful demonstrators in any cities where charges are pending;

—"The removal in all cities of segregated practices in governmental facilities and in stores, hotels, restaurants or other businesses serving the general public."

In conclusion of its statement, the committee urged students at the University of Alabama to act "with the dignity and good will shown in January by the students at Clemson" rather than allow the disorders that befell the University of Mississippi to recur when two Negro students enter the University of Alabama next month.

TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD
D. 96,467 S. 153,360

MAY 26 1963

Integration Group Sees Another Historic Choice

ATLANTA (UPI)—The executive committee of the integrationist Southern Regional Council said Saturday the South is confronted with its second historic choice in nine years. In a statement, the committee said the sit-in demonstration rulings by the U.S. Supreme Court set before the South "a renewed opportunity for the kind of magnanimity and intelligence which we turned our backs on in 1954."

The committee charged the South responded to the 1954 school desegregation decision "with a self-blighting display of malice and futility" and said the recent racial disturbances in Birmingham, Ala., "are only the latest episode of this impoverishing of the regional spirit."

It said the Supreme Court's latest racial rulings came at a time when in several southern cities—with Raleigh, Durham and Greensboro, N.C., and Knoxville and Nashville, Tenn., named specifically—"there has arisen an unprecedented awareness among civic leaders that segregation must end, without delay, in all public and business services."

The committee said measures are now being adopted in the United States, and particularly in the South "which already are outgrown by Negro needs and impatience."

In regard to the attempt by Birmingham schools to suspend students who took part in demonstrations in that city, the committee said, "vindictive policies are always self-defeating; responsible Southerners must not longer tolerate them."

The group called on the South to take two steps:

1—"The immediate dropping of charges against peaceful demonstrators in any cities where charges are pending;

2.—"The removal in all cities of segregated practices in governmental facilities and in stores, hotels, restaurants or other businesses serving the general public."

In conclusion of its statement, the committee urged students at the University of Alabama to act "with the dignity and good will shown in January by the students at the University of Alabama to act "with the dignity and good will shown in January by the students at Clemson" rather than allow the discorders that befell the University of Mississippi to recur when two Negro students enter the University of Alabama next month.

The New York Times
D. 680,265 S. 1,306,418

MAY 26 1963

SOUTH EXHORTED TO INTEGRATE NOW

Regional Council Says Sit-in Ruling Offers Key Choice

By CLAUDE SITTON
Special to The New York Times

ATLANTA, May 25—The Southern Regional Council asserted today that immediate elimination of segregation in all public facilities is a "practical necessity" for the South and the nation.

Token steps, it said in one of the few statements yet issued by its executive council, "already are outgrown by Negro needs and impatience."

The 15 white and Negro Southern leaders, whose stated objective is equal opportunity for all persons in the region, said the Supreme Court's sit-in decision last Monday presented a historic choice.

Malice Assailed

The court held that cities that make segregation a policy by ordinance or official statement could not prosecute Negroes for seeking service in privately owned stores.

The council statement said the ruling offered the South another opportunity like the one it spurned following the court's 1954 decision against school segregation.

"They set before us a renewed opportunity for the kind of magnanimity—an intelligence—which we turned our backs on in 1954," the council said. It continued:

"The South nine years ago was called on by the national will for greatness. Instead, it responded with a self-blighting display of malice and futility. The recent events in Birmingham are only the latest episode of this impoverishing of the regional spirit.

"The court's decision of May 20 came, however, at a time of promising events as well. In several Southern cities——Raleigh, Durham, Greensboro, Knoxville, and Nashville among others—there has arisen an unprecedented awareness among civic leaders that segregation must end, without delay, in all public and business services."

The statement observed that equality was an American ideal.

"It has become also a practical necessity," the council said, "but it is first of all an issue of human decency." The statement went on:

"Had we years ago vigorously defended voting rights in the courts, had we made beginnings in the desegregation of public accommodations and services, had we established rules to protect fair and equal employment rights, had we done these and others like things then—which we are beginning to do now—they might have been in time. They are not any longer."

The council called for the following steps:

¶ Immediate dropping of charges against peaceful demonstrators in cities where charges are pending.

¶ Removal in all cities of segregated practices in governmental facilities and in stores, hotels, restaurants and other businesses serving the public.

Taking note of the scheduled desegregation of the University of Alabama on June 10 and President Kennedy's "straightforward" remarks on the issue, the statement declared:

Cautions on Disorders

"The disorders of last fall at the University of Mississippi must not be allowed to recur."

The council, founded in 1944, is a nonpartisan organization dedicated to helping Southern communities make a peaceful transition to racial equality.

The persons issuing today's statement included James McBride Dabbs of Mayesville, S. C., president of the council; John H. Wheeler of Durham, N. C., executive committee chairman, and these others:

Albert W. Dent of New Orleans; Marion A. Wright of Linville Falls, N. C.; Josephine Wilkins, Atkens, Ga.; Rufus E. Clement, Atlanta; Paul R. Christopher, Knoxville, Tenn.; John A. Griffin, Tallahassee, Fla.; Mrs. Grace T. Hamilton, Atlanta, and John P. Nelson Jr., New Orleans.

Also Raymond Wheeler, Charlotte, N. C.; H. Franklin Williams, Coral Gables, Fla.; Stephen J. Wright, Nashville, Tenn.; Thomas W. Young, Norfolk, Va., and Joseph F. Haas, Atlanta.

NEWARK, N.J.
NEWS
D. 272,466 S. 390,780

MAY 26 1963

South Has Choice

Group Urges Peaceful Integration

ATLANTA (UPI)—The executive committee of the integrationist Southern Regional Council said yesterday that the South is confronted with its second historic choice in nine years.

The committee said the sit-in demonstration rulings by the U.S. Supreme Court set before the South "a renewed opportunity for the kind of magnanimity and intelligence which we turned our backs on in 1954."

The committee charged that the South responded to the 1954 school desegregation decision "with a self-blighting display of malice and futility" and said the recent racial disturbances in Birmingham, Ala., "are only the latest episode of this impoverishing of the regional spirit."

It said the Supreme Court's latest racial rulings came at a time when in several Southern cities—with Raleigh, Durham and Greensboro, N.C., and Knoxville and Nashville, Tenn., named specifically—"there has arisen an unprecedented awareness among civic leaders that segregation must end, without delay, in all public and business services."

Negro Needs

The committee said that measures are now being adopted in the United States, and particularly in the South "which already are outgrown by Negro needs and impatience."

In regard to the attempt by Birmingham schools to suspend students who took part in demonstrations in that city, the committee said, "vindictive policies are always self-defeating; responsible Southerners must no longer tolerate them."

The group called on the South to take two steps:

"The immediate dropping of charges against peaceful demonstrators in any cities where charges are pending;

"The removal in all cities of segregated practices in governmental facilities and in stores, hotels, restaurants or other businesses serving the general public."

In conclusion of its statement, the committee urged students at the University of Alabama to act "with the dignity and good will shown in January by the students at Clemson" rather than allow the disorders that befell the University of Mississippi to recur when two Negro students enter the University of Alabama next month.

ATLANTA, GA.
WORLD
D. 29,800
PAGE ONE CERTIFIED
MAY 26 1963

Council Hails "Sit-In" Decision Of High Court

The Executive Committee of the Southern Regional Council Saturday made the following statement:

"By its decisions of May 20, 1963 in the 'sit-in' cases, the Supreme Court moved our law a long step nearer the American ideal of equal rights.

"These decisions confront the South again with an historic choice. They set before us a renewed opportunity for the kind of magnanimity — and intelligence — which we turned our backs on in 1954. The South nine years ago was called on by the national will for greatness; instead, it responded with a self - blighting display of malice and futility. The recent events in Birmingham are only the latest episode of this impoverishing of the regional spirit.

"The Court's decision of May 20 came, however, at a time of promising events as well. In several southern cities — Raleigh, Durham, Greensboro, Knoxville, and Nashville among others — there has arisen an unprecedented awareness among civic leaders that segregation must end, without delay, in all public and business services.

"Equality is an American ideal. It has become also a practical necessity. But it is first of all an issue of human decency.

NEEDS OUTGROWN

"In the United States, and particularly in the South, we are adopting measures which already are outgrown by Negro needs and impatience. Had we years ago vigorously defended voting rights in the courts, had we made beginnings in the desegregation of public accommodations and fair services, had we established rules to protect fair and equal employment rights, had we done these and other like things then — which we are beginning to do now — they might have been in time. They are not any longer.

"The legitimate unrest of Negro citizens requires a statesmanship adequate for the times, from national, state, and local governments, and from private businesses.

"We need to turn from the mere defense of voting rights against criminal violation to the positive assurance of voting rights; from token school desegregation to a loving concern for the education of all our children. We need in all of American life to accept and benefit from each other.

"Negro Southerners, supported by white people of good will, have been the South's moral leaders these last few years. The whole region and the nation owe them a debt for what they have accomplished, and for their continued faith in American institutions.

We need in the spirit of Judge Tuttle's ruling of May 22 regarding the expulsion of Birmingham school children, to direct our thoughts and actions at the main issue: at how the welfare of the South's people can be enlarged. Vindictive policies are always self - defeating; responsible Southerners must not longer tolerate them.

(Continued on Page 4, Col. 1)

Council Hails "Sit-In"

(Continued from Page One)

LAW OF LAND DEFINED

"The Supreme Court defines the law of the land and the duty of citizens under it. Southern states and cities ought not again, or still, evade and avoid legal responsibilities which clearly are theirs. The South can recover its title - deeds in American democracy by now taking specific actions that would show its loyalty to the spirit of the law and to its own Negro citizens. These actions should include —the immediate dropping of charges against peaceful demonstrators in any cities where charges are pending;

—the removal in all cities of segregated practices in governmental facilities and in stores, hotels, restaurants or other businesses serving the general public.

"Finally, we take note of the imminent deegregation of the University of Alabama, and of President Kennedy's straight forward remarks of May 22. The disorders of last fall at the University of Mississippi must not be allowed to recur. We are confident that Alabama students will act with the dignity and good will shown in January by the students of Clemson. We trust that President Kennedy and his Administration will be prepared to act forthrightly to insure that the Negro enrollees will not be delayed or harassed as they enter on their studies, and that the integrity of federal courts will not again be defamed."

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS
EXPRESS AND NEWS
SAT. 110,220 SUN. 106,893

MAY 26 1963

Integration Called Must

(C) NEW YORK TIMES NEWS SERVICE

ATLANTA — The Southern Regional Council asserted Saturday that immediate elimination of segregation in all public facilities is a "practical necessity" for the South and the nation.

Token steps, it said in one of the few statements yet issued by its executive council, "already are outgrown by Negro needs and impatience."

The 15 white and Negro Southern leaders, who stated objectives is equal opportunity for all persons in the region, said the Supreme Court's sit-in decision last Monday presented a historic choice.

The court held that cities that make segregation a policy by ordinance or official statement could not prosecute Negroes for seeking service in privately owned stores.

GAINESVILLE, GA.
TIMES
D. 9,153 S. 8,601

MAY 26 1963

IN OUR OPINION

Let Each Be Secure In Securing Rights

A new pace — more a current of feeling than a strategy — is evident in the recent epidemic of demonstrations by Negroes for complete use of all public facilities, government and private.

North Carolina, whose reputation in handling a quiet and gradual evolution in race relations leads the rest of the South, has seen mass demonstrations in Greensboro, Durham and Raleigh, cities previously proud to be out of the limelight.

Even in Birmingham, where absolutely no progress has been made in an otherwise changing South, saw demonstrations of terrific intensity aimed not at merely superficial, easy changes in custom but at the full granting of equal privileges.

Now the Supreme Court has as much as said that whatever is public, is public, and can be denied no one. Technically, the Supreme Court decision is open to equivocation. Either local or state segregation laws or definitive statements favoring segregation by public officials have to exist as evidence of constitutional violations.

But the simple truth is that the Court has held fast to the theory that private individuals may have complete freedom of association or lack of association, but that use of a facility by the general public precludes the right of the facility's owner to discriminate against any user if state law or even official pronouncements openly coerce to the contrary.

The Southern Regional Council, taking cognizance both of the trend of affairs and the Court's obvious attitudes, urges that the South set malice and vindictiveness aside and work on the main issue of enlarging the welfare of its people.

We agree with this view, not because the Courts are forcing us to so agree but because in the improved welfare of all of our people lies the final and secure answer to our humans relations problems.

People secure in their own lives and confident of their own abilities don't worry about with whom they will associate or with whom they share the sidewalk or the hot dog counter. They give the other fellow his due, knowing they are in full possession and control of their own rights in so doing.

AUGUSTA, GA.
CHRONICLE-HERALD
SUN. - CIRC.N.AVAIL.

MAY 26 1963

High court ruling gives South new race decision

ATLANTA (UPI)— The executive committee of the integrationist Southern Regional Council said today that the South is confronted with its second historic choice in nine years.

The committee, in a statement, said the sit-in demonstration rulings by the U. S. Supreme Court set before the South "a renewed opportunity for the kind of magnanimity and intelligence which we turned our backs on in 1954."

The committee charged that the South responded to the 1954 school desegregation decision "with a self-blighting display of malice and futility" and said the recent racial disturbances in Birmingham, Ala., "are only the latest episode of this impoverishing of the regional spirit."

It said the Supreme Court's latest racial rulings came at a time when in several Southern cities—with Raleigh, Durham and Greensboro, N. C., and Knoxville and Nashville, Tenn., named specifically—"there has arisen an unprecedented awareness among civic leaders that segregation must end, without delay, in all public and business services."

The committee said that measures are now being adopted in the United States, and particularly in the South "which already are outgrown by Negro needs and impatience."

In regard to the attempt by Birmingham schools to suspend students who took part in demonstrations in that city, the committee said, "vindictive policies are always self-defeating; responsible Southerners must no longer tolerate them."

The group called on the South to take two steps:

"The immediate dropping of charges against peaceful demonstrators in any cities where charges are pending;

PULASKI, VA.
SOUTHWEST TIMES
D. 4,757 S. 4,836

MAY 26 1963

Race Committee Says South Faces Historic Choice

ATLANTA (UPI) — The executive committee of the integrationist Southern Regional Council said today that the South is confronted with its second historic choice in nine years.

The committee, in a statement, said the sit-in demonstration rulings by the U. S. Supreme Court set before the South "a renewed opportunity for the kind of magnanimity and intelligence which we turned our backs on in 1954."

The committee charged that the South responded to the 1954 school desegregation decision "with a self-blighting display of malice and futility" and said the recent racial disturbances in Birmingham, Ala., "are only the latest episode of this impoverishing of the regional spirit."

It said the Supreme Court's latest racial rulings came at a time when in several Southern cities—with Raleigh, Durham and Greensboro, N. C., and Knoxville and Nashville, Tenn., named specifically—"there has arisen an unprecedented awareness among civic leaders that segregation must end, without delay, in all public and business services."

The committee said that measures are now being adopted in the United States, and particularly in the South "which already are outgrown by Negro needs and impatience."

In regard to the attempt by Birmingham schools to suspend students who took part in demonstrations in that city, the committee said, "vindictive policies are always self-defeating; responsible Southerners must no longer tolerate them."

The group called on the South to take two steps:

"The immediate dropping of charges against peaceful demonstrators in any cities where charges are pending;

"The removal in all cities of segregated practices in governmental facilities and in stores, hotels, restaurants or other businesses serving the general public."

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
D. 509,256 S. 557,573

MAY 26 1963

Klansman Guilty in Shootings

ANNISTON, Ala. — (UPI) — A former Ku Klux Klansman who once participated in an attack on singer Nat (King) Cole was convicted Saturday of firing shotgun blasts into a church and the home of two Negroes.

Kenneth Adams, 42, was sentenced to 180 days in jail and fined $100 on each of the shooting counts.

* * *

ADAMS went free on a $900 appeals bond but moments later he and a companion, William H. Boyd, Jr., 23, were taken into custody by county authorities and charged with intimidating two Negro women with a pistol.

The city had planned to try the two on the intimidation charges but the plan was dropped when it was learned the offenses took place 400 feet outside the jurisdiction of city police.

Boyd and Adams were charged specifically with carrying a concealed weapon and assault with a gun. Both were freed under $1,000 bond pending trial, probably next week.

Adams operates several service stations and Boyd is an employe. Adams ran for sheriff in the Democratic primary last year and was soundly defeated although he polled some 1,800 votes.

He was arrested in 1956 for jumping onto a Birmingham stage to participate in the attack on Nat (King) Cole. Adams was charged with assault but pleaded guilty to a lesser charge and paid a $50 fine.

* * *

TWO YEARS ago he was charged with participating in the burning of a bus bringing the first group of freedom riders to Alabama. He was acquitted.

Previously he served a year in Kilby Prison in Montgomery for illegally hauling whiskey.

The shootings for which Adams was tried took place May 12, the day Negroes rioted in Birmingham over the bombing of a motel and the home of an integration leader.

President Kennedy ordered 3,000 troops into the state that night and the soldiers remain.

* * *

ELSEWHERE in the South, the racial front was relatively quiet.

Birmingham, which earlier this week got a new city government that is more moderate on the desegregation issue, appeared less tense than it has in months.

In Norfolk and Portsmouth, Va., movie theaters quietly lowered racial barriers and in Jackson, Miss., Negroes put off plans to stage massive demonstrations. The Jackson protests apparently were being held off pending talks between Negro leaders and white clergymen.

In Atlanta the executive committee of the integrationist Southern Regional Council said Saturday sit-in demonstration rulings by the United States Supreme Court set before the South "a renewed opportunity for the kind of magnanimity and intelligence which we turned our backs on in 1954."

The committee charged that the South responded to the 1954 school desegregation decision "with a self-blighting display of malice and futility" and said the recent racial disturbances in Birmingham, "are only the latest episode of this impoverishing of the regional spirit."

GREENVILLE, MISS.
DELTA DEMOCRAT-TIMES
D. 13,547 S. 13,500
PAGE ONE CRITICS
MAY 26 1963

Regional Council Urges New Race Approach

ATLANTA (UPI) — The executive committee of the integrationist Southern Regional Council said yesterday that the South is confronted with its second historic choice in nine years.

The committee, in a statement, said the sit-in demonstration rulings by the U. S. Supreme Court set before the South "a renewed opportunity for the kind of magnanimity and intelligence which we turned our backs on in 1954."

* * *

THE committee charged that the South responded to the 1954 school desegregation decision "with a self-blighting display of malice and futility" and said the recent racial disturbances in Birmingham, Ala., "are only the latest episode of this impoverishing of the regional spirit."

It said the Supreme Court's latest racial rulings came at a time when in several Southern cities—with Raleigh, Durham and Greensboro, N. C., and Knoxville and Nashville, Tenn., named specifically—"there has arisen an unprecedented awareness among civic leaders that segregation must end, without delay, in all public and business services."

* * *

THE committee said that measures are now being adopted in the United States, and particularly in the South "which already are outgrown by Negro needs and impatience."

In regard to the attempt by Birmingham schools to suspend students who took part in demonstrations in that city, the committee said, "vindictive policies are always self-defeating; responsible Southerners must no longer tolerate them."

* * *

THE group called on the South to take two steps:

"The immediate dropping of charges against peaceful demonstrators in any cities where charges are pending;

"The removal in all cities of segregated practices in governmental facilities and in stores, hotels, restaurants or other businesses serving the general public."

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GAZETTE
D. 92,176 S. 105,024

MAY 26 1963

Council Asserts That Desegregation Has Become a 'Practical Necessity'

© New York Times News Service

Atlanta, May 25.—The Southern Regional Council asserted today that immediate elimination of segregation in all public facilities is a "practical necessity" for the South and the nation.

Token steps, it said in one of the rare statements issued by its Executive Council, "already are outgrown by Negro needs and impatience."

The 15 white and Negro Southern leaders, whose stated objective is equal opportunity for all persons in the region, said the Supreme Court's sit-in decision last Monday presented a historic choice.

The Court held that cities that make segregation a policy by ordinance or official statement could not prosecute Negroes for seeking service in privately owned stores.

The Council statement said the ruling offered the South another opportunity like the one it spurned after the Court's 1954 decision against school segregation.

Renewed Opportunity

"They set before us a renewed opportunity for the kind of magnanimity—and intelligence—which we turned our backs on in 1954," the Council said.

"The South nine years ago was called on by the national will for greatness," it continued. Instead, it responded with a self-blighting display of malice and futility The recent events in Birmingham are only the latest episode of this impoverishing of the regional spirit.

"The Court's decision of May 20 came, however, at a time of promising events as well, in several southern cities—Raleigh, Durham, Greensboro, Knoxville, and Nashville among others — there has arisen an unprecedented awareness among civic leaders that segregation must end, without delay, in all public and business services."

An American Ideal

The statement observed that equality was an American ideal.

"It has become also a practical necessity," the Council said, "but it is first of all an issue of human decency.

"Had we years ago vigorously defended voting rights in the courts, had we made beginnings in the desegregation of public accommodations and services, had we established rules to protect fair and equal employment rights, had we done these and other like things then—which we are beginning to do now—they might have been in time. They are not any longer."

The Council said Negro unrest required statesmanship from national, state and local governments and from private businesses:

"We need to turn from the mere defense of voting rights against criminal violations to the positive assurance of voting rights, from token school desegregation to a loving concern for the education of all our children."

The statement said the region and nation were in the debt of Negro southerners, who, supported by some whites, "have been the South's moral leaders these last few years." It praised "their continued faith in American institutions."

The Council called for these steps:

1. Immediate dropping of charges against peaceful demonstrators in cities where charges are pending.

2. Removal in all cities of segregated practices in governmental facilities and in stores, hotels, restaurants and other businesses serving the public.

JACKSON, MISS.
CLARION-LEDGER NEWS
SUN. 89,888

MAY 26 1963

Regional Committee Lashes Out At South

ATLANTA (UPI) — The executive committee of the integrationist Southern Regional Council said today that the South is confronted with its second historic choice in nine years.

The committee, in a statement, said the sit-in demonstration rulings by the U.S. Supreme Court set before the South "A renewed opportunity for the kind of magnamimity and intelligence which we turned our backs on in 1954."

The committee charged that the South responded to the 1954 school desegregation decision "with a self - blighting display of malice and futility" and said the recent racial disturbances in Birmingham, Ala., "are only the latest episode of this empoverishing of the regional spirit."

It said the Supreme Court's latest racial rulings came at a time when in several southern cities — with Raleigh, Durham and Greensboro, N.C., and Knoxville and Nashville, Tenn., named specifically — "there has arisen an unprecedented awareness among civic leaders that segregation must end, without delay, in all public and business services."

The committee said that measures are now being adopted in the United States, and particularly in the South "which already are outgrown by Negro needs and impatience."

In regard to the attempt by Birmingham schools to suspend students who took part in demonstrations in that city, the committee said, "vindictive policies are always self - defeating; responsible southerners must not longer tolerate them."

The group called on the south to take two steps:

—"The immediate dropping of charges against peaceful demosstrators in any cities where charges against peaceful demonstrators in any cities where charges are pending;

—"The removal in all cities of segregated practices in governmental facilities and in stores, hotels, restaurants or other businesses serving the general public."

In conclusion of its statement, the committee urged students at the University of Alabama to act "with the dignity and good will shown in January by the students at Clemson" rather than allow the disorders that befell the University of Mississippi to recur when two negro students enter the University of Alabama next month.

ATLANTA, GA.
JOURNAL-CONSTITUTION
SUN. 502,157

MAY 26 1963

SRC Urges South to Seek Racial Accord

The time has come when Southern states can no longer evade and avoid their legal responsibilities in the civil rights struggle, the Southern Regional Council said Saturday.

The council, an interracial organization based in Atlanta which works for equal opportunity for all races, was commenting on last Monday's Supreme Court decision in the sit-in cases. The council statement was signed by members of its Executive Committee.

The council noted that the May 20 court decisions "moved our law a long step nearer the American ideal of equal rights.

"These deicisions confront the South again with an historic choice. They set before us a renewed opportunity for the kind of magnanimity — and intelligence — which we turned our backs on in 1954.

"The South nine years ago was called on by the national will for greatness; instead, it responded with a self-blighting display of malace and futility. The recent events in Birmingham are only the latest episode of this impoverishing of the regional spirit."

CIVIC leaders have demonstrated, in other cities, however, an "unprecedented awareness" that segregation must end, without delay, in all public and business services," the council said.

But the nation and especially the South, it said, are still adopting "measures which already are outgrown by Negro needs and impatience. . . .

"The legitimate unrest of Negro citizens requires a statesmanship adequate for the time from national, state, and local governments, and from private businesses.

"We need to turn from the mere defense of voting rights against criminal violation to the positive assurance of voting rights; from token school desegregation to a loving concern for the education of all our children. . . .

"Negro Southerners, supported by white people of good will, have been the South's moral leaders these last few years. The whole region and the nation owe them a debt for what they have accomplished, and for their continued faith in American institutions. . . .

"Southern states and cities ought not again, or still, to evade and avoid legal responsibilities which clearly are theirs. The South can recover its title-deeds in American democracy by now taking specific actions that would show its loyalty to the spirit of the law and to its own Negro citizens."

These actions, the council said, should include the immediate dropping of charges against peaceful demonstrators, and removal of segregated practices in governmental facilities and in businesses which serve the general public.

JACKSON, MISS.
CLARION LEDGER
D. 54,056

MAY 27 1963

Integrationists See 'Historic Choice'

ATLANTA (UPI)— The executive committee of the integrationist Southern Regional Council said today that the South is confronted with its second historic choice in nine years.

The committee, in a statement, said the sit-in demonstration rulings by the U. S. Supreme Court set before the South "a renewed opportunity for the kind of magnanimity and intelligence which we turned our backs on in 1954."

The committee charged that the South responded to the 1954 school desegregation decision "with a self-blighting display of malice and futility" and said the recent racial disturbances in Birmingham, Ala., "are only the latest episode of this impoverishing of the regional spirit."

It said the Supreme Court's latest racial rulings came at a time when in several Southern cities—with Raleigh, Durham and Greensboro, N. C., and Knoxville and Nashville, Tenn., named specifically—"there has arisen an unprecedented awareness among civic leaders that segregation must end, without delay, in all public and business services."

The committee said that measures are now being adopted in the United States, and particularly in the South "which already are outgrown by Negro needs and impatience."

In regard to the attempt by Birmingham schools to suspend students who took part in demonstrations in that city, the committee said, "vindictive policies are always self-defeating; responsible Southerners must no longer tolerate them."

The group called on the South to take two steps:

"The immediate dropping of charges against peaceful demonstrators in any cities where charges are pending;

"The removal in all cities of segregated practices in governmental facilities and in stores, hotels, restaurants or other businesses serving the general public."

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C.
TWIN CITY SENTINEL
D. 42,003

MAY 27 1963

Council Cites South's 'Chance'

ATLANTA (UPI) — The U. S. Supreme Court's recent sit - in demonstration rulings present the South with its second historic choice in nine years, according to the executive committee of the Southern Regional Council.

The council, in a statement issued over the weekend, said the rulings set before the South "a renewed opportunity for the kind of magnanimity and intelligence which we turned our backs on in 1954."

The integrationist group charged that the South responded to the 1954 school desegregation decision "with a self-blighting display of malice and futility." The group said the recent racial troubles in Birmingham, Ala. were only "the latest episode of this improverishing of the regional spirit."

The council called on the South to immediately drop charges against peaceful demonstrators in any cities where such charges are pending, and to end in all cities segregated practices in government facilities and in stores hotels, restaurants and other businesses serving the general publi

FLORENCE, ALA.
TIMES
D. 11,691 S. 11,191

MAY 27 1963

Letter To The Editor

EQUALITY HAS BECOME A PRACTICAL NECESSITY

Editor: The Executive Committee of the Southern Regional Council made today (May 26) the following statement:

"By its decisions of May 20, 1963 in the 'sit-in' cases, the Supreme Court moved our law a long step nearer the American ideal of equal rights.

"These decisions confront the South again with an historic choice. They set before us a renewed opportunity for the kind of magnanimity — and intelligence — which we turned our backs on in 1954. The South nine years ago was called on by the national will for greatness; instead, it responded with a self-blighting display of malice and futility. The recent events in Birmingham are only the latest episode of this impoverishing of the regional spirit.

"The Court's decision of May 20 came, however, at a time of promising events as well. In several southern cities — Raleigh, Durham, Greensboro, Knoxville, and Nashville among others—there has arisen an unprecedented awareness among civic leaders that segregation must end, without delay, in all public and business services.

"Equality is an American ideal. It has become also a practical necessity. But it is first of all an issue of human decency.

"In the United States, and particularly in the South, we are adopting measures which already are outgrown by Negro needs and impatience. Had we years ago vigorously defended voting rights in the courts, had we made beginnings in the desegregation of public accommodations and services, had we established rules to protect fair and equal employment rights, had we done these and other like things then — which we are beginning to do now — they might have been in time. They are not any longer.

"The legitimate unrest of Negro citizens requires a statesmanship adequate for the times, from national, state, and local governments, and from private businesses.

"We need to turn from the mere defense of voting rights against criminal violation to the positive assurance of voting rights; from token school desegregation to a loving concern for the education of all our children. We need in all of American life to accept and benefit from each other.

"Negro Southerners, supported by white people of good will, have been the South's moral leaders these last few years. The whole region and the nation owe them a debt for what they have accomplished, and for their continued faith in American institutions. We need, in the spirit of Judge Tuttle's ruling of May 22 regarding the expulsion of Birmingham school children, to direct our thoughts and actions at the main issue: at how the welfare of the South's people can be enlarged. Vindictive policies are always self-defeating; responsible Southerners must no longer tolerate them.

"The Supreme Court defines the law of the land and the duty of citizens under it. Southern states and cities ought not again, or still, evade and avoid legal responsibilities which clearly are theirs. The South can recover its title-deeds in American democracy by now taking specific actions that would show its loyalty to the spirit of the law and to its own Negro citizens. These actions should include —The immediate dropping of charges against peaceful demonstrators in any cities where charges are pending;

—The removal in all cities of segregated practices in governmental facilities and in stores, hotels, restaurants or other businesses serving the general public.

"Finally, we take note of the imminent desegregation of the University of Alabama, and of President Kennedy's straightforward remarks of May 22. The disorders of last fall at the University of Mississippi must not be allowed to recur. We are confident that Alabama students will act with the dignity and good will shown in January by the students of Clemson. We trust that President Kennedy and his Administration will be prepared to act forthrightly to insure that the Negro enrollees will not be delayed or harassed as they enter on their studies, and that the integrity of federal courts will not again be defamed."

The Southern Regional Council (5 Forsyth St., N. W., Atlanta, Ga.) is a Council to attain the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all people in the South. Members of the Executive Committee are:

(Signed) James McBride Dabbs, Mayesville, S. C., President of the Southern Regional Council;
John H. Wheeler, Durham, N.C., Chairman of the Executive Committee;
Albert W. Dent, New Orleans, La.
Marion A. Wright, Linville Falls, N.C.
Josephine Wilkins, Athens, Ga.
Rufus E. Clement, Atlanta, Ga.
Paul R. Christopher, Knoxville, Tenn.
John A. Griffin, Tallahassee, Fla.
Grace T. Hamilton, Atlanta, Ga.
John P. Nelson, Jr., New Orleans, La.
Raymond Wheeler, Charlotte, N. C.
H. Franklin Williams, Coral Gables, Fla.
Stephen J. Wright, Nashville, Tenn.
Thomas W. Young, Norfolk, Va.
Joseph F. Haas, Atlanta, Ga.

TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD
D. 96,467 S. 153,360

MAY 27 1963

WIDE RANGE FOR GRANTS

NEW YORK (UPI)—The Rockefeller Foundation Sunday announced first-quarter grants totaling $2,917,056 for such far-ranging subjects as promoting racial understanding in the South and collecting snails in Africa.

Foundation President J. George Harrar said that during the same period a total of 19 fellowships awarded to individuals from 14 countries became active, as well as 37 scholarships to individuals from 14 countries became active, as well as 37 scholarships to individuals from 13 nations.

Grants in the medical and natural sciences amounted to $1,009,215; agricultural sciences $785,155; humanities and social sciences $1,001,276, and general categories $121,410.

A grant of $50,000 was awarded "for the general support" of the interracial Southern Regional Council Inc., of Atlanta, Ga., which studies regional race relations problems and provides consultation to citizens' groups.

Dr. John B. Burch, curator of mollusks and assistant professor of zoology at the University of Michigan was awarded $3,000 to collect snails and observe schistosomiasis research in Africa.

Schistosomiasis is a disease transmitted to man by snails.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN EAGLE
DAILY & SUN.-CIRC.N.AVAIL.

MAY 27 1963

NEW YORK—The Rockefeller Foundation has announced first-quarter grants totaling $2,917,056 for such far-ranging subjects as promoting racial understanding in the South and collecting snails in Africa.

Foundation President J. George Harrar said that during the same period a total of 19 fellowships awarded to individuals from 14 countries became active, as well as 37 scholarships to individuals from 13 nations.

Grants in the medical and natural sciences amounted to $1,009,215; agricultural sciences $785,155; humanities and social sciences $1,001,276 and general categories $121,410.

A grant of $50,000 was awarded "for the general support" of the Interracial Southern Regional Council Inc., of Atlanta, which studies regional race relations problems and provides consultation to citizens' groups.

Dr. John B. Burch, curator of Mollusks and Assistant Professor of Zoology at the University of Michigan was awarded $3,000 to collect snails and observe schistosomiasis research in Africa.

Schistosomiasis is a disease transmitted to man by snails.

SHEFFIELD, ALA.
TRI-CITIES DAILY
D. 10,583 S. 9,726

MAY 27 1963

Letter To The Editor

EQUALITY HAS BECOME A PRACTICAL NECESSITY

Editor: The Executive Committee of the Southern Regional Council made today (May 26) the following statement:

"By its decisions of May 20, 1963 in the 'sit-in' cases, the Supreme Court moved our law a long step nearer the American ideal of equal rights.

"These decisions confront the South again with an historic choice. They set before us a renewed opportunity for the kind of magnanimity — and intelligence — which we turned our backs on in 1954. The South nine years ago was called on by the national will for greatness; instead, it responded with a self-blighting display of malice and futility. The recent events in Birmingham are only the latest episode of this impoverishing of the regional spirit.

"The Court's decision of May 20 came, however, at a time of promising events as well. In several southern cities — Raleigh, Durham, Greensboro, Knoxville, and Nashville among others—there has arisen an unprecedented awareness among civic leaders that segregation must end, without delay, in all public and business services.

"Equality is an American ideal. It has become also a practical necessity. But it is first of all an issue of human decency.

"In the United States, and particularly in the South, we are adopting measures which already are outgrown by Negro needs and impatience. Had we years ago vigorously defended voting rights in the courts, had we made beginnings in the desegregation of public accommodations and services, had we established rules to protect fair and equal employment rights, had we done these and other like things then — which we are beginning to do now — they might have been in time. They are not any longer.

"The legitimate unrest of Negro citizens requires a statesmanship adequate for the times, from national, state, and local governments, and from private businesses.

"We need to turn from the mere defense of voting rights against criminal violation to the positive assurance of voting rights; from token school desegregation to a loving concern for the education of all our children. We need in all of American life to accept and benefit from each other.

"Negro Southerners, supported by white people of good will, have been the South's moral leaders these last few years. The whole region and the nation owe them a debt for what they have accomplished, and for their continued faith in American institutions. We need, in the spirit of Judge Tuttle's ruling of May 22 regarding the expulsion of Birmingham school children, to direct our thoughts and actions at the main issue: at how the welfare of the South's people can be enlarged. Vindictive policies are always self-defeating; responsible Southerners must no longer tolerate them.

"The Supreme Court defines the law of the land and the duty of citizens under it. Southern states and cities ought not again, or still, evade and avoid legal responsibilities which clearly are theirs. The South can recover its title-deeds in American democracy by now taking specific actions that would show its loyalty to the spirit of the law and to its own Negro citizens. These actions should include —The immediate dropping of charges against peaceful demonstrators in any cities where charges are pending;

—The removal in all cities of segregated practices in governmental facilities and in stores, hotels, restaurants or other businesses serving the general public.

"Finally, we take note of the imminent desegregation of the University of Alabama, and of President Kennedy's straightforward remarks of May 22. The disorders of last fall at the University of Mississippi must not be allowed to recur. We are confident that Alabama students will act with the dignity and good will shown in January by the students of Clemson. We trust that President Kennedy and his Administration will be prepared to act forthrightly to insure that the Negro enrollees will not be delayed or harassed as they enter on their studies, and that the integrity of federal courts will not again be defamed."

The Southern Regional Council (5 Forsyth St., N. W., Atlanta, Ga.) is a Council to attain the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all people in the South. Members of the Executive Committee are:

(Signed) James McBride Dabbs, Mayesville, S. C., President of the Southern Regional Council;
John H. Wheeler, Durham, N.C., Chairman of the Executive Committee;
Albert W. Dent, New Orleans, La.
Marion A. Wright, Linville Falls, N.C.
Josephine Wilkins, Athens, Ga.
Rufus E. Clement, Atlanta, Ga.
Paul R. Christopher, Knoxville, Tenn.
John A. Griffin, Tallahassee, Fla.
Grace T. Hamilton, Atlanta, Ga.
John P. Nelson, Jr., New Orleans, La.
Raymond Wheeler, Charlotte, N. C.
H. Franklin Williams, Coral Gables, Fla.
Stephen J. Wright, Nashville, Tenn.
Thomas W. Young, Norfolk, Va.
Joseph F. Haas, Atlanta, Ga.

SAVANNAH, GA.
PRESS
D. 24,262

MAY 27 1963

Second Choice Facing South, Council Says

ATLANTA (UPI) — The U. S. Supreme Court's recent sit - in demonstration rulings present the South with its second historic choice in nine years, according to the executive committee of the Southern Regional Council.

The council, in a statement issued over the weekend, said the rulings set before the South "a renewed opportunity for the kind of magnanimity and intelligence which we turned our backs on in 1954."

The integrationist group charged that the South responded to the 1954 school desegregation decision "with a self-blighting display of malice and futility." The group said the recent racial troubles in Birmingham, Ala. were only "the latest episode of this improverishing of the regional spirit."

The council called on the South to immediately drop charges against peaceful demonstrators in any cities where such charges are pending, and to end in all cities segregated practices in government facilities and in stores, hotels, restaurants and other businesses serving the general public.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE
D. 193,514 S. 302,677

MAY 27 1963

SOUTH HAS NEW CHANCE, CLAIM

Must Not Avoid Responsibilities, View

ATLANTA (AP) — The U.S. Supreme Court sit-in decisions have given the South another opportunity to make use of its legal responsibilities in the civil rights struggle, the Southern Regional Council said.

The high tribunal ruled Monday that a state or city may not interfere in any fashion with peaceful racial sit-in demonstrations in public places of business.

The interracial council said in a statement signed by its executive committee that:

"Southern states and cities ought not again, or still, to evade and avoid legal responsibilities which clearly are theirs.

"The South can recover its title-deeds in American Democracy by now taking specific actions that would show its loyalty to the spirit of the law and to its own Negro citizens."

These actions, the council said, should include the immediate dropping of charges against peaceful demonstrators, and removal of segregated practices in governmental facilities and in businesses which serve the general public.

The council said that the Supreme Court decisions "moved our law a long step nearer the American ideal of equal rights." It added:

"These decisions confront the South again with an historic choice. They set before us a renewed opportunity for the kind of magnanimity — and inteligence—which we turned our backs on in 1954."

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
OKLAHOMAN
D. 167,008 S. 256,270

MAY 27 1963

Grants Total $3 Million

NEW YORK (UPI) — The Rockefeller Foundation Sunday announced first - quarter grants totaling $2,917,056 for such far-ranging subjects as promoting racial understanding in the south and collecting snails in Africa.

Foundation President J. George Harrar said that during the same period a total of 19 fellowships awarded to individuals from 14 countries became active, as well as 37 scholarships to individuals from 14 countries became active, as well as 37 scholarships to individuals from 13 nations.

A grant of $50,000 was awarded "for the general support" of the interracial Southern Regional Council Inc., Atlanta, Ga., which studies regional race relations problems and provides consultation to citizens' groups.

Dr. John Burch, curator of mollusks and assistant professor of zoology at the University of Michigan was awarded $3,000 to collect snails and observe schistosomiasis research in Africa.

Schistosomiasis is a disease transmitted to man by snails.

WINTER HAVEN, FLA.
NEWS-CHIEF
D. 6,919 S. 7,305

MAY 28 1963

Council Praises High Court Edict

ATLANTA (UPI) — The U. S. Supreme Court's recent sit - in demonstration rulings present the South with its second historic choice in nine years, according to the executive committee of the Southern Regional Council.

The council, in a statement issued over the weekend, said the rulings set before the South "a renewed opportunity for the kind of magnanimity and intelligence which we turned our backs on in 1954."

The integrationist group charged that the South responded to the 1954 school desegregation decision "with a self-blighting display of malice and futility." The group said the recent racial troubles in Birmingham, Ala. were only "the latest episode of this improverishing of the regional spirit."

The council called on the South to immediately drop charges against peaceful demonstrators in any cities where such charges are pending, and to end in all cities segregated practices in government facilities and in stores, hotels, restaurants and other businesses serving the general public.

TRENTON, N.J.
TIMES
D. 68,260

MAY 28 1963

The Mood Of The South

By Peter Lisagor

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — The deep south is inhabited by an unsettled race of white people, perplexed, resentful, and more than a little fearful.

There is a dim recognition among them of a revolutionary fervor among their hitherto docile Negro neighbors, and it mixes them up.

In varying degrees, they blame "outside agitators," "internal Quislings," the Kennedy brothers, the Supreme Court, the northern press, for stirring up trouble. The white man has carried the Negro "on his back," as one troubled white citizen put it, and deserves gratitude, not protest.

"Stop forcing us," implores a Huntsville businessman, "you're creting defiance and malice. Give us time."

"Waiting is just another way of saying we'll keep you in your place, discriminate against you as long as you let us," says a Negro leader.

Also Mixed Up

Many Negroes are mixed up, too. As a Birmingham Negro said recently, "we're seeing hate in the eyes of the white man for the first time." But this is not likely to deter their movement for an end to segregation in public places.

The mood of the south is one of uncertainty, confusion, doubt and fear.

Equality, says the Southern Regional Council, a group of white and Negro leaders, is more than an American ideal. "It has also become a practical necessity, but it is first of all an issue of human decency."

A Birmingham cab driver, speaking of the scheduled entry of a Negro into the University of Alabama on June 10, says, "somebody better change their mind, or there's going to be real trouble." He doesn't mean Gov. George Wallace who has vowed to stand in the university door to bar the Negro.

Not everyone is mixed up, however. Take Charles Morgan Jr., the first white lawyer in Alabama to handle the case of a Negro seeking to gain admission to a segregated school.

Morgan, 33, a large energetic man with an acute sense of civic duty and a brilliant product of the University of Alabama himself, is the lawyer for Dave McGlathery, the Negro mathematician at the Marshall Space Flight Center at Huntsville branch on June 10.

Morgan recognizes that his law practice may suffer, but he doesn't think about it much. "I'm not subjective about it," he says, "I'm a lawyer and I've handled all kinds of controversial cases."

Although sensitive to such concepts as justice and morality, Morgan seldom allows himself the luxury of debating these abstractions.

Getting McGlathery into the university and preventing disorder and damage to his alma mater are practical matters with him, and he works long hours at it.

If segregationist Gov. Wallace is a sworn foe, Morgan has many like - minded friends and allies in his battle. His telephone rings constantly, and he bubbles with ideas and advice for his insistent callers.

Not Afraid

He served as state chairman of the Kennedy-Johnson speakers' bureau in the 1960 presidential campaign. If any man in this tense city has reason to fear reprisals, it is Morgan. Yet he is good humored, relaxed — and unafraid.

There are others, less indentifiable, less willing to speak openly, swimming in a pressure tank, who are trying to achieve what they regard as an inevitable integration of the races in a peaceful manner. A few are moved by conviction, most of what they call "being realistic."

A Birmingham businessman, for example, was a dyed-in-the-wool segregationist before he went abroad a few years ago and witnessed left-wing demonstrations in the streets. His hosts politely plagued him about the situation of Negroes in the United States.

He came back determined to find an accommodation with the Negro. At the risk of ostracism, reprisals and even physical harm, he began to talk about the need to be reasonable and became a prime mover in biracial efforts to work out compromises. He is far from joining the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, but he perseveres in his search for "safety valve" measures, despite pressure and threats.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS
NEWS
D. 73,874

MAY 28 1963

Confusion, Uncertainty, Fear And Doubt Mark Mood of South

Exclusive From Chicago Daily News

By PETER LISAGOR
CHICAGO DAILY NEWS SERVICE

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — The Deep South is inhabited by an unsettled race of white people, perplexed, resentful, and more than a little fearful.

There is a dim recognition among them of a revoluntionary fervor among their hitherto docile Negro Neighbors, and it mixes them up.

In varying defrees, they blame "outside agitators," "internal Quislings," the Kennedy brothers, the Supreme Court, the Northern press, for stirring up trouble. The white man has carried the Negro "on his back," as one troubled white citizen put it, and deserves gratitude, not protest.

● "Stop forcing us," implores a Huntsville businessman, "you are creating defiance and malice. Give us time."

"Waiting is just another way of saying we'll keep you in your place, discrimnate against you as long as you let us," says a Negro leader.

Many Negroes are mixed up, too. As a Birmingham Negro said recently, "we're seeing hate in the eyes of the white man for the first time." But this is not likely to deter their movement for an end to segregation in public places.

The mood of the South is one of uncertainty, confusion, doubt and fear.

Equality, says the Southern Regional Council, a group of white and Negro leaders, is more than an American ideal. "It has also become a practical necessity, but it is first of all an issue of human decency."

● A Birmingham cab driver, speaking of the scheduled entry of a Negro into the University of Alabama on June 10, says, "somebody better change their mind, or there's going to be real trouble." He doesn't mean Gov. George Wallace, who has vowed to stand in the university door to bar the Negro.

Not everyone is mixed up, however. Take Charles Morgan Jr., the first white lawyer in Alabama to handle the case of a Negro seeking to gain admission to a segregated school.

Morgan, 33, a large energetic man with an acute sense of civic duty and a brilliant product of the University of Alabama himself, is the lawyer for Dave McGlathery, the Negro mathematician at the Marshall Space Flight Center at Huntsnille who plans to enter the University's branch on June 10.

● Morgan recognizes that his law practice may suffer, but he doesn't think about it much. "I'm not subjective about it," he says, "I'm a lawyer and I've handled all kinds of controversial cases."

Although sensitive to such concepts as justice and morality, Morgan seldom allows himself the luxury of debating these abstractions.

Getting McGlathery into the university and preventing disorder and damage to his alma mater are practical matters with him, and he works long hours at it.

GOVERNOR WALLACE

DAVE McGLATHERY

If segregationist Gov. Wallace is a sworn foe, Morgan has many like-minded friends and allies in his battle. His telephone rings constantly, and he bubbles with ideas and advice for his insistent callers.

He served as state chairman of the Kennedy-Johnson speakers' bureau in the 1960 presidential campaign. If any man in this tense city has reason to fear reprisals, it is Morgan. Yet he is good humored, relaxed and unafraid.

● There are others, less identifiable, less willing to speak openly, swimming in a pressure tank, who are trying to achieve what they regard as an inevitable integration of the races in a peaceful manner. A few are moved by conviction, most by what they call "being realistic."

There is the newspaperman, fighting for candor and compromise, weighing how far he can go without being provocative or inflammatory, nervous about the future, his own and the region he loves.

And there is Alabama's governor himself. He refused to walk out of the 1948 Democratic national convention with other states' righters, Although Alabama's electoral votes went to Dixiecrat presidential candidate Strom Thurmond. In the state legislature, he was not anti-labor, anti-TVA, and on other issues foresook his conservative colleagues. Even his critics say he wasn't a bad circuit court judge for six years.

● In his unsuccessful race for governor against John Patterson in 1958, Wallace was not yet the strident segregationist he has become, and friends of his say that his defeat convinced him that the next time he ran he would out-holler all comers in proclaiming his determination to keep the Negro in his place.

This, he did — and won in a runoff against Tuscaloosa attorney Ryan De Graffernreid. Segregation was no longer just an effective political doctrine to Wallace; he had persuaded himself that it was right and just and "The ditch to die in" as Alabama's chief executive.

He is called a "nut" by onetime moderate friends. But, they add sorrowfully, it would be a mistake to assume that Wallace's pledge to stand in the university door in his defiance of the courts, to prevent a Negro's entrance, does not have enormous sympathy in the state of Alabama.

He has one leg up on martyrdom, they say, and "Little George" (he's 5-7 and weighs under 160) is hell-bent on going the distance, even if he has to pull the university down around his ears.

CORDELE, GA.
DISPATCH
D. 3,992

MAY 29 1963

DR. L. H. PITTS

Kerr Is Valedictorian—

Dr. Pitts To Speak At Clark Graduation

By BENJAMIN MURRAY

The seventh annual Commencement Exercise of the A. S. Clark School for the 1962-63 school term has been announced by Prin. George B. Tutt.

Sixty-nine prospective candidates for graduation and 38 faculty members are expected to don their caps, gowns and hoods in a colorful ceremony for the baccalaureate and graduation exercises. The commencement exercises has been set for Monday night at 8 o'clock in the school auditorium. The 69 seniors, under the sponsorship of Mrs. L. B. Bostic and Luke B. Brintley, are expected to receive diplomas during the final exercises. Awarding the diplomas will be George B. Tutt, principal.

Speaker for the occasion will be Dr. L. H. Pitts, president of Miles College in Birmingham, Ala. He is well-known throughout Georgia and the Southland especially to the people of this community for he served as principal of Holsey-Cobb Institute from 1948 to 1955, as well as pastor for the Bethel C. M. E. Church.

He is a native Georgian and received his elementary and high school education in the public be George B. Tutt, principal.

CHARLES C. KERR JR.

Speaker for the occasion will be Dr. L. H. Pitts, president of Miles College in Birmingham, Ala. He is well-known throughout Georgia and the Southland especially to the people of this community for he served as principal of Holsey-Cobb Institute from 1948 to 1955, as well as pastor for the Bethel C. M. E. Church.

He is a native Georgian and received his elementary and high school education in the public schools of Macon. Dr. Pitts has had wide and varied experiences working with high school students as well as college students, and is thus prepared to bring a challenging message to the graduating class.

Dr. Pitts, for five years Executive Secretary of the Georgia Teachers and Education Association, received the A.B. degree from Paine College, the M.A. degree from Fisk University. He has done further study at Peabody College in Nashville, Tenn., Western Reserve University in Cleveland, Ohio; completed residence requirements for the M.A. degree at Atlanta University and recently Paine College conferred upon him the Doctor of Divinity degree.

His other work experiences include serving as an instructor at Paine College, Director of Boys Work in Augusta and Nashville, Tenn., Director of Youth Work for the Seventh Episcopal District, C. M. E. Church, principal of Holsey-Cobb Institute, and Executive of Georgia Teachers and Education Assoiation.

Listed among Dr. Pitts' achievements in the areas of education and religion are:

Treasurer, Teachers Agency of Georgia; vice president, Commission on Cooperation and Council between the Methodist and Christian Methodist Episcopal Churches; Board of Directors, American Teachers Assn.; Board of Directors, Southern Regional Council, Board of Managers, Alabama Congress of Colored Parents and Teachers; Alabama State Teachers Association; National Education Association, Committee on Religion and Public Education; Alabama Council of Churches, and the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A.

The two top honor students are Charles C. Kerr Jr., valedictorian, who will deliver an address titled, "A High School Pupil's View of our American Democracy," and Beulah Marilyn Nance, salutatorian, whose address will be "What Freedom Means to a Teenager."

Other honor students named in order of rank are: Bennie L. Martin, Ruby J. Beal, Johnnie Lee Patrick Jr., Joe C. Smith, James T. Gaines, Ivory Smith, Laura Ann Thomas, Johnnie Mae Perry, Charlie Mae Hardeman, Johnny L. Cullers, Carol Lowe and Joseph Curtis West.

Following is a list of other prospective candidates for graduation:

Johnnie Melissa Atkins, Cora Lee

CHARLES C. KERR JR.

BEULAH M. NANCE

Barner, Orris Jean Bell, Verna Brown, Willie Charles Buffington, Earl Butler, James Carter, Mittie Carol Carter, Arthur Davis, Charlie Davis Jr., Annie Pearl Dean, Clementine Dean, Sammie Lee Dennard, Wilbert Dunn, Calvin Dyer, Sherrie Ann Edwards, Bennie Ruth Felder, R. G. Greene, James Calvin Hill, Bertha Mae Jackson, Joe Jackson Jr., Ruby Jean Jackson, Silas Jenkins, Annie Will Johnson, Frank Johnson, Helen Denease Johnson, Henry Johnson Jr., Buford Jones, Chester Jones, Betty Jean Lattimore, Samuel Lawrence Jr., Vernon Means, Joseph Mitchell Jr., Omie Jean Morgan, Laverta Elaine Outlaw, Claude Patrick Jr., Willie Charles Perry, Addie Ruth Poole, Willie James Ray, James Dorsey Reeves, Henry Grant Reynolds, Jerrie Dean Robinson, Jimmy Lee Robinson, Mattie Ellen Robinson, Oscar Lamar Robinson Jr., Allene Patricia Royal, Marva Ruth Singletary, Commie Lemarr Smith, Ozie Smith, Ruby Lee Smith, Corenthus Jesse Street Jr., William Street, Norman Arlema Toles, Johnny Wellons, and Frederick A. Wood Jr.

SAN JOSE, CALIF.
MERCURY
D. 76,'8'

MAY 30 1963 Rockefeller

Foundation Grants Cover Many Fields

NEW YORK (UPI)—The Rockefeller Foundation has announced first-quarter grants totaling $2,917,056 for such far-ranging subjects as promoting racial understanding in the south and collecting snails in Africa.

Foundation President J. George Harrar said that during the same period a total of 19 fellowships awarded to individuals from 14 countries became active, as well as 37 scholarships to individuals from 13 nations.

Grants in the medical and natural sciences amounted to $1,009,215; agricultural sciences $785,155; humanities and social sciences $1,001,276 and general categories $121,410.

A grant of $50,000 was awarded "for the general support" of the interracial southern Regional Council Inc., of Atlanta, Ga., which studies regional race relations problems and provides consultation to citizens' groups.

Dr. John B. Burch, curator of mollusks and assistant professor of zoology at the University of Michigan was awarded $3,000 to collect snails and observe schistosomiasis research in Africa. Schistosomiasis is a disease transmitted to man by snails.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
NEW YORK RECORDER
SAT. 18,254
PAGE ONE CERTIFIED
JUN 1 1963

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia.—The leaders of 30 independent African states agreed this week to form an "Organization of African Unity." They adopted an all-Africa charter providing for unity in a loose federation and for far-reaching cooperation in politics, economics, education and defense. Before adjourning their four-day conference, the heads of state or government also pledged to join in an effort to eradicate colonialism from the continent. . . . ATLANTA.—The Southern Regional Council stated this week that immediate elimination of segregation in all public facilities is a "practical necessity" for the South and the nation. Token steps, it said in a statement issued by its executive council, "already are outgrown by Negro needs and impatience." The 15 white and Negro Southern leaders, whose stated goal is equal opportunity for all persons in the region, said the Supreme Court's sit-in decision last Monday presented a historic choice. . . . ATLANTA. — The Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Atlanta reecived its first Negro priest this week. The Rev. William E. Calhoun of Atlanta was ordained at the Cathedral of Christ the King. . .

(Continued on Page 3)

News In A Nutshell

(Continued from Page 1)

NEW YORK Herald Tribune
D. 355,898 S. 451,270
JUN 2 1963

Negro Vote Drive Registers 115,000 In the South

DAYTON, Ohio (UPI).

An 11-state drive conducted by the nation's major civil rights organizations added more than 115,000 Negroes to Southern voter registration lists in the first year of operation, the project's director said Sunday.

The figures were announced for the first time by Wiley A. Branton, executive director of the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council, following his appearance here before the annual convention of the Congress of Racial Equality.

Mr. Branton said the task had been accomplished by hundreds of field workers "despite apathy on the part of many Southern Negroes, intimidation from segregationists and a lack of full cooperation from the Federal government."

Another 25,000 Negroes who would have been purged from registration lists retained their voting rights through the project's efforts, Mr. Branton said, while "uncounted thousands" of Negroes registered for the first time

Only 1.5 million of the five million eligible Southern Negroes have been registered in the 11-state area of Louisiana, Mississippi, Florida, South Carolina, North Carolina, Georgia, Texas, Arkansas, Tennessee, Alabama and Virginia, he added.

"As more and more Negroes and thinking whites get to the polls, men like (U.S. Sen. Allen) Ellender (D., La.), (Mississippi Gov. Ross) Barnett, (Alabama Gov. George) Wallace and other racists will be driven from office," Mr. Branton predicted.

ATLANTA, GA.
JOURNAL-CONSTITUTION
SUN. 504,755
PAGE ONE CERTIFIED
JUN 2 1963

RACIAL CRISIS

The Volcano Erupts

By United Press International

The cry rose all across the Southland like the spring crops pushing out of the soil.

"We want freedom. We want freedom."

They echoed through the streets of modern downtown business districts, the back alleys of squalid slums and rolled north to the Potomac. Their message was heard with a new sense of urgency at the White House.

There were cries in the North.

"We will not be moved," chanted hundreds of demonstrators in Philadelphia, "The City of Brotherly Love."

AN AMERICAN CRISIS one hundred years in the making jolted the nation with the frightening suddenness of a volcano many believed would never erupt.

The floodtide of protest marches, demonstrations, violence, threats and court action against racial segregation seemed ready to burst the dam that had held since the Civil War.

For Americans, it was a new kind of crisis. Instead of Havana, Moscow, or Berlin, the places involved were—in many instances—their own hometowns.

Birmingham, Jackson, Greensboro, Raleigh, Tallahassee, Philadelphia, Sacramento and New York. All figured in the crisis which stemmed from the "sugar coated" segregation of the North to flagrant civil rights violations in the South.

OFFICIALS WHO HAD wondered what the years ahead would bring now desperately planned for the months and weeks ahead.

President Kennedy was reported considering a nationwide appeal unless the tensions subsided.

New York Congressman Adam Clayton Powell, a Negro, paused on a European trip to tell a Paris news conference: "The white man is frightened."

EDITOR'S NOTE: Never have the events moved so rapidly in the field of Civil Rights. Protest marches in the South have led to violence and wholesale arrests. Demonstrations have spread from coast to coast. The government has stepped up its role in the field. President Kennedy was faced with the worst racial crisis since Lincoln. There was talk of new Civil Rights legislation. What was happening? What next? A UPI team of Alvin Spivak, Charlotte Moulton, and William J. Eaton in Washington, Al Kuettner and H. L. Stevenson in Atlanta, and correspondents in a score of bureaus report on the situation in this in-depth dispatch.

Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace strutted his defiance and still pledged "segregation forever." He vowed to personally "stand in the schoolhouse door" when Negroes attempt to enter Alabama white schools.

Two are scheduled to enter the University of Alabama for the summer term. Wallace says he will carry out his pledge.

Two thousand troops trained in riot control—sent by the President when bombings and street fighting erupted in Birmingham in mid-May—remained on the alert in Alabama, despite Wallace's protests.

The Hot Spots

Mississippi and Alabama, where public schools are rigidly segregated along with just about everything else, are hot spots.

An all-out campaign was promised by Negroes to break the barriers in Jackson, Miss. The first day's action was a lunch counter sit-in.

Turn to Page 27, Column 1

VOLCANO ERUPTS

Continued From Page 1

Result: Three demonstrators beaten, kicked and smeared with catsup and mustard by jeering whites. Later, hundreds of Negro students burst without warning from their school, shouting "freedom, freedom" and hurling rocks at police. Temporary jail space for 10,000 was quickly arranged. The lines of communications between the races were all but broken.

On Saturday night, March 10, 1962, in Montgomery, Ala.,—a miserable cold and rainy night—Wallace kicked off his campaign for governor with a pledge.

He would, he said, "stand in the schoolhouse door" to block the entrance of Negroes to the state's white public schools.

On June 10, 1963, Wallace and the federal government may face each other headon in the gravest crisis since the Ole Miss desegregation showdown last fall. Two persons were killed in rioting that broke out when federal marshals forced the enrollment of Negro James Meredith at the University of Mississippi.

Wallace says he will be on hand when two Negroes seek to enroll at the all-white University of Alabama.

"It is my covenant with the people," he says.

MONDAY, the government goes into federal court in Birmingham to seek an injunction to block Wallace's "schoolhouse door" plans. Wallace is not expected to be on hand for the court proceeding. He vows he'll be there for the confrontation with whatever federal men—marshals or U.S. troops—are sent with Vivian Malone to the university campus in Tuscaloosa or David McGlathery to a branch at Huntsville.

Birmingham has been a powder keg for weeks.

More than 2,000 demonstrators were jailed early in May. Fire hoses and dogs were used to disperse sullen, taunting and rock-throwing Negroes. Then came a shaky truce, after a biracial group agreed to limited demands for desegregation in some downtown stores, better job opportunities for Negroes, and more talk about future steps.

But explosions rocked a Negro motel the night of May 11. Rioting broke out in the streets. Kennedy sent in troops to Alabama, ready to move into Birmingham. The truce was restored before they were needed.

It hangs precariously.

A federal judge has warned the city to prepare for school desegregation or he will draw up the plan himself.

The demonstrations could begin again if the biracial agreement comes unstuck.

The Tempo Quickens

"It's real grave. It could tear the country apart."

"There is a general awareness at the White House that Birmingham had indicated at least a much deeper emotional sort of craving, I guess you could call it, or need, on the part of the Negro to find progress that is more tangible even than we had thought we had come up with."

These are the words of men high in the Kennedy administration.

The men around Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy, the man carrying the ball most often in the government's civil rights push, view the spread of violence and demonstrations in the South with worried faces.

THE ADMINISTRATION is whipping a new Civil Rights bill into shape that will be aimed at ending segregation in stores, hotels, theaters and other public business places and schools. One proposal under consideration would ban segregation in any store involved in interstate commerce. An alternative would be to bar segregation in establishments regulated by the state—such as hotels—on constitutional grounds that such state-imposed race restrictions deprive Negroes of equal protection of the laws.

New Civil Rights legislation is due—within a matter of days.

The thrust of Robert Kennedy's message to businessmen about desegregation in Southern hotels, theaters, stores and restaurants is that lowering of racial restrictions is inevitable and should come about through Negro-white cooperation in each locality.

President Kennedy hastily summoned to a meeting Tuesday 100 business leaders who have interests in these facilities to discuss the discrimination that Negroes meet when they seek the privileges whites enjoy.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL has talked to other leaders, white and Negro.

He sat down in New York City May 24 with writer James Baldwin, singers Harry Belafonte and Lena Horne—all Negroes—and other artists.

Baldwin's comment afterward that Kennedy seemed "naive" about Negro attitudes that caught the headlines.

But perhaps a more important remark by Baldwin was overlooked. He said the conversations were, hopefully, the start of a dialogue that would lead to better understanding.

Progress and Problems

The dialogue between whites and Negroes is sometimes painful. It does not exist in many parts of the South.

Whites who held a firm grip on the Southern political structure found themselves negotiating with Negro leaders who used the threat of massive Negro demonstrations as a bargaining club.

Lunch counters were quickly desegregated in Lynchburg, Va., hotels in Charlotte, swimming pools in Durham, and Memphis. Motion picture theaters in Norfolk and Portsmouth, Va., quietly dropped their racial bars. In Philadelphia an agreement was reached to hire qualified Negroes at a school construction site—after a week of angry picketing by Civil Rights advocates, including women with baby carriages. There were scores of injuries as police tried to control the mob which grew daily.

THERE WERE OTHER tinderboxes, North and South. Some of them:

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—Again it was younger Negroes who led the way in marches protesting movie theater segregation. Tear gas was used to break up one protest. More than 250 demonstrators were arrested.

GREENSBORO, N.C. — Negro demonstrations broke out in Greensboro, Raleigh, Durham, Fayetteville and High Point, aimed at all forms of segregation. More than 3,000 were arrested—1,600 in Durham, another 1,300 in Greensboro. Truces were called while negotiators tried to head off new outbursts, and possible violence.

COLUMBIA, S.C.—Negro leaders in South Carolina, where one Negro quietly entered Clemson College but public schools remain rigidly segregated, called a "summit" meeting for June 5. They will plan some sort of "action" to push for desegregation in eight cities.

CHICAGO—Civil Rights leaders sense a mounting tide of impatience among the city's 813,000 Negroes. Trouble could come this summer. Urban League Director Edwin C. Berry says, "The mood is more critical than at any time I've ever seen it."

ENGLEWOOD, N.J.—Since September, 1961, Negroes have protested alleged "de facto" segregation that turned one school's enrollment into 98 per cent Negro because the neighborhood was heavily Negro. There have been demonstrations, sit-ins, rallies and economic boycotts.

In almost every big city of the nation with a large concentration of Negroes there was unrest. The situation in the South was being used by Negroes everywhere as a springboard for demonstrating against local conditions.

The Ballot Box

An estimated 1,548,000 Negroes are eligible to vote in 11 Southern states.

This number has grown in most of these states, sharply in some, because of active voter registration campaigns which also have flared into violence and sparked demonstrations in such places as Greenwood, Miss.

The effects of the new integration drive certainly will have on the 1964 presidential campaign were being studied by seasoned political planners on both Democratic and Republican sides.

Some Negro groups have consistently accused the Kennedy administration of failing to produce on Civil Rights promises. They were turning on the pressure to get as much as possible for both political camps. The time was ripe for collecting favors.

Another Emancipation Proclamation?

President Kennedy's growing concern over the race situation is as one close aide put it, twofold: "To prevent future violence, and to assure equal rights for all Americans—not only in the South, but in the North as well."

The urgency lies in probing for the answer to what should be done about it. Kennedy is convinced that legislation is hardly

The men around Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy, the man carrying e ball most often in the government's civil rights push, view the read of violence and demonstrations in the South with worried ces.

THE ADMINISTRATION is whipping a new Civil Rights bill to shape that will be aimed at ending segregation in stores, ho-s, theaters and other public business places and schools. One oposal under consideration would ban segregation in any store volved in interstate commerce. An alternative would be to bar gregation in establishments regulated by the state—such as hotels on constitutional grounds that such state-imposed race restrictions prive Negroes of equal protection of the laws.

New Civil Rights legislation is due—within a matter of days.

The thrust of Robert Kennedy's message to businessmen about segregation in Southern hotels, theaters, stores and restaurants is tion of Negroes there was unrest. The situation in the South was being used by Negroes everywhere as a springboard for demonstrating against local conditions.

The Ballot Box

An estimated 1,548,000 Negroes are eligible to vote in 11 Southern states.

This number has grown in most of these states, sharply in some, because of active voter registration campaigns which also have flared into violence and sparked demonstrations in such places as Greenwood, Miss.

The effects of the new integration drive certainly will have on the 1964 presidential campaign were being studied by seasoned political planners on both Democratic and Republican sides.

Some Negro groups have consistently accused the Kennedy administration of failing to produce on Civil Rights promises. They were turning on the pressure to get as much as possible for both political camps. The time was ripe for collecting favors.

Another Emancipation Proclamation?

President Kennedy's growing concern over the race situation is as one close aide put it, twofold: "To prevent future violence, and to assure equal rights for all Americans—not only in the South, but in the North as well."

The urgency lies in probing for the answer to what should be done about it. Kennedy is convinced that legislation is hardly the end-all solution, so he contemplates other possibilities—personal appeals, meetings with governors and businessmen—and, when all else breaks down, use of federal muscle as exemplified in troops at Oxford, and the standby units near Birmingham.

A key question in Kennedy's mind is not only whether state and local authorities are able to cope with situations like Oxford or Birmingham—but whether they desire to do so.

"THE PRESIDENT is certainly aware of the mood of the Negro community," one aide has noted. Kennedy's stepup on the Civil Rights front reflects the serious attention he gives demands that have been made by Martin Luther King and other Negro leaders for action.

One of these demands has been a "second Emancipation Proclamation."

Kennedy has no intention of bowing to all the demands, including the proclamation, but he is convinced more must be done to satisfy the grievances. And sooner than he first expected.

One knowledgeable Kennedy aide says, "We are really proud of the strides we have made. But now we are really taking another look, with the idea of exceeding what we have been doing.

"Legislation is a part of it. There are other parts also.

"It is difficult to define this in terms of 'turning a corner' or a 'radical change.' It isn't a 'radical change' because we're not dealing with problems we haven't already been dealing with; it's just that we've got to move faster."

The Supreme Court

The words were "deliberate speed," but this judicial doctrine seemed vague and indefinite to many Negro leaders.

Race problems have had a prominent place on the Supreme Court's docket this term, as they have had for the past several years.

The most important decision was handed down May 27 in a case involving gradual desegregation of Memphis park and playground.

The court ruled unanimously that the "deliberate speed" doctrine which it built into school desegregation in 1955 not only does not apply to parks but it probably no longer applies to schools.

While federal district judges have discretion in fashioning remedies in all these situations, the opinion said, lower courts must bear in mind that constitutional rights are to be enjoyed now. Individual liberties are not vague promises and they are not to be denied merely because to grant them is not universally acceptable, the opinion said.

ON MAY 20, the court set aside trespass and criminal mischief convictions of student sit-in demonstrations in Greenville, S.C., New Orleans, Birmingham, and Durham, N.C., on grounds that the storekeepers involved were forced to segregate their lunch counters by unconstitutional ordinances or by edicts of local officials.

Therefore, the court said, trespass and other laws cannot be used to enforce these unconstitutional measures.

The court did not decide whether, with ordinances, a businessman would be free to pick his customers as he chose. That issue will be reargued next term in a case involving Glen Echo Amusement Park outside Washington.

The Road Ahead

"It is always the wrong time when we start asking for our rights," says Birmingham Negro leader Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth.

Negro leaders have shown no indication they intend to slow down their drive for equality.

Where once the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People carried the brunt of the effort to break down racial barriers, today there were many.

Leading agencies were the Southern Christian Leadership Conference headed by King, the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee which was running the sit-ins, the Congress of Racial Equality and the Voter Education Project, a foundation-financed organization that concentrated on preparing Negroes to vote by 1964.

King, often criticized by other Negroes for his "love thy white neighbor" approach, has joined in the cry for immediate desegregation of everything.

"Time is running out," King told a recent integration rally. "We can't afford to stop now. Now is the time to get rid of segregation."

The NAACP, with its slogan "Free by '63," has begun concentrating its efforts on segregation in the non-South.

"We are not asking for something that is not our right," King told a reporter recently. "This is something we should have had for 100 years."

LIMA, OHIO
NEWS
D. 27,686

JUN 2 1963

Speaker Describes Racial Trouble

Health Center Dedicated

By JAN THOMAS
Lima News Correspondent

"I really should be back in Mississippi bailing out some of my students and staff," Dr. Adam D. Beittel, president of Tougaloo Southern Christian College, told an audience present for the dedication of the Bucher Health Center at Findlay College Saturday morning.

Beittel said he had learned that members of his faculty and student body were involved in the civil rights demonstrations in Jackson, Miss. He claimed Mississippi officials are determined to hold back the tide of change.

He described Tougaloo College as an "oasis of integration, in a desert of segregation, a common meeting place for men of good will across racial lines." He said his college has an integrated faculty and the student body is predominantly negro.

Dr. Beittel commented on the difficulties a college such as Tougaloo has in the south. He said there is little money available to this type of school.

Dr. Beittel said family income in Mississippi is well below the national average, and the negro family income is far below this.

Dr. Beittel said there is a promising movement going on in the south now. He cited cases of clergymen who have spoke out "against the spread of the doctrine of hate."

"All of these clergymen are under fire, some have already lost their jobs, but the voice of prophetic religion is beginning to be heard again," he said.

"We must learn to live together for we live in a world where white people are in the minority," Dr. Beittel said.

The dedication of the Bucher Health Center was held in front of the home, 1020 N. Cory.

Dr. J. Russell Bucher, a part time professor at Findlay College, donated the residence to the college in memory of his wife, Gladys Correll Bucher, who died in 1962.

Dr. Beittel graduated from Findlay College in 1922. He received the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws from Findlay College during the dedication ceremony.

He became the eighth president of Tougaloo Southern Christian College Sept. 1, 1960. Before becoming president of the college, located five miles from Jackson, Miss., he served as dean of the chapel and member of the faculty at Beloit College, Beloit, Wis.

He served as president of Talladega College in Alabama from 1945 to 1952. Previously he served as dean of the college and professor of sociology at Guilford, as professor of religion at Earl College in North Carolina and as professor of religion at Earlham College in Indiana.

Dr. Beittel was born in Lancaster, Pa. After receiving his degree from Findlay College, he obtained his master's degree at Oberlin College, and his bachelor of divinity and doctor of philosophy degrees at the University of Chicago. He is a former chairman of the Alabama Division of the Southern Regional Council, former vice president of the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools for Negroes.

He now serves as national secretary of the United Negro College Fund, a member of the board of the Southern Regional Council, chairman of the Mississippi Advisory Committee of the United States Commission on Civil Rights.

The New York Times
D. 680,265 S. 1,306,418
JUN 2 1963

DONALD COMER, 85, TEXTILE MAN, DIES

Head of Alabama Mills Noted for Labor Innovations

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., June 1 (AP)—Donald Comer, who helped build Avondale Mills into a leading textile concern, died yesterday at the age of 85.

Mr. Comer was elected president of Avondale Mills in 1927, board chairman in 1938 and executive-committee chairman in 1951. The company operates 10 mills.

He is survived by his widow, three daughters, a son and three sisters.

Employe Policies Praised

James McDonald Comer was widely praised for the employe-management relations that prevailed in his mills. From 1948 to 1950, for example, he shared more than $12,000,000 in profits with his 7,000 mill workers.

"This isn't just profit sharing," he told an interviewer. "It's partnership with our people."

The magazine Dixie Business in Atlanta selected him in 1947 as the South's Man of the Year, "the nation's foremost example of the free-enterprise system at work." In 1955 the Textile Veterans Association gave him its achievement award.

A native of Comer, Ala., he was the son of Braxton Bragg Comer, an Alabama Governor and United States Senator. The son served as secretary of the B. B. Comer Sons Company and joined Avondale as secretary in 1907.

When his father took him off the family plantation to run a cotton mill, Donald Comer, as he was called, faced his first big problem: to stop boys from breaking the windows with slingshots.

His solution was to form a Boy Scout troop. Some 40 years later there were 50 troops in his mill towns.

Began Adult Education

When a little girl told him that she had learned to read and write in his mill schools but that her father could not write, he started adult-education courses.

While on vacation in Atlantic City during World War I, he decided that every family working for him ought to have seashore vacations, too. He bought land in Florida, built mess halls and camps and took the first busload of mill children from Alabama for their yearly vacation.

In the nineteen-thirties Mr. Comer was a leader in the fight to stop night work by women and children in Southern mills.

During World War II Mr. Comer served on the War Labor Board. Later, when Alabama leaders sought to convert war plants in Talladega County to peacetime uses as newsprint mills, Mr. Comer became chairman of the Coosa River Newsprint Company at Childersburg.

On the invitation of General of the Army Douglas MacArthur, Mr. Comer went to Japan after the war to help rehabilitate Japanese textile mills, although he advocated protective tariffs.

In 1949 Mr. Comer headed a citizens group that urged revocation of the charter of the Alabama Ku Klux Klan.

He purchased a tract of land in Tallapoosa County, Ala., in 1951, for the settlement of a Dutch farm group to introduce its dairy-farming methods in the United States.

Mr. Comer had been a director of the Birmingham Fire Insurance Company, the American Mutual Liability Insurance Company of Boston and New York, the Central of Georgia Railway Company, the Ocean Steamship Company and the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta.

He had been a trustee of Emory College in Atlanta, the Birmingham Young Men's Christian Association and the Julius Rosenwald Fund. A former president of the American Cotton Manufacturers Association, Mr. Comer was also a director of the Cotton Textile Institute of New York and the Southern Regional Council and a former vice president of the American Bible Society.

BOSTON, MASS.
CHRISTIAN SCIENCE
MONITOR
WESTERN EDITION
D. 174,850
JUN 4 1963

Moderates Brace Race Triangle

By Bicknell Eubanks
Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

From the South

As the South rushes toward what could be a tragic regional explosion of conflict between Negroes and whites, frantic efforts are being made to square the racial triangle.

On one side of the triangle are the Negroes, impatient with the long wearisome process of seeking redress through federal courts. On the other are the staunchly defiant white segregationists who are determined to make an even tougher stand against the mounting drive for desegregation in all sectors of Southern civil, economic, and educational fields.

Ruling Hailed

At the base of the triangle, trying to form both a bridge and a rampart to keep the two sides from violent conflict, is the moderate South, aware that the measures adopted so far no longer meet Negro needs and impatience. And, for the first time, these Southern moderates are getting active support from the executive branch of the federal government.

One of the forces of moderation, the Southern Regional (SRC), tells the South that the sit-in decisions of May 20 by the Supreme Court of the United States have "moved our law a long step nearer the American ideal of equal rights."

The councol notes that in this country, "and particularly in the South, we are adopting measures which already are outgrown by Negro needs and impatience."

"Had we years ago vigorously defended voting rights in the courts," the SRC says, "had we made beginnings in the desegregation of public accommodations and services, had we established rules to protect fair and equal employment rights, had we done these and other like things then —which we are beginning to do now—they might have been in time. They are not any longer."

Statesmanship Urged

The SRC calls for a "statesmanship adequate for the times from national, state, and local governments and from private businesses" to quiet the "legitimate unrest of Negro citizens."

"We need to turn from the mere defense of voting rights against criminal violation to the positive assurance of voting rights; from token school desegregation to a loving concern for the education of all our children," the council insists. "We need in all of American life to accept and benefit from each other."

The council notes that the most recent judicial decisions come "at a time of promising events as well. In several Southern cities—Raleigh, Durham, Greensboro, Knoxville, and Nashville, among others—there has arisen an unprecedented awareness among civic leaders that segregation must end, without delay, in all public and business services."

Jackson Targeted

"Equality is an American ideal," the council says. "It has become a practical necessity. But it is first of all an issue of human decency."

As racial barriers come down elsewhere, white segregationists are shoring them up in Alabama and Mississippi.

The newest target of Negroes is Jackson, Miss., the state capital, which may turn out to be the hardest community yet to crack. An almost solid wall of resistance faces the Negro drive there, with not even a channel of communications existing through which the opposing sides can work to solve the problem. There are few moderates in Jackson.

Yet in the old south there are some hopeful signs of settlement.

Noninterference Asked

In Tuscaloosa, Ala., home of the University of Alabama, which is scheduled to begin desegregation June 10, more than 200 residents have signed a petition asking Gov. George Wallace of Alabama not to carry out his threat to stand between the campus and a Negro who will seek to enroll there June 10.

Tuscaloosa still recalls the brief but violent reaction again brief but violent reaction against the admittance of a Negro several years ago.

The Governor, however, has committed himself so strongly that he appears to have left no way to avoid a direct confrontation with federal authority such as that which led to violence at the University of Mississippi when Gov. Ross P. Barnett sought personally to bar James H. Meredith from the Ole Miss campus.

Pools to Integrate

Meanwhile, two days later, on June 12, a racial barrier will fall in the old South when all public swimming pools in Atlanta are desegregated.

In Texas, the City Council of San Antonio has set up a committee of businessmen to work out the integration of all privately owned businesses serving the public.

Also in Texas, the Third Court of Civil Appeals in Austin has ruled that a school district cannot spend its money to build segregated facilities. The decision arose at Georgetown, Texas, where a group of citizens supporting racial integration had filed a lawsuit opposing the issuance of $525,000 in bonds which the district voted last July.

The Georgetown School Board had planned to use the funds to build a new Negro school, a new junior - high school for white children, and expanding the white high school.

The region watches, meanwhile, for a sign from the White House as to what action will be coming from President Kennedy, who, as has his brother, Attorney General Robert S. Kennedy, been in contact with Southern business leaders seeking to push voluntary desegregation of private facilities such as lunch counters, hotels, and theaters as well as the upgrading of Negro job opportunities.

The administration's consideration of possible new civil-rights legislation also is arousing more than usual interest throughout the South.

CHICAGO, ILL.
DAILY DEFENDER
D. 35,795

JUN 5 1963

Buffalo

TODAY IN NEGRO HISTORY

By ALICE SCOTT
Acting Librarian, George Cleveland Hall Branch Library

The Southern Regional Council three years ago today reported that lunch counters had been desegregated in eight Southern cities. The business establishments reported that sales continued as usual.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
WALL STREET JOURNAL
D. 145,901

PAGE ONE CLEARED

JUN 6 1963

Desegregated Jobs

Many Dixie Negroes Win Better Positions In Factories, Offices

Washington Pressure Speeds Gains; Lockheed Aircraft, Western Electric Set Pace

A Tale of Two Birminghams

By BURT SCHORR
Staff Reporter of THE WALL STREET JOURNAL

BIRMINGHAM — Throughout the recent Negro demonstrations against segregation here, Joseph Perdue reported as usual to his job at Hayes International Corp., a large aircraft maintenance firm adjacent to the Birmingham airport.

Mr. Perdue, who is a Negro, worked alongside whites inspecting Air Force planes for structural flaws. With other Negroes at Hayes, he used unmarked water fountains and rest rooms. At noon he lined up with whites to buy lunch from company meal carts.

Equal job opportunities and desegregated public facilities have been the major objectives of Negroes protesting here and in other Southern cities. But largely overlooked amid the headlines telling of demonstrations is the fact that a rising number of Dixie Negroes like Mr. Perdue have already made big strides toward these goals. "The ice is cracking," says Noyes Collinson, the Atlanta-area director of the American Friends Service Committee's "Employment on Merit" program, which seeks to place more qualified Negroes in "non-traditional" jobs.

Mr. Collinson is quick to add that Negro job seekers still face barriers in many places. A lot of companies hesitate to break with tradition. "We just can't move faster than the customs in our communities," contends one South Carolina textile executive. Despite the anti-discrimination pronouncements of national union leaders, white officials at the local level are often cool to the idea of upgrading Negroes. And even if a Negro wins a position previously restricted to whites, he may have to endure the unconcealed hostility of fellow workers.

Washington's Role

All the same, the signs of progress are unmistakable. One of the biggest factors behind Negroes' employment gains clearly is pressure from the Federal Government.

In 1961, following an Eisenhower precedent, President Kennedy issued an executive order calling for an end to discrimination in hiring by companies holding Government contracts or bidding for them. The order set up the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity—headed by Vice President Johnson and including other high Government officials and representatives of business, labor and the public—to formulate and carry out non-discrimination policies.

Desegregated Jobs: Many Negroes In the South Win Better Positions

gices. And even if a Negro wins a position previously restricted to whites, he may have to endure the unconcealed hostility of fellow workers.

Washington's Role

All the same, the signs of progress are unmistakable. One of the biggest factors behind Negroes' employment gains clearly is pressure from the Federal Government.

In 1961, following an Eisenhower precedent, President Kennedy issued an executive order calling for an end to discrimination in hiring by companies holding Government contracts or bidding for them. The order set up the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity—headed by Vice President Johnson and including other high Government officials and representatives of business, labor and the public—to formulate and carry out non-discrimination policies.

The committee has relied heavily on voluntary compliance with the Government rules, and some critics claim it has moved too slowly to open more jobs to Negroes. But it has suspended some small contractors from further bidding on Federal contracts because of discriminatory hiring practices, and individual Federal agencies have often acted to enforce its rules when awarding contracts.

This week the Administration gave further evidence of its determination to improve Negro job opportunities when Mr. Kennedy ordered intensified efforts to prevent discrimination in hiring workers for Government construction projects and in admitting young workers to Federally aided apprenticeship programs.

Says Hobart Taylor, Jr., executive vice chairman of the President's committee: "A very determined push is going on both in Government and among Government contractors."

At the Marietta, Ga., plant of Lockheed Aircraft Corp.—Georgia's largest private employer—over 6% of the 16,000-man work force are Negroes. While Lockheed has offered Negroes non-traditional jobs since the early 1950s, Negroes have made especially rapid progress at the plant since 1961.

Janitors Win Promotions

Negroes and whites now work together at Lockheed on the production of C-141 StarLifter cargo planes for the Air Force. Negroes are encouraged to prepare for better positions by attending company-sponsored classes. A recent issue of the plant newspaper pictures two former Negro janitors who advanced to production jobs after taking courses in blueprint-reading and mathematics. Negroes participate with whites in plant-sponsored bowling, golf, baseball and other recreational activities.

Conversations with Lockheed employes indicate a fellow worker's race is of secondary interest. "Uncle Sam got me over the shock when I was in the Army," observes a white Tennessee-born mathematician whose supervisor is a Negro. "Around here, if a man can do the job, that's all that matters."

In Greensboro, N.C., where over 1,400 Negroes, mostly students, have been arrested for downtown protests against segregated theaters and restaurants, Negro and white employes are found sharing cafeteria tables at the local Western Electric Co. plant.

"When we opened this plant during the Korean war, many Negroes were hired in the traditional jobs of cleaners and sweepers," says W. O. Conrad, plant manager. "But there are no Negroes in those jobs today. They've moved up the ladder and their places have been taken by white workers with seniority who otherwise would have been laid off because of production cutbacks."

Washing Airplanes

Mr. Perdue of Hayes International started 11 years ago in the company's wash-rack department. The job was cleaning aircraft, a task traditionally done by all-Negro crews. After a while, Mr. Perdue worked up to the job of metal conditioner, which entailed polishing metal. At the time this was one of the highest classifications a Negro could attain at Hayes, and Mr. Perdue stayed in the job for eight years.

In 1961, however, the Air Force, Hayes' principal customer, pressed the company to comply with Federal non-discrimination requirements for contractors. Hayes opened additional jobs to Negroes and Mr. Perdue became a $2.58-an-hour inspection department trainee. Last year he moved to his present assignment at $2.64 an hour. His next goal: Learning to read blueprints so he will be eligible for a higher-paying machine shop inspector's job.

Please Turn to Page 12, Column 2

Continued from First Page

Here in Birmingham, Negro steel mill employes' prospects are brightening. Local plants of U.S. Steel Corp.'s Tennessee Coal & Iron division and Republic Steel Corp. employ 18,000 production workers, a third of them Negroes. Current United Steelworkers Union contracts with the companies include provisions aimed at opening higher job classifications to Negroes. But union spokesmen say the provisions would not be effective without the backing of Federal anti-discrimination regulations.

Traditionally Negroes employed by Birmingham steel mills had been limited largely to the lowest-ranking jobs. Now whites and Negroes in lower job classifications form a common pool for advancement to better jobs on the basis of seniority and merit. As a result more Negroes have been able to win jobs as millwrights and truck drivers, and one Negro has been working as an assistant roller in Tennessee Coal & Iron's Bessemer rolling mill, a once exclusively white position that pays $30 a day.

Besides prodding private firms to give Negroes a crack at better jobs, the Federal Government itself is hiring more Negroes. This trend is creating a small group of Negro white-collar workers in the South. For example, at the downtown Atlanta office of the Federal National Mortgage Association 13 of the 200 employes are Negroes. One is training to be a loan examiner.

"No one's greeting these Negroes like returning war heroes, but there's been no outward display of resentment," comments a Mississippi-born white supervisor in the Fannie Mae office.

North Carolina became the first former Confederate state to officially advocate equal employment opportunities with the creation by Gov. Terry Sanford in January of a Good Neighbor Council. The council, which eventually will have 24 business leaders as members, hopes to persuade companies to upgrade Negro employes. Six Tar Heel communities have created their own councils to work for a similar goal on the local level.

State Hires More Negroes

The state of North Carolina is taking steps to increase its own employment of qualified Negroes. The Conservation and Development Department is seeking Negro applicants for engineering aide and draftsman posts. At some state Employment Security Commission offices Negro staff members already handle both white and Negro job seekers and unemployment insurance applicants.

Executives in private industry say that firmness with white employes is often essential if Negro employes are to be accepted.

At one North Carolina cigaret factory a Negro woman was assigned to the non-traditional job of "catching" the output of an automatic cigaret-making machine. The white woman at the next machine made several slurring remarks.

"We called both the white girl and the colored girl up to the personnel office and explained that was not the proper way to approach the situation and we would not countenance any repetition," recalls the plant manager. "There were no further incidents."

A Columbia, S.C., cotton mill called in its supervisors last year and told them they had to cooperate with the company's intention to live up to the employment requirements of its Federal contracts. "We said that if they didn't choose to, they'd be given good recommendations for jobs elsewhere," says the mill manager. The supervisors, in turn, told production workers they would have to cooperate. At first, veteran Negro employes from the loading docks and other "outside" crews were upgraded to inside jobs. Then the mill began actively recruiting Negro high school and vocational school graduates. There are now about 25 Negroes in the 600-man production force, and all plant facilities have been desegregated without difficulty.

Unanswered Letters

Most Southern textile mills have no Federal contracts, however, and have made few moves to upgrade Negroes. Nor is resistance to equality in employment limited to the textile industry. Over the past 18 months the American Friends Service Committee's Southeastern headquarters in High Point, N.C., has sent letters to over 200 North Carolina firms in a variety of fields offering to provide competent "minority group" job applicants. "Only two companies really responded positively, and their letters led to two jobs," says Mrs. Sarah Herbin, a staff member in the office.

The effectiveness of one aspect of the Government's equal employment opportunity program is the subject of considerable controversy. The dispute involves the "Plans for Progress" pledges signed by over 100 large companies working on Government contracts. The pledges commit the firms to take "positive" steps to put qualified Negroes in better jobs, but do not require them to open up new positions to Negroes immediately.

The Administration contends that most companies are generally complying with their pledges. But the Southern Regional Council, an Atlanta organization dedicated to improving race relations, disagrees. It surveyed the Atlanta-area branch operations of 24 Plans for Progress firms a few months ago and found only seven able to produce "evidence of affirmative compliance with their pledges."

Resistance of union locals to desegregation on the job is often difficult to get around. In the steel mills here, for example, Negroes sometimes still find it difficult to win the advancement despite the contract provisions protecting their interests.

Explains a white grievance chairman for one Steelworkers local in Birmingham: "A Negro in the job pool can bid on a job, but a lot of the time a white with less seniority will get it. The Negro may complain, but he's bucking shop stewards and committeemen who just refuse to process any kind of grievance from a Negro. They're just representing whites."

A dearth of qualified Negro applicants is another stumbling block in the drive for better jobs for Negroes. "We have some employers willing and anxious to move, but segregated educational opportunities have meant unequal opportunities and it's difficult to find people with the right training," says an official of one group working for equality on the job.

BOSTON, MASS.
CHRISTIAN SCIENCE
MONITOR
EASTERN EDITION
D. 174,850
JUN 6 1963

Moderates Seek Race Bridge

By Bicknell Eubanks
Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

From the South

As the South rushes toward what could be a tragic regional explosion of conflict between Negroes and whites, frantic efforts are being made to square the racial triangle.

On one side of the triangle are the Negroes, impatient with the long wearisome process of seeking redress through federal courts. On the other are the staunchly defiant white segregationists who are determined to make an even tougher stand against the mounting drive for desegregation in all sectors of Southern civil, economic, and educational fields.

Ruling Hailed

At the base of the triangle, trying to form both a bridge and a rampart to keep the two sides from violent conflict, is the moderate South, aware that the measures adopted so far no longer meet Negro needs and impatience. And, for the first time, these Southern moderates are getting active support from the executive branch of the federal government.

One of the forces of moderation, the Southern Regional Council (SRC), tells the South and the sot-in decisions of May 20 by the Supreme Court of the United States have "moved our law a long step nearer the American ideal of equal rights."

The council notes that in this country, "and particularly in the South, we are adopting measures which already are outgrown by Negro needs and impatience."

"Had we years ago vigorously defended voting rights in the courts," the SRC says, "had we made beginnings in the desegregation of public accommodations and services, had we established rules to protect fair and equal employment rights, had we done these and other like things then —which we are beginning to do now—they might have been in time. They are not any longer."

Statesmanship Urged

The SRC calls for a "statesmanship adequate for the times from national, state, and local governments and from private businesses" to quiet the "legitimate unrest of Negro citizens."

"We need to turn from the mere defense of voting rights against criminal violation to the positive assurance of voting rights; from token school desegregation to a loving concern for the education of all our children," the council insists. "We need in all of American life to accept and benefit from each other."

Jackson Targeted

The council notes that the most recent judicial decisions come "at a time of promising events as well. In several Southern cities—Raleigh, Durham, Greensboro, Knoxville, and Nashville, among others—there has arisen an unprecedented awareness among civic leaders that segregation must end, without delay, in all public and business services."

"Equality is an American ideal," the council says. "It has become a practical necessity. But it is first of all an issue of human decency."

As racial barriers come down elsewhere, white segregationists are shoring them up in Alabama and Mississippi.

The newest target of Negroes is Jackson, Miss., the state capital, which may turn out to be the hardest community yet to crack. An almost solid wall of resistance faces the Negro drive there, with not even a channel of communications existing through which the opposing sides can work to solve the problem. There are few moderates in Jackson.

Yet in the old south there are some hopeful signs of settlement.

In Tuscaloosa, Ala., home of the University of Alabama, which is scheduled to begin desegregation June 10, more than 200 residents have signed a petition asking Gov. George Wallace of Alabama not to carry out his threat to stand between the campus and a Negro who will seek to enroll there June 10.

Tuscaloosa still recalls the brief but violent reaction again brief but violent reaction against the admittance of a Negro several years ago.

MONTCLAIR, N.J.
TIMES
W. 9,358
JUN 6 1963

NCNW Council Plans Luncheon

Mrs. William T. Mason of Norfolk, Va., will speak on "Builders of Democracy in an Era of Crisis" at the annual luncheon of the Montclair Council, National Council of Negro Women, to be given Saturday at 1 P.M. at Montclair State College.

Mrs. Mason is a member of the board of directors of the Southern Regional Council of Atlanta, Ga., and the American Christian Palestine Committee. She is currently serving as chairman of the Norfolk Committee for the Improvement of Education, and is a board member of the National Council of Negro Women, Inc., and the Norfolk Chapter, N.A.A.C.P. Mrs. Mason was formerly national president of the National Council of Negro Women, Inc.

Mrs. Mason has studied and traveled in Israel as a guest of the Israeli government and has journeyed through northern Africa, Europe, the Middle East, the West Indies, and throughout the United States.

She is a public relations consultant, and recently served as a consultant for the Peace Corps.

SCIENCE NEWS LETTER
WASHINGTON, D.C.
W. 77,387

JUN 8 1963

SOCIOLOGY

Charge Outside Agitation To Deny Own Guilt

➤ STRONG DEFENSE mechanisms are at work in charges by Alabamians that racial turmoil in Birmingham is caused by outside agitators.

Intimations of Communist interference are part of "a standard routine that one hears in any area of the South," an Atlanta, Ga., psychiatrist told SCIENCE SERVICE.

The accusations are "based on ignorance and denial," Dr. Robert Coles, research consultant to the Southern Regional Council, Atlanta, said. White officials have no idea how the Negro feels, he said, nor will they talk with the Negro to find out what he wants. Instead, the accusers try "not to look at the situation." Denying their own responsibility, they attempt to place the blame on others.

If Southern officials faced the situation, Dr. Coles said, they would see the Negro will no longer put up with the sense of inferiority forced upon him, and he is now "willing and able" to do something about it.

Negroes in Birmingham will never be the same, Dr. Coles explained, for they have shown Birmingham and themselves that they no longer have to put up with inequality. Their self-respect has been "enormously enhanced" by their efforts, he said.

The schoolchildren also feel more self-respect, Dr. Coles said. The demonstrations are not hurting them psychologically. Dr. Coles, who studied the New Orleans and Atlanta children spearheading school desegregation, called Alabama officials' concern for the children's mental health "nonsense."

There will be more Birminghams in the years ahead, Dr. Coles predicted, as Negro hostility toward the whites for his inferior treatment comes to the surface.

• Science News Letter, 83:361 June 8, 1963

FORT PIERCE, FLA.
NEWS TRIBUNE
D: 9,006 S. 8,425

JUN 12 1963

'New Sense Of Urgency' Has Entered The Racial Picture

The nation's drawing room drapes no longer can shut out the 'sights and smells — and even the screams — of black slums." They are beginning to come downtown, and the drapes are no match for this. Unless responsible people act, the windows behind the drapes will be smashed.

This was the warning voiced in Daytona Beach by Paul Anthony, field director of Southern Regional Council of Atlanta, before the annual Spring meeting of the Florida Council on Human Relations.

Anthony, who travels the South as a mediator in racial disturbances for the Council, left Daytona Beach for Huntsville, Ala. to work with White and Negro leaders there in advance of admission of a student at the University of Alabama branch.

Aware of the racial crisis building in Daytona and other areas of Florida, the native Southerner urged the statewide interracial organization to concentrate its efforts on areas where "real potential for change exists," but to do so "not as White delivering to Negro or as Negro taking from White, but as people together freeing themselves from a thing which is harmful to all of us."

The people of Florida, Anthony said, must understand the "new sense of urgency" that has entered the racial picture through Council members interpreting what has happened all over the country and "exploding the myth of 'It can't happen here."

Urging an all out drive for more members, he said: "Surely if in Mississippi, with less population, a group of racist, anti-democratic bigots can boast of a membership of 80,000, we (the Florida Council for Human Relations) can talk in terms of 10,000 in Florida."

Birmingham, which Anthony witnessed at the height of its recent racial turmoil, "wakened a slumbering giant" which "no man and no group controlled." He said this giant is the hate that has been building up over the years of denial for the Negro and the spurning of their leadership by the White "power structure" as the Negroes sought to use persuasion and mediation.

"Maybe the 'downtrodden' Negro had the dignity of protest for one instant; the school child had the exhileration of 'I'm not gonna take it; I'm gonna change it now': the pool-hall drunk one night lashed out against the despised blue uniform instead of at himself—but after all this, when the quiet settles in, when the deep, segregated, tokenism, third class citizenship quiet settles in — hate settles with it."

A cause for the deepening hate, said Anthony, is that the Negro leaders have been betrayed even more than the Negro masses. In trying to lead according to the rules Whites established, he had placed his faith in good will and good intent, only to find their fruits delayed to some vague future.

Now the Negro leaders are joining the faceless mass that is the Negro, the SRC worker went on. Their calls to the White House have become impatient, and their new message to the Attorney General's office has become a theme of "go to the devil; I'm tired."

They have taken up the new technique of mass demonstration, the mass protest, the mass arrest. They and their militant young followers are growing more resentful of tokenism granted for the sake of creating "a better industrial climate, while the voice for "it is right" remains almost inaudible. And they resent not being seen, this late after emancipation, as individuals instead of as a "Negro."

"To the extent that it existed," Anthony said, "White politics created the 'Negro block vote.' Now, to the extent that it exists, White society is creating the Negro en masse. Behind the mask of color there is a beginning to exist the hard, insoluble grouping—Negro. White society has willed it, without alternative, and it is becoming so."

Anthony's talk climaxed a day in which Human Relations Councils from all over the state gathered on the campus of Bethune-Cookman College for discussions on recial problems. Here to conduct a workshop was Lou Mitchell of Birmingham, who will take over July 1 as the new state executive director of FCHR, with offices in Daytona Beach.

Attending the meeting from Fort Pierce were the Rev. J. R. Cliffin, newly elected president of the Fort Pierce Community Assn., Mrs. LeRoy Floyd, Jack Caynon and Dr. James M. Howard, members of the association's guidance committee.

Dr. Howard was there also as a member of the Florida Council's board of directors and of its executive committee.

ATLANTA, GA
WORLD
D 29 800

PAGE ONE CERTIFIED

JUN 11 1963

Institute On Leadership In South At ITC

The Institute on Negro Leadership in the Changing South continues its 8-day meeting today at the Interdenominational Theological Seminary.

The institute is sponsored by the Negro College Committee on Adult Education, Chicago, Dr. Stephen J. Wright, chairman and Peter E. Siegle, secretary. The seminar, which has attracted a large number of college and community leaders from over the South, is designed to study the major economic, political and social developments in the South over the past several years, in order to understand the meaning of the changes that are occurring and to arrive at a definition of the emerging new setting.

Dr. Dan Thompson, professor of sociology at Howard University, keynoted the institute Sunday night, delivering "A Manifesto for the Negro Leadership Classes."

The resident faculty and staff, excluding Thompson and Siegle, include C. H. Parrish, chairman of the Department of Sociology, University of Louisville, dean of the institute; Andrew P. Torrence, Dean of Academic Affairs, Tuskegee; Dr. S. M. Nabrit, president of Texas Southern University; Wiley A. Branton, project director of the Voter Education Project, Southern Regional Council; Leslie W. Dunbar, executive director, Southern Regional Council, and John Hope II, Assistant Executive Director for Government Employment, the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WALL STREET JOURNAL
D. 326,200

JUN 13 1963

School Integration Likely to Become Easier Now That Major State Colleges Are Biracial

By JAMES C. TANNER
Staff Reporter of THE WALL STREET JOURNAL

TUSCALOOSA, Ala.—"Token integration is now a reality at every major state university in the South and it will become increasingly easy for Negroes to gain admission to formerly all-white schools."

This was the reaction of an official of the Southern Regional Council, a biracial group of Southerners who favor integration, to the news that two Negroes, Vivian Malone and James A. Hood, had been formally enrolled at the University of Alabama.

"Alabama probably represents the last big public battle over integrated education at the college level," the official added.

With the successful enrolment of the two Negro students at the Alabama campus, the number of tax-supported institutions of higher learning in the South that admit Negroes rose to 172. Only 68 state-owned colleges and universities in the 17 Southern and border states now bar Negroes, compared with 132 two years ago.

Many Integrate Quietly

Although many of the Southern schools—like the University of Alabama—have integrated only under court order, a growing number have decided voluntarily to abolish segregation barriers, the Southern Education Reporting Service said in Nashville. This week, for example, Armstrong Junior College in Savannah, Ga., quietly enrolled its first Negro student, becoming Georgia's fourth state college to do so. Last week Texas A&M voluntarily dropped its segregation policy and accepted three Negroes for the summer term.

This isn't to say that Negro educational problems at the college level have been completely resolved. In many instances the Southern schools have submitted only to "token" integration and Negro students still face lengthy and discouraging delays in efforts to enroll at predominately white universities. Nonetheless, racial leaders figure last fall's desegregation of the University of Mississippi and this week's developments here in Tuscaloosa have smashed the bulk of resistance to college desegregation.

Strides by Private Schools

Besides the strides being made in state-owned schools, private schools in the south also are dropping segregation policies. In the last two years 53 private colleges began admitting Negroes, including such larges schools as Tulane. Currently 147 of the South's private schools have integrated and at least six others have announced plans to do so within the next 15 months.

The Southern Education Reporting Service said 7,000 Negroes now go to class with whites in state-owned colleges. In addition, thousands more are attending college at formerly all-white private schools, but the Nashville organization said it didn't keep track of the total because many of these schools don't bother with a racial breakdown.

Arkansas, Kentucky, Maryland and Tennessee lead in the desegregation effort, with all tax-supported schools in these states open to both Negroes and whites. Texas, with 39 of its 54 state colleges desegregated, and North Carolina, with nine of 17, are next. Alabama, Mississippi and South Carolina have been slowest in dropping racial bars, with one desegregated public university in each state.

Negro Activities Restricted

Negro encouragement at the pickup in Negro enrolments in the South has been dampened somewhat by severe restrictions often placed on activities of Negro students once they are on campus. Though Negroes have attended the University of Texas for 13 years, they still aren't permitted to participate in varsity athletics.

Even on this point Negroes are registering gains. Next fall, for example, several Atlantic Coast Conference schools will begin using Negroes on their football teams for the first time. The conference is primarily made up of schools in Maryland and the Carolinas.

In the Southeast Conference, which includes the Universities of Mississippi and Alabama, Negro athletes may also bow this fall.

This was disclosed a few weeks ago when the University of Kentucky announced it would permit Negroes to join its varsity athletic program.

TULSA, OKLA.
EAGLE
W. 6,500

JUN 13 1963

Between the Lines

By Dean Gordon Hancock

WASHINGTON NOT A HELL-HOLE

Ever since Washington made an honest attempt to integrate its public schools in accordance with the Supreme Court's decision in 1954, the Negro-phobe press of the Old South has gone about its subtle efforts to discredit Washington in the eyes of the world.

If it could be proved that Washington's integration was a great mistake, then the case of the Old South against integration would stand up. The Old South and its Negro-phobe press went out to prove that integration was a failure, because by integration Washington has been turned into a modern Sodom and Gomorroh with its unparalleled crime wave.

A serious attempt has been made to brainwash the nation by painting a lurid picture of crime in the nation's capitol. It has been made to appear that rape and robbery were routine in that fine city of culture and fine things. Washington's streets have been declared unsafe for the passers-by, and in short the city was the nation's hell-hole, and all because it went about public school integration as the whole South and nation should have gone about it.

In order to justify its massive resistance and its interposition tactics, the Old South went about the villification of a beautiful city to prove that integration was a great mistake. The lie about Washington's integration has been powerfully told by the Negro phobe press of the Old South, but the truth is just coming to light. Washington is not the hell-hole it has been painted!

Rape and robbery are not routine in that city that stands among the best governed cities of the land and one of the most orderly.

The Southern Regional Council in its May newsletter releases facts and figures based upon FBI reports which counter the big lie that Washington is the most criminal city in the land.

From the Council's newsletter we read: "These statistics are taken from a March 4, 1963 report of the FBI. This report also shows that in murder, non-negligent manslaughter, Atlanta is first with a 13.5 increase over 1961, and Washington is fourth with an increase of 3.4 per cent forcible rape. Chicago is first and Washington eighteenth with an 18 percent decrease; robbery, Chicago is first again and Washington sixth with a 16.6 per cent increase; burglary-breaking or entering, Los Angeles is first with a 6.4 increase, and Washington is sixteenth with a 2.4 per cent increase; larceny $50 and over, Los Angeles is first with a 6.5 per cent increase, and Washington is eighteenth with a 8.2 per cent increase auto theft, Chicago is first and Washington is fourteenth with a 5 per cent increase.

Only in aggravated assault is Washington first with an increase of 1.7 per cent. However, aggravated assaults increased in Los Angeles 2.6 per cent in Houston 12.9 per cent and in St. Louis 99.9 per cent. Washington stands high among the larger cities in law and order and while the crime rate is too high throughout the nation, there is no point in describing Washington as the hell-hole of America and just because of its stand on the desegregation of its schools in accordance with the dictates of the laws of the land.

Inasmuch as the FBI has come up with figures that give the lie to the preachments of the Negrophobe press of the Old South we are wondering which way will this press turn for food for its grist mills, which have ground out a big lie and proved it.

In all the major crimes Washington stands first in only one category and that is aggravated assault. In forcible rape which the Negrophobe press would have us believe is the Negro's specialty Washington is 18th and in robbery another supposed Negro specialty, Washington is sixth, with Chicago first.

But Washington has been held up to the world as the hell-hole of the land and all because of its policy on school integration. In the premise the distortion of fact has been abominable and dangerous.

The Old South and its Negrophobe press are millstones about the neck of our nation struggling for survival against communism.

LYNCHBURG, VA.
ADVANCE
D. 18,429

JUN 14 1963

Mrs. George S. Mitchell

African Politics Viewed By Visitor As Complicated

By LIB WILEY

Politics in Africa are too complicated for Mrs. George S. Mitchell to discuss she said in an interview at the apartment of her sister, Margaret Armstrong in The Parkmont where Mrs. Mitchell is a guest.

The visitor has recently returned after spending six months with her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Craib, at their home in Northern Rhodesia.

"I can tell you how vast the country is and how beautiful Africa is. I saw about one fourth of it and it took me five days and five nights to travel by train from Capetown to my destination in Rhodesia. The politics are too involved for me to try to understand, much less discuss the problems," the attractive woman declared.

The Craibs live in Kalulushi where Craib is a personnel worker with a large copper concern.

"There are no evidences of turmoil or trouble in the cities in Northern Rhodesia," Mrs. Mitchell said. "The cities and the shops are extremely modern with merchandise and architecture up to the minute. Africa is a fascinating continent," she added.

Before her marriage Mrs. Mitchell was a school librarian in Knoxville, Tenn. She is an alumna of Randolph-Macon Woman's College and she took her graduate work in library science at the Emory University Library School.

Since her husband's death last year, she says she would like to return to the work of school librarian "I like that phase best," she said "because I love working with children and with students."

Mrs. Mitchell's daughter, Charlotte, lives in New York where she is with the Wenner-Gren Foundation for Anthropological Research.

A few years ago the Mitchell family went to Scotland to live. Dr. Mitchell, a former Rhodes Scholar to Oxford University in England, became interested in living in Scotland after his retirement while he was a student in Great Britain, Mrs. Mitchell said. Scottish friends permitted the Mitchells to build a house on their land. Mrs. Mitchell laughs at the recollection.

"My memories of our life in Scotland are very happy ones but let me tell you building a house is no easy task. I was chief cement mixer," she recalled. The result was a house with enough bedrooms and two baths and ample accommodations for the Mitchells.

"We had lots of fun. We lived in the village of Glencoe and every one was wonderful to us. I felt they were truly our friends. We moved into the house when it simply had walls and a roof. One of our friends who came to see us remarked, 'this is the first time I have ever visited in the bare bones of a house!' We loved it and had a great time."

Mrs. Mitchell is naturally vitally interested in the progress of the Negro race and in race relations. She is the widow of a man who was an authority on the subject and Dr. Mitchell devoted his entire time working with the Southern Regional Council in Atlanta, an inter-racial organization with a membership of both white and Negro leaders.

"I am not capable of commenting on any thing," Mrs. Mitchell remarked, "but," she added, "I am sure my husband would be bitterly disappointed at the turn events have taken. He hoped and believed and worked toward the end that everything and all problems between the races could be worked out amicably, intelligently and satisfactorily for all concerned."

GARDEN CITY, N.Y.
NEWSDAY
D. 344,789

JUN 14 1963

Increased Racial Effort Starts to Show Results

By Bernie Bookbinder

By mass demonstration, court order and quiet negotiation, the stepped-up campaign by integrationists this week began to make headway across the nation. Although civil rights leaders recognized that many of the concessions were merely token, they were also aware that they indicated a measure of progress.

From a public pool in Atlanta, where white and Negro children swam together for the first time, to a meeting room in San Francisco, where the school board announced it would eliminate de facto segregation, the barriers of discrimination were being breached. And it appeared that this kind of progress would continue to be made despite current outbreaks of racial violence.

The changes could be assessed from (1) how much has been accomplished and (2) how much remained.

The Southern School News reported that only 7.9 per cent of the 3,300,000 Negro children in the South attended classes with whites this year — an increase of merely .3 per cent over 1962.

But an official of the biracial Southern Regional Council said that the University of Alabama "probably represents the last big public battle over integrated education at the college level. Token integration is now a reality at every major state university in the South and it will become increasingly easy for Negroes to gain admission to formerly all-white schools."

The Southern Education Reporting Service said that of 240 state-owned colleges and universities in 17 southern and border states, 172 have admitted Negroes — 64 of them within the past two years. And 147 of the South's private colleges — including 53 in the past two years — have become integrated.

Headway on Other Fronts

On other fronts, Nashville's leading hotels, motels and restaurants have agreed to desegregate in what Negro leaders described as a "major breakthrough after three years of battling." The agreement was announced by a biracial committee appointed after a violent demonstration on May 13.

Similar committees are functioning in virtually all sections of the country. Their purpose, as expressed by University of Kansas Law Dean Frederick Lewis, head of the Kansas City committee, is "to keep ahead of the problem and do the right thing by all citizens of this community without force."

Last week such bodies were set up in Oklahoma City and Wayne County, Mich. Their effectiveness has been apparent in North Carolina, where hotels and restaurants dropped color bars in Winston-Salem, Raleigh, Durham, Statesville and Charlotte, theaters ended segregated seating and some municipal swimming pools were integrated. Just last night, Mayor David Schenck of Greensboro ordered immediate integration of his racially-troubled city's hotels, restaurants and theaters.

In many areas, integration was being accomplished quietly. Two Negro women entered Texarkana Junior College in northeast Texas without serious incident Wednesday, although in 1956 crowds of whites prevented Negro students from enrolling.

And in Little Rock, Ark., where schools were violently integrated in 1957, city officials said that restaurants, hotels, lunch counters and theaters have been desegregated in recent months.

In Orlando, Fla., a majority of businessmen have agreed to hire Negroes as clerks, salesmen, secretaries and in other "visible" jobs generally reserved for whites.

FLORENCE, ALA.
TIMES
D. 11,691 S. 11,191

JUN 15 1963

Letters To The Editor

THE BUSINESSMEN POINT THE WAY

Editor: Business groups in a number of southern cities have recently issued statements calling on all businesses serving the public to desegregate. The texts of these statements are reprinted below:

DIRECTORS OF THE RALEIGH, N. C., MERCHANTS BUREAU:

"God-fearing people, as responsible citizens, and all people of good will, must face the fact that peace in human relations is essential.

"Being charged with the responsibility of offering leadership to business in the community of Raleigh, we are convinced we should, without further delay, remove all policies in both government and business which deny rights and services because of race.

"The overriding challenge now confronting every Raleigh business person is to do these things that would further human relations and the continued growth of Raleigh."

CHARLOTTE, N. C., CHAMBER OF COMMERCE:

"We, the Directors of the Charlotte Chamber of Commerce, recommend that all businesses in this community catering to the general public be opened immediately to all customers without regard to race, creed or color."

GREENSBORO, N. C., CHAMBER OF COMMERCE:

"The Board of Directors of the Greensboro Chamber of Commerce endorses the principle of equal treatment for all persons, without regard to race, color or religion and urges business firms to begin immediately serving all persons of the community.

"The Board also recommends cooperation of community organizations to muster support of Greensboro citizens for the principle endorsed by this resolution."

"Further, in the interest of public safety and to encourage the continued development of good community relationships, the Board urges that gatherings of large masses of people, which endanger public safety and disrupt the orderly movement of people and traffic, be discontinued along with unlawful activities of any kind."

ATLANTA, GA., CHAMBER OF COMMERCE:

"The Atlanta Chamber of Commerce has as its prime mission that of building a strong economy, one that all Atlanta citizens might share. This is [illegible] the climate of harmony and [illegible] operation that has [illegible] and [illegible] will be able to successfully continue its efforts only if this climate continues.

"The future of Atlanta is too bright and too sure to be tarnished by hatred, strife, and discord. The Chamber of Commerce will never allow itself to be placed in the position of trying to tell any proprietor how he should conduct his business. This choice belongs to each proprietor.

"Atlanta has too much ahead of her that needs to be accomplished to allow her attention to be diverted to nonproductive strife and conflict that can bring only chaos to the city and its people."

KNOXVILLE, TENN., CHAMBER OF COMMERCE:

(A statement circulated for voluntary signatures in Knoxville; about 3,500 citizens had signed this statement as of June 3, 1963).

"Believing in the equal rights of all people. . .

And; believing that what is morally right is economically sound . . .

And, believing in observing the law of the land . . .

We, the undersigned, pledge ourselves to work peacefully for the prompt and orderly desegregation of all public facilities in our community."

(Signed) Southern Regional Council, Inc.,
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.,
Atlanta 3, Ga.

ATLANTA, GA.
INQUIRER
W. 18,960

PAGE ONE CERTIFIED

JUN 15 1963

$10,000 Offered For Ever's Slayer

Medgar Evers

NAACP's Roy Wilkens and Ruby Hurley are among top officials who flew to Jackson Miss. this week after the Tuesday shooting in the back of their fellow worker. $10 thousand dollars reward is being offered for the apprehension of the murderer.

"Men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil". This biblical statement never crossed the minds of the murderer who released a shot in the shadows of darkness and struck down 37 year old Medgar Evers, NAACP field secretary for the state of Mississippi.

Evers was born in Decatur, Mississippi and received his education in his native state at Alcorn A&M University. In 1952 he joined the NAACP and became a staff member of the organization in 1954.

No stranger to Mississippi

CONTINUED ON PAGE 2

$10,000 Offered

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 1

violence, Evers witnessed more in his 37 years than a person should be exposed to in a lifetime. At the age of 14, he saw his father's friend lynched for "insulting a white woman". He became more involved in 1961 when police beat him in a courtroom for applauding Negro defendants. As recently as May 28 of this year, a bombing attempt was made on his home. Since that time Evers was reportedly quite edgy, fearing for the safety of his wife and three children, aged 9, 8, and 3 years.

The June 1, 1963 issue of the New York Times carried a story on the Quiet Integrationist - Man in the News. In this issue, the Times quoted Evers thusly: I may be going to heaven or hell, but I'll be going from Jackson (Miss.) . . . "We're going to get Negroes registered and voting, despite the literacy test. With that basic political power, we'll continue working toward economic strength." "When my sons are grown, they're going to find Jackson even better than New York City."

The newspaper article also pointed out the quiet, methodical manner in which Evers handled his affairs.

Atlantans who either knew Evers or were aware of his work had this to day of his untimely death:

Heman Sweat - Urban League - I think the death of Medgar Evers illustrates the stupidity of the common mind. It is ironical that the man who assassinated him though very likely white, was in Medgar's great vision a cold benefactor in the cause to which he gave of his young intelligent and militant soul. He was very truly one of America's great young men of this generation.

Clarence Coleman - Atlanta Urban League - The killing of Evers was an atrocious

CONTINUED ON PAGE 10

$10,000 Offered

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 2

dastardly act. All the forces for good, churches and civic organizations, should do everything to bring the culprit to justice.

VERNON JORDAN - SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL - Medgar Evers was a personal friend of mine. He was a good courageous person with an unusual sense of dedication and purpose in the area of civil rights in Mississippi. The freedom fight in Mississippi will never be the same without him. I have lost a close friend and I think his death was a damnable and inhuman act.

WILEY BRANTON -SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL - Voter Education Project - I view the death of Medgar Evers as such a great personal loss that I have not had the time to think about his death in any other light. We were so closely associated on so many occasions that have great meaning to me.

I do not know how to really express my feelings over his death.

DONALD HOLLOWELL - ATTORNEY - I view the death of Medgar Evers with extreme regret and equally extreme alarm. He was an unusually amiable, effective and tireless worker for Human Rights. Few people were as dedicated or as enthusiastic. His loss to the civil rights field is national in scope. I sincerely trust we will not permit his untimely death to be in vain.

The Atlanta Branch NAACP sent telegrams to the Mayor of Jackson Mississippi, the Governor of Mississippi, and President Kennedy. A letter of condolence was also sent to Evers' family.

ATLANTA, GA.
WORLD
D. 29,800

PAGE ONE CERTIFIED

JUN 19 1963

Appeal Made In Airport Strike

Officials of the Union representing over 250 Negroes striking against the Dobbs House restaurant chain at the Atlanta airport are appealing to the general public for moral and active support for what they called "a rotten setup in which someone's got to do something about it."

Picketing action at the airport is in its second month with no sign of mediation with company officials in sight. The company, meanwhile, is continuing its operations with non-union workers, or what is commonly called "scabs."

The compay's apparent success in the use of these non-union workers (who are also Negroes), and the company's refusal to mediate with the union in ending the strike has caused the union great concern.

A decision to carry the issues involved to the public was reached by the union a few days ago. This is one of numerous moves designed to bring the issues out into the open and to level a many-front attack at Dobbs House.

THE PUBLIC SHOULD KNOW

W. B. Race of the Hotel and Restaurant Employees Union has said that since this is an action to get decent wages and working conditions for Negroes it is only fitting that the Negro public be told what the fight is about.

Race also said the Negro public, must be told how important is that they not hurt the cause of their own racial group by crossing their picket lines as Dobbs House customers or taking jobs as non-union workers.

Representatives of several organizations last week heard union representives appeal for their influence in getting the message of the strike issues to the masses. In addition to the press and radio, representatives of Atlanta Baptist Ministers Union, Southern Regional Council, Atlanta Negro Voters League and the Atlanta Urban League heard the appeal.

In reply to the union's appeal for public concern and support the Atlanta Baptist Union Tuesday went on record as backing the union's fight in behalf of the Negro strikers, and announced it would appoint committee to study the issues and make recommendations as to how ministers can put their backing into action.

In reviewing the issues and employee griviences which precipitated the strike the employees say they object to numerous company practices, including wages, overtime and reporting pay, uniforms, and what they say is a company rule that they pay for their meals "regardless."

PICKETS HARRASSED

The union, which won the right to represent the employees shortly before the strike started, more recently has charged the company, the airport patrol, and a private detective agency with constant har-

(Continued on Page 6, Col. 3)

Appeal Made

(Continued from Page One)

ressment of the pickets. There have been approximately 60 pickets arrested since the strike began, says the union, with charges ranging from too many congregating to attempted murder.

The union has made certain accusations on the company in its use of non-union workers, and charges Dobbs House with operating in violation of city ordiances and county health regulations. We are prepared to back up all of these charges we make against Dobbs House, says Joseph Jacobs, the union attorney.

One leading Negro minister, after listening to union and strike representives, said "Dobbs House is not hurt yet." Since they are not willing to arbitrate we must find a way to hurt them and to give moral and physical strength to those Negroes who are picketing.

ATLANTA, GA
WORLD
D. 29,800

PAGE ONE
CERTIFIED

JUN 20 1963

Meets 30 Leaders Saturday . . .

Hollowell, Branton Invited To JFK Rights Meet With Lawyers

President Kennedy has invited three Altanta Negro Lawyers along with a group of bar leaders to meet with him at the White House Friday to discuss certain aspects of the nation's civil rights problems.

The three Atlantans, civil rights lawyer Donald L. Hollowell, Willy Branton, director of Voter Education with the Southern Regional Council, and State Sen. Leroy Johnson, will meet today and map plans for their discussions with the President, it was learned.

The telegram to the lawyers stated: This matter merits serious and immediate attention, and I would be pleased to have you attend the meeting to be held in the East room of the White House. Please advise whether you will be able to attend.

Kennedy also invited 30 Negro and white leaders to meet with him Saturday for a discussion of the nation's racial problems.

The group includes the Rev. Martin Luther King and Roy Wilkins, head of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP).

A White House announcement said the Saturday morning session would be part of the continuing effort of the President to meet with a number of different groups on the racial problem confronting the nation.

Press Secretary Pierre Salinger stood on that statement when asked whether the meeting was in line with Kennedy's plea Wednesday for an end to racial demonstrations that could provoke violence while Congress considers his civil right proposals.

Kennedy already has discussed civil rights with specialized groups from the fields of business, labor, religion-and-Wednesday education. He will meet with a group a lawyers Friday.

The announcement of Saturday's session came after the President talked with 250 leading educators. He asked them to set up a committee that would work at the grass roots level to provide better schools ing wihout racial barriers.

Invitations were said to have gone out for Saturday to a group including the following: King and Wilkins; James Farmer, national secretary of the Committee on Racial Equality, (CORE); Walter Reuther, president of the United Auto Workers; Boris Shishkin, director of the AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department; Ralph McGill, writer and editor of the Atlanta Constitution; Oscar Lee, executive director for race relations of the National Council of Churches; Whitney Young, executive director of the National Urban League; and A. Phillip Randolph, president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters.

ATLANTA, GA.
WORLD
D. 29,800

JUN 23 1963

Race Relations Workers To Meet In Nashville

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Over 140 workers in the field of race relations from more than 30 states are preparing to meet here from June 24 to July 6 for the 20th Annual Race Relations Institute, to be held at Fisk University. They will represent both public and private agencies ,ranging from state and municipal antidiscrimination commissions to church groups ,and other community organizations, working for interracial harmony.

The Institute, sponsored by the United Church of Christ, is the nation's oldest form for the discussion of racial problems. Throughout its 20 years of existence, as U. S. racial patterns have been undergoing increasingly rapid change, it has provided training for local leaders in intergroup relations. Many past participants are now involved in promoting peaceful and equitable resolutions to the current racial crisis in their own communities.

Dr. Herman H. Long, director of the Institute, states that its basic purpose is "to assess the status of current developments, provide authoritative information on the psychological, sociological, political, economic and religious aspects of intergroup problems, and to evaluate tehniques and strategies."

Dr. Long is Race Relations Secretary of the American Missionary Association Division of the United Church of Christ's Board for Home land Ministeries. This division and the Council for Christian Social Action of the same church have the responsibility for the yearly Institute program.

The Department of Racial and Cultural Relations of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U. S. A. and Fisk University also assist in the presentation of the Institute.

The participants will hear government officials discuss the programs and problems of government agencies concerned with racial matters. These include the Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice, the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights, the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, the Federal Housing Administration and the Public Housing Administration. Non-federal agencies represented are the Department of Labor of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico and the Pennsylvania Commission on Human Relations.

Other Institute sessions will feature speakers from private organizations working to promote better human relations and equal opportunities for all citizens. Some of these will be the N. A. A. C. P., the Catholic Interracial Council, the American Jewish Committee, the Southern Regional Council, the Southern Christian Leadership Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

Their topics will include the current status of school desegregation — north as well as south, the religious dimensions of racial issues, the historical background of U. S. race relations, race and housing, voter registration in the South, employment problems of minority groups, and the international implications of domestic racial conflict.

The problems and prospects of American Indians and Puerto Ricans will also be examined, rounding out the study of U. S. minority problems. There will also be a discussion of anti-Semitism in the U. S. today.

All speeches form the basis for seminar discussions among the participants, with questions directed to the speakers. In addition, there will be clinics and workshops concentrating on employment problems, community action, and religion and race. Films will also be shown, dealing with these and other aspects of racial issues which effect the lives of U. S. citizens today.

ATLANTA, GA.
JOURNAL-CONSTITUTION
SUN. 504,755

JUN 23 1963

JFK Questions Marches In Meeting With King

No Pledge to Cease Either Asked or Given

By MARGARET SHANNON
Atlanta Journal Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON, June 22—President Kennedy questioned the advisability of racial demonstrations in a private meeting Saturday with Negro integration leader Martin Luther King Jr. of Atlanta, but did not ask for nor get a promise to call them off.

Dr. King said the President "made it clear that he has seen some of the constructive aspects of demonstrations, but some have led to violence and he is very much concerned about that."

The private meeting preceded a conference at which the President asked some 30 civil rights leaders for support for legislation he sent to Congress this week. He received their pledge of help.

DR. KING, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, said that a plan for 100,000 Negroes to march on Washington this summer still stands.

He reported that President Kennedy said that "some had expressed to him the fear that it may hurt rather than help" the chances of passing the civil rights legislation.

But Dr. King said that he and other Negro leaders backing the idea "feel that if there is a filibuster, we will have no alternative" except to stage the massive demonstration in the capital.

The President "made it clear" to the larger group that he does not think racial demonstrations will be helpful while Congress considers the civil rights legislation, another participant in the conference said.

Whitney M. Young Jr. of New York, formerly of Atlanta, said, however, that no Negro leader present made any promise about a moratorium on demonstrations. Mr. Young is executive director of the National Urban League.

DR. KING said the President "hopes that all demonstrations will be peaceful and that any disturbances can be minimized." The Negro leader said he is doing all he can to see that his nonviolent approach is followed by demonstrators.

President Kennedy met with Dr. King privately for about half an hour. He also held a separate private meeting with Roy Wilkins of New York, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Mr. Wilkins, in talking to reporters, was noticeably cool toward the idea of any giant demonstration in Washington. "I have no plans to participate," he said.

DR. KING said details of the demonstration here have not been worked out and he is not sure yet that there will be sit-ins in the offices of Southern senators and House members, as proposed by some Negro leaders.

Turn to Page 11, Column 3

MARCHES

Continued From Page 1

Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson and Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy attended the larger conference. The civil rights leaders present included advocates of varying ideas of how to go about ending racial discrimination.

The President remained in the meeting about an hour and a half and the discussion continued after he left. The meeting took place in the cabinet room at the White House.

BESIDES Dr. King, Atlantans on the list of participants included John Lewis of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee, Lesley Dunbar of the Southern Regional Council and James M. Dabbs, also of the council.

Ralph McGill, publisher of the Atlanta Constitution, whose name was on the list, was not present.

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
NEWS-JOURNAL
SAT. & SUN. 38,426

JUN 2 3 1963

Our Culture Is Increasing, Too

Culture can soften the stern walls of existence and open windows in the heart to laughter, conjecture and gentle wonder.

The past year in the Greater Daytona Beach Area brought an upsurge in cultural activity matching the increased population.

The dictionary defines culture as "the training, improvement and refinement of mind, morals or taste."

In the colorful forms and movement of art, the caress of music, or the challenge of ideas discussed or read, many find a balance of sanity modifying the increased pressures and regimentation of an automated era.

Whether the inclination of the individual was toward dramatics or discussion, chamber music or musical comedy, participation or observation, there were offerings during the past year in the Daytona Beach area to please and improve the "mind, morals or taste."

Dramatics for all ages were at Peabody Auditorium, the Little Theater, and in nightblooming coffee houses.

Music from abroad, Broadway and band rooms of Florida high schools and colleges was presented by the Florida Symphony, Civic Music Assn., Tourist Club, and by the City of Daytona Beach Recreation Dept. at the Bandshell.

Subjects ranging from parental authority to the Peace Corps, from great books to grim human responsibilities, were discussed at the Open Forum meetings and by individual groups of the area.

Art dabblers, devotees and critics were kept busy by shows and activities of the Art League, Beaux Arts, the Museum of Arts and Sciences, and individual artists and designers.

Light and sprightly music and patter brought sellout crowds for two independent Peabody Auditorium offerings that highpointed the lighter side of the past year. The first was a full road company production of the Broadway musical, "Carnival," that jammed the house in November. The second SRO engagement was "An Evening With Victor Borge" in February that showcased the rapid wit and keyboard talent of the "great Dane" for a solid two hours of in the aisle entertainment.

Other Peabody Auditorium programs ran the gamut from Grand Old Opry twang and suds in your eye vaudeville to the science of surfboarding and diamond evaluation.

A high voltage finale to Little [illegible] 1962-63 terlude that prefaced the LT season's biggest success; February's swinging, singing "Bells Are Ringing."

A stark view of the good earth was vividly portrayed in March by the Green Room players in "An Evening with Tennessee Williams," but the outlook brightened with April's madcap "Come Blow Your Horn."

The light but deft touch of the young was given the sprightly old lines of "Ladies in Retirement," by senior members of LT's Junior Theater in May; and the still younger Junior Theater set proved they were professionals, too, in that month's "Cinderella."

"Antigone," a Greek tragedy in modern dress, was a bonus performance for LT audiences that closed the season and opened the Florida Theater Festival.

Over the years the Daytona Beach Open Forum has brought to this area a long roster of illustrious names. It has probably sparked more debate and discussion than any other local activity.

In the 50 years the Open Forum has been in existence, there have been several occasions when lack of finances threatened to end the thought prokoving sessions. The latest crisis came halfway through this past year's season.

State and national political structure was analyzed Jan. 13 by Dr. William G. Carleton, University of Florida professor emeritus of political science.

The responsibilities of those in educational fields were pointed out by Dr. Louis Joughin, associate secretary of the American Assn. of University Professors, on the Open Forum Jan. 20.

A "bonus" speaker was U. S. Sen. Birch Bayh, Indiana Democrat, on Jan. 27. Sen. Bayh outlined his views of Medicare as a strong advocate of the King-Anderson - Javits medicare program.

The U. S. and U. N.'s potential for peace was discussed Feb. 3, by B. Tartt Bell, executive secretary of the American Friends Service Committee's Southeastern Office, and associate director of the U. N. program of the Quakers.

Edith Green, U. S. Representative from Oregon's Third Dist., seored the religious controversy that has hampered passage of a federal aid to education bill in her Forum talk Feb. 10.

"No longer can we depend on our natural resources, luck and pluck," she emphasized, "We realize now that brainpower, including competent scientists, is our first line of defense."

The story of Pres. Kennedy's Peace Corps was told Feb. 17 by John Hutchison, administrative officer in the Corps' selection division.

Deviating from politics and international affairs, the Feb. 24 Open Forum dealt with the fine arts and their interpretation. Philip Rhys Adams, director of the Cincinnati Art Museum and Art Academy of Cincinnati, enlarged on the opinion that art is the lasting reflector of a country's character.

"The population Explosion, a Challenge to Responsible Action," was the topic of Richard M. Fagley, at the March 3 Forum. Dr. Fagley is executive secretary for the Commission of the Church of International Affairs, World Council of Churches, New York City.

U. S. Sen. Sherman Cooper, Republican Senator from Kentucky, announced his feelings on Senate reform March 10. Members of the Senate waste too much valuable time on filibusters, traveling between committees and chambers for votes, on late arrivals at committee meetings who hold up progress until they are briefed on the part of the meeting they missed, Cooper stated.

The final offering of the Open Forum season, March 17, came in two parts.

The first was a program danced by the Daytona Beach Civic Ballet Company, a group of junior high school students and young people of high school and college age who are studying ballet, and meet once a week to perform together.

The speaker's part of the program brought the audience from the fantasy world of ballet to the stark reality of today, with a sharp edged description of Southern statesmanship by Dr. Leslie W. Dunbar, executive director of the Southern Regional Council, Atlanta.

Tourist Club is a nonprofit organization established to bring quality programs of broad interest to the area, and make them available at minimal cost. The club was formed primarily to serve low income retired residents, but has grown to include members of all ages and income. Membership has become so large almost every [illegible]

Brahms concert Jan. 23. One reviewer described the evening thusly: "Under the distinguished direction of Wallenstein, the (Florida Symphony) orchestra performed with vigor and enthusiasm. The symphony was particularly well done, and the main credit goes to Wallenstein, who obviously knows what he wants and how to go after it."

The bright and spritely score of Humperdinck's "Hansel and Gretel" charmed Daytona Beach's younger set (and escorting adults) at a special children's matinee Feb. 9. The musical adaptation of Grimm's fairy tale was played by the Florida Symphony, and danced by the Edith Royal Ballet Troup of Orlando.

Applause at the Feb. 15 program finale was as much for the fine effect of a newly installed acoustical shell that smoothed and properly diffused the skillfully orchestrated sound of the Symphony as it was for the brilliant, impeccable piano style of guest soloist Rudolph Firkusny.

An 18 year old pianist, Lorin Hollander, was guest at the next to last concert March 27.

A young people's matinee and a full evening performance of Haydn and Verdi selections augmented by four soloists and the massed choirs of Rollins College concluded the Florida Symphony's season April 4. The final, towering chords that closed the 1963 season had barely faded, however, before some of the guest soloists for the coming season were announced.

Cesare Siepi, Van Cliburn, Andre Previn and Isaac Stern are signed as guests for next Winter's season — strong inducement to acquire season tickets.

An effort to list the dozens of groups of artists active in the area would be a truly formidable task.

There are those who create with words, with water colors, with wire and wheels. They work with pottery, photography, and bits of dried geography. And all of them are artists. Some are schooled in the lines of formal design, others of all ages are attending arts and crafts classes, and many work alone with their individual, self taught forms of expression.

Some of the larger groups of area artists are the Daytona Beach Art League, the Art Center, the Beaux Arts Club; and the more inclusive Volusia County Artists Assn. and Florida Artists Group.

The work of individuals, classes and clubs are displayed throughout the year at small showings in lobbies, show windows and art galleries, in conjunction with social and civic club events, and in sidewalk exhibits usually tied in with large scale area activities.

Statewide and national interest was attracted to the Daytona Beach area in March by the Daytona Beach Sidewalk Art Festival in Riverfront Park. Artists, photographers, sculptors and craftsmen from throughout the state displayed their works in a two day exhibit to benefit the growing Museum of Arts and Sciences, sponsored by the Downtown Merchants Assn.

The organization most actively supported by organizational activities in the past year has been the Museum of Arts and Sciences, presently housed on the campus of the Daytona Beach Junior College.

In addition to the donations of various civic groups this past year, the Museum was advised that Volusia County Commissioners had allocated it a $10,000 operating fund, to be used when the new Museum building has been built and is in operation.

The museum presently offers exhibits and artifacts, children's nature and art programs and field trips, lectures on archaeology, science and modern art, and archaeology diggings.

A lease has been obtained on a section of Tuscawilla Park for a Children's Museum; and plans are now being made for an early construction date.

"Sound of Music," the touring Broadway musical by Rodgers and Hammerstein, Lindsay and Crouse and other assorted notables, delighted the largest Civic Music Assn. audience in history at Peabody Auditorium in March. The auditorium was filled.

Packed audiences have become a habit with Civic Music, and last year's advance membership sold out for the first time in the association's history.

In addition to the smash hit musical, Civic Music's 25th anniversary season offered a concert by the Vienna Choir Boys Jan. 21 and one by pianist James Mathis Feb. 7.

The Ramat - Gan Israeli Chamber Orchestra, comprised of 12 young men and women instrumentalists on their first tour of North America, played for members and guests Feb. 24.

Civic Music's final concert, by baritone Theodore Uppmann, was sprinkled liberally with seldom heard selections. Included in the program were an aria from "The Damnation of Faust," and a group of contemporary songs by Ives, Cowell, and Vaughn Williams.

There are many more area, neighborhood, interorganizational and private groups that meet regularly to share a love of music, or handwork, discussion or design.

Where people gather to share a mutual interest in books, in history, in anything that improves the mind and sensibilities, the community is enriched by the association.

Without these groups, without such "cultural" influence, it would be a drab and joyless World.

"mind, morals or taste."

Dramatics for all ages were at Peabody Auditorium, the Little Theater, and in nightblooming coffee houses.

Music from abroad, Broadway and band rooms of Florida high schools and colleges was presented by the Florida Symphony, Civic Music Assn., Tourist Club, and by the City of Daytona Beach Recreation Dept. at the Bandshell.

Subjects ranging from parental authority to the Peace Corps, from great books to grim human responsibilities, were discussed at the Open Forum meetings and by individual groups of the area.

Art dabblers, devotees and critics were kept busy by shows and activities of the Art League, Beaux Arts, the Museum of Arts and Sciences, and individual artists and designers.

Light and sprightly music and patter brought sellout crowds for two independent Peabody Auditorium offerings that highpointed the lighter side of the past year. The first was a full road company production of the Broadway musical, "Carnival," that jammed the house in November. The second SRO engagement was "An Evening With Victor Borge" in February that showcased the rapid wit and keyboard talent of the "great Dane" for a solid two hours of in the aisle entertainment.

Other Peabody Auditorium programs ran the gamut from Grand Old Opry twang and suds in your eye vaudeville to the science of surfboarding and diamond evaluation.

A high voltage finale to Little Theater activities for the 1962-63 season was the fourth annual Florida Theater Festival in Daytona Beach June 8 through 15. The festival schedule this year called for afternoon drama seminars at the Voyager Motel, and performances each night at the Little Theater riverfront location on Jessamine Blvd. Represented were dramatic groups from Barry College, Miami; University of South Florida's Drama Dept., Fort Lauderdale Children's Theater; Florida Players of the University of Florida; Orlando Players Little Theater; Miami Dade County Junior College; and the Orange Blossom Players from Orlando.

The versatility of our Little Theater players was displayed. "Gigi," in October, was a bit of French fluff; and November's "Country Girl," by Clifford Odets, was American flavored comedy.

The experimental LT Green Room players put on the controversial "Hat Full of Rain" in December; balanced by the Gremlins, youngest Little Theater members, who started the New Year by taking the audience to "Alice in Wonderland's" magic world.

It was back to reality, of sorts, for January's "Everybody Loves Opal," a merrily murderous in-

Over the years the Daytona Beach Open Forum has brought to this area a long roster of illustrious names. It has probably sparked more debate and discussion than any other local activity.

In the 50 years the Open Forum has been in existence, there have been several occasions when lack of finances threatened to end the thought prokoving sessions. The latest crisis came halfway through this past year's season.

State and national political structure was analyzed Jan. 13 by Dr. William G. Carleton, University of Florida professor emeritus of political science.

The responsibilities of those in educational fields were pointed out by Dr. Louis Joughin, associate secretary of the American Assn. of University Professors, on the Open Forum Jan. 20.

A "bonus" speaker was U. S. Sen. Birch Bayh, Indiana Democrat, on Jan. 27. Sen. Bayh outlined his views of Medicare as a strong advocate of the King-Anderson - Javits medicare program.

The U. S. and U. N.'s potential for peace was discussed Feb. 3, by B. Tartt Bell, executive secretary of the American Friends Service Committee's Southeastern Office, and associate director of the U. N. program of the Quakers.

Edith Green, U. S. Representative from Oregon's Third Dist., seored the religious controversy that has hampered passage of a Affairs, World Council of Churches, New York City.

U. S. Sen. Sherman Cooper, Republican Senator from Kentucky, announced his feelings on Senate reform March 10. Members of the Senate waste too much valuable time on filibusters, traveling between committees and chambers for votes, on late arrivals at committee meetings who hold up progress until they are briefed on the part of the meeting they missed, Cooper stated.

The final offering of the Open Forum season, March 17, came in two parts.

The first was a program danced by the Daytona Beach Civic Ballet Company, a group of junior high school students and young people of high school and college age who are studying ballet, and meet once a week to perform together.

The speaker's part of the program brought the audience from the fantasy world of ballet to the stark reality of today, with a sharp edged description of Southern statesmanship by Dr. Leslie W. Dunbar, executive director of the Southern Regional Council, Atlanta.

Tourist Club is a nonprofit organization established to bring quality programs of broad interest to the area, and make them available at minimal cost. The club was formed primarily to serve low income retired residents, but has grown to include members of all ages and income. Membership has become so large almost every Tourist Club program at Peabody Auditorium the past year played to a capacity season membership audience.

The last Tourist Club season began Dec. 4, and consisted of 15 weekly programs of music, travelogues and vocal groups.

Music was provided by the Stetson University Concert Band, Seabreeze High School Band, and the University of Florida Orchestra and Gator Band.

Vocal entertainment was by the University of Florida Woman's Glee Club, Stetson University Concert Choir, and barbershop harmonizers from the SPEBSQSA.

Armchair travelers, by way of color films, visited countries from Tasmania to the Tropics; including Italy, Central America, Puerto Rico and the Mediterranean.

Exceptional programs were the Christmas Oratorio by the Stetson University Concert Choir and Orchestra, and a special performance by the Stetson University players of the comedy, "Boy Friend."

Classic orchestral studies of melodic theme and counterpoint as well as experimental tonal patterns were developed under the baton of Henry Mazer in the Florida Symphony Orchestra's 12th Daytona Beach season this year.

The Orlando based orchestra opened its season here Jan. 9 with a program of Mendelssohn, Beethoven, Debussy and Prokofieff.

Alfred Wallenstein, of Carnegie Hall Symphony of the Air, was guest conductor of an all

An 18 year old pianist, Lorin Hollander, was guest at the next to last concert March 27.

A young people's matinee and alone with their self taught formi sion.

Some of the lar area artists are th

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN-TIMES
D. 543,420 S. 651,327
JUN 23 1963

PAGE ONE
CERTIFIED

New Rights Marches Due

By Julius Duscha
Washington Post Special

WASHINGTON—President Kennedy warned Negro leaders Saturday of the dangers of peaceful civil-rights demonstrations leading to violence. But in a 90-minute White House meeting with Negro and white leaders of civil-rights organizations, the President did not call for an end to demonstrations.

The leaders, who included Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference and Roy Wilkins of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, told Mr. Kennedy that demonstrations would continue.

"I made it very clear we could not in all good conscience call off any massive demonstrations," Dr. King told reporters after the meeting, "until the problems that brought these demonstrations into being are solved."

Among the demonstrations being planned by Dr. King's organization is a march on Washington by 100,000 persons in mid-August. The demonstration would be part of an effort to get Congress to pass the President's civil rights program.

Dr. King said it had not yet been decided whether the marchers would stage a sit-in at the Capitol and in the Senate and House office buildings.

Shortly after the President

Turn to Page 4

Kennedy Told Rights Marches To Go On

Continued from Page 1

met with the Negro and white leaders the White House announced two major civil rights actions taken by Mr. Kennedy.

1 He issued an executive order giving government agencies the authority to cut off federal funds from any construction project where there is discrimination against Negroes.

2 He sent to Defense Sec. Robert S. McNamara a report prepared by a White House advisory committee recommending the armed services consider the closing of military installation in areas where there is discrimination and asked McNamara for his recommendations for action on the report within 30 days.

Racial disturbances continue in many states. Story on Page 16.

Public's attitude on racially mixed neighborhoods. See Gallup Poll, Page 10, Section Two.

Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy (left) talks with Negro leaders on the White House grounds. With him are (l. to r.) Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., Southern Christian Leadership Conference; Roy T. Wilkins, National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, and A. Phillip Randolph, Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters. (AP)

In Eighth Meeting

The meeting with civil rights leaders was the eighth that the President has held during the last two and a half weeks with community leaders from throughout the nation.

At the White House meetings he conferred with more than 1,000 businessmen, labor leaders, churchmen, educators and lawyers as well as governors and the civil rights leaders in an unprecedented effort to bring about desegregation of public accommodations and other civil rights advances on a voluntary basis. Similar meetings with other groups are planned when he returns from Europe.

Before meeting with the 30 Negro and white leaders, Mr. Kennedy had separate half-hour conferences with Dr. King and Wilkins, two of the principal forces in the Negro civil rights movement.

At both of these meetings as well as at the conference with all 30 of the civil rights leaders the President made no direct plea for the halting of demonstrations.

But he sought to convey his fear that demonstrations, however peaceful their intent may be, could lead to violence that would set back the progress being made by civil rights advocates.

One participant in the meeting said afterward that Mr. Kennedy obviously understood that the civil rights leaders hesitate to call off demonstrations because of the successes they have had with them in breaking down racial barriers and also because of the intensifying rivalries among Negro organizations.

The President seemed to be saying, this participant said, "Look, you've got your problems, but remember that I have my problems."

Mr. Kennedy did ask for, and promptly received, a pledge of help from the civil rights leaders in getting Congress to approve the broad civil rights program that he sent to Capitol Hill on Wednesday.

Government sources said the President and his aides are most concerned about demonstrations that have no specific purpose and that seemed designed to harass and intimidate local officials and businessmen.

Peaceful demonstrations organized in accordance with municipal ordinances and state laws and carried out with a specific goal in mind are less likely to bring violence and consequently are of less concern to the administration, it was said.

In talking with reporters about demonstrations after the White House meeting, Dr. King said violence usually was caused by "bystanders or brutal police forces."

Suggests New Group

"I would not go along with violent demonstrations at any time," he added. "I would be the first to urge everyone engaged to call them off. But these will be peaceful, nonviolent demonstrations."

Wilkins said the President suggested establishment of a new co-ordinating group to bring together church societies, service clubs and civic groups into the campaign for civil rights legislation.

"I offered support in grass roots work and not just pronouncements," Wilkins said. "I mean doorbell ringing, neighborhood and precinct work."

Among others attending the meeting were James Farmer of the Congress of Racial Equality, James M. Dabbs of the Southern Regional Council, president Walter P. Reuther of the AFL-CIO United Auto Workers, Whitney M. Young Jr. of the National Urban League, and Joseph M. Rauch of Americans for Democratic Action.

Johnson Takes Over

The White House meetings started at 9:30 a.m. The President left at 11:55. About 30 minutes later he went by helicopter to Camp David, Md., to spend a few hours with his family before taking off for Europe.

The conference continued with Vice President Johnson presiding. Then a number of the Negro leaders went to lunch together to discuss future strategy.

Both Wilkins and Dr. King insisted that reports about disagreement between the three major Negro groups—NAACP, Christian Leadership Conference and CORE—had been exaggerated.

Dr. King said: "We are united as never before."

Nevertheless, Wilkins said he had not been informed of the plans to march on Washington, except through the newspapers. Dr. King, whose group is considered more militant than the older NAACP, said conferences on the subject would be held this week.

MEMPHIS, TENN.
TRI-STATE DEFENDER
W. 24,000

JUN 29 1963

Race Relations Institute In Session On Fisk U. Campus

NASHVILLE — Over 140 workers in the field of race relations from more than 30 states are meeting here from June 24 to July 6 for the 20th Annual Race Relations Institute, at Fisk university, and represent public and private agencies, ranging from state and municipal antidiscrimination commissions to church groups, and other community organizations working for interracial harmony.

The Institute, sponsored by the United Church of Christ, is the nation's oldest forum for the discussion of racial problems. Throughout its 20 years of existence, it has provided training for local leaders in intergroup relations. Many past participants are now involved in promoting peaceful and equitable resolutions to the current racial crisis in their own communities.

Dr. Herman H. Long director of the Institute, states that its basic purpose is "to assess the status of current developments, provide authoritative information on the psychological, sociological, political, economic and religious aspects of intergroup problems, and to evaluate techniques and strategies."

Dr. Long is Race Relations Secretary of the American Missionary Association Division of the United Church of Christ's Board for Homeland Ministries. This division and the Council for Christian Social Action of the same church have the responsibility for the yearly Institute program.

The Department of Racial and Cultural Relations of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. and Fisk University also assist in the presentation of the Institute.

GOVERNMENT SPEAKERS

The participants will hear government officials discuss the programs and problems of such government agencies concerned with racial matters as the Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice, the U.S., Commission on Civil Rights, the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, the Federal Housing Administration and the Public Housing Administration. Non-federal agencies represented are the Department of Labor of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico and the Pennsylvania Commission on Human Relations.

Other Institute sessions feature speakers from private organizations working to promote better human relations and equal opportunities for all citizens. These include the NAACP, the Catholic Interraical Council, the American Jewish Committee, the Southern Regional Council, the Southern Christian Leadership Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

Topics include the current status of school desegregation — north as well as south, the religious dimensions of racial issues, the historical background of the U. S. race relations, race and housing, voter registration in the South, employment problems of minority groups, and the international implications of domestic racial conflict.

The problems and prospects of American Indians and Puerto Ricans will also be examined, rounding out the study of U.S. minority problems. There will also be a discussion of anti-Semitism in the U. S. today.

MEMPHIS, TENN.
WORLD
TW. 7,400

JUN 29 1963

Race Relations Workers To Meet In Nashville

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Over 140 workers in the field of race relations from more than 30 states are preparing to meet here from June 24 to July 6 for the 20th Annual Race Relations Institute, to be held at Fisk University. They will represent both public and private agencies ,ranging from state and municipal antidiscrimination commissions to church groups ,and other community organizations, working for interracial harmony.

The Institute, sponsored by the United Church of Christ, is the nation's oldest form for the discussion of racial problems. Throughout its 20 years of existence, as U. S. racial patterns have been undergoing increasingly rapid change, it has provided training for local leaders in intergroup relations. Many past participants are now involved in promoting peaceful and equitable resolutions to the current racial crisis in their own communities.

Dr. Herman H. Long, director of the Institute, states that its basic purpose is "to assess the status of current developments, provide authoritative information on the psychological, sociological, political, economic and religious aspects of intergroup problems, and to evaluate tehniques and strategies."

Dr. Long is Race Relations Secretary of the American Missionary Association Division of the United Church of Christ's Board for Home land Ministeries. This division and the Council for Christian Social Action of the same church have the responsibility for the yearly Institute program.

The Department of Racial and Cultural Relations of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U. S. A. and Fisk University also assist in the presentation of the Institute.

The participants will hear government officials discuss the programs and problems of government agencies concerned with racial matters. These include the Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice, the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights, the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, the Federal Housing Administration and the Public Housing Administration. Non-federal agencies represented are the Department of Labor of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico and the Pennsylvania Commission on Human Relations.

Other Institute sessions will feature speakers from private organizations working to promote better human relations and equal opportunities for all citizens. Some of these will be the N. A. A. C. P., the Catholic Interracial Council, the American Jewish Committee, the Southern Regional Council, the Southern Christian Leadership Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

Their topics will include the current status of school desegregation — north as well as south, the religious dimensions of racial issues, the historical background of U. S. race relations, race and housing, voter registration in the South, employment problems of minority groups, and the international implications of domestic racial conflict.

The problems and prospects of American Indians and Puerto Ricans will also be examined, rounding out the study of U. S. minority problems. There will also be a discussion of anti-Semitism in the U. S. today.

All speeches form the basis for seminar discussions among the participants, with questions directed to the speakers. In addition, there will be clinics and workshops concentrating on employment problems, community action, and religion and race. Films will also be shown, dealing with these and other aspects of racial issues which effect the lives of U. S. citizens today.

MEMPHIS, TENN.
TRI-STATE DEFENDER
W. 24,000

JUN 29 1963

Race Relations Institute In Session On Fisk U. Campus

NASHVILLE — Over 140 workers in the field of race relations from more than 30 states are meeting here from June 24 to July 6 for the 20th Annual Race Relations Institute, at Fisk university, and represent public and private agencies, ranging from state and municipal antidiscrimination commissions to church groups, and other community organizations working for interracial harmony.

The Institute, sponsored by the United Church of Christ, is the nation's oldest forum for the discussion of racial problems. Throughout its 20 years of existence, it has provided training for local leaders in intergroup relations. Many past participants are now involved in promoting peaceful and equitable resolutions to the current racial crisis in their own communities.

Dr. Herman H. Long director of the Institute, states that its basic purpose is "to assess the status of current developments, provide authoritative information on the psychological, sociological, political, economic and religious aspects of intergroup problems, and to evaluate techniques and strategies."

Dr. Long is Race Relations Secretary of the American Missionary Association Division of the United Church of Christ's Board for Homeland Ministries. This division and the Council for Christian Social Action of the same church have the responsibility for the yearly Institute program.

The Department of Racial and Cultural Relations of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. and Fisk University also assist in the presentation of the Institute.

GOVERNMENT SPEAKERS

The participants will hear government officials discuss the programs and problems of such government agencies concerned with racial matters as the Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice, the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, the Federal Housing Administration and the Public Housing Administration. Non-federal agencies represented are the Department of Labor of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico and the Pennsylvania Commission on Human Relations.

Other Institute sessions feature speakers from private organizations working to promote better human relations and equal opportunities for all citizens. These include the NAACP, the Catholic Interraical Council, the American Jewish Committee, the Southern Regional Council, the Southern Christian Leadership Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

Topics include the current status of school desegregation — north as well as south, the religious dimensions of racial issues, the historical background of the U. S. race relations, race and housing, voter registration in the South, employment problems of minority groups, and the international implications of domestic racial conflict.

The problems and prospects of American Indians and Puerto Ricans will also be examined. rounding out the study of U.S. minority problems. There will also be a discussion of anti-Semitism in the U. S. today.

ATLANTA, GA.
WORLD
D. 29,800

JUN 29 1963

Race Relations Workers To Meet In Nashville

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Over 140 workers in the field of race relations from more than 30 states are preparing to meet here from June 24 to July 6 for the 20th Annual Race Relations Institute, to be held at Fisk University. They will represent both public and private agencies ,ranging from state and municipal antidiscrimination commissions to church groups ,and other community organizations, working for interracial harmony.

The Institute, sponsored by the United Church of Christ, is the nation's oldest form for the discussion of racial problems. Throughout its 20 years of existence, as U. S. racial patterns have been undergoing increasingly rapid change, it has provided training for local leaders in intergroup relations. Many past participants are now involved in promoting peaceful and equitable resolutions to the current racial crisis in their own communities.

Dr. Herman H. Long, director of the Institute, states that its basic purpose is "to assess the status of current developments, provide authoritative information on the psychological, sociological, political, economic and religious aspects of intergroup problems, and to evaluate tehniques and strategies."

Dr. Long is Race Relations Secretary of the American Missionary Association Division of the United Church of Christ's Board for Home land Ministries. This division and the Council for Christian Social Action of the same church have the responsibility for the yearly Institute program.

The Department of Racial and Cultural Relations of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U. S. A. and Fisk University also assist in the presentation of the Institute.

The participants will hear government officials discuss the programs and problems of government agencies concerned with racial matters. These include the Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice, the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights, the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, the Federal Housing Administration and the Public Housing Administration. Non-federal agencies represented are the Department of Labor of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico and the Pennsylvania Commission on Human Relations.

Other Institute sessions will feature speakers from private organizations working to promote better human relations and equal opportunities for all citizens. Some of these will be the N. A. A. C. P., the Catholic Interracial Council, the American Jewish Committee, the Southern Regional Council, the Southern Christian Leadership Council and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

Their topics will include the current status of school desegregation — north as well as south, the religious dimensions of racial issues, the historical background of U. S. race relations, race and housing, voter registration in the South, employment problems of minority groups, and the international implications of domestic racial conflict.

The problems and prospects of American Indians and Puerto Ricans will also be examined, rounding out the study of U. S. minority problems. There will also be a discussion of anti-Semitism in the U. S. today.

All speeches form the basis for seminar discussions among the participants, with questions directed to the speakers. In addition, there will be clinics and workshops concentrating on employment problems, community action, and religion and race. Films will also be shown, dealing with these and other aspects of racial issues which effect the lives of U. S. citizens today.

ATLANTA, GA. PAGE ONE CERTIFIED
WORLD
D. 29,800

JUN 30 1963

John Yungblut To Speak At Atlanta U. Summer Forum

Dr. John Yungblut, director of Quaker House, will be the guest speaker at the Atlanta University Summer School Forum to be held Tuesday, July 2, at 9:30 a. m. in Davage Auditorium, Clark College campus.

Dr. Yungblut graduated from Harvard in 1934 and attended the Harvard Divinity School. He has served in the pastoral ministry for over twenty years and in 1959-60 was director of a program for isolated liberals in Mississippi and Louisiana. He became director of Quaker House in Atlanta in the fall of 1960.

Dr. Yungblut's topic will be "The Witness of the Religious Society of Friends." The Summer School Forums are open to the public.

Wiley Branton, Director of the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council, was the guest speaker at this week's Summer School Forum. His subject was "Re-Alignment in Southern Politics."

NASHVILLE, TENN.
TENNESSEAN
D. 129,288 S. 208,237

JUN 30 1963

Workers: Preparing a meal for the 13 students who are participating in a voter education and registration project in Councilmanic District 21 are, from left, Merrie Lou Douglas, Pullman, Ore., Mary Gellatly, Portland, Ore., Roberta Moseley, Bronx, N.Y., and David Dansby, Greensboro, N.C., all project participants.

—Staff photo by Eldred Reaney

Religion in Life

Group To Teach Voter Education

registration project in Councilmanic

Religion in Life

Group To Teach Voter Education

By EDMUND WILLINGHAM
Religious News Editor

AN INTERRACIAL group of 10 college students arrived in Nashville last week to begin work on a seven-week voter education and registration project.

The project will be carried on in Councilmanic District 21. It is co-sponsored by the National Student Christian Federation and the Southern Region, National Student YWCA.

District 21 is a predominantly Negro area. It is bound on the north by Centennial and Heiman, on the south by Charlotte, on the east by 27th Ave., N., and on the west by 42nd Ave., N.

One of three leaders for the project is Wilson Yates, a 1962 graduate of Vanderbilt Divinity School, now working on a doctor of philosophy degree in religion and society at Harvard University.

Survey Made

"We will be making a door-to-door survey in the district, trying to show the importance of voting," he said. "We also will be providing cars for trips to the courthouse for registering.

"Registration in the area is low, and we want to emphasize that if the Negro wants to better his local, as well as state and national, situation, he must exercise his right to vote.

"This applies whether he is concerned about improving community services or furthering his civil rights."

Yates said the project is not a training ground for later deep South work, but that information gained here would be used in similar projects, in both North and South.

Information gained will be turned over to the sponsors and to local political groups, he said.

In addition to community service, he said, the work will be enlightening for the participants, many of whom are studying social or political science.

"They've studied the theory; now they will be putting it into practice," he said.

The students, most of whom live outside the South, also will be learning about a Southern urban area, its race relations, and political structure. Community leaders will be assisting in this.

Local Aid Needed

The students also will be studying theological bases for participation in such a project, with assistance coming from Vanderbilt Divinity School faculty and graduate students.

Students will be living at 1901-7 Belmont Blvd. Other leaders are Mrs. Yates, immediate past president of the Methodist Student Movement, and David Dansby, a Negro student at the University of North Carolina Law School.

A group of Nashville citizens is serving as an advisory committee, with Mrs. Leander Keck and Mrs. Sherman Webster serving as co-chairmen. Councilman Mansfield Douglas III is a committee member.

The students are Irene Wiley, Boston, Daniel Marston, Eau Claire, Wis., Rosemary Jean Smith, Green Castle, Ind., Mary Susan Gellatly, Portland, Ore., Roberta Mosely, Bronx, N.Y., Raleigh Bailey, Miami, Fla., Merrie Lou Douglas, Pullman, Ore., Dean Zimmerman, Valley City, N.D., Mary Mills, Spartanburg, S.C., and Carol Tucker, Laughlintown, Pa.

✦ ✦ ✦

Oops!

This column last week carried an interview with the Rev. C. W. Parnell, a Baptist pastor in Johannesburg, South Africa, on race relations in that country.

He spoke of the government's efforts there to enable the races to live together. He said:

"They have no plans to obliterate other races. It is obvious, then, that their policy must be one of trying to help other races to live harmoniously with the white people."

The words "no plans" were dropped from this quote, by accident, in printing the interview.

NASHVILLE, TENN.
TENNESSEAN
D. 129,288 S. 208,237

JUN 30 1963

Racial Stigmas Erasure Asked

By W. A. REED JR.

A director of research in the Labor Department said here yesterday that stigmas attached to minority groups often affect their motivation, influence their aspirations and therefore their achievement.

Dr. Max Wolff, director of research, Labor Department, Puerto Rico, speaking at the sixth session of the 20th annual Race Relations Institute at Fisk University, said the Negro has been brainwashed for 100 years.

Now, said Wolff, the stigma of inferiority has been proven to have no validity.

"THERE IS no biological proof that the Negro is inferior to the white, despite numerous attempts by some racists to advance this false theory," he said.

He said that it was the fundamental concern of a democratic society to bring all children together, at least for a time.

He gave four actions that he said should be taken by all parents Negro and white:

- Stop school dropouts.
- Emphasize reading.
- Destroy stigmas that apply to any minority.
- Parents must help challenge youngsters to learn.

The institute will enter its second week of lectures, clinics and panel discussion tomorrow. The institute is under the direction of Dr. Herman H. Long, successor to the late Charles S. Johnson, former Fisk president who founded the organization. Among the 200 delegates are representatives from two foreign countries and 35 states. Twenty-seven consultants are also on hand.

Sessions this week will focus on many areas including:

- Religious and moral implications of Human Rights.
- International implications of domestic race relations.
- Psychological and historical aspects of the racial and cultural backdrop.
- Problems in employment, housing, and federal action in the implementation of equal rights.

DR. LONG, explained the overall purpose of the institute yesterday. It is to orient leaders of local communities in the problems, processes and methods of implementing better intergroup relations," he said.

The program for the coming week includes:

Today, a special worship service at Fisk Memorial Chapel at 9:45 p.m., and a visit to the Hermitage at 2:00 p.m.

Tomorrow, 8:00-9:30—"Race and Housing," John McDermott, director, Catholic Interracial Council, Chicago; 10:00-11:30—"The Presidential Housing Order: its Implications," Albert Thompson, FHA, Atlanta and Hubert Jackson, Publication Housing Administration, Atlanta, 1:30-3:30 clinics.

Tuesday: 8:00-9:30—"Federal Initiative to Secure the Right To Vote," John Doar, Civil Rights Division, Department of Justice, 10:00-11:30—"Voter Registration in the Deep South," the Rev. Andrew Young, Southern Christian Leadership Conference, Atlanta. 1:30-3:30 Clinics—7:30 p.m., "The Role of the Southern White Liberal," attorney Marion A. Wright, vice president, Southern Regional Council, Atlanta.

Wednesday: 9-9:30—"Federal Instrumentation of Equal Job Opportunity," Hobart Taylor Jr., former vice chairman, the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, 10:00-11:30—"New Thrusts in the Civil Rights Field," Clyde C. Ferguson, general counsel, U.S. Commission on Civil Rights. 1:30-3:30 clinics; 7:30 p.m., "Race in World Dimension," Dr. Daisuke Kitagawa, former secretary, Division of Domestic Mission, National Council of Protestant Episcopal Churches.

Thursday: 8:00-9:30—"The Status of School Desegragation," Reed Sarratt, former director, Southern Education Reporting Service (Southern School News) Nashville. 10:00-11:30—"The Legal Defense for Nonviolent Direct Action Participant," Attorney Peter A. Hall, Birmingham, Ala.

Friday: 8-9:30 — "State Action for Equal Opportunity," Elliott Shirk, former director, Pennsylvania Commission on Human Relations, Harrisburg, Pa. 10-11:30—"Impressions of the 20th Annual Race Relations Institute, Dr. Lewis W. Jones, Fisk University—1:30-3:30 Clinics: 7:30 p.m., "A Final Word", Dr. Herman H. Long, director of the Race Relations Institute.

MUSKOGEE, OKLA.
TIMES DEMOCRAT
D. 2,791

JUL 1 1963

Wiley A. Branton, executive director of the Voter Education Project (VEP) of the Southern Regional Council (SRC), said an 11-state drive conducted by the organizations added more than 115,000 negros to Southern voter registration lists in the first year of operation.

DALTON, GA.
CITIZEN-NEWS
D. 6,972

JUL 1 1963

More Negro Voters Added To Lists

DAYTON, Ohio (UPI) — More than 115,000 Negroes were added to voter registration lists in 11 Southern states in the first year of the campaign by major civil rights organizations, the project's director reported Sunday.

Wiley A. Branton; executive director of the voter education project of the Southern Regional Council, disclosed the figures for the first time at the annual convention of the Congress of Racial Equality.

The task was accomplished by hundreds of field workers, Branton said, "despite apathy on the part of many Southern Negroes, intimidation from segregationists and a lack of full cooperation from the federal government."

He said another 25,000 who would have been purged from the registration lists retained their voting rights through the project's efforts and other "uncounted thousands" of Negroes registered for the first time without the project workers' aid.

Branton said only 1.5 million of the five million eligible Negroes have been registered in the states of Louisiana, Mississippi, Florida, South Carolina, North Carolina, Georgia, Texas, Arkansas, Tennessee, Alabama, and Virginia.

He reported significant successes in Chattanooga, Nashville, Knoxville and Memphis, Tenn.; Little Rock, Ark.; Huntsville, Ala.; Miami, Orlando, St. Petersburg and Clearwater, Fla.; Atlanta, Macon, Augusta and Savannah, Ga.; Sumter and Charleston, S.C., and Rocky Mount, Edenton and Durham, N.C.

NEW YORK
Herald Tribune
D. 355,898 S. 451,270

JUL 1 1963

Negro Vote Drive Registers 115,000 In the South

DAYTON, Ohio (UPI).

An 11-state drive conducted by the nation's major civil rights organizations added more than 115,000 Negroes to Southern voter registration lists in the first year of operation, the project's director said yesterday.

The figures were announced for the first time by Wiley A. Branton, executive director of the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council, following his appearance here before the annual convention of the Congress of Racial Equality.

Mr. Branton said the task had been accomplished by hundreds of field workers "despite apathy on the part of many Southern Negroes, intimidation from segregationists and a lack of full cooperation from the Federal government."

Another 25,000 Negroes who would have been purged from registration lists retained their voting rights through the project's efforts, Mr. Branton said, while "uncounted thousands" of Negroes registered for the first time without the aid of project workers.

Only 1.5 million of the five million eligible Southern Negroes have been registered in the 11-state area of Louisiana, Mississippi, Florida, South Carolina, North Carolina, Georgia, Texas, Arkansas, Tennessee, Alabama and Virginia, he added.

"As more and more Negroes and thinking whites get to the polls, men like (U.S. Sen. Allen) Ellender (D., La.), (Mississippi Gov. Ross) Barnett, (Alabama Gov. George) Wallace and other racists will be driven from office," Mr. Branton predicted.

BOSTON, MASS.
GLOBE (MORNING)
D. 194,870 S. 465,753

JUL 1 1963

Progress on Voting Rights: 115,000 Negroes Registered

DAYTON, O. (UPI)—An 11-state drive conducted by civil rights organizations added more than 115,000 Negroes to Southern voter registration lists in the first year of operation, the project's director said Sunday.

